
This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

GoogleTM books

<https://books.google.com>

□ 375
7
25
4.23

THE NEAR EAST

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED "THE INDIAMAN"

A Weekly Review of the Politics and Commerce of the Balkan Peninsula, Egypt, and the Sudan, Syria, Palestine, Asia Minor, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Persia, and India.

No. 608.—Vol. XXIII.

Registered at G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1923,

Annual Subscription
By post £1 7s. 6d. (Home) and £1 10s. 0d. (Abroad)

Price 6d.

Postage, 1d. Foreign, 1½d.

COOK'S NILE STEAMER SERVICES.

CAIRO—ASSUAN—HALFA.

WEEKLY SAILINGS

FARES:

ASSUAN and BACK, Twenty Days' Voyage.....	£70.
Ditto, Fourteen Days' Voyage.....	£56.
HALFA and BACK, Twenty-seven Days' Voyage.....	£100.

DAHABEEAHS and PRIVATE STEAMERS for HIRE.

Programme of Season's Arrangements for the NILE and PALESTINE on application.

Travellers' Cheques. Circular Notes and Letters of Credit issued. Foreign Money Supplied and Exchanged. Baggage Insured, Stored and Forwarded. Independent Tickets issued for any Journey.

THOS. COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus, London and Branches.

SUDAN

BIG GAME SHOOTING.

The Sudan is one of the most easily accessible countries in which big game still abounds, and presents a varied choice of shooting grounds: the White Nile, the Blue Nile, the Red Sea Hills, and the sandy stretches of Kordofan.

Special steamers and sailing boats are available for private charter. Complete and inclusive arrangements can be made for the supply of native servants, hunters, bearers, etc., and riding and transport animals, camp outfit and catering.

SUDAN GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS AND STEAMERS,

Telegrams: "Sudanology, Westrand, London."

5, Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C.2

Telephone: Regent 1071 (2 lines).

The Clothing & Equipment Company of Egypt

(S.A.)

CONTRACTORS TO THE EGYPTIAN AND PALESTINE
GOVERNMENTS.

PROPRIETORS OF THE WELL-KNOWN
"LE PHARE"
BRAND OF CIVILIAN CLOTHING.

Head Office and Factories: CAIRO, EGYPT.

Telegrams: ATTIRE, CAIRO.

Branch at Alexandria.

LONDON AGENTS—

MESSRS. J. COMPTON & SONS, LTD., 404-422, OLD FORD ROAD, LONDON, E.3.

Telegrams: ATTIRE, BOWROM, LONDON.

MARLEY HILL CHEMICAL
 — CO., LTD. —
 Milburn House, Newcastle-on-Tyne

Foundry Coke,
*Pitch, Benzole, Creosote, Solvent
 Naphtha, Sulphuric Acid, Anthracene, Sulphate of Ammonia, Concentrated Ammonia Liquor.*

London Office: 39, LOMBARD STREET, E.C.

THE NORTH-WEST TANNERY
 COMPANY, LIMITED.
CAWNPORE, INDIA.

Telegraphic Address :—"LEATHER, CAWNPORE."

We are the Largest Manufacturers in India of—
SADDLERY, HARNESS, BAGS, TRUNKS AND TRAVELLING REQUISITES.

PRICES CHEAPER THAN IN ENGLAND.

Fully Illustrated Catalogues sent free on application.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF GREECE
 (Limited Liability Registered in Athens.)

CAPITAL PAID UP - Drs. 24,504,000
 RESERVE FUNDS - Drs. 16,188,095

Head Office : ATHENS.

Branches: Piraeus, Argos, Pyrgos, Patras, Corfu, Cephalonia, Nauplia
 Vostizza (Aegion), Calamata, Syra, Chio, Candia, Volo, Salonica, Larissa, Triccala, Mitylene, Canea.

London & Constantinople Agents: The Commercial Bank of the Near East, Ltd.

AGENTS IN ALL PARTS OF GREECE, THE LEVANT AND ABROAD.

The Bank conducts every kind of Banking and Stock Exchange business, and extends special facilities to merchants and traders interested in business with Greece. It acts as Agent for many Foreign Banks. It is specially organised for Exchange transactions, the execution of mail and cable transfers throughout Greece, and for the collection of clean and documentary Drafts and Bills.

MERCHANDISE DEPARTMENT.

The Bank undertakes the warehousing and sale of goods consigned.

BRADBURY, WILKINSON
 & COMPANY, LIMITED.

Head Office and Works:
 WEST BARNES LANE, NEW MALDEN, SURREY.

Designers, Engravers and Printers of Bank Notes, Postage Stamps,
 Bonds, Share Warrants,
 Coupons, Letters of Credit,
 Cheques, Bills of Exchange, and all Monetary Documents.

Telegraphic Address: BRADBANK, NEW MALDEN
 City Office: 10/12, Cophall Avenue, E.C.2.

AGENTS IN EUROPE FOR MANY IMPORTANT INDUSTRIAL COMPANIES IN INDIA

Telegrams:
 "Allen Ave, London."

Codes:
 Western Union—Five Figure,
 A.B.C., 5th Edition & Bentley.

ALLEN BROS.
 — & CO., LTD. —
 Exporters of
MACHINERY & MILL STORES,
 TEXTILES & GENERAL
 MERCHANDISE.

14, Devonshire Sq., London E.C.2.
 And at Bradford and Manchester.

Responsible firms in the East are invited to communicatetheir requirements
 in confidence.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

A NIMAL INTESTINES
 Cleaned and Packed in Salt or Dried.
L. & R. HEYMANS, Ltd.,
 Importers,
 69, St. John St., London,
 E.C.1. (Estd. 1872.)

M I C A
 AND ALL
 Electrical Insulating Materials,
ATTWATER & SONS,
 Contractors to British,
 American, French, Italian, Admiralty and War Office.
 PRESTON, ENGLAND.

A SHWELL &
 NESBIT, LTD.
 Barkby Lane, Leicester.
 Makers of the
RUNWELL SEMI-ROTARY PUMP.

P RODUCE from the NEAR and FAREAST
EDWARD S. JOLY,
 HAMBURG 14.
 General Commission Agent.
 First-class Bank References

C ANVAS, PAINTS,
 MANILLA & WIRE ROPES,
 ETC.
J. McMillan & Bolton, Ltd.,
 Dashwood House,
 London, E.C.

S TEAM & HYDRAULIC ENGINE PACKING
 MANUFACTURERS
 (Flax, Asbestos & Cotton). and All Engine Room Stores
ATTWATER & SONS,
 Hopwood St. Mills, Preston
 Tel. Add.: "Attwaters, Preston" (Contractors to British, American,
 French and Italian Admiralty.

E MERY STONE.
 The Levant Mineral Co., Ltd.,
 Largest Importers in United Kingdom.
 Open to receive offers of high-class qualities
 Address: 29-30 Broad Street
 Avenue, London, E.C.2.

T THE NEAR EAST reaches a great potential market stretching from Morocco to India

THE NEAR EAST

INDEX TO VOLUME XXIII.

January 4—June 28, 1923.

REGULAR WEEKLY FEATURES.

Notes of the Week: The Week at Home:
Personal and General: Press on the Near East: Near East Bookshelf.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

News in Brief ... 136, 165, 224, 293, 320,
392, 456, 482, 560, 574, 610, 659

SPECIAL LETTERS.

Albania ... 31, 83, 187, 394
Athens ... 6, 107, 241, 317, 420, 524, 628
Baghdad 7, 57, 109, 188, 240, 291, 342, 367
Bucharest ... 316, 472
Cairo ... 5, 29, 55, 81, 133, 159, 185, 239,
265, 289, 315, 341, 367, 393, 419, 445,
471, 498, 523, 549, 575, 601, 626, 652
Constantinople ... 58, 83, 108, 161, 215,
241, 267, 292, 320, 345, 368, 396, 421,
447, 552, 553, 577, 602, 629, 656, 657
Cyprus ... 31
Jerusalem ... 30, 551, 575, 655
Khartoum ... 160
Liubliana ... 8, 81, 186, 290, 395, 499, 603
Sofia ... 56, 134, 266, 343, 446, 550, 627, 653
Teheran ... 57, 135, 187, 319, 369, 448,
473, 525, 657

SUDAN SUPPLEMENTS.

No. II. ... 37
No. III. ... 195
No. IV. ... 297
No. V. ... 401

LEADING ARTICLES.

Angora Counter-Proposals, The ... 272
Balance, In the ... 12
Balkan Need, A ... 62
Balkans, Spring Cleaning in the ... 296
British Red Crescent Committee, The ... 586
Bulgarian Coup d'Etat, The ... 608
Egypt, The Solution for ... 194
Egypt's New Constitution ... 426
Greece and Turkey ... 556
India, The Position in ... 400
Indian Finance, Realities of ... 246
Indian Politics, Religion in / ... 634
Iraq, Great Britain and ... 222, 478
"Johnny Turk," The Passing of ... 660
Making and Selling, On ... 166
Palestine Experiment, The... ... 582
Palestine Problem, The ... 348
Peace Strategy ... 36
Private Business and Public Finance ... 530
Roumania and Russia ... 114
Roumanian Constitution, The ... 374
Turkey after Lausanne ... 504

Turkey and Bulgaria, Lausanne, ... 88
Turkey's Refusal ... 140
Yugoslav Deadlock, The ... 452
Yugoslavia, The Position in ... 322

SPECIAL ARTICLES.

Baghdad, Moharram and Its Passion Play in (E. S. Stevens) ... 247
Balkans, Byzantine Survivals in the (Malcolm Burr) ... 223
Birthday Honours ... 600
Bosnian Cattle Fair, A ... 479
Bulgaria on Trial ... 635
Communism for Communists ... 455
Constantine, The late King ... 52
Croatia and Serbia: The Views of M.
Raditch ... 557
Great Britain and Persia (Colonel C. B.
Stokes, C.I.E.) ... 453
Greece and an Ill Wind ... 167
Indian Students in England (Outis) ... 63
Iraq and Its Railways ... 375, 427
Jackals (L. J.) ... 89
Kurdistan: Personalities and Policies ... 609
Lausanne Treaty, The ... 273
Macedonian Problem, The ... 505
Middle East, Opening Up the ... 661
Moharram and Its Passion Play in Baghdad (E. S. Stevens) ... 247
Mosul, Iraq and Turkey ... 141
Near East, France and the ... 115
Palestine Ideal, The ... 531
Persia, Great Britain and (Colonel C. B.
Stokes, C.I.E.) ... 453
Sudan and Abyssinia, An Early Traveller in the ("Abu Nakhla") ... 583
Turkey, The Sacred Law in ... 13 Turkish Nationalist Movement, The (Nihad Reshad Bey) ... 323, 349
Turkish Treasury, A Visit to the Imperial
(M. A. E. Rowntree) ... 352

BOOKS REVIEWED.

Abbott, G. F.: "Greece and the Allies" 33
Baker, Olaf: "Dusty Star" ... 34
Barron, O.B.E., M.C., Lt.-Col. J. B.:
"Mohammedan Wakfs in Palestine" 346
Belgrave, C. Dalrymple: "Siwa: The Oasis of Jupiter Ammon" ... 220 Bennett, Allan (Anaouda M.): "The Wisdom of the Aryas" ... 502
Brown, Hilton: "Dismiss" ... 372
Bryce, Viscount: "Memories of Travel" 192
Butterworth, A.: "The Southlands of Siwa: Some Reminiscences of Life in Southern India" ... 476
Chalmers-Hunt, M.A., L.: "The 'Khamriyya' of Umar Ibn Al-Farid" ... 606

Chatterjee, Sita and Santa: "Tales of Bengal" ... 270
Chatterji, Saratchandra: "Srikanta" ... 270
Cheesman, Edith: "Mesopotamia (Iraq)
Water Colours" ... 34 Chéradame, André: "The Mystification of the Allied Peoples: Why? How? By Whom?" (Translated by John A.
Fitzgerald) ... 294
Churchill, C.H., Rt. Hon. Winston S.:
"The World Crisis, 1911-1914" ... 449
Cranmer-Byng, L.: "Salma": A Play in Three Acts ... 632
Dhallia, Maneckji Nussevari: "Zoroastrian Civilisation" ... 9
Douglas, L. E.: "Behind Tunisian Walls"
(A rendering from the French "A Tunis, derrière les Murs," par Lt.-Col.
R. B. de Voligny) ... 220
Dudell, E. J.: "Tales from the Orient and Pen Sketches of Constantinople" ... 164
Elias, Elias A.: Arabic-English Modern Dictionary ... 502
Eversley, Lord: "The Turkish Empire:
Its Growth and Decay." 2nd Edition.
From 1288 to 1914. From 1914 to 1922, by Sir Valentine Chirol ... 243
Eyton, John: "The Dancing Fakir and Other Stories." With Illustrations by
L. Raven Hill ... 10
Freshfield, Douglas W.: "Below the Snow Line" ... 429
Gontaut-Biron, Comte R. de: "Comment la France s'est installée en Syrie"
(1918-1919) ... 115
Gray, Terence: "And in the Tomb were Found—" ... 606
"Harun": "The Real Mesopotamia" 270
Hext, Harrington: "No. 87" ... 192
Hilton-Simpson, B.Sc., H. W.: "Arab Medicine and Surgery": A Study of the Healing Art in Algeria ... 111
Johnson, Clarence Richard: "Constantinople To-day: or, The Pathfinder
Survey of Constantinople" ... 658
Lane, Rose Wilder: "The Peaks of Shala" 85
Lavrin, Yanko: "Nietzsche and Modern Consciousness" ... 112
Luke, B.Litt., M.A., Harry Charles and Edward Keith-Roach: "The Handbook of Palestine" ... 163 Lyell, Thomas: "The Ins and Outs of Mesopotamia" ... 59
McGovern, Ph.D., W. Montgomery: "A Manual of Buddhist Philosophy."
Vol. I. Cosmology ... 398
Miller, M.A., LL.D., William: "The Balkans: Roumania, Bulgaria, Serbia and Montenegro" ... 138 Nicholson, Litt.D., Reynold A.: "The Idea of Personality in Sufism" ... 501
Nicolson, Harold: "Tennyson" ... 501
Nitti, Francesco: "The Decadence of Europe: The Paths of Reconstruction." Translated from the Italian by F. Brittain ... 163

Oeconomos, Dr. Lysimachos: "The Martyrdom of Smyrna and Eastern Christendom"	112
Ohanian, Armen: "The Dancer of Shamahka"	85
O'Leary, D.D., De Lacy: "A Short History of the Fatimid Khalifate" ...	429
Sadler, Michael: "Desolate Splendour" ...	632
Sams, C.I.E., I.C.S., Lt.-Col. H. A.: "The Post Office of India in the Great War" ...	137
Schneiderman, Harry: "The American Jewish Year Book, 5683, September 23, 1922 to September '10, 1923." Vol. 24	86
Spiro Bey: The Modern Arabic-English Dictionary	502
Warren, Whitney: "Montenegro, The Crime of the Peace Conference" ...	112
Weigall, Arthur: "The Glory of the Pharaohs"	449
Wendel, Hermann: "Kreuz und Quer durch den Slavischen Sudan"	10
Wright, F. A.: "The Arts of Greece" ...	580
Yehoash (Solomon Bloomgarten): "The Feet of the Messenger"	632
History of the Great War, Based on Official Documents. Medical Services. Hygiene of the War. Vols. I. and II.	372
"Visions of Slovenia"	192

LETTERS TO EDITOR.

Albanian Refugees from Greece (Lord Edward Gleichen, etc.)	58
Balkan League, A (Kenneth Ledward) ...	528
British Red Crescent, The (Lord Edward Gleichen, etc.)	586
Bulgaria, An Aegean Outlet for (Jenkin Jenkins)	168
Bulgarian Outlet, A (Lord Edward Gleichen, etc.)	142
Cyprus, Administrative Changes in (George L. Houstoun)	475, 527
Eastern Students (S. Assadi)	586
Eastern Students in England (Arnold J. Toynbee)	527
Greece, Albanian Refugees from (Lord Edward Gleichen, etc.)	58
Greece and Turkey (A. Sefi)	90
Greece, Refugees in (G. M. Bailey)	8
(Lord Robert Cecil)	31

Indian Army Reform (Coles Pasha) ...	269
Lloyd Georgian Diplomacy (A. L. Kennedy)	10
Mesopotamia, "The Ins and Outs of (Rt. Hon. Ameer Ali)	110
Palestine, Britain in (J. M. N. Jeffries) ...	58
Palestine, Great Britain and (Chisholm Dunbar Brunton)	527
Palestine Ideal, The (Chisholm Dunbar Brunton)	585
(Sayed el Dud)	558
Reputations, A Grave of (Coles Pasha) ...	371
Smyrna, British Refugees in (Sir Harry H. Lamb)	110
Turkey, Greece and (A. Sefi)	90
Turkey, The New (Coles Pasha)	585
Zionists and Education (J. Jacobs) ...	32

MISCELLANEOUS.

Anatolia, Moslem War Victims in ...	392
Anglo-Russian Rivalry in the Near and Middle East	326
Anzac Day	392
Arab Horse Society, The	138, 450, 607
Arabia, Travels in	392
Arabian Desert: Its Future, The North ...	189
Arabic-English Dictionaries	632
Armenian Relief	418
Asia, Central	90
Babylon, Letters from	662
Boyle, D.S.O., Lt.-Col. J. W.	418
Budge, Sir E. Wallis	658
Bulgaria and Gladstone	522
Bulgaria and Lausanne	142
Bushire-Shiraz Road, The	189
Cairo Conspiracy Trial, The	604
Carnarvon, The Earl of	376
Carnarvon's Will, Lord	534
Caspian Naval Expedition, The	424
Cavalry and Yeomanry Divisions	600
City of David, The	664
Cox, Gift to Sir Percy	534
Cypriot Monthly, A	475
Cyprus and Greece	604
Eastern Decorations	110

Egypt, Humour in Ancient	558
Egyptian Conference, An	118
Geere, Henry John Valentine (Obituary) ...	337
Greece and British Relief	554
Greece, Conditions in	430
Haddad Pasha, General	477
India, "Through Romantic	450, 560
Indian Students' Union and Hostel ...	224
Irak, Archaeology in	482
Irak's New Postage Stamps	631
Judaism	276
King-Crane Report, The	118
Lausanne Draft Treaty, The	325
Lebanon Mental Hospital, The	607
Montenegrin Gathering, A	243
Moslem Religion, The	450
Muslim Festival at Woking	528
Near and Middle East, Anglo-Russian Rivalry in the	326
Near and Middle East Association, The ...	479, 497
Near East Film, A	293
Norman, D.S.O., Col. W. H.	418
North Persian Forces Memorial	276
Omar and Umar	658
Orient, The Prince (of Wales) and the ...	503
Palestine Exploration Fund, The	189, 476, 636
Palestine, The Clash of Ideals in	528
Persian Cabinet, New	189
Port Said, Anzac Memorial at	663
Quarterly, A New	220
"Quarterly Review," The	168
"Saluki," The	450
Slovene Liberalism, The Father of	244
Smyrna Holocaust, The	475
Thrace, The League of Nations and Western	554
Trans-Desert Railway, A	248
Turkestan Students in Europe	64
Turkey, Taxation in	482
Tutankhamen's Day, In	138
Western Thrace	500
Yemen and its People	325
Yugoslav Society for the Study of English, The	502
Zagreb, British Music in	604

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL SECTION.

REGULAR WEEKLY FEATURES.

Notes and News: Engineering Topics: Cotton and Cotton Goods: Near East Markets: London Produce Reports: Current Prices: Shipping Intelligence: Indian Intelligence: Special Market Reports: Tenders Invited: Company Notes & Reports: Stock & Share Markets: Foreign Exchanges

OIL NOTES AND NEWS.

Oil Notes and News ... 17, 459, 639

ASIA MINOR FRUIT REPORT.

Asia Minor Fruit Report ... 123, 253, 308

ALEXANDRIA EXCHANGE.

Alexandria Exchange ... 96, 125, 146, 172

NEW COMPANIES.

New Companies ... 49, 101, 149, 254, 333, 410, 617, 672

COMMERCIAL BREVITIES.

Commercial Brevities ... 458, 491, 564, 620

BRITISH CONSULAR REPORTS.

Bulgaria	407
Morocco	18
Syria	615

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Palestine, The Administration of (Leonard Stein)	68
Persian Railways (Bernard Gotlieb) ...	202

SPECIAL LETTERS.

Albania	43, 95, 205, 251, 511
Athens	120, 250, 432, 666
Baghdad	66
Bucharest	328, 638, 641
Cairo	355, 588
Constantinople	95, 120, 202, 226, 328, 354, 588, 666
Liubliana	43, 95, 484
Port Said	205, 485
Sofia	66
Teheran	66

SPECIAL ARTICLES.

Albania, The Future of	357
Albania, The Minerals of	251
Asia Minor, Oil Deposits in (J. G. Agababian)	612
Baku, The Oil Industry of	459
Bondholders' Report, The	303
British Industries Fair, The	203, 227
Bulgarian Reparations Settlement, The ...	302
Cotton-Growing in the Empire	565
Czecho-Slovak Industrial Conditions ...	204
Egypt's New Budget	355
India, Cotton-Growing in	433
Morocco's Phosphate Resources	206
Palestine, The Position in	16
Palestine's Commercial Resources	144, 170, 228
Palestine's Trade in 1922	667
Turkish Paper Money Issues	328
World's Oil Supplies, The	17
Yugoslavia's Economic Position	92

MISCELLANEOUS.

Abyssinian Market, The	122
Aden Business, The Broker in	434
Aden Market for Shoe Polish	75
Aden, The Skin Trade of	433
Albania, Bridges for	259
Albania, Scarcity of Maize in	358
Albania, The Trieste Lloyd and	205
Algerian Markets for Agricultural Imple- ments	97
Arabia, Agricultural Methods in	122
Basrah Date Industry, The	124
Black Sea Grain	543
Bourgas, The Growth of	413
British Cotton-Growing Association	517
Bulgaria, British Claims Against	333
Bulgaria, Economic Conditions in	69
Bulgarian Beet Sugar Production... ..	435
Bulgarian Debt Service	148
Bulgarian Property, Administration of	666
Bulgarian Trade Conditions	566
Bunder-Abbas in 1921-22, Trade of	175
Burmah Oil Report	592
Bushire in 1921-22, Trade of	70
C.P.R. and Emigration, The	231
Ceylon Shipping and Harbour Works	19
Chubb's 20-Ton Door Sold	562
Constantinople, Business Conditions at	147
Constantinople, Closing of Storage Depots at	563
Copper Ores	356
Cyprus Oil Trust	148, 459
Czecho-Slovak Commercial Treaties	512
Czecho-Slovak Industrial Conditions	204
Czecho-Slovak Jute Industry, The	488
Czecho-Slovak Sugar	330
Czecho-Slovak Wine	539
Czecho-Slovakia, Demand for British Chemicals in	330
Czecho-Slovakia's Mines	432
Dalmatia as a Holiday Resort	591
Danube Conservancy, Lower	94
East, Reduction in Passage Rates to	485
Egypt, Competition in Iron and Steel Goods in	589
Egypt, Oilfields of	20
Egypt, Reduced Rates to	517
Egypt, Summer in	543

Egyptian Government Contracts	229
Greek Budget, The	642
Greek Citrus Fruit Crop	360
Greek Loans, Guarantees for	408
Greek Marble Quarries	68
Greek Merchant Shipping	563
Greek Shipping Conditions	616
Greek Telephone System	592
India and Burma at Wembley	588
Irak, Agriculture in	173, 281, 409, 593
Irak, Cattle Disease in	514, 669
Irak, Crop Conditions in	45, 463
Irak, Trade Conditions in	334
Koweit in 1921-22, Trade of	283
Lock and Safe Making, A Century of	124
Macedonia, Development of Hydraulic Power in	614
Marine Motors	19
Mercury Ores	413
Molybdenum Ores	43
Mongolia, The New	461
Montenegrin Loan Service	122
Near East Cereal Crops	669
North African Phosphate Industry, The	254
Orange Season Ending Well	436
Ottoman Debt Impasse	670
Palestine and the British Empire Ex- hibition	254
Palestine, Harbour Construction in	283
Palestinian Industries	613
P. & O. British India Companies	563
Persia, Footwear in	174
Persian Market for Tyres	432
Phœnix Oil	66
Prague an Important Air Centre	122
Prague Fair, Good Business at	434
Roumania's Destroyed Oil Wells	282
Roumania's Mineral Resources	278
Roumanian Bank, A New	511
Roumanian Bonds Sinking Fund	485
Roumanian Loans	355
Rutenberg Concessions, The	670
Salonika, Fiume or	121
Salonika, The Port of	258
Slovakia's Timber Resources	489
Smyrna-Aidin Railway	255
Smyrna, Reconstruction of	94
Steaua Romana Progress	43

Sudan and the Empire Exhibition, The	484
Sudan Chamber of Commerce	540
Suez Canal Company	568
Suez Canal Improvement	149
Syria, The Trade of Tripoli in	539
Syria's Economic Resources	252
Syria's Shipping Facilities	673
Textile Product, A New	439
Tobacco Exhibition, The	536
Tripoli, Harbour Facilities at	517
Turkey's Trade in 1922	514
Turkish Optical Goods Market, The	667
Westminster Bank, Limited	204
Yezd in 1922-23, Trade of	566
Yugoslav Harvest Prospects	618, 641
Yugoslav Zone at Salonika, The	563
Yugoslavia, Shipbuilding in	24
Yugoslavia's Imports of Aluminium	360
Yugoslavia's Mercantile Marine	121
Zagreb Samples Fair	616

COMPANY MEETINGS.

Adriatic Bank	491
Agricultural Bank of Egypt	465
Alexandria Water Company	619
Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields	646
Associated Cotton Ginners of Egypt	49
Burmah Oil Company	643
Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China	381
Commercial Bank of the Near East	151
Crédit Foncier Egyptien	178
Eastern Bank, The	332
Egyptian Delta Light Railways	151
Egyptian Markets	594
Great Indian Peninsula Railway	98
Imperial Bank of Persia	23
Ionian Bank	179
Land Bank of Egypt	73
London County Westminster & Parr's Bank	150
Morum's Oriental Stores	23
National Bank of Egypt	385
National Bank of Greece	671
National Bank of India	383
Steaua Romana (British) Limited	361
Suez Canal Company	619

Printed by ST. CLEMENTS PRESS, LTD., Portugal Street, London, W.C.2, and Published by the Proprietors at the Offices,
Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 608—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	1	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		In the Balance	12	Notes and News	15
Egypt	5	THE WEEK AT HOME	3	The Position in Palestine	16
Greece	6	CORRESPONDENCE	8	Oil Notes and News	17
Irak	7	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	9	British Consular Reports	18
Yugoslavia	8	PERSONAL AND GENERAL	11	Shipping Intelligence	19
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	14	Stock and Share Markets	20
The Sacred Law in Turkey	13			Cotton and Cotton Goods	21
				Company Meetings	23
				Near East Markets	24

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Lausanne Conference.

If the German Headquarters' Staff had been called upon last week for a bulletin on the Lausanne Conference, they would probably have announced that it was proceeding "according to plan." Early in the War the phrase lost any tragic significance for the Allies that it may have had in the first few weeks of the struggle, and it need not be taken more seriously if the Turks adopt it for their present purposes. In the face of what has happened at Lausanne, the Angora Government must be anxious to undermine the solidarity of the Entente in the expectation of securing thereby for Turkey better terms of peace. It has hoped, no doubt, that the Reparations Commission would in this respect play the Turkish game, and Ismet Pasha's tactics suggest that his instructions were to waste time at all costs. He could not do it gracefully, as all possible arguments in Turkey's favour had already been exhausted; he was therefore obliged to marshal them all once more, in order to occupy a further session of the Conference. The procedure was most irritating to the Allied delegates; but fortunately the temptation to lose their temper with the Turks was resisted, and advantage was taken of the necessity of awaiting a reply from Angora to adjourn the Conference over the week-end. For reasons set forth elsewhere in this issue, the Allies should resolutely refuse to break up the Conference, but should allow the Turks all the time they need until their acceptance of the Allied terms can be announced.

The Turkish Points.

If Ismet Pasha's plan was merely to delay the proceedings, no special significance attaches to his insistence upon the retrocession of Mosul to Turkey. For his purpose one subject would have been as good as another; but the question of Mosul may have presented to his mind the best opportunity of driving a wedge into Allied unity. The attempt failed, partly because Mosul and its oil potentialities have not the same excitable effect upon the Allies as they have upon certain daily newspapers in Great Britain, but mainly because the British Government refuses to go back upon its word to the Arabs of Irak. In the same way there can be no weakening in regard to the judicial safeguards that have to replace the Capitulations. While every allowance will be made for the good intentions of the Turkish Nationalists—and it is admitted that they have made in one or two matters a beginning in the way of reform—it is useless for them to pretend that the judicial spirit that is the hall-mark of Western civilisation has been acquired by them overnight. The rule of the Straits remains the one debatable point, and there are many in Britain who still wish that a more sustained effort had been made to examine the Russian suggestion with a view to undermining such solidarity as there may be between Russia and Turkey. In its cruder aspect the Soviet proposal meant the conversion of the Black Sea into a Russian lake; but it might have been possible to extend the naval disarmament—to which the Soviets were prepared to pledge themselves—to a general measure of demilitarisation of the Black Sea littoral sufficient for the protection of the riparian States.

The Question of Staying-Power.

Too much stress cannot be laid on the wisdom of the Allies at Lausanne not allowing themselves to be surpassed by the Turks in staying-power. A pernicious suggestion has been made that the Army of Occupation should be withdrawn from Constantinople to Gallipoli, and that the Turks should be allowed to "stew in their own juice." As it would be impossible to evacuate the non-Turkish population at the same time as the Allied troops, the immediate effect would be a further sacrifice of lives on a prodigious scale. The Turks might have no intention of organising a massacre, and might even be anxious to avoid one; but the inevitable panic of the Greek and Armenian population would invite indiscriminate killing, while possibly many would fall victims to the overcrowding of the quays in the stampede to escape. Unless every member of the non-Turkish population in Constantinople can be evacuated before the Allied troops leave, the latter must stay. If the necessity of this is realised at Lausanne, the Allies may see the wisdom of refusing to close the Conference and of keeping open indefinitely the door by which Turkey must ultimately enter the comity of nations.

The Turkish Newspapers.

Nationalist Turkey claims to be different from any Turkey that preceded it, and feels hurt that it is not recognised at once as permanently established on the level of European nations. Even if the Allies were prepared to accept everything that Angora says, the hollowness of its pretensions is proved by the Nationalist newspapers of Constantinople. We can imagine nothing more damaging to the new Turkey than to be represented by such a Press. By all means, let the Turkish point of view be set forth; but we hold too high an opinion of the Nationalist leaders to believe that they can set any store upon the puerile rubbish that their papers publish. The worst lucubrations of the Egyptian or Irak Nationalist Press have displayed a measure of intelligence on the part of the writers to which the Turkish Press seems unable to reach even in its serious and most exalted moments. It is to be hoped that this problem of the Press will be taken up by the Nationalist leaders in order that such a grave blot on the new Turkey may be removed.

The Pacification of the Arab World.

While the Turks at Lausanne are trying to disturb Irak's northern boundary, a further step has been taken to establish peace on the southern frontiers. Last April representatives of the Irak Government, of the British High Commissioner, and of Ibn Saoud, Sultan of Nejd, met in conference and drew up a treaty of peace and friendship between Ibn Saoud and Irak. The former, however, refused to ratify the treaty, and it has required a visit of Sir Percy Cox to Nejd to bring the Wahabi leader to a right frame of mind. As the future development of Irak depends in no small measure on the maintenance of peaceful relations with Nejd, it is to be hoped that the basis of a permanent understanding between the two countries has been laid by Sir Percy Cox. Ibn Saoud has a difficult following to keep in check; but by this time he must realise that the regular replenishing of the Nejd exchequer is dependent on the good behaviour of his Wahabis. As soon as the Irak-Nejd boundaries have been fixed with some chance of being respected by the frontier tribes; it will be necessary to take similar steps with a view to the settlement of the Nejd frontiers with the Hejaz and Transjordan.

Political Murder in Egypt.

Another anti-British outrage is reported from Cairo, where on the afternoon of December 27 Dr. Newby Robson, a professor at the School of Law, was shot dead by unknown assassins. The British community is naturally extremely indignant, and points out, quite rightly, that these outrages are discreditable to the British as well as to the Egyptian Government. The reluctance of the former to interfere more than necessary with the action of the latter is quite comprehensible in view of Egyptian sensitiveness regarding independence. But Great Britain has a duty to its own subjects, and surely nobody could blame her if she took drastic action to put an end to a state of affairs which, as far as Englishmen are concerned, makes Cairo a city fit only for heroes to live in. Lord Allenby is reported to have informed the Egyptian Government that the civil police must be reinforced, and that British cavalry must again patrol the streets of Cairo. The latter is a step in the right direction, and if it touches Egyptian vanity on the raw, it may serve a good purpose in stirring public opinion against the outrages.

A Hindrance to Independence.

In fairness to Egypt it must be stated that the indignation of the British community at the renewal of these murders after a brief lull is shared by the Government, and finds this time a more general echo among Egyptians as a whole, who have had time to realise that no cause can be permanently promoted by such methods. Condemnation of the deed, however, only serves to emphasise the distance that Egypt has yet to traverse before the claims of an articulate few can be accepted as the standard of the nation. Egyptian independence is assured; but the more educated the individual Egyptian, unless he is a hopeless fanatic, the more readily must he admit the necessity of regulating Egypt's political development to the nation's capacity. Stringent safeguards are required so long as a section of the population acts on the doctrine that the murder of a man invited by Egyptians to assist in their education helps to substantiate the claim of the Egyptian people to independence.

Indian Political Discussions.

The public in this country has been given but little opportunity of judging the quality of the oratorical deluge which, as usual, marked the close of the year in India. It is obvious that the various parties have been busily engaged in dressing their windows, but apparently all the stock is old, and in that case the published reports have been quite long enough. We must confess to a feeling of disappointment at the display made by the Liberals, for we had hoped that they would by this time have realised the advantage to be gained by putting vague aspirations in the background, and concentrating on some of the definite tasks which must be accomplished in India, and by Indians, before further boons from Parliament can bring any real profit. There are plenty of such tasks awaiting them, but we must be content with the single instance of untouchability, a vile word for a vile thing. Indians who aspire to an equal place among the nations must surely realise that untouchability has to go, for how can it stand beside American equality or French fraternity? If Indian Liberals would spend a year in taking active measures for its abolition they would do more for their country than by a decade of talk about Indianisation.

A Significant Phrase.

Of the phrases transmitted by the cable last week the most significant to our mind is that which recorded the Extremist intention to "make use of" the selfishness of labourers and peasants in order to secure the party's aims. That is not the language of a popular or democratic movement, and it justifies the view consistently put forward in these columns that the Extremists are in fact reactionaries. A small number of able men, commanding large funds, are out to snatch power for themselves and restore the old India of privilege and ascendancy which Parliament has undertaken to abolish. At the outset they hoped to be able to accomplish this with the aid of the upper and middle-classes, who would stand in many instances to benefit by reaction. They have been disappointed, because the new influences introduced by British rule among those classes have proved too strong, and they now seek to enlist the stupidity and cupidity of the masses, among whom British influences have not had time to work. They will, if they can, "make use of" their dupes, but it will be strictly for their own purposes, and we have no doubt that they would rivet afresh the old fetters so strongly as to prevent the possibility of escape. That is the enemy which now confronts the democracy of Great Britain.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The New Year.

It is impossible to live in England now and not to feel the optimism in the air, a restrained optimism, indeed, that is too well grounded in bitter experience not to take into account possible setbacks, but nevertheless a feeling that the country in 1923 is going to be a more comfortable place to live in than it was in 1922. First among the causes of this are the certain hopes of better trade, hopes everywhere prevalent, except, I believe, in the cotton trade. Naturally all these aspirations will be upset if there is a Continental crisis over Reparations, but even upon that extremely difficult question people are hopeful. Mr. Stanley Baldwin and the Governor of the Bank of England have left for America to discuss our debt to the U.S.A., with considerable belief in their ability to get it postponed, and so to save a financial calamity on the Continent. The new Government has undoubtedly won the confidence of the country—it has strengthened its position very manifestly in the last month or two—and, though there are any amount of "snags" ahead at home, like unemployment and agriculture, to say nothing of foreign problems, it is believed that by the end of 1923 the Government will have placed the country, or rather will have allowed it to place itself, in a stable position.

The Old Year.

The year 1922 was a wild, uneven period, and its last few days were typical of the whole. On Christmas Day the wind roared and the rain slashed (though probably this was, historically speaking, the correct thing to do); vessels at sea made perilous passages, and much of the countryside was made indistinguishable through the large tracts of water that lay upon it. On Boxing Day a sporting but brief effort was indulged in by the weather to make amends, but after that the days petered out for the most part in rain and rheumaticising winds. If during these dark days any new resolutions were made—and one understands that it is the fashion now to make such resolutions at Christmas time instead of at the New Year—they were surely broken before Sunday. Even in sport, from which as a nation we could always look for bright omens, obscurity fell on us, for against a touring French Rugby team our best club sides could only just get home, while from South Africa came the dismal news that England, after leading on the first innings, had lost the first Test.

But that is a rather superficial account of the death of 1922. Actually the spirit of the pre-war Christmas was more nearly approached in this year than it had been in any of the four preceding years. Memories of 1914-1918 were sufficiently submerged, and everybody succumbed for the old annual nonce to the spirits of the children. Not a bad bow to make as final greetings to 1922; at any rate, a proof of elastic in us that we were beginning to think had perished!

The Honours Commission.

The report of the Honours Commission, which was formed a few months ago to allay the growing scandal which the sale of honours had caused in the country, has now been published. It is a skilfully-composed document, in which implicit admission of evils is combined with a certain naïve belief that the opinions of such people as Prime Ministers, Chief Whips, and Party Managers were of capital importance in this matter. Needless to say, a complete and unanimous denial of any personal cognisance in any purchased honours was made by these men to the Commission, who, notwithstanding, were so satisfied upon the existence of touting, of buying, and the rest, that they recommended that in future, in order that only fit and proper persons should have honours thrust upon them, each Prime Minister should appoint, for the duration of his Government, three Privy Councillors to scrutinise the list of names proposed. From this recommendation Mr. Arthur Henderson, who presented a minority report, dissented. He would solve the problem of the distribution of political honours by abolishing them altogether—an impracticable suggestion in the plutocratic society that we are now become. We ought, perhaps, to be thankful that the Commission went so far as it did, though few people really believe that the scandal of honours can be checked until the auditing of the Party Funds has been secured.

However, the so-called reformation has begun with the New Year Honours, which were issued on Sunday.

The New Railway Era.

To-day the new grouping of the railway companies of Great Britain came into force, and instead of the hundred-odd independent and picturesque companies we now have four large groups, called the Southern, the Great Western, the London, Midland, and Scottish, and the London and North-Eastern. Some such move as this was inevitable, for it had been made clear to everyone concerned that a multiplicity of companies was bad and wasteful. It is, moreover, a natural step in the centralisation of industry. We may, as romanticists, lament the passing of the old companies, to which we had become inured and almost attached, or, as boys, deplore the abolition of the many different colours of engine, but as economists (and we are all economists now) we must welcome the step. It is claimed by those responsible for this amalgamation that there will be less overlapping and less waste, better train services, faster goods train services, more variety in travelling, and elimination of redundant services without curtailing facilities to the public. This certainly reads rather like a political party document, and it almost looks as if mistakes might have been made in the past. However, if only two of their claims were to be realised we should be grateful. On the incidental benefits from this new grouping—the promotion of

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

LONDON : Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
CALCUTTA : 1 & 2, Old Court House Corner. H.L. Bell, Gen. Man.
CAIRO : 48, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Gen. Man.
ALEXANDRIA : Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
CYPRUS : Najem Houry & Sons.
JERUSALEM,
JOPPA, HAIFA, } Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.
KHARTOUM,

harmony between the various companies, the employers and the employees, and the companies and the public, and so on—it might be wise not to build much store. He would be a bold man to predict that the last railway strike has been seen.

But, apart from these high matters of industry which the ordinary layman is not competent to discuss, but which, nevertheless, seem to be the main topic at the moment in railway carriages, there is one aspect of the change which everyone does realise, and that is the reduction in the fares. We have long grumbled that it was overdue, and whether from a belated sense of justice or from policy, the company directors have at last agreed with us. Generally speaking, it was possible to-day to travel first-class at 2½d. a mile and third-class at 1½d. a mile—in other words, the fares have been reduced to 50 per cent. above the pre-war basis. The same reduction has been applied to perishable traffic by passenger train, but not to season and contract tickets or to workmen's fares. These are valuable concessions, as can be seen from the estimated loss of revenue (on present traffic, of course), which is £10,000,000 a year. Reductions have also been made in London tramways and omnibus fares and on the Underground Railway system. It is possible, therefore, to think that, with the prospect of increased goods traffic, of increased passenger traffic, and of the business accruing from the various electrification schemes, the railways of Great Britain may fairly soon be on a paying basis, and that the nightmare of road supremacy may vanish.

The Progress of the Music Hall.

Over nothing so much as the forms of social entertainment are Englishmen apt to divide themselves into two camps—that of the laudator temporis acti and that of the defender of the present. Particularly is this so in matters like sport, or personal manners, but most of all, perhaps, in the question of the stage. Acting, says the first camp, has deteriorated; the real functions of the theatre have been obscured, and especially in the decline of variety entertainment in the music hall can this decadence be seen. Now last week there was an opportunity of testing the correctness of this view, for at the Palladium were to be heard such old performers as Arthur Roberts, Tom Costello, Leo Dryden, and Florrie Robina, and it had to be admitted, after hearing them, that there was much to be said for the vanished music hall. Tears of joy were seen on the faces of the old stagers as they listened to such ghosts of songs as "If I was Only Long Enough a Soldier I Would Be," or "At Trinity Church I Met My Doom," or "The Miner's Dream of Home." There were, indeed, character and variety in their entertainment, and, above all, reliance upon personality. But the modern public does not greatly want any of these things.

Miss Margaret Cooper.

For the nature of the music hall has changed beyond recognition, a fact which was brought home last week when we read of the death of Miss Margaret Cooper. Miss Cooper, with her songs at the piano, was an extraordinarily successful music hall artist; she contrived to sense the social change in the composition and in the inclinations of the music hall audience, and what might have been considered flat and bodiless by a male audience of the 'nineties was adored by the mixed audiences of the last fifteen years. Technically, of course, she was far ahead of any other artists of similar genre; in pianoforte playing, in elocution, and, above all, in the art of dressing, she was unusually gifted. Her fame extended far beyond the suburban circle, which used to pride itself on its exclusive knowledge of Miss Cooper, and songs like "Waltz Me Around Again, Willie," and "Dingle Dongle Dell" are known all over the colonies. It is interesting, in a consideration of the vanishing of personality on the music hall stage, to speculate on what form entertainment there will take, for a more fragile presence than she possessed is inconceivable. She was an unsubstantial fragrance, a delightful breeze. Yet even her type of entertaining is passing. What will follow?

Some Recent Books.

The "Publishers' Circular" is always a fascinating book. It appears that 8,754 new books were published in the past year, of which Fiction heads the list with 1,931, and Sociology comes next with 836. Religion is very high with 743, showing that people are interested, at all events, in their own views; while it may calm our feverish patriots to know that Games and Sports claim only 222. It is amusing to find Music and Domestic Arts (often confused in this country) right at the bottom of the list.

There are few more charming spectacles than that of an historian dealing with a light and congenial task: he is bound to dig up something entertaining. Many others than Cambridge men, therefore, will, I imagine, be intrigued by D. A. Winstanley's "The University of Cambridge in the Eighteenth Century" (Cambridge University Press). These two things, Cambridge and the Eighteenth Century, are, of course, Mr. Winstanley's own; and he handles them very lovingly. With his help we can establish affinities between the eighteenth century don and the modern undergraduate. We read, for instance, that the former's manners were atrocious, and who will deny this possession to the latter? Certainly none from "the other place." Again, we have no bad parallel to the modern undergraduate who is attempting the impossible task of a "Special" in a Dr. Watson, Bishop of Llandaff, who was appointed Professor of Chemistry in 1764, when "he knew nothing of chemistry, had never read a syllable on the subject, nor seen a single experiment in it." The story, too, of a Dr. Ridlington, a Fellow of Trinity Hall, who, when he thought he was dying of the dropsy, "prescribed himself a boiled chicken entire and five quarts of small beer," has a most undonish ring. But surely the undergraduate of this century would have died, whereas the worthy Hall man survived!

The publication of "Fishing Boats and Barges, from the Thames to Land's End," by Walter Wood (John Lane) comes at a time when a boom in small-boat sailing is assured. The author writes upon all sorts of curiously rigged craft, discourses engagingly on the smuggling of a hundred years ago on the Channel coast, and naturally has much to say on the "London River." FUSILIER.

For Hire

PRIVATE CARS
OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS

10 DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE W1

Langham
1222
Hampstead
8203
Titchfield
2777

The Near and Middle East.

From Our Own Correspondents.

EGYPT.

Cairo, December 21.

The Political Situation.

The air is full of rumours of the forthcoming satisfaction of the main demands of the Extremists—viz., the liberation of Zaghloul Pasha, the return of his colleagues from the Seychelles, and the liberation of the members of the Wafd interned at Heliopolis. There is, however, reason to believe that there is no truth in these rumours, which have probably been put about as a sort of propaganda to keep the Extremists quiet and give the Cabinet the breathing space of which it stands so sorely in need. There is no doubt that the settlement of these matters would materially assist the new Cabinet, but there are other equally important questions which require attention, and the early solution of which could be much more easily attained. These are Egypt's representation at Lausanne, the Constitution, and the abolition of martial law.

So far no definite decision has been come to with regard to Lausanne, although negotiations have been going on. What exactly the hitch is no one can tell, but, from the fact that the matter was practically settled before the Sarwat Cabinet made its exit, it looks very much as if the difficulty comes from the Egyptian side, though in what manner it is not possible to say at the present moment.

The abolition of martial law merely awaits the completion of the Indemnity Act, which must first meet with the approval of the British Government; and the Constitution awaits the final drafting of the Electoral Law by the Legal Committee. Neither of these two measures can be hurried into existence, for it is only reasonable that the new Cabinet should exhaustively study the proposals before sanctioning their presentation to the King for promulgation. There must, therefore, be some delay before any action can be taken with regard to either of these two measures by the Cabinet, and since the Extremists are making so much heavy weather with regard to what they call the Cabinet's inaction, one can perhaps understand the circulation of rumours intended to convey the impression that a settlement of some of the more popular of the Extremists' demands is likely to take place in the near future.

The latest news which I have received from a well-informed quarter is that the draft Constitution and the Electoral Law have actually been transmitted in their final legal form to the Prime Minister by the Consultative Committee, and that it is confidently expected that they will be promulgated, with but slight modifications, in the first days of the New Year. This will mean that the elections will take place some time in March, and that the new Parliament will assemble in April, by which time the Parliament House will have been completed.

The Lausanne Delegations.

As most of those expected who knew anything of the psychology of the people mainly concerned, a split is now officially recorded in the "coalition" delegation which was recently formed at Lausanne between the representatives of the Hisb El Watani and the Wafd El Masri. The ill-assorted union has, in fact, become dissolved as a result of complete incompatibility of temperament.

The interests of the dominant personality in and behind the two delegations are indeed entirely juxtaposed. The Wafd El Masri stands for a democratic régime, and its controlling element is by nature entirely opposed to an autocratic condition of things. The Hisb El Watani ostensibly also stands for democratic principles, but the dominating influence is distinctly in the opposite direction. That influence is the ex-Khedive, whose man is the Vice-President of the party and the head of the delegation at Lausanne. He has been, and still is, moving heaven and earth to get the Kemalists to support his cause and to upset the existing régime in Egypt. Abbas Hilmy Pasha thought to profit by the influence of the Wafd El Masri to bolster up his case, and the representatives of the latter were not astute enough to see the trap into which they at once fell. They have now realised the mistake they made and the manner in which the Hisb El Watani as the instrument of the ex-Khedive has been working against the real interests of Egypt, and they have declared the deal off and have resumed working on their own, while the Hisb El Watani delegates have proceeded to Angora. What has happened, however, has not raised Hassan Pasha Hassib and his colleagues in the estimation of their fellow countrymen.

The Recent Outrages.

Hard on the heels of the acquittals in the Thomas Brown case the military court has acquitted the Egyptian accused of attempting the murder of Mohamed Bedr Eddine Bey, the Egyptian Director-General of Public Security. This second failure to bring home the charge preferred by the authori-

EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS.

The Cheapest, Quickest and most Comfortable Route through Egypt.
EXPRESS CORRIDOR TRAINS.

Dining and Sleeping Cars.

PORT SAID

to
CAIRO

in 4½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-18-8
(L.E.1.910 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

ALEXANDRIA

to
CAIRO

in 3½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-15-5½
(L.E.1.755 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

CAIRO

to LUXOR

and vice-versa in 13 hrs.
by the TRAINS de LUXE

1st Class fare Lst.4-4-6
(L.E.4.120 m/ms)

Sleeping Car Supplement
Lst. 1-7-2
(L.E.1.350 m/ms).

LUXOR

to ASSOUAN

and vice-versa in 6½ hrs.

1st Class fare Lst.1-15-9½
(L.E.1.770 m/ms)

LUNCHEON CAR.

FOR ALL INFORMATION APPLY TO:—

PUBLICITY SECTION,

EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS
CAIRO STATION.

ties against men inculpated for complicity in recent political outrages has made a very bad impression on the British and European communities. There is no desire to be unduly severe with the Special Commission which was formed last August for the handling of these and similar political crimes. It is recognised that this Commission has had to contend with enormous difficulties, not the least of which have been the obstacles set in its way in certain Government circles. It is felt, however, that there must be something radically wrong with both the methods and the organisation if, after five months' work, it has not been possible to do more than bring before the military courts two cases in which the evidence has been so inconclusive. The only redeeming feature in these acquittals is that the verdicts have greatly enhanced in the eyes of the Egyptians the reputation for impartiality of the military courts.

Turf Libel Action.

A libel action of peculiar local interest, in view of the details and the personalities concerned, came this week before the Supreme Consular Court. The parties were Major Turner, King Fuad's trainer, for whom Messrs. Silley and Moriarty acted as counsel, and four of the stewards of the Jockey Club of Egypt, who were defended by Mr. F. Maxwell. The action was brought by Major Turner in consequence of the publication in the Racing Calendar of a decision of the Jockey Club of Egypt warning him off the turf, as it held him responsible for the doping of a horse. The proceedings have been somewhat sensational, and are likely to be protracted.

GREECE.

Athens, December 23.

The Possibility of Further Trials.

Unlike its predecessor, the month of December has been so far uneventful, the only noteworthy event of the first three weeks having been Prince Andrew's trial, which, happily, ended in a way pleasing to everybody. There is still to come the trial of the second group of political prisoners, who, like the late M. Gounaris and his colleagues, are accused of responsibility in the Asia Minor disaster, but it is doubtful whether this will take place before the Orthodox Christmas and the New Year holidays. Indeed, it is quite possible that the trial will not take place at all. At least, that is what the Eleftheron Vema says, and, as everyone knows, that journal echoes the views of the Revolutionary Committee. The only persons who, according to the Eleftheron Vema, will be tried are General Constantinopoulos, formerly Military Governor of Athens, and Colonel Tsontos, formerly "Commandant de la Place."

The Political Situation.

The situation, as far as relations with Great Britain are concerned, remains unchanged. The first Secretary of the Legation, Mr. Bentinck, who stayed on as "Chargé des Affaires" (not "Chargé d'Affaires"), has had no intercourse whatsoever with the Greek Government, and the latter are beginning to realise that the rupture with England is doing considerable harm to the nation, and are seriously considering the question of handing in their resignation. Only thus, it is believed, will the re-establishment of friendly relations with Great Britain and Italy be made possible. This solution is favoured by the Venizelist circles, which were very much upset by Mr. Lindley's departure. In their opinion, M. Zaimis—probably the only Greek politician who enjoys the confidence of the Allies to-day—is the person indicated to form a new Cabinet. It is understood, however, that M. Zaimis would only be willing to accept the mandate on condition that the Revolutionary Committee be disbanded, and that, needless to say, does not coincide with the views of Colonels Gonatas and Plastiras, who maintain that the Revolution has not yet completed its task. Should all efforts to pave the way to an understanding between M. Zaimis and the Revolutionaries fail, the possibility of a new Cabinet under the present Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Alexandris, should not be entirely excluded.

Greece and Lausanne.

The deliberations at Lausanne are naturally followed here with keenest interest, and although the latest news is very optimistic, the majority of the Greeks are convinced that the Conference will end by making "a hole in the water." It is argued that even though Ismet Pasha may have adopted a conciliatory attitude at Lausanne, he does not possess any real power to accept or reject—particularly to accept—the Allies' decisions, and that any concessions he may make would be cancelled by the Grand National Assembly of Angora. Greece is therefore taking no risks. The reorganisation of her army is making very satisfactory progress, and from accounts of officers on leave the moral of the troops is beginning to regain its old standard. The Minister of War, General Pangalos, was telling me the other day that Greece has now 100,000 men in Western Thrace, and that these could easily be increased, if necessary, to 200,000. "But it should be clearly understood abroad," added the Minister, "that we have no aggressive designs on any of our neighbours. We want peace, nothing but peace, but we are determined not to allow the Kemalists to violate our new frontiers."

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 11.

THE CRO' WE' ROOM at
The "LYGON APMS," Broadway. A typical old English Inn of the 16th Century. Full of oak carving, fine ceilings and stone fireplaces. Here Cromwell is reputed to have slept the night before the Battle of Worcester.

Shade of Cromwell: "I am informed some of your friends, JOHNNIE WALKER, describe you as I did the Battle of Worcester—'A crowning mercy'."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

The Refugees.

Several thousand refugees have arrived at the Piræus within the last three weeks, chiefly from the Pontus and Mersina. Two or three boatloads have also arrived from Constantinople. The latter are mostly wealthy Greeks or Armenians who can afford to leave their homes and spend a few months in Athens until the situation in the Turkish capital becomes more settled. In addition to these refugees, Greece is now affording hospitality to about 12,000 Greek and Armenian orphans who arrived recently from Samsoun and the interior of Anatolia. These children, whose total number will eventually reach 25,000, are cared for by the American Near East Relief, the headquarters of which have now moved from Constantinople to Athens. They are at present accommodated in the old Royal Palace, the Zappeion Exhibition Palace, and in the hotels at the watering towns of Edipsos and Loutraki, which have been requisitioned by the Government. Many of them will also be sent to Corfu to spend the winter in the two palaces there, the "Achilleion" and the "Mon Repos." By next spring the Americans are hoping to have their own place—a huge orphanage in one of the islands—where all these unfortunate fatherless and motherless children will be housed and trained to become self-supporting when they become old enough to step into the world.

Food Difficulties.

A very important event, from a gastronomic point of view, has been the butchers' and greengrocers' strike, which still continues. These tradesmen, who amassed huge fortunes during the last few years, objecting to certain measures adopted by the Government to put a stop to the continuous advance in the prices of meat and vegetables, have practically closed down their shops, with the result that Athens has now been deprived of these commodities for over a week. Strange to say, there is also a shortage of fish, and although game is plentiful one cannot live on hares and wild duck, especially when the vendors of these delicacies take advantage of the lack of meat and charge exorbitant prices. A hare of a fairly large size is sold to-day at 70 drachmæ, which equals about 3s. 10d. at present rate of exchange; to the Greek, however, who earns his money in drachmæ, 70 drs. is a small fortune, considering that he only pays 16 drs. (about 10d.) for an oka (2 lbs. 13 ozs.) of beautiful fresh meat!

The leader of the Revolution, Colonel Plastiras, has promised to deal with the situation in a thoroughly military manner, and although the Colonel is known to be a man who usually keeps his word, the butchers' and greengrocers' shops continue to remain closed. It looks very much as if plum-pudding is going to be our only food on Christmas Day!

IRAK.

Baghdad, December 19.

The Claims to Mosul.

Baghdad is showing a lively interest in the proceedings of the Lausanne Conference, and especially in the question of the future of Mosul. The Turks claimed Mosul as theirs, the Kurds are said to be maintaining that it is indispensable to any Kurdish State that may be formed, while more recently the Assyrians are reported as having declared that the town is Assyrian on grounds both of language and of history. This last claim, which is so absurd that in ordinary circumstances it might have been ignored, has at the present time, when Iraki nerves are already on edge owing to the Turkish and Kurdish claims, raised a tremendous storm in a teacup, and the local vernacular papers have vied with one another in denouncing the claim and in proving how essentially Arab Mosul is on every conceivable ground. It was announced a few days ago that the Turks had offered to waive their claim to Mosul on condition that they were given a considerable interest in the Turkish Petroleum Company, which holds the concession for the exploitation of the oil resources of that part of the country. This offer, and, later still, the claim of the heirs of the late Sultan Abdul Hamid that the oil deposits in Mosul vilayet were the private property of the late Sultan, and so now belonged to them, made the local Press still more furious, and it is calling on Iraklis to insist that the oil resources of Mosul, which are claimed as the country's most valuable asset, are not disposed of in any way without the consent of the people of this country and the vote of the elected National Assembly. If the result of this is to rouse up in the country a genuine national, as opposed to a xenophobe feeling, it will be for the country's good, for at the moment the great mass of the people are singularly apathetic regarding national or, indeed, any matters of more than local or even of personal interest.

Irak and Nejd.

The High Commissioner returned this week from his tour in the Persian Gulf, where he visited Ibn Saoud at Ujair, and persuaded him to ratify the treaty between Nejd and Irak which was drawn up and signed by representatives of King Faisal and of Ibn Saoud at the conference held at Muhammerah in April last. It will be remembered that Ibn Saoud had refused to ratify this treaty owing to his claim that his representative had exceeded the instructions given to him.

Liberal Measures.

The High Commissioner also visited Henjam, where the political deportees from this country have been detained. The local papers announce that he has given permission to all of them except Jaafar Challabi Abu Timman and Hamdi Beg Pachachi to return to Baghdad. Jaafar Challabi and Hamdi Beg are said to be going to Egypt. The local papers also say that permission has also been given for the reopening of the Hizb al Watani and the Hizb al Nahdhah, which, it will be remembered, were suppressed by the High Commissioner in August, but no official announcement on the subject has yet been made.

This action should do much to cut the ground from under the feet of the new party, which is canvassing for support, and whose programme is reported to be opposition to the Mandate and the Anglo-Irak Treaty, the immediate recall of the

DALTON, VASE

— AND COMPANY. —

Importers of General Merchandise

DEPARTMENTS:—Ladies' & Men's Outfitting, Children's Outfitting, Boots & Shoes, Gold, Silver & Electro-Plate, Perfumery, Glassware, China, Enamel & Tin Ware, Household & Camp Furniture & Furnishing Fabrics, Household Linens, Leather & Japanned Goods, Cycles & Motor Cycles, Toys, Haberdashery, Sports Goods, etc.

Communications invited from Manufacturers.

BASRAH, MESOPOTAMIA.

political deportees, the reopening of the suppressed Hizbs, and the postponement of the elections until some time after the return of the deportees in order that they may have an opportunity to make their influence properly felt on the electorate. There are no indications that this party will gain any appreciable support, as the people are now showing a tendency to want to settle down and have done with political agitation.

The Weather.

The weather has at last broken in Baghdad, and on Sunday there was twelve hours' continuous rain. This has done much to relieve the anxiety felt by cultivators as a result of the continued fine weather, and has considerably improved the crop prospects.

The "Daily Mail" Propaganda.

Great disappointment is felt here at the articles of Sir Percival Phillips in the Daily Mail. It is generally considered that they are unworthy of a person of his reputation, and a more balanced and carefully reasoned account had been looked for. Such articles are untimely at the present juncture.

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubliana, December 21.

The New Cabinet.

So M. Pashitch's Radical Ministry is a fact after all, and the Democrats have been eliminated from the Coalition Government. Beyond all doubt, there is an element of weakness inherent in every Coalition Government, and therefore in some ways the one-party Radical Government will be an improvement. On the other hand, it is by no means certain that M. Pashitch's Government will be equal to its task, although its duty is only to carry on until the General Election is over. In one matter, M. Pashitch has already suffered a heavy reverse. Neither the National Moslems nor the Slovene Peasants have consented to come in with him. The Premier was firmly convinced that he would be able to persuade them, and representatives of both parties were actually included in the list of prospective ministers. But he was disappointed, and two portfolios have not yet been bestowed. M. Pashitch was compelled to choose his Cabinet from the Radical Party only, and it is to be noted that he has, at all events, been successful in healing the schism within that party, since members of M. Protitch's faction have accepted office.

A "Great-Serbian Cabinet."

As the Radical Party is a specially Serbian party throughout, the new Ministry has already been dubbed "the Great-Serbian Cabinet" by the Opposition parties. In order to counteract this impression a little, M. Pashitch included M. Giuro Supilo as representative of the Croats, and M. Niko Zupanitch as representative of the Slovenes. (During the Great War Dr. Zupanitch was in London as member of the Yugoslav Committee, and in that capacity was very actively engaged in propaganda against the Central Powers.) As both these Ministers are so far without portfolio, their influence is likely to be limited.

General Election.

March 23, 1923, has been fixed upon as the date for the General Election. The Democratic Party has already opened its election campaign with an appeal to the electors. Many of its most prominent leaders have left for their constituencies. The Radicals may put forward a revision of the Constitution as an election issue, whereas the Democrats will lay stress upon the Yugoslav idea. Of the aims and methods of other parties it is as yet too early to speak.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The columns of THE NEAR EAST are always open for the discussion of subjects of general interest to its readers. The publication of such letters must not be taken, however, as indicating that the views expressed by the writers are those of THE NEAR EAST.

REFUGEES IN GREECE.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—As a resident in Greece for close on ten years, with some knowledge of the country and of the present deplorable position of the refugees, may I be permitted to express an opinion with regard to the appeal made by His Majesty's Government, published in The Times of the 8th inst., for support by private contributions for the relief of refugees in Greece, and so to avert what might otherwise prove to be, in the words of the appeal, "a disaster of unparalleled magnitude." It is stated that the British Government, which received invaluable help from the American navy, expended £52,000 in the removal of refugees from Asia Minor; that it has given stores valued at £10,000 to the British relief societies, and has paid over £10,000 to the League of Nations for its relief work. Other Governments, particularly the American, have no doubt been just as munificent, possibly more so, in rendering relief. Many private individuals, too, have given generous donations. All very excellent in its way and most gratefully received. But surely it is evident that, in dealing with a matter of such urgency and magnitude as the settlement of over 1,000,000 destitute persons in a country sorely impoverished by ten years of war, something more tangible should be forthcoming than mere charitable support. Welcome as it is, it can be regarded as only a temporary expedient. Simply to feed 1,000,000 people with the barest necessities of life must cost not less than £50,000 per day. It is obvious, therefore, that relief of a more permanent and comprehensive nature must be conceived to enable these refugees to become self-supporting as soon as possible.

The untapped resources of Greece are immense—agricultural, mineral, and water-power. I refer particularly to Macedonia. Western Thrace, and the rich plain of Thessaly. The difficulty in the development of these resources in the past has been due largely to the lack of labour, coupled, no doubt, with the mis-government of these districts when under the rule of the Turk. By the influx of these refugees into Greece an excellent opportunity now occurs of providing them with profitable employment for the development of these rich resources, the one lack being funds. I submit that, in the interests of humanity and for the peace and progress of this unhappy country, immediate measures be taken in concert with the Greek Government with a view to the raising of a loan to Greece, guaranteed by the British Government, for the above specific purpose of developing her resources, the expenditure of the loan and of the revenues arising therefrom to be controlled by a duly constituted Loan Commission. Unless some such steps are taken, and taken quickly, it is to be feared that the disaster portrayed in the appeal of His Majesty's Government must be inevitable.—I am, etc.,

G. M. BAILEY,

General Manager in Greece, Lake Copais Co., Ltd.
Aliartos, Greece, December 18.

[We cordially endorse the above suggestions, which will be found outlined in the "Notes of the Week" of our issue of October 26.—ED.]

Near East Bookshelf.

THUS SPAKE ZARATHUSTRA.

"ZOROASTRIAN CIVILISATION." By Maneekji Nussevariiji Dhallia.
(New York: Oxford University Press. 21s. net.)

History reveals two types of Empire. The first has its nucleus in an inviolate island; by dint of sea power its people plant colonies broadcast and secure dominion over distant lands by conquest or commerce. Such was the genesis of the British Empire. The second type is Continental. It has neither protecting seas nor strategic frontiers, but is capable of enormous expansion through land warfare waged by its monarchs. Persia is the classical instance of a Continental Empire, and Mr. Dhallia has done well in making its chequered history synchronise with the successive dynasties which attained political power. Persia is called by its natives Iran, the Aryan land, and its people unquestionably descend from a mysterious race who tended their flocks on Central Asian plains. During the fourth millennium B.C. their habitat underwent tremendous changes. The globe's surface rose skyward through volcanic agency, seas and rivers shrunk in volume, and the Aryan's lush pasture-ground became "a thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice." Following the sun's track, they invaded Persia, India, and Europe in successive swarms. The newcomers were highly organised for aggressive warfare; they drove the aborigines into trackless mountains or reduced them to slavery. After settling down to till the soil, the Perso-Aryans developed a hierarchy of castes, comprising priests, warriors, peasants, and artisans; but it never attained the enormous development which has arrested the progress of the Indo-Aryan branch. The priesthood retained spiritual ascendancy; hereditary chieftains were its secular arm, and the inferior castes coalesced. The early Aryans worshipped nature-powers—the sun as the source of life, warmth, and fertility; the winds, streams, and rain were placated by sacrifice, ritual and magical practices. They realised that life was a struggle between natural forces making for good and for evil.

Mr. Dhallia regards the prehistoric civilisation of Persia as coincident with the rule of the Pishdadian dynasty, which lasted from the fourth to the third millennium B.C. His authority is mainly Firdousi's "Shahnama," which was composed during the seventh century of our era. The poet based his immortal epic on current legends, and described the manners of a remote age in terms suggested by his own environment. The Shahnama cannot be relied on as an account of Persia's rise from primitive barbarism to semi-civilisation. Our author stands on firmer ground when he deals with the Kianian dynasty, which began about 2000 and collapsed at the commencement of the 7th century B.C. The sovereigns of that line enjoyed absolute power in theory, but their ambition was held in check by many powerful chieftains who were ever ready to renounce their obedience. Society became fairly stable on a feudal basis, and an admirable code of laws, styled the Vendidad, has come down to us, proving that Kianian civilisation was at a relatively high level. The national religion was mainly inherited from the Pishdadian era, but it postulated—

a far greater number of good and evil powers in control of nature's forces; and as reflective intelligence increased it began to invest them with moral or spiritual, as well as physical, significance. Thus light came to be regarded as the physical correspondent of truth, and darkness of falsehood. Consequently, the angel of light had the twofold duty of combating darkness and error. Also, in the process of deifying the forces of nature, man was led to personify his own good and evil qualities. Every virtue was fostered by some particular angel, or good genius, and every vice by some evil demon. The two were in incessant combat, and man lived his life between the combatants. He had as many masters to serve as he had enemies to fight, and, although his efforts in withstanding the evil hosts were lightened by help from his unseen protectors, he was bound to propitiate them with sacrificial offerings and elaborate ritual. His intercourse with his heavenly Masters was most formal; Divine and human were immeasurable distances apart.

In the history of every creed we find a man of genius who is capable of divining the true inwardness of natural phenomena. On the floating mass of current intuitions and beliefs he builds a solid edifice in which anxious souls find refuge. Regarded from a purely historical standpoint, Zarathustra, better known to the West as Zoroaster, ranks with St. Paul, Buddha, and Mohammed as the founder of an organised religion. There is a wide difference of opinion regarding the dates of his birth and death. According to Mr. Dhallia, he flourished at the beginning of the second millennium B.C., when King Vishtaspa occupied the throne of Persia. Zoroaster's precepts are enshrined in hymns styled Gathas, from which a definite system of belief is readily evolved. Its basic principle is the eternal conflict between powers making for good and for evil. Ahura Mazda, the supreme Deity, is opposed by Angra Mainyu, whose aim it is to injure and destroy. Mankind are free to choose between the rival camps; they may help Ahura Mazda in the struggle, or join forces with his deadly foe. But the warfare which is as old as mankind will end in the triumph of the power that makes for good, and Ahura Mazda will reign over a perfected universe.

Zoroaster did not deny the probability of the soul's survival for ages unnumbered; but he held that reward and punishment in any future existence would depend on our conduct in this world. He banned asceticism as tending to lessen the bodily vigour which is essential to success in the lifelong struggle; and monastic seclusion had no place in a creed whose watchwords were "Good thoughts, good speech, good actions." His injunctions anticipated the latest phase of scientific discovery, and are fraught with noble optimism.

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

They have a high ethical value, and were the source of Persia's greatness in after years. It is passing strange that a body of belief so inspiring and so consonant with Western ideals should have found no adherents in Europe.

During the Median dynasty, which rose to power in 708 B.C., Persian civilisation took its colouring from the religion taught by Zoroaster. But, under the Achæmenian kings who followed in 538 B.C., the conquest of Babylonia and Assyria introduced a Semitic leaven which led to their undoing. Persia was subdued by Alexander of Macedon in 330 B.C., and its civilisation was arrested for five centuries and a half. But in the year 225 of the Christian era it revived, under the impulse given by Ardeshir the Great, and the native dynasty founded by him raised Persia to an unexampled height of prosperity. The Sassanian kings waged an equal contest with Rome, and more than once did they bring the Byzantine Empire to the verge of ruin. In 651 A.D., however, the vast human reservoir in Arabia burst its banks and submerged the Middle East. Zoroastrian civilisation fell to rise no more.

In Persia itself there vegetates in hopeless poverty a small remnant which retains its ancestral religion in a debased form; but a kinder fate awaited the Zoroastrians who fled to India before the sword of Islam. It has been observed that "Every country gets the kind of Jew it deserves," and the proverb applies to the Parsis of Western India. By dint of their enterprise and commercial flair they have prospered amazingly under British rule; and in proportion to their scanty numbers they are, perhaps, the wealthiest community in the world. But they have never shown a trace of constructive genius; they are rent with internal feuds, and render grudging obedience to the ethical side of Zoroaster's teachings. Mr. Dhallia's vivid account of the vicissitudes undergone by Persia is pregnant with lessons for ourselves, and his book appeals with special force to students of the infant science of Comparative Theology.

F. H. S.

TRIPS IN YUGOSLAVIA.

"KREUZ UND QUER DURCH DEN SLAVISCHEN SUDEN." By Hermann Wendel. (Frankfurt a./M.: Frankfurter Societätsdruckerei.)

A very pretty book, delightfully illustrated by the author's own photographs, very clearly reproduced in the text by the so-called "photogravure" process, more familiar to us in certain illustrated weeklies than in books. We are given accounts, more or less in diary form, of three late-summer holiday trips. The first (1920) takes us from Marburg, in Styria, through Agram, Peterwardein, Belgrade, Nish, and Uskub to Monastir; and back by Lake Ochrida and the Albanian frontier to Uskub. The second (1921) from Belgrade across by Valjevo and Sarajevo to Ragusa, Cattaro, and Cettigne, and then back to Buccari by steamer; while the third (1922) describes a series of motor-drives into the interior of Carniola with Laibach (Liubliana) as a centre. There is nothing the least novel or adventurous in these travels by train, motor, and steamer, but the author clearly knows well the Yugoslavs and their history and literature, glimpses into which he constantly gives us, hanging little dissertations on convenient local pegs as he goes along.

Apparently a German Lorrainer by birth, and, we should guess, a journalist in Frankfort by profession, Herr Wendel manages to keep clear of any unpleasant reference to the War. There is no blowing of the German trumpet and no grudging of appreciation, where he thinks it due, of Germany's ex-enemies. Only the Italians worry him; but even they do so only because of their behaviour to his friends of the S.H.S. kingdom, of whom he has a good word for all except for the late Montenegrin dynasty. Of them he says, with a freedom and frankness that would horrify Mr. Devine, many things most uncomplimentary. His style is hearty and rather ejaculatory, and he too often slaps one on the back; but he does succeed in bringing out the present queer transition stage of the Orthodox-Catholic-Mussulman nation, their disillusion after the War, their memories of the good and forgetfulness of the bad under Austrian rule, and the continuous process of knitting the nation together which is going on in spite of all difficulties.

The following little sketch of Cettigne life will give some idea of the author's quality:—

The intellectual enjoyments of the Montenegrin capital have never varied in the least. Theatres! Concerts! Lectures! God forbid! One sits outside one of the two more or less Westernised "Kavanas" and gazes at the boots of the passers-by. When one is tired of that, one tramps oneself sadly up and down the main street. To reverse the process, too, is quite allowable, and is a change to boot. First up and down the Corso, and then, when one is tired of that, a seat before a cup of coffee. There they sit, there they promenade, grave as ever, in somewhat faded national costume, only that these modern times have taken the shooting-iron from the men's belts—the end of the middle ages for Montenegro!

C. S.-W.

LITTLE PICTURES OF INDIAN LIFE.

"THE DANCING FAKIR AND OTHER STORIES." By John Eyton. With Illustrations by L. Raven Hill. (London: Longmans, Green and Co. 7s. 6d. net.)

These sketches are written with a great love for India, for the diversity of its people, for its animals, and for the spirit of the Englishman who gives his best years to its service. The author's interest and pleasure in every detail that he has observed are felt refreshingly throughout the book. The quality of the little stories and episodes, of which there are about fifteen, is very unequal, but we find a real sense of humour in the account of the adventures during the war of Raghavendra Rao, a subtle insight in "The Joy of Little Tota," and a real knowledge of jungle life in "The Ugly Calf." With illustrations by Raven Hill, which are pleasantly reminiscent of "An Indian Sketch Book," it is a decidedly attractive volume.

LLOYD GEORGIAN DIPLOMACY.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—In connection with the review of my book, "Old Diplomacy and New" in your issue of December 21, will you allow me to mention that the map of Europe justly condemned by your reviewer was superseded by another as soon as the mistake was discovered—i.e., very early in the first edition?

May I also point out a slip in the review which makes me say, "Mr. Lloyd George did show the statesmen's talent for distinguishing the episodic from the permanent"? What I said was, "Mr. Lloyd George did not show" that particular talent.—I am, etc.,

A. L. KENNEDY.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

January 4 (New Style).

December 22 (Old Style).

Gumada I., 17, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Tibet 16, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Lady Somerleyton has left London for Egypt, and will not be back until April.

Colonel Pericles Vlassis, Military Attaché to the Greek Legation, has been recalled to Athens.

Mlle. Hélène Stancioff, daughter of the Bulgarian Minister, who accompanied her father to Lausanne, has returned to town.

It is stated that Major-General Sir Harold Walker, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., will succeed General Sir W. Congreve, V.C., as Commander-in-Chief in Egypt.

The engagement is announced of John Langdon Rees, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Bowen Rees, of Baudjah, Smyrna, and Haydee, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Giraud, of Bournabat, Smyrna.

After a short stay in London for the holidays, Mr. A. G. M. Dickson, Chairman of the London Committee of the National Bank of Turkey, who has taken over the direction of the bank in Constantinople during the absence of Mr. S. de Bilinski, will be returning to Constantinople this week.

Among the passengers who left London recently to join the P. and O. liner Morea at Marseilles were Sir Thomas and Lady Callender, Sir Henry Procter, Sir Marshall and Lady Reid, and the Hon. P. Thesiger for Bombay; Major-General Sir G. Boyd for Karachi; and Sir Archibald and Lady Birkmyre for Colombo.

The following awards have been conferred upon British officers for distinguished service rendered in the War:—By the King of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, Order of the White Eagle, Second Class, Maj.-Gen. Sir R. H. Ewart, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E., D.S.O., retd. pay, I.A. By the King of the Hellenes, Order of the Redeemer (Officer), Lt.-Col. N. J. C. Rutherford, D.S.O., M.B., R.A.M.C.; Order of King George I. (Officer). Capt. H. G. Hobson, O.B.E., M.C., R.A.M.C. By the Czecho-Slovak Republic, Croix de Guerre, Lt.-Col. J. Walker, D.S.O., V.D., A.I.F.

On December 28, at Christ Church, Lausanne, Mr. William Jackson Perkins, O.B.E., M.C., only son of Colonel W. J. Perkins, C.M.G., V.D., and Mrs. Perkins, was married to Millicent Edith Whitehouse, elder daughter of Canon F. C. Whitehouse, M.A., H.C.F., British Embassy Chaplain, Constantinople, and Mrs. Whitehouse. The bride was given away by her father, Mr. Edwin Whitehouse acting as best man. About thirty-five friends from Constantinople and Smyrna were present, and the guests included Lady Whittall (grandmother of the bride), Colonel and Miss Perkins, Sir Henry Woods, K.C.V.O., Lady and Miss Rumbold, Mr. and Mrs. C. La Fontaine, Mademoiselle Mandrin, Mrs. Edwin Whittall and daughters, Mrs. Kennay Whittall, Mrs. Jas. Whittall, Sir Adam Block, K.C.M.G., Dr. F. Clemow, C.M.G., Mr. A. Ryan, C.M.G., and Mrs. Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Werndel, Miss La Fontaine, and Miss Estelle Whittall. A reception was subsequently held at the Hôtel Britannia.

OBITUARY.

The death has occurred, at the age of 71, of Mr. Arthur F. G. Leveson-Gower. He entered the Diplomatic Service in 1876, serving, among other places, in Constantinople, Vienna, Belgrade, and Athens.

The death has occurred of Professor T. W. Rhys Davids, a distinguished scholar and an authority on Pali and Buddhist literature, who did much for the advancement of the study of the Orient. Among the many posts that he filled were the following:—Professor of Pali and Buddhist Literature at University College, London (1882-1912); Secretary and Librarian of the Royal Asiatic Society (1885-1904); part founder of the British Academy; and founder and President of the Pali Text Society; and President of the Manchester Oriental Society.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO.

Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOUY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOUY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."

Telephone No. : 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1923.

IN THE BALANCE.

The Allied delegates in Lausanne are entitled to the fullest commiseration over their exasperating experiences in trying to bring the Turks to reason, and they may rest assured that the patience that they have hitherto shown, as well as the handling of the Conference as a whole, has won general approval and admiration. In Great Britain Lord Curzon's masterly attitude has provided special ground for satisfaction; but it is recognised that his position has been materially strengthened, if not actually made possible, by the able support given to him by M. Barrère and Signor Garroni, representing France and Italy respectively, while, in the case of the Japanese delegates and of Mr. Child, of the United States, the geographical detachment of their countries from European affairs will have lent weight in the eyes of the Turks to their trenchant contributions to the Allies' statements of policy. If the delegations feel the need of a message heartening them in their efforts, we should be tempted to urge them to cling resolutely to their sense of humour, however frequently crises occur. Turkish obstruction in the past has only proved effective owing to the dissensions of the Great Powers; against Allied solidarity it can in the long run avail nothing. Those who set out to argue with the East—and the Allies went to Lausanne because circumstances compelled them to resort to argument in the place of more forcible methods of dealing—must lose count of time. A moment's reflection will satisfy anyone that the most unfortunate thing, from the Allies' point of view, that could have happened at the Conference would have been that the Turks should have shown themselves as western as the Westerners. In many quarters it has been accepted that there is in Turkish Nationalism something which distinguishes it from all previous efforts at reform in Turkey. We still hope that it will be proved that there is; so far, however, it has not revealed itself at Lausanne. If, after the defeat of the Greeks in Asia Minor, Mustapha Kemal Pasha had been able to pose as a European, Turkey must have become an embarrassing factor in European affairs. The Nationalist leader, however, has not been able to dissociate himself from his Asiatic following. In all that the Turks have said and done since, it has been Anatolia and not Europe speaking or acting. Anatolia may be a thorn in Europe, but not for the present a factor.

Viewed from the right standpoint, the Turkish danger has passed. Less than four months ago the late British Prime Minister, to whom the East, with all that pertained to it, was a closed book, sent forth an alarmist appeal to the British Empire to save Europe from the Turks. To-day it is recognised that in the scale of world values the Turks are little more than refractory children, capable of throwing stones, but not of creating earthquakes. It will be a misfortune for Europe if the Lausanne Conference cannot arrive within two or three weeks at a peace settlement; but the phase will pass, and at the worst it will only delay one section of the work of Europe's reconstruction. The chief sufferers, apart from the Turks themselves, will be the foreign residents of Constantinople. From a business point of view that city is already virtually dead; but many firms are "holding on," hoping that conditions will yet improve. Even if the Turks succeed in banishing all foreign interests from their country, it will, again, be a passing phase. Sooner or later a Turkey of another mind will arise on the Bosphorus, eager for the return of foreign capital and foreign residents. The immediate effect on Europe, therefore, of failure at Lausanne, would, in all probability, be relatively slight, and Turkey would find that her own dependence on Europe is far greater than that of Europe on the Turks. There remains the possibility of the outbreak of war. It is difficult to believe that, for all the hot-headedness of Angora, the Turks of themselves will resort to this extreme measure. The Allies, on their part, will feel more tempted to allow time to play its rôle in influencing Turkish intransigence than to indulge in the expense of a war. One of their first decisions would have to be in regard to their position in Constantinople. They could avoid all risk of war by withdrawing from the city and the Bosphorus, holding, perhaps, the Gallipoli Peninsula. If this course were adopted, every Greek and Armenian would have to be removed from Constantinople before the Allied troops were evacuated. An alternative would be to hold the waterway and the city as at present, making Allied control once more effective both on land and at sea, and leaving the Turks to do their worst. This latter policy would entail the risk of risings and massacres, but it would probably shorten the period of the Turks' recalcitrancy, and make it easier for Constantinople to resume a normal existence. If the Turks are anxious to avoid war, they will probably take care to discourage excesses in Constantinople while Allied occupation lasts.

We see no reason, therefore, for despair over the critical developments that took place at Lausanne last week. Time for once in a way is not on the side of the Orientals. The inconvenience to individual delegates of a protracted absence from their own countries is as nothing compared with the growing embarrassment that Turkey is experiencing in the absence of a settlement and of any early prospect of financial assistance. Allied solicitude for the Turks' difficulties should now be displayed more than ever. If the answer from Angora expected this week is not satisfactory to the Allies, no step should be taken to break up the Conference. On the contrary, there should be a further adjournment, after a recapitulation of the Allies' terms, in order to allow Ismet Pasha himself to exchange views with the Angora Government. As the world has had to wait over four years for a Turkish settlement, a few weeks' extension now means nothing to the Allies. The basis of a satisfactory settlement in the Near and Middle East is, as far as Great Britain is concerned, the establishment of friendly relations between the British and the Turks. Such a relationship cannot be obtained by the imposition of terms on an unwilling Turkey; but, given time, the terms which are now angrily rejected may before very long be accepted gratefully and their advantages appreciated. In the present instance patience and statesmanship are identical, and it would be derogatory to Great Britain to appear the inferior of Turkey in either the one or the other.

THE SACRED LAW IN TURKEY.

In view of the discussions regarding the abolition of the Capitulations in Turkey, the following extracts from an article which we published in January, 1914, will be of interest. The article was entitled "The Law in Turkey," and was contributed by Mr. John Sanderson.

The Sheikh-ul-Islamat, in which the Sheriat or Sacred Law is administered, is situated in Stamboul within a short distance of the Courts of Civil and Criminal Law. Here, indeed, is a contrast which staggers the Western mind. In the fine modern buildings containing the Common and Civil Law Courts you might imagine yourself in the Palais de Justice in Paris, or even wandering along the corridors of our own Temple of Justice in the Strand. In the Sheikh-ul-Islamat you are in the very heart of the East, unchanged for centuries. The difference between the Sheriat or sacred law and the civil and common law is easily appreciated. The Sheriat is drawn directly, first, from the word of Allah, embodied in the Koran; and secondly, from the conduct of the Prophet, which is equally the result of holy inspiration, and was preserved by his companions in the Sounnet or Tradition. It is, therefore, revelation pure and simple. But, as can be imagined, all the cases about to result from progress and civilisation were not foreseen by the Prophet, and so it became necessary to apply the law to fresh circumstances altogether.

This was accomplished, first, by the early Consultation Assemblies; and secondly, by the method of establishing legal analogies (kiass) between cases already dealt with by the Prophet and those of modern times. And so there arose the common or civil law embodied in Acts, having their authority in the Sultan as Khalif and Padisha. This portion of the law is largely inspired by the French code. But it is still based upon the Sacred Law, though laicised and administered in modern courts according to Western ideas of procedure. The contrast of the whole atmosphere and mode of procedure of these two courts could scarcely be more striking. In the Sheikh-ul-Islamat there is no advocate, no pleading, no hearing of a case. The litigant or his lawyer can only proceed in one way. He writes down on a slip of paper a question. This question must embody the particular point of law he wants to be decided, and whilst containing the facts of his case, must be so stated as to admit of the answer "Yes" or "No." For example, "Is a man who has inherited a piece of land under such and such circumstances entitled to retain it under such and such other circumstances?" A few days later the lawyer will go to the court and receive from one of the grave and holy men who are extended upon a low divan running all round the walls of the room this slip of paper, with the word "Yes" or "No" added at the bottom. And that will be his judgment in the case. That answer is now the law of the land until it is reversed either by a higher court of the Sheikh-ul-Islamat or by the judgment of a subsequent Sheikh-ul-Islam, who, of course, is the highest authority himself, and can always reverse the judgment of his predecessor.

Fortunately for the Turkey of to-day, this canonical law is limited in its application. It applies to all questions of personal status, e.g., majority, marriage, succession, religious charities, and slavery, and, of course, to all matters of religion. But it is, in a way, the Chancery side of the Turkish law, and the fact that the learned judges are paid about twenty shillings a week, and are almost all extremely limited in education, is a scandal which must in some way be remedied. The one safeguard of justice in any land is adequate pay. And so long as this sore festers at the very heart of the Turkish Empire any real progress in civilisation and in material prosperity is well-nigh hopeless.

The last time the writer visited the Sheikh-ul-Islamat in Constantinople a friend of his was taking part in a case in which the ownership of an estate valued at over £T20,000 was in dispute. "How much of that," I inquired, "will reach its proper owners?" His reply, in true Oriental fashion, was by way of a parable:

"The stork," he said, "was once called in to divide equally between the two joint owners a piece of cheese. 'To do this with absolute justice,' said the stork, 'I must have a pair of scales.' So a pair of scales was duly brought. Then the stork cut the piece of cheese in two parts, and placed one in one scale and the other in the other. They were almost equal in weight. Still, one was a shade heavier than the other. So the stork bit a small piece off the heavier of the two to make them equal, and replaced them in the scales. This time the other piece was the heavier of the two. So he was forced to bite a piece off that as well. Again the other proved too heavy; and so," concluded my friend, with a deprecating smile, "the biting went on till not a scrap of the cheese remained for either of the litigants." The imagery may be somewhat overdrawn. But, indeed, it is too true that litigation in this Court of the Sacred Law of Islam resolves itself only too frequently into a process of auction, in which the unhappy parties are reduced to bidding against each other in each successive court.

It is difficult to realise. For as you stand amongst these holy men, grey-bearded, grave and dignified beyond expression, you feel oppressed by the very odour of their sanctity. They look weary of the things of earth. They play incessantly with strings of amber beads. They pore over ancient leather-bound books of law. They consult together in sober measured accents. The spaces of the great room whose four walls are lined thus with exponents of the wisdom and justice of Islam seem charged with an atmosphere of awe-inspiring zeal for righteousness; and it requires an effort of the will to believe that these judges are, like all other mortal men, fallible by reason of their material needs. They are starved. And starving judges all the world over have fallen short of their office.

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Straits' Solution.

From the New Statesman of December 23 we extract the following :—

Lord Curzon's firmness has now won another engagement at Lausanne. After much haggling, and having secured certain more or less important concessions, the Turks have given way, and we have vindicated the lofty principle of the freedom of the Straits. There are details still to be arranged, but, provided that all goes according to plan, the main terms of the settlement will be these :—(1) There will be "demilitarised zones," but without foreign supervision—the demilitarisation will depend on the good faith of the Turks. (2) Turkey will be allowed to maintain a force of 5,000 men at Gallipoli, and possibly some artillery in addition. (3) In peacetime the warships of any Power may pass the Straits up to the strength of the strongest Black Sea Power; in wartime, if Turkey herself is neutral, there is to be no restriction of entry. Such is our triumph. It is at best a hollow, at worst a mischievous, triumph. It is either an empty assertion of British naval power, which is regarded, even by our Allies, with some mistrust—though their mistrust is for the moment not very loudly expressed, partly because they are anxious for peace at any price, and partly because of their particular dislike of the Bolsheviks. Or, if it has any real significance, it is a gesture against Russia. The Russians certainly take it so, and they will presumably return to Moscow with a flea in their ear, threatening to build a navy to defend their interests. There might perhaps have been risks in excluding all warships and making the Black Sea a mare clausum; there are other and worse risks in this compromise forced on a reluctant Turkey and rejected with contumely by an angry Russia. Lord Curzon's freedom of the Straits may prove an ugly farce.

On the same subject the Nation of December 23 says :—

It looks as though the Turks, having finally lined up against the Russians in the matter of joining the League of Nations and accepted its regulations regarding minorities, will similarly in the end accept the Allied plan for the ordering of the Straits. As modified after discussion between the experts, that régime provides for a Straits Commission ultimately responsible to the League of Nations, with demilitarised zones (through which Turkey will nevertheless have the right to transport troops in case of need), with the Asiatic coast of the Sea of Marmora fortified, and with a Turkish garrison of 12,000 at Constantinople. The real struggle has centred round the passage of warships into the Black Sea, and the Russian claim to make that area a mare clausum. This would incidentally leave the Soviet Government free to attack Roumania by land, or by both land and sea, with Roumania's potential supporters cut off from access to her. The Allied scheme would permit in peacetime the passage into and maintenance in the Black Sea of naval squadrons of any external Powers, limited in each case to the size of the largest fleet maintained by any riparian State. In case the Black Sea were demilitarised by the riparians, every external squadron would be limited to three vessels, each of less than 10,000 tons. We have grave doubts about this policy. The true line, in our view, is to exclude all warships.

The Conference of Lausanne.

The Manchester Guardian of December 28 discusses the possibility of a break-up of the Lausanne Conference. It treats in turn Lord Curzon's attitude towards Russia, the problem of Mosul, and the question of the Capitulations, and it concludes :

Of course, there is no means of compelling the Turks to be reasonable in this matter, and to provide, if preferred under a new name, the securities which commerce necessarily demands, but the matter is one on which both French and Italians, who have larger interests than ourselves in the Levant, feel strongly, and as to which their Governments will make a vigorous effort. There are other matters, such as import duties and the service of the Ottoman debt, not less contentious, and clearly if, as is reported, the Conference means to complete its labours by about the middle of next month, it would have to be a good deal more rapid in its pace than hitherto. But what if the Turks have no mind to make rapid progress? What if, faced with the alternative of a breach with Russia or a breach with the Allies, they come to the conclusion, after surveying the whole field, that the friendship and support of Russia matter a good deal more to them than agreement with the Allies? Why then, no doubt, the Conference will break up with nothing accomplished. That is obviously not a desirable result for either party, and might have some very awkward consequences. Perhaps before it comes about it may occur to Lord Curzon that Russia is not a wholly negligible factor, and that it is worth while even yet to do something to meet her perfectly natural alarms and desires.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to :—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Next Budget.

Next to Lausanne and the Reparations problem, the principal subject of interest is the coming Budget. The Government was elected on a policy of economy, and the City is waiting anxiously to see whether there is going to be a substantial reduction of taxation, which is absolutely essential for the development of trade. Much—very much—depends on what happens in regard to Turkey and Germany. Provided, however, that there are no untoward events abroad, there is every reason for anticipating that the substance of the Budget will gladden the heart of the long-suffering income-tax payer, and that Mr. Stanley Baldwin will be able to make a number of other reductions as well. So far this year the nation's finances make a very satisfactory showing, and there will evidently be a very substantial surplus at the end of the year, quite enough to justify 1s. 6d. off the income tax, though, I fear, we may have to be content with 1s. on this occasion and the prospect of more when the next Budget comes round.

Phoenix Oil Position.

At the meeting of the Phoenix Oil and Transport Company, at which the proposed merger with the Roumanian Consolidated Oilfields and the increase in the capital of the Phoenix Company were unanimously agreed to, the chairman, Mr. (now Sir) Edward Manville, M.P., gave a full review of the company's position, which served further to bring out the great prospects before the organisation. The company was only formed a little over two years ago, but in 1921 its production was 10,920 tons, which speaks eloquently as to the rapidity of the progress made in the work of reorganisation. For 1922, up to December 6, the production was about 41,000 tons. Mr. Manville pointed out that the large increase had been produced solely from two new wells working intermittently during the period, "and the future prospects of the company may be better measured by those wells in course of drilling, and nearing the oilsands, which in several cases will be entered in the very near future." One of these wells, No. 8 Moreni, has been brought in, a cable stating that the oilsand has been struck "in abundance," which Mr. Manville stated they judged to mean was that this well would prove comparable in its success to its neighbour, No. 5, which produced 20,000 tons in 120 days and is now producing at a rate of well over 200 tons a day.

Roumania's Geographical Situation.

The expectation that the current year has been a satisfactory one for the company was confirmed by Mr. Manville, who said that from the largely increased production of oil and from trading considerable profits had been made. The company would have paid an interim dividend but for the Roumanian Consolidated merger scheme. Dealing with the position in Roumania, the chairman emphasised the country's favourable geographical position from the point of view of the oil industry. It is possible, he pointed out, to supply Central Europe and France by tank wagons direct on the railways. "Again, there are those remunerative markets of the Danube and Pruth to which I have already referred, which can be served by our fleets of tugs operating from Giurgiu connected with our refineries by pipe-line. It is true that the Danube is frozen over during part of the winter, but throughout the whole year there are available the main pipe-lines from our refineries to Constantza, at which our loading station, with its large storage capacity, is just being completed, and from which shipments can be made to any part of the world. Again, Roumania is easily in the best position to supply the vast needs of Turkey, and now that there will be, we trust, a better understanding between Britain and that country, we hope to open up the market there, which could consume all our output on very favourable terms." He touched briefly on the transport position, and said that the facilities for transporting oil on the railways were such that no difficulties arise, which shows that much greater progress has been made in reconstruction than was supposed, unless it is that the Roumanian authorities have concentrated on the oil traffic.

Oil Supplies.

On another page will be found extracts from an important article which Sir John Cadman has contributed to a contemporary on the question of the world's oil supplies. We have not yet reached the stage at which there can be any degree of certainty in the matter, and the predictions frequently made of the early exhaustion of the oil regions have naturally affected the use of this fuel, and it is well, therefore, that from an authority like Sir John there should come a reassuring message. He is an optimist on the question; and what he has to say on the subject of supplies should help to convince those who would like to use oil as fuel, but are hesitating to make the necessary alterations, that they need not fear that in the next few decades there will be any shortage of the fuel.

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON.
E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

THE POSITION IN PALESTINE.

Finance and Trade.

The report on the administration of Palestine for the period July, 1920, to December, 1921, which has just been issued, makes its appearance at a time when events have brought the position in Palestine forcibly to the front. It will probably not be going too far to say that the lengthy record set forth in the report, which is encyclopædic in character (the phrase is used in no critical vein), would surprise most people who have been content to glean their knowledge of Palestine from the columns of units of the daily Press opposed to the British Mandate. But reports such as this are for the classes rather than the masses—to lapse into a well-worn tag—except for certain choice extracts, which help to push home the desired point of view. Were it otherwise they would learn that, instead of being merely a region which has involved Great Britain in a somewhat considerable expenditure, and will for some time to come necessitate further outlay, though on a reduced scale, it is a territory which, under careful British administration, has made very remarkable progress in the last few years, and which bids fair to develop into a prosperous country, the commerce of which will be a very considerable item, which should far more than compensate for the expenditure—that is, of course, if our traders do their duty and look after the market. Palestine presents to-day, in short, not the least remarkable example of the outstanding benefits of beneficent British rule. The difficulties with which our representatives have been faced there need no emphasis. They are well known. Not the least of them was the necessity for building the economic machinery of the country, and, indeed, almost everything practically de novo. It speaks volumes for what has been accomplished that the country now possesses foundations on which it is possible to construct the way to progress and prosperity. There is as yet no question of having made the rugged terrain “blossom like the rose,” but that is on the way. All that is required is a period of peaceful, orderly development and the co-operation of all to the common good, and, as regards the latter, it is possible to be at least hopeful in view of the report of the Economic Board of Palestine, which was given in these columns last week.

The report gives a financial statement for the period from July 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921. The revenue during that period amounted to £E1,108,527, while the expenditure was £E1,228,097. As the receipts allocated to the Ottoman Public Debt are not included in the revenue, it cannot but be admitted that, considering the circumstances, the financial position makes a much better showing than might reasonably be expected. There was bound to be a deficit for some years after the war, and one of £120,000 or thereabouts is certainly not calculated to cause disquiet. By the outcry that has been raised one would think that it was several times that amount. Small as it is, it is open to question whether it might not have been considerably less, whether, indeed, it might not have been wiped out altogether. This is where, if at all, there is a real opening for criticism of a constructive character. We live in days when all Government expenditure can be justified only on the ground that it is essential. Does that apply to all the heads of expenditure in this financial statement? It is in its essence outlay on what we should term the Civil Service, and it is open to question whether no slight reductions could not have been made in various directions. It is not open to question that expenditure on a greater scale may eventually be necessary, but wisdom would seem to dictate a policy of greater economy during the period of the country's development. An “Axe Committee” could probably find scope for its operations. In saying this we are actuated by no desire to be critical, but merely by the knowledge that it is essential in the country's interests to make the best of the prevailing circumstances. Later on, when the economic position has changed, the conditions will, of course, be entirely different.

The trade of Palestine is at present very one-sided, and must remain so for an appreciable period. Quite apart from the special conditions obtaining in Palestine as a result of the war, it is invariably the case that as regards agricultural countries on the threshold of their development imports must show a large excess over exports. In the case of Palestine the surplus is exceptional. For the nine months ended December 31, 1921, imports amounted in value to £E4,245,686 and exports to only £E569,496, or not much more than one-eighth. In this connection it is remarked that the imports are increased by certain exceptional items, and further that the export and re-export trade is largely to the east. “The figures shown for export, re-export, and transit, therefore, only tell a part of the story of the eastward flow of goods, since only the limited portion which enters Syria by the Haifa-Semakh-Damascus line is recorded; of the camel-caravan loads of merchandise which travel east to Transjordan and Iraq and south-east to Arabia there is practically no information, for there are no Customs-houses on the eastern frontier, and thus no record of the traffic that goes on unceasingly across the eastern deserts is ever made.” But, making allowance for these things, the fact remains that Palestine has at the present time a very large adverse trade balance.

The most satisfactory feature of the import trade is that Great Britain is still by far the principal supplier of goods to Palestine, her figures being £E1,394,593, Egypt coming second with £E583,173. Germany, it may be noted, figures for £E264,889, and for the whole of 1921 Germany's total was £E292,000, while Austria's was £E107,500. The great development of German and Austrian trade, it is pointed out in the report, was the outstanding feature of the year. “This increase is not solely due to the depreciated currencies and low rates of exchange . . . but also to the determined efforts of German merchants to get a footing in Palestine. Their methods of extended credits, catalogues and price lists in the vernacular, combined with persistent canvassing, have had considerable effect on the Palestinian importers.” It is to be hoped that this development will receive due attention in this country. German competition on the old lines throughout the Near East was inevitable, but its success depends as much as anything on the apathy of our traders, who have still, unfortunately, to be convinced of the value of the Mediterranean markets. This evidence of the activity of the Central Powers will, it may be trusted, have a very definite effect.

‘BALKAN’ NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

Oil Notes and News.

THE WORLD'S OIL SUPPLIES.

Great though the development of the use of oil as fuel has been, its utilisation has scarcely progressed on the scale that might have been expected, the main reason for this being doubt as to the certainty of supplies of the fuel. This question of the world's oil resources is dealt with by Sir John Cadman in an article in Lloyd's List, in the course of which he expresses himself as an optimist on the subject. "I am convinced," he says, "that the petroleum resources of the world are so vast that we have as yet made no serious inroads on them. When, therefore, I read the predictions that these resources will be exhausted in another twenty years I am not at all frightened. I recall that from the earliest days of the oil industry people have been predicting its exhaustion in about twenty years."

As regards the new areas coming into prominence at the present time he expresses the view that "none offers greater prospects than the South American continent, and although the sparsely populated nature of much of the country and the natural difficulties which certain districts present to the oil prospector are causes which will delay development to some extent, this continent should soon take its place as one of the main sources of world supply. It is not generally realised that the four South American countries of Peru, Trinidad, the Argentine, and Venezuela, though so far exploited to only a comparatively small extent, supplied jointly in 1921 sufficient oil to place the South American continent in the sixth place, or next to Persia, among the world's main sources of oil. Bolivia, too, though just now presenting somewhat greater difficulties than the others in the way of development, promises soon to add a fifth to the important producing fields of South America.

"Persia, of course, is an oilfield with vast potentialities; indeed, the limit to its output seems to be set only by the speed with which facilities for getting its oil to the consuming market can be provided. Production here is of special importance because of the particularly high quality of the oil obtained, and it is being carried out on an economic basis that avoids regrettable waste which has occurred in so many of the older oilfields of the world, notably in Mexico and the United States of America. In the Persian oilfield, indeed, is demonstrated the economic advantage, which is shared equally by the country owning the oilfields and the exploiter of those fields, through development of an extensive concession by a powerful company.

"Apart from these great areas I mentioned, now just on the threshold of development, there are other and older fields which may be looked to for increasing supplies as improvements in conditions of exploitation are made. Russia, where the oil industry is now suffering from the ill-effects of the economic revolution which has overtaken the country, should, when saner counsels shall have at last prevailed with her rulers, again become an oil area of great possibilities; and in all the adjoining areas, from the Caucasus to Mosul, it may be anticipated that much oil yet remains to be found. I need not touch in detail upon the many potential sources of oil that have yet to be proved, but from the far north-west of Canada and other northern points, such as Alaska and the island of Saghalien to the distant continent of Australia, the search for oil goes on, and though in some places the quest may be fruitless, in others we may reasonably expect to see it richly rewarded."

Sir John referred to the evidence of a new spirit of co-operation between the great nations in regard to the questions of the exploitation of the world's undeveloped natural resources. "As an instance I would cite the agreement reached between the Standard Oil Company of America and the Anglo-Persian Oil Company for the development of the North Persian oilfields, which, though delayed at the moment, I still hope to see consummated. The natural difficulties in the way of development of these areas demand the co-operation of oil enterprises with great resources, and of the world's great oil corporations none are better fitted for the work than these two, respectively the leading American and British companies, with their wide experience of oil production in difficult country, their large fleets of oil tankers, and the financial backing they possess. There is good reason to hope that the same spirit of co-operation will finally solve the tangled problem of the Mesopotamian oilfields, and that the great oil companies there, as in Persia, will realise that the best results for all concerned will follow from agreement rather than discord."

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended December 10 amounted to ££10,512.

The November output of oil in Baku is stated to have been over 263,000 tons, the average daily output being 330 tons higher than in October.

In accordance with a decree published by the Yugoslav Minister of Commerce, accounts as from January 1 last must be kept in all parts of Yugoslavia in dinars and not in kronen, the use of this term being entirely suppressed. All cheques, drafts, telegraphic transfers, etc., must therefore be expressed in dinars only.

Cable Address:
"Lobo, Dundee."

LOW & BONAR, Ltd., Dundee, Scotland.

All Cable Codes used.

Manufacturers of JUTE SACKS and JUTE CLOTH for all purposes.
Also of WATERPROOF CANVAS and TARPAULINS, YARNS, TWINES, ROPES, etc.

Shippers of all classes of JUTE, LINEN and COTTON FABRICS.
Also of CALCUTTA SACKS.

BRITISH CONSULAR REPORTS.

I.—Morocco.

The following extracts are taken from a report on the economic situation of the French zone of Morocco dated September, 1922, by Mr. C. E. Heathcote-Smith, H.M. Consul, Casablanca:—

The general economic conditions in the Protectorate today are a cause of anxiety but not of alarm. The crops have been fair to poor; most business houses are engaged in enterprises that give an insufficient yield on the capital invested; since the boom of 1920 land values have fallen from 30 to 50 per cent., and the wealth of the towns correspondingly; banks have advanced loans on most of the real property in new Casablanca and elsewhere, and cannot realise; taxation has reached, and in some cases passed, the economic limit; everywhere expenses are being cut down, the incoming "colonists" have not equalled in numbers those returning to France; while several important French firms which had opened branches here have closed down their Moroccan ventures and cut their losses.

Despite these pessimistic signs, there have so far been scarcely any bankruptcies of importance, and, given reasonably good fortune the crisis should be weathered and the country make good. Yet the figures for the past two years show that Morocco is annually purchasing abroad at the rate of £15,000,000, and only selling overseas some £5,000,000. It is true that part of this excess is being spent in fitting out the country with the modern equipment necessary for her new destinies, but the growing burden makes the immediate future the more difficult to negotiate. The greatest economic factor possessed by the Protectorate is its political stability. The European crisis that has upset the exchanges and markets of the world has had its repercussion here. But where the French zone is favoured above other countries is in the remarkably stable political setting within which its economic life is being developed. The authorities lay down programmes for railways, roads, ports, agriculture, development of towns or of mineral resources, opening up of new districts; the requisite credits are obtained from France, the programmes are proceeded with automatically, effective opposition hitherto has been unknown, and neither rebellion, civil commotion nor strikes interfere with the methodical fulfilment of the projects. This great asset of the Protectorate is not lightly to be disregarded.

The Agricultural Position.

The Moor has a passion for land. All his savings go to the purchase of more land, which he brings under cultivation when he can afford it. The French only took over the domain or State lands—which form a very small proportion of the area available for agriculture. They refused to interfere with private property out of respect for the Moslem law regarding its ownership. In consequence, agriculture is making slow progress (a) because there is very little land procurable for Europeans, as native owners are loth to sell, and the State lands have, in the main, already been taken over; the area that Westerners can exploit on modern lines is therefore restricted; and (b) because native methods are intensely old-fashioned and conservative. They are likely to remain so, because there is but little economic incentive for the native with his predilection for a low standard of living spontaneously to improve his methods. He can already undersell the European exploiter of the soil who has up-to-date equipment, the annual charges on which are heavy enough to make competition with the primitive Moor prohibitive.

The progress of livestock breeding has been well maintained and is a serious and growing source of revenue. As is known, the French authorities have made a scientific study of the whole question and have an excellent veterinary service which has successfully stamped out cattle disease on more than one occasion and is doing much to improve the breeds. Export of pigs, sheep, etc., is successfully carried on. Pig breeding, it should be mentioned, is proving lucrative, as the climate is very suitable.

A great extension in fruit growing and in the planting of vines is noticeable. Vines, in view of the different conditions under which they prosper, form an excellent alternative resource in this country, where conditions of excessive dryness have so frequently to be faced.

Mineral Resources.

The Department of Mines is continually issuing new permits for investigation for various kinds of subsoil wealth ranging from iron to petroleum. Doubtless some of these may prove valuable, but the undoubted asset of Morocco, which is confidently believed to be the trump card of her future, lies in the vast phosphate beds around El Bouroudj, Ber-Rechid and elsewhere. Some of these beds contain even a higher percentage than the Tunisian phosphates, attaining sometimes 70 to 75 per cent. The Chichaoua beds have been estimated as containing 500 millions of tons of phosphates and they are far from being the most important. It is claimed that Moroccan beds rival those of Florida. Staggering figures are given, so large that one hesitates to quote them; indeed, the supply is considered "inexhaustible."

Overseas Trade.

As pointed out in the opening paragraphs, the total imports have for the past two years exceeded the exports in the proportion of three to one: imports £15,000,000; exports, £5,000,000. This is surely but a normal condition for a country in its economic infancy, and, provided the age of maturity when output excels absorption is not too long deferred, can be welcomed as proof that the requisite equipment for future developments is being provided. The present heavy excess of imports over exports will continue until the phosphate exploitation has realised expectations, which will not be likely to occur before 1925; after this the figures should approximately balance.

The chief countries trading with the Protectorate in the past years have been France, the United Kingdom, and Spain. Since pre-war times France has steadily held some 50 per cent. of the import trade and periodically more than this of the export trade, though in 1921 her share fell to about 45 per cent. Spain has recently figured largely in this market, and after taking less than 1 per cent. of Moroccan exports in 1917 and 1918, absorbed nearly 160,000 tons in 1921 or about 44 per cent. of the total. Great Britain, which hitherto had been Morocco's next best customer after France, now dispossessed by Spain, drops to the third place. In the first six months of 1922 Great Britain holds second place in the imports (fr. 62,000,000) as against France's 193.5 and Belgium (third place) 16.5, United States of America 13.7, and Spain 10.4 millions of francs. In the same period England ranked third in the exports with 11.2, against France 31, and Spain 19.7, and was followed by Italy 1.1, who alone of other countries had purchased here above 1,000,000 francs value of goods.

Belgium is noticeably forging ahead in this market, principally in cement, sugar, rails, machinery and (in transit) petrol, while nearly all other nations remain stationary or retrocede. The United States are responsible for practically all the petrol imported, but nearly all their other home produce imports have ceased, notably flour, owing to the high exchange.

United Kingdom Trade.

The history of our trade in Morocco during the past few years makes melancholy reading, except in so far as textiles and coal are concerned.

Cotton Goods.—British imports have held about 90 per cent. of the trade since 1918 and there appears no immediate likelihood of dispossession.

Woolens.—In woollen piece goods Great Britain has held about 25 per cent. of the imports, and despite exchange our position appears relatively safe. In the cheaper classes of goods especially France and Spain compete, with about 25 per cent. and 15 per cent. of the trade respectively.

Coal.—British coal has held about 90 per cent. of this market since 1918, France and Belgium supplying the remainder.

Hardware.—Copper kettles, brass candlesticks, and electro-plate goods are British to about 75 per cent. British galvanised kettles and buckets have fallen from 75 per cent. of the trade in 1918 to about 50 per cent. in 1922: Belgium and Czecho-Slovakia are the progressing competitors. In pewter tea-pots France is making headway at Great Britain's expense, and the latter now holds less than 50 per cent. of the trade. Her high exchange is the sole reason.

Machinery.—Industrial machinery is now barely 25 per cent. British, France having captured the market.

In agricultural machinery Canada and the United States of America compete against us successfully: France holds this market only in the cheaper machines.

Soap.—Our falling off in the market may be roughly estimated by saying that we held the following percentages of the trade:—1918, 70; 1919, 80; 1920, 60; 1921, 45; 1922, 15. Adverse exchange and successful French competition, except in blue mottled soap, are responsible. Marseilles now supplies 80 per cent. of the soap, and in soft soap Great Britain has disappeared from the market.

Candles.—Our retrograde course here may be gauged by the following percentages:—1919, 75; 1920, 72; 1921, 40; 1922, 20-30 (approx.). Here, again, the exchange, and determined efforts on the part of rivals, have adversely affected British imports. Italy now holds a firm place in the market with two brands and Belgium follows her with another. The French candles represent 5 to 10 per cent. of the total.

Tea.—The trend of British trade here has been more disastrous than in any other article. Percentages of previous years are:—1919, 72; 1920, 59; 1921, 20; 1922, 18 (approx.). Although the percentages may appear less unfortunate than those of soap and candles, they conceal the fact that the British tea trade with Morocco appears to be definitely moribund. During the war local merchants learnt to deal direct with Shanghai, with transshipment at Marseilles, with a consequent saving in freight, and still more of commission expenses. They purchase on standard samples from Shanghai during the June and July season, and so far the trade has run smoothly.

Shipping Intelligence.

MARINE MOTORS.

A Forecast of 1923 Designs.

The tendency of British marine motor design is all towards simplicity and compactness (says the annual report of The Ailsa Craig Motor Company, Ltd.). There is no doubt that a vast amount of experimental work and scientific investigation carried out during the last few years is now having its effect in the latest models now being offered by the leading manufacturers for marine, private, and commercial work.

The chief feature which at once strikes an observer when looking at any of these up-to-date marine motors is the fact that the valves are now placed in the head of the cylinder, which is made removable instead of, as in the older designs, being placed in one or more side pockets of the cylinder. It will be recognised at once that the new arrangement permits of the use of what is practically a spherical combustion chamber with all the advantages it gives of high efficiency, perfect cooling, and freedom from hot spots.

Some of these overhead valve motors have the valves operated by levers and push rods from the camshaft, which is placed in the crankcase. Others, of which the Ailsa Craig is a typical example, have the camshaft itself overhead operating directly upon the valves and driven by silent spiral gearing. This is the general arrangement adopted for the engines specially designed and built for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. The advantage of this method is that the whole of the valve gear can be removed in one with the cylinder head, and the added complication of push rods, levers and tappets is done away with. The removable head and overhead valves also permit of unit construction, the cylinder, crankcase, and reverse gear forming one compact whole. The strength of this form of construction, the freedom from vibration and the ease in installing are, of course, apparent. A further advantage is the gain in accessibility, as everything can be got at from above, a most essential feature in a marine motor, for you cannot get underneath it as you can with a car engine. The tendency in the matter of clutches and reverse gears is all towards the entirely enclosed multiple plate clutch running in oil and working in conjunction with a balanced epicyclic reverse gear, and this type of gear will be found on most of the best makes of engines for 1923.

Just as modern marine motor design has developed the high efficiency high-speed engine, so the necessity of providing some means by which a slow propeller speed can be combined with the advantages of the high-speed engine has become more pressing in the case of the heavier type of boats. To meet these requirements some of the leading makers are supplying their engines when required fitted with reducing gears or combined reversing and reducing gears built in one unit with the motor. With such an arrangement a high-speed motor running at 1,000 revolutions per minute can be used with the propeller turning at only 500 revolutions per minute. In the case of the popular type of 10-14 h.p. engine this means that instead of the usual 14-in. diameter propeller one of 20-in. diameter can be used. The best known examples of this form of construction are made by Thornycroft's, of Southampton, and The Ailsa Craig Motor Co., Ltd., of Chiswick, London.

CEYLON SHIPPING AND HARBOUR WORKS.

The number of vessels entering the ports of Ceylon during 1921 was 3,621, with a tonnage of 9,134,066, a decrease of 371 vessels and a tonnage of 584,002 as compared with the previous year, states the Ceylon Annual Report. Most of the ships flew either the British or British Colonial flags, the figures for 1921 and 1920 being—British, 1,474, of 4,448,308 tons, and British Colonial, 881, of 91,590 tons, as compared with 1,389 and 867, of 3,674,155 and 86,737 tons respectively.

The construction of and arrangements in connection with the new oil depots at Colombo, and the work of preparing the site for the oil installations depot at Kolonnawa, are almost complete. It is estimated that, on final completion of the depot, the area developed will amount to over 83 acres. Four prominent oil companies have already taken up allotments at the depot, and have constructed or are constructing the necessary storage tanks.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

The discharge jetty on the northern side of the Graving Dock Guide Pier and the two bunkering jetties inside the north-east breakwater, together with the work in connection with the two main pipe lines—10-inch line for fuel oil and 8-inch line for kerosene—connecting the discharge jetty at the harbour with the exchange station at the oil installations depot, Kolonnawa, has been completed. The pipe lines from the measuring tanks to the bunkering jetties are also nearing completion.

The necessary plant required for propelling oil has been installed at the harbour and Kolonnawa pumping stations, and a branch railway line from the main line to the Kolonnawa oil depot has been completed, and is used temporarily for transport purposes in connection with the oil installation depots.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Vindelia for Bombay (Liverpool, January 16).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Malakand for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 6); s.s. Malancha for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 8); s.s. Mahanada for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 18); s.s. Anchoria for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 20); s.s. Mandasor for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 3).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Herefordshire for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, January 13); s.s. Leicestershire for Marseilles, Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, January 17).

British India Line.—S.s. Manela for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 5); s.s. Masula for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 6); s.s. Pruth for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 13).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Brescia for Gibraltar, Ceuta, Melilla, Algiers, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Liverpool, January 6); s.s. Pavia for Genoa, Leghorn, Naples, Palermo, Messina, and Catania (Liverpool, January 18).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Bavarian for Gibraltar, Genoa, Leghorn, Naples, Palermo, Messina, Catania, Bari, Gravosa, Venice, and Trieste (Liverpool, January 6); s.s. City of Madras for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (Liverpool, January 10).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Sydney for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 8).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Aviemore for all ports, including Syra, Smyrna, and Constantinople (Liverpool, January 13); s.s. Peruvian for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (the first steamer of the season for Galatz and Braila) (Liverpool, February 10).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Kaisar-i-Hind for Bombay (London, January 5); s.s. Khyber for Bombay (London, January 12); s.s. Padua for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 26); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, January 26).

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
:: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE ::
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

Stock and Share Markets.

CHEERFUL TONE PREVAILS.

Outlook for 1923.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

In view of the holiday season, which reduced the Christmas week almost to a minus quantity as far as business was concerned, I did not attempt to deal with the markets last week; and, indeed, since I last wrote there has scarcely been more than a full week of business. Yesterday, of course, the markets were closed, and one is left, therefore, to imagine what effect the latest developments in the political situation will have. The tone at closing on Friday was distinctly good. There is, of course, always a cheerful feeling at this period, but that would only partly account for the improvement, which is mainly to be attributed to the feeling that we have seen the worst of the post-war depression, and that 1923 will see at any rate the commencement of a trade revival. Whether this will be the case or not will depend on events in the present month. A settlement with Germany and Turkey that can really be looked upon as final will have an enormous effect on developments, for it means that commerce is once again free to make its plans without fear of disastrous interruptions.

Given a trade revival, what is the outlook for the Stock Exchange in 1923? In the first place, people had better be prepared for a pronounced fall in the values of gilt-edged. I have pointed out on several occasions that the rise had gone beyond the point at which it could be regarded as justified; but if there is—as there must be—a considerable demand for money to finance commercial ventures, then I think we shall see values go below what may be termed their real level. What investors lose in this direction will be more than made up elsewhere. The Industrial group, for instance, should benefit largely by the changed conditions, and the wise buyer could without difficulty find many excellent bargains in that group at the present time. Oils are another market that should develop buoyancy. In this group there are many stocks that it needs no great prevision to foresee should ultimately stand at much higher levels. The investing public has had its disappointments in regard to Oils, but when confidence returns this market is likely to rally sharply. Rubbers, too, are clearly about to come into their own, and not before it was time. The record of this group in recent years has been dismal in the extreme, but dividends are once again on the tapis as a result of the gradual rise in the price of the raw commodity.

Gilt-Edged Hard.

Gilt-edged have shared in the prevailing conditions, and close on a firm note. Consols are 55½, War Loan Fives are 100 1-16 (at which they show a gain of ¼), the Conversion Loan is 75 1-16, while Fundings are 85½. Indian stocks are about the same. The 7 per cent. stock is ½ down at 110½, the 5½ per cent. stock is 99, the 3½ per cent. stock is unchanged at 63¼, while the 3 per cent. stock at 55½ has gained ¼.

The Foreign group has made a better showing. French Loans have been influenced by the improvement in the exchange. The 5 per cents. are 31¼, while the 4 per cents. are 25½. German 3 per cents. have hardened to 1, while Italian Rentes are unchanged at 22. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified at 29 are about the same. Greek bonds have made a good showing, with Monopolies at 24½, a gain of 3.

Industrials Brighter.

A much better tone has prevailed in the Industrial group. For once it is possible to write of increased activity, and on Friday prices showed an all-round improvement.

Textiles have been a specially firm spot, with Coats at 65s. 6d. x.d., and Courtaulds at 63s. 3d., while Listers are 29s. 3d. Tobaccos have been firm, with Bats at 89s. and Imperial Tobaccos at 73s. 6d. In Iron and Steel descriptions Vickers are 15s. 3d., Armstrongs are 20s., Dorman Longs are 18s. 9d., and Guest Keens are 38s. 9d. Dunlop Rubbers are 9s.

The Shipping group has been firm. P. and O. deferred are 330, Cunards are 23s. 9d., Furness Withys are 35s. 3d., and Khedivial Mails are 1¼.

Oils Variable.

Oils were a good market during the week, but are closing on an uncertain note as a result of profit-taking in certain directions. Anglo-Persian ordinary are 4¾, Burmahs are 5 1-16, and Mexican Eagles are 2 1-16. Anglo-Egyptian B are 1¼. In the Roumanian group Phoenix are 27s. 6d., while Roumanian Consolidated are 13s. 6d. x.r.

OILFIELDS OF EGYPT.

A circular issued by the Oilfields of Egypt, Ltd., states: With reference to the statement made by the chairman at the annual general meeting on October 16 last, a substantial proportion of the calls outstanding has now been received, and further sums are assured. The directors are therefore satisfied of the correctness of their estimate that £15,000 of the total of £23,914 outstanding may be considered good. Prior to the receipt of call monies referred to above, the board had decided to reduce the technical and native staffs in Egypt, and to suspend operations both at Ras Dhib and Ras Bahar, retaining only such staff as would be necessary to resume work on a reduced scale. In view of the altered circumstances, instructions have now been given to resume drilling on well No. 2 at Ras Dhib, this course being recommended by the technical advisors of the company, who anticipate, from the strata penetrated and the encouraging shows of oil encountered, that an oil horizon should be within easy reach in this well, the present depth of which is 1,548 ft. On the basis of the reduced scale of expenditure, funds in hand are estimated to be more than sufficient to carry out this programme. It is not proposed to resume operations on the well at Ras Bahar for the present, in view of the necessity of conserving the company's cash resources. The additional financial assistance referred to by the chairman at the annual meeting has not yet been secured, but the board are continuing their efforts to make some suitable arrangement.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	DR. C. A. ANDRIKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CONSTANTINOPLE	THE NATIONAL BANK OF TURKEY
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SMYRNA	THE NATIONAL BANK OF TURKEY
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE COTTON TRADE IN 1922.

A Period of Acute Difficulty.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended December 30 states:—

The past week has been broken into by the Christmas holidays, and for all practical purposes the cotton trade's year closed on the 23rd instant, as many firms are not open to-day or Monday next in celebration of the New Year. We take the opportunity, therefore, to deal briefly with the general course of events during the past year.

As a whole there has been an increase in the volume of business done, the monthly figures of exports issued by the Board of Trade showing a substantial increase over the corresponding months of 1921. Nevertheless, this increased volume has been much below that required to keep the industry in a busy and healthy state. As the effects of the prolonged depression are cumulative, cases of financial difficulties tend to become more numerous the longer it lasts, the consequence being that there is a grave lack of confidence and much anxiety. A great many firms are prevented by acute financial stringency from doing such business as they otherwise might.

The first six months of 1922 were better than the last six. During the latter period both spinners and manufacturers have found themselves unable to make clearances to keep pace with production. Stocks have thus increased, and forced sales by the weaker sellers have had the result of compelling the acceptance by the remainder of prices which have not in many cases by any means covered costs. In saying this, we should make an exception of the "Egyptian" spinners producing the finer counts of yarn. These have been more favourably placed throughout, and it is said are still able to work practically full time on a profit-earning basis. In the section spinning American cotton, however, short time has been worked since the beginning of October last, and there is considerable discussion as to whether this movement should not be extended from 1½ days to 2½ days per week.

With regard to particular markets, India has been disappointing but is still, as for many years past, easily the principal customer. The boycott movement appears to have collapsed, and the harvest is said to have been good. The outlook for the future in this market is said by some to be brighter. Demand from China has been spasmodic, and during the last few months has dwindled away seriously. As regards our own particular sphere, the Near East, Egypt has been a fairly steady buyer of small quantities, but events in Turkey completely cut off demand from Constantinople or Smyrna from September onwards. Prior to that period operations had been on a modest but fairly regular scale.

During the past year wages of the employees in both the spinning and weaving mills have been reduced, though they are still 90 per cent. above those ruling in July, 1914. Printing, dyeing, finishing, and packing charges have also been reduced, but that there is still scope for further reductions in the cost of these processes is evidenced by the exceptional increase shown in the exports of grey cloth to Germany and Switzerland. It cannot be doubted that these very large increases represent goods which are going abroad for processes to be applied which could be done equally well here if the question of cost permitted. Freights have also been reduced, and it is to be hoped that it will be possible to effect further savings in this direction.

Raw cotton has fluctuated very considerably during the year. It opened with American at approximately 12d. and fell gradually to 9½d. early in February. This proved to be the lowest recorded price for the year. Following this, the rate, with some fluctuations, advanced persistently, carrying the price to over 15½ during November, which price has been fairly steadily maintained since, the closing quotation of the year being 15.21d. As regards Egyptian cotton, the market opened in January last at 22.25d., and has moved more or less with American throughout the year, the last quotation being 17.80d.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt report as follows for the week ended December 15:—Since our last report the futures market has been again very dull, fluctuations registered being negligible. The principal reason of the present heaviness of our market is the almost complete cessation of business with spinners since the beginning of December. We attribute this to the depression which is ever increasing in Lancashire, and to the fact that the substantial purchases of American and Continental mills earlier in the season have apparently filled their requirements for the time being.

This week's heavy exports must not be taken as a sign of trade activity: this is mainly cotton shipped in fulfilment of old contracts, and part of it will probably stay in Liverpool for sale on the spot. The recent steadier parity between Liverpool prices and our own, coupled with storage difficulties due to the accumulation of stocks here, may have induced some shippers to consign part of their holdings to England. Speculation continues to hold off the market. Ashmouni futures have fluctuated very little, and the parity with Sakellaridis has again slightly narrowed. The native press is urging the Government to support the market by purchases of spot cotton, but the fact that the bulk of the cotton is now held by merchants, and not by growers, renders such an action rather improbable.

Spot.—We have had another week of dull markets, and poor demand from abroad. Sales amount to about 18,300 bales, of which we estimate 10,800 bales Sakellaridis, 7,200 bales uppers, 250 bales brown, and 50 bales white. Arrivals are still fairly heavy, but we have had a good week's exports, and the stock, though still over two and a half million cantars, shows a considerable decrease. In spite of the poor demand and general heaviness of the market, there is no pressure to sell by holders, but rather the reverse, probably because a good part of the cotton at present offering has been bought in the interior at higher prices.

Sakellaridis.—All styles have been dealt in, with medium grades in most demand. Prices show very little change from last week.

Uppers.—All grades have been dealt in without much change in prices. Good fair and below continue very scarce and dear.

Brown.—A fair business has been done without much change from last week.

White.—A retail business has been done at last week's rates.

Crop 1923.—We give below an extract of the Ministry's report on the state of the river for November, which may be of interest: "On the whole, the state of the river during November is very disappointing. The Blue Nile, after a good flood, has fallen very rapidly, and shows no sign of making any large contribution to the low-season water supply. The White Nile shows even a slight falling off from the extraordinary low levels of last year. Altogether the prospects for next year's low-season supply are very poor."

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended December 27:—During the three days covered by this report a rather better inquiry has been witnessed, and, although the sales reported are of only moderate dimensions, a firm tone has been maintained, a contributory cause being the substantial rise registered in the New York market over the week-end. The usual lines have been asked, for, e.g., Sakellaridis, 16d.—18d., has formed the bulk, followed by Uppers, 15d.—15½d. Good staple brown has been wanted about 16d., and the customary hole-and-corner search for low cottons is still with us, though not to such a marked degree as heretofore, perhaps. White cotton and pillion have been neglected.

Manchester reports may be described as slow, but steady. As before, India continues to supply most of the support, such as it is. A rather brighter note has been struck to-day, and private advices from the same quarter are also in a somewhat lighter vein than has lately been the case. A general opinion prevails that early in the coming year determined efforts will be made to solve the many difficult problems which still hamper European trade, and at no time since the armistice would it appear that we had more grounds for greeting the New Year with feelings of optimism. Total sales, 1,300 bales (including 350 Sudan). Quotations are raised 10 points all round, with the exception of Fair Sakellaridis, which has hardened 35 points. Fully Good Fair Sakellaridis, 17.90d.

The export of poppy seed from Roumania is permitted on payment of an export duty of 40,000 lei per wagon.

The Greek Minister of Finance has issued a circular in virtue of which 10 paper drachmæ instead of 5.60 drachmæ have to be paid for each gold drachma of Customs duty specified in the Customs Tariff, except in the case of wheat, flour, and petroleum.

The East Indian Railway Company announce that the register of holders of the 3 per cent. new debenture stock and the 3½ per cent. debenture stock will be closed from Monday, January 15, to February 3, both days inclusive, for the purpose of preparing warrants for the payment of interest for the three months ending February 3, 1923.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank :—

Haifa, November 25.

The decline of the rates of exchange on France and Italy has paralysed the export trade in cereals temporarily. However, some small transactions for Egypt have been carried out advantageously.

Jaffa, December 2.

The export of oranges to the United Kingdom is now in full swing. Up to this date over 60,000 cases have been shipped. Much rain has fallen during the week.

Nablu, December 2.

Oil has been coming in during the last two weeks. There is a more than average crop, but prices are maintained owing to the demand for Smyrna.

Basrah, November 11.

The export of cereals for London continues. Stocks in the interior are still considerable, and will permit the continuation of shipments up to the arrival of the new crop.

As regards imports, there has been marked activity of late in Colonial produce. Orders have been given for Egyptian, French, and Belgian sugar.

Hamah, December 6.

Wheat and Barley.—A marked fall is to be recorded in these products. The heavy rains which have fallen in nearly all parts of Syria have rendered communications extremely difficult between the towns and the country, despite the good roads. The villagers of the Lebanon, who are wont to obtain supplies of cereals from Beyrout and Tripoli, are unable to visit these markets for the purchase of their requirements; hence a decrease in the demand which has brought about the fall in prices. At present the kantar of wheat stands at Ps.320-400, while on November 1 it was Ps.370-450, and barley is Ps.230-280, as against Ps.250-300 on October 31. The export of cereals is estimated as follows: 750 tons to Beyrout, 70 tons to the Lebanon, 1,490 tons to Tripoli.

Chick-peas.—Prices are firm owing to the approach of winter, when the local consumption of this product increases.

Aleppo, November 30

The rains have been very abundant during this month and the sowings have commenced actively; the grain sown is double that of the past year. The prices of cereals have fallen in view of the good outlook despite the operations of dealers in futures and the increase in the number of emigrants. The price of butter begins to fall considerably. On the other hand, oil, the yield of which is abundant, has risen by 7 to 8 per cent.—the demand from abroad, which increases, is influencing the price.

The import trade has been affected during the month by local consumption and the purchases made by some traders of the interior.

Adana, December 10.

The heavy and abundant rains which have fallen during the past month throughout this district have been beneficial to agriculture in general.

Reuter's Sofia correspondent states that owing to the continual rise in the cost of living, the Minister of Finance is asking the Sobranye to vote a supplementary credit of 306,000,000 leva.

Egyptian Salt and Soda Company.—Coupon No. 24 (dividend of 17½ per cent., less tax) attached to bearer warrants for ordinary shares will be paid, on and after January 8, at the National Bank of Egypt, 6 and 7, King William Street, E.C.4, and the bank's branches in Cairo and Alexandria.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.

A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

} Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.F., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLET.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager : E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary : C. E. L. CORTHORN.

Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary : R. S. C. PEARCE.

Assistant Manager : W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.
CONSTANTINOPLE.
 (Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Company Meetings.

IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

Increased Tranquillity in Persia.

The thirty-third ordinary general meeting of the Imperial Bank of Persia was held on December 28 at Cannon Street Hotel, E.C., Sir Hugh S. Barnes, K.C.S.I., K.C.V.O. (the Chairman), presiding.

The Manager and Secretary (Mr. Sydney Rogers) having read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report,

The Chairman, in the course of his speech in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, said: We have been able to present to you for the past financial year a report and balance-sheet which I think you will regard as very satisfactory. Though the improvement shown in the figures of the accounts is not very great, the report is in some respects the best we have been able to submit to you since the outbreak of the war.

The history of Persia during the past twelve months has been comparatively uneventful, in great contrast to the exciting experiences which I have had to relate to you from time to time since 1915. You will remember that a few days before I addressed you a year ago the Ghavam es Sultaneh had been succeeded as Prime Minister by Mushir ud Dowleh. The latter's administration did not last very long. He resigned in June of this year, and the Ghavam es Sultaneh, to whose courage and ability as an administrator I ventured to pay a tribute last year, was again entrusted with the duty of forming a Government and is still in power. Throughout the year, even during the change of Prime Ministers, the Cossack leader, Reza Khan, has continued to hold the post of War Minister, and it is impossible not to admire the determination and efficiency which this able officer has exhibited in the control of his department. He appears to have so reorganised the various armed units existing in the country that he has succeeded in providing Persia with quite a fairly strong and well-disciplined military force, and the success of his efforts is reflected in the increased tranquillity which has prevailed throughout the country.

In the matter of trade the same cause has had its salutary effect, and for the year ended in March last we are told that the total imports amounted in value to £12,250,000, of which the British Empire supplied £9,200,000. The balance of trade is still against Persia, and, as I pointed out last year, it is important that every effort should be made to increase the country's exports. With this object in view, I am inclined to think that Persia could embark on no more remunerative form of expenditure than the improvement of inland transport and the adequate protection of the roads leading to the ports.

In this connection I may mention that there appears to have been a considerable expansion of the trade with India via the railway which, in 1917 and 1918, was pushed across the desert from Nushki, in Baluchistan, to Duzdab, on the border of Seistan. I am informed that with each extension of this line, first to Dalbandin, then to Mirjava, and finally to Duzdab, the value of the trade with Persia has doubled, until it reached the total of 141 lakhs of rupees in 1920 and of 200 lakhs in 1921. There was an alarming rumour lately that the Government of India were thinking of dismantling this line on the ground that it does not pay its expenses, but I sincerely hope it is not true that such a retrograde measure is in contemplation.

We recently opened a branch of the bank at Duzdab for the convenience of the merchants engaged in this trade, and as there is a motor road from Duzdab to Bam it has been suggested to us by the local merchants that we should also open a branch at the latter place because of the increased trade anticipated from the existence of the road and the railway. This shows the interest the Persians are beginning to take in the line. It should also be remembered that it is only by this route that India can hope to compete with Russian trade in Meshed and Khorassan. Russia for the present being out of the market, Indian trade is extending to these places, and will probably hold its own so long as the railway exists. But if the railway goes the trade will cease also, to the serious loss not only of India but also of the Persian nation, whose prosperity depends largely on its Customs revenue.

Last year I alluded to the reported desire of the Persian Government to obtain once again the services of Mr. Morgan Shuster as their financial adviser. Mr. Shuster, I understand, was unable to return to Persia, but another American gentleman, Dr. Millsbaugh, was selected for this difficult post, and he arrived at Teheran with his staff a few weeks ago. This is an event of good augury for the country if the Persian Government will invest him with the authority necessary for the successful exercise of strong financial control.

I must add a few words of appreciation of the excellent work done by our staff, both at home and abroad, during the year under review. It is mainly to their steady and persevering efforts that we owe the good results we are able to report, and we propose, as usual, to grant them a bonus of 10 per cent. on their salaries, to which I am confident you will raise no objection.

The report and accounts were unanimously adopted.

MORUMS ORIENTAL STORES.

The third ordinary general meeting of Morums Oriental Stores, Limited, was held on December 29 at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, E.C.

Mr. T. Paton presided, and in moving the adoption of the report expressed regret that there was a loss on trading amounting to £143,739. To this had to be added the various items for interest and discount charges, etc. On the other side of the account they had credited the sum of £4,991, which had been previously over-provided for taxation, leaving a net loss of £170,739. The results were a source of profound disappointment to the board. In the latter part of November the political situation in Egypt took a turn for the worse, and towards the end of December riots and active boycotting broke out. Up to that time the company's sales had been quite satisfactory and a fair rate of gross profit was being earned. The complete failure of the Christmas sales left retailers with a great part of their Christmas stock unsold, with the result that prices were depressed by a further 20 per cent., and recourse had to be made to further forced selling and consequent disassortment of stocks and heavy losses. Three of the directors travelled at their own expense to Egypt at the beginning of last February, and after an exhaustive scrutiny compiled a report. Mr. Gaze, an expert who accompanied the visiting directors, reported that he was confident that if the errors of past control were overcome and the stock position was cleared there was sound prospect of an early recovery of substantial prosperity.

The Chairman said that the misfortunes to which he had referred and the initial error of over-buying left the company in such a position that however much the stock was written down to the level of prevailing prices the assortment was so radically bad as to cripple their trade; the readily saleable goods were continually disappearing from the shelves, leaving behind a slow moving residue which locked up the fund required for replacement. Steps were taken to realise slow moving stocks by forced sales, and the fund so realised had been reinvested in articles of ready sale. The general manager disagreed with the mission of directors, and had resigned, and Monsieur Theulé, who had twenty-five years' experience of the successful working of a similar business, had been appointed to assist in the management. The board and their advisers thought that the time was ripe for a drastic reconstruction, and the provision of the sum of £100,000 was necessary for the successful prosecution of the enterprise.

It was proposed to reduce the existing capital by the sum of £348,000, which amount would be utilised for the extinction of the debit balance on profit and loss account, and the writing down of goodwill and such assets as, in the opinion of the board, were impaired in value. The existing £1 preference shares would be cut down to 10s. each, and the £200,000 ordinary shares would become £2,000 in 40,000 ordinary shares of 1s. each. The capital of the company would subsequently be increased by the issue of a further 200,000 preference shares of 10s. each, and a further 60,000 ordinary shares of 1s. each. The rights of the preference shares would be altered. All claims to arrears of accumulative dividend would be waived. The shares would carry a 10 per cent. rate of dividend (together with a 25 per cent. of surplus profits), cumulative rights only coming into effect after July 1, 1924. The directors had arranged with their friends and other large shareholders to guarantee the subscription of at least one-half of the proposed new issue of 200,000 preference shares, and 60,000 ordinary shares, and the board would give the general body of shareholders the opportunity of subscribing for such preference shares which they might require, together with the right to apply for a pro rata proportion of 50,000 ordinary shares out of the above-mentioned 60,000, the right to subscribe for cash at par to the remaining 10,000 ordinary shares constituting the sole remuneration of the guarantors. The business had shown improvement since the arrival of the new purchases during October and November. He believed they had weathered the storm, and that a little further patience would be amply rewarded.

Mr. R. B. H. Ottley seconded the resolution, which, after a discussion, was carried.

At an extraordinary general meeting subsequently held, resolutions for the reconstruction of the company were agreed to, and also approved at separate meetings of the ordinary and preference shareholders.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Monday Evening.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in steady request at last prices. Tate's cubes have been done at 56s. 6d., a rise of 3d.; Lyle's granulated has gained 1½d. at 50s. 6d., while London granulated is 1½d. up at 50s. 3d. Foreign descriptions have been fairly firm. West Indian crystallised is unchanged at 45s. 3d., while White Mauritius remains at 47s. 9d. White Java has picked up to 48s. 1½d., a rise of 4½d. Quotations are:—January, 21s. 10½d.; February, 22s. 3d.; March, 22s. 6d.; and May, 22s. 7½d.

Coffee.—A rather weak tone has prevailed. East Indian has been done at 108s., a decline of 2s., while Costa Rica at 100s. is 16s. down. Nairobi has shed 2s. at 92s. Quotations are:—March, 59s. 3d.; May, 59s.; July, 58s.

Oilseeds.—Generally a rather variable tone has ruled. Indian linseed is 3d. up at 21s. 6d., while La Plata is 1s. 3d. down at 18s. There has not been much doing in rapeseed. Cottonseed has been fairly firm. Egyptian is 6d. up at 12s., while Indian is 3d. down at 9s.

Oils.—The market has been rather uncertain. Linseed oil is 6d. up at 40s. Rape oil has been done at 42s. 6d. Cottonseed oil is about the same. Crude is 36s., while refined has come to business at 44s.

Oil Cakes.—A rather dull tone has been in evidence, this being due mainly to the fact that the farmers have obtained the bulk of the supplies that they require for the time being.

Linseed cake has been done at 280s.; cottonmeal cake is 290s.; cottonseed cake is 170s.; while coconut cake is also 170s.

INDIAN INTELLIGENCE.

The Indian Trade Commissioner has issued the following cabled news, received from the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence, Calcutta, dated December 26—Season: During the week ending December 24 light rain fell in North-West India. December 23: There was widespread moderate rain from East Punjab to West Bihar. Condition of Crops: Prospects unchanged. Markets—December 21: Bombay cotton market steady. Fine M.G. Oomras Rs. 421 December-January; Rs. 417 March. Bombay cotton arrivals from September 1 to December 16, 1922, were 408,000 bales, as compared with 679,000 bales during the same period of the last year. December 22: Calcutta jute market steady. Hessians also steady. Ready 9 porters, Rs. 19. 12; 11 porters, Rs. 23. 8. Heavies steady. B Twills, Rs. 46. 4. At tea sale on December 19 leaf teas with style were in strong demand. Tippy in particular was dearer; commons steady; others rather easier. This sale's average price was Re. 1 pice 3 per lb., the same as last week's average price. 617,508 packages sold to date at an average price of 12 annas 11 pies per lb. Market closed till January 9. December 20: Rangoon rice market bright owing to continued demand from Bombay. Small Millers sold at Rs. 440. Meedong quoted at Rs. 435 to Rs. 437. Big Millers refused Rs. 395 for Special Straits Quality Rice. Paddy Rs. 162 rail; Rs. 165 to Rs. 167 boat. Shellac—December 19: Market very firm and prices advanced with fairly large business. T.N. Spot Rs. 170. Bank rate unchanged.

SHIPBUILDING IN YUGOSLAVIA.

Regulations have been issued by the Yugoslav Ministry of Finance providing for the duty-free importation of articles necessary for the construction and fitting of ships.

The following concerns are permitted to import under the conditions set out below:—(a) Shipbuilders who construct or repair ships independently as industrialists or handicraftsmen and possess for that purpose an equipped shipyard; (b) home shipping concerns possessing shipbuilding yards either for the construction or for the repair of ships, or possessing specially equipped workshops for ship-repairing; (c) home shipping companies and ship-owners; (d) foreign shipping companies which maintain specially equipped workshops in the kingdom for the repair of their own vessels.

Importers are required to apply to the Customs authorities for permission to import the articles in question duty-free, forwarding a certificate that they come within the descriptions given above and that the articles to be imported serve exclusively for shipbuilding or the fitting or repair of ships.

Appended to the Regulations is a list of articles which may be imported duty-free without import permit until further notice, on the strength of a certificate granted by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry to the effect that the articles in question are not found in sufficient quantities or manufactured in the kingdom.

TENDERS INVITED.

Egypt.

Clothing, etc.—The Director of Stores, Department of Public Health, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of clothing, equipment, etc., required for one year from April 1, 1923. February 3.

Steel Pigeon-hole Cupboards.—The Postmaster-General, G.P.O., Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply and erection at Port Said Post Office of seven sections of steel pigeon-hole cupboards for private letter-boxes, each section to consist of fifty-four boxes. Specifications can be seen at the office of the Egyptian Government Representative, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster, London, S.W. February 10.

The Sudan.

Sugar.—The Director, Commercial Intelligence Branch, Central Economic Board, Khartoum, invites tenders for the supply of 5,500 metric tons net of cane or beet loaf (Ras) sugar to the Sudan Government c.i.f. Port Sudan. January 31.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

A rather quiet tone has ruled in the exchanges. The sterling rate in New York remains very steady. French francs have been dull, while German marks are much lower.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½
Athens	Drachmae to £.....	25.22½	375-385
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	420-440
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	32,000-33,500
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	24.45-24.46
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4¾
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	68.60-68.65
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	790-810
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	10,250-11,250
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4¾
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	780-820*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.63½-4.63¾
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	63.10-63.15
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	149-150
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	90½-90¾
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	630-660
Teheran	Krans to £	50	59
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	315-330,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	83,000

* Nominal.

"QUALITY AND FLAVOUR"

BOURNVILLE
COCOA

MADE UNDER IDEAL CONDITIONS.

SEE THE "Cadbury" ON EVERY PIECE
NAME OF CHOCOLATE.

Specially packed for Export.

Cadbury Bournville, Eng

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 609—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	25	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Peace Strategy	36	Notes and News	41
Egypt	29	THE WEEK AT HOME	27	Commerce and Industry...	43
Palestine	30	CORRESPONDENCE	31	Stock and Share Markets	44
Albania	31	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	32	Near East Markets	45
Cyprus	31	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	33	Shipping Intelligence	46
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	35	Cotton and Cotton Goods	47
The Sudan—II.	37			Company Meetings	49
				New Companies	49

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Lausanne Conference.

As the Turks are incapable of adapting themselves to the requirements of a European Conference, there is nothing left for the Allies to do at Lausanne beyond drawing up a new Settlement Treaty and presenting it to Angora for acceptance or rejection. At an early stage of the proceedings it was shown that the intelligence of the Delegation was not equal to its task, and now, in view of Riza Nur's exhibition of bad temper last week before the Minorities Sub-Commission, it is clear that Nationalist Turkey cannot even command the courtesy and good manners that were the pride of the Old Turks. There can be little doubt that the Allies' terms will be summarily rejected by the Angora Government. That action in itself need give rise to no uneasiness, as it does not follow that the Turks will proceed at once to extreme measures. The Allied authorities will be prepared for all emergencies, but they should try to make it easy for the Turks to consider their position a little more dispassionately than they have contrived to do hitherto. Angora may possibly see a more or less adequate revenue for a year ahead; but it must realise that Turkey and the Turks will by that time be as productive as a squeezed orange.

Turks and Minorities.

The "scene" in the Minorities Sub-Commission arose over the Allies' desire to secure Turkish approval for an Armenian National Home and a promise of protection for the Assyro-Chaldaean. Nothing could better exemplify the distance that separates Nationalist Turkey from Europe than the failure to meet the Allies readily on these subjects. The Turks stand to lose nothing by granting autonomy under a Turkish Governor-General to those Armenians who wish to reside in a particular district, and the future of the Assyro-Chaldaean, even if they should be restored to their six free States, is too small a matter for the Turks to worry over. By acceding to the Allied request on these points they would have bespoken consideration for themselves in other directions, possibly the Greek Patriarchate. But for the present, as in the long past, the Turk is unfortunately a stranger to reciprocity and good faith.

The Ex-Sultan of Turkey.

The departure from Malta of Mahmoud VI., the dethroned Sultan of Turkey, to take up his residence in Mecca as the guest of the King of the Hejaz opens up an interesting field of speculation, in view of the fact that the Moslem world has not yet formally registered its opinion on the abrogation by the Angora Government of the temporal powers of the Khalifate. So far Mahmoud VI. has declined to abdicate, either as Sultan or as Khalif, and now that he has placed himself in touch with the Holy Cities—hitherto an essential attribute of the Khalifate—he may have rendered Moslem endorsement of Angora's high-handed action much more difficult. The problem, however, is one for the Mohammedans to solve. Great Britain has no other interest than that the Moslem world should settle its differences with the least possible friction. In the Near and Middle East particularly it is to be hoped that both Turks and Arabs will realise that it is to their advantage to settle down in friendly relationship, both intent on their own affairs.

The Situation in Turkestan.

Little news reaches the outside world from Turkestan. According to private advices, the outstanding features of the present situation are a fresh reshuffling of the chief Soviet officials and a further development of the Nationalist movement. In recalling their Turkestan officials and reinstating those whose places these had taken only a year ago, the Moscow Government presumably acted under the impression that its former representatives had been more successful in creating schisms among the native Communists. In spite of the failure of the big insurrection, the different insurgent forces are continuing their activities against the Soviet Government, and outbreaks occur from time to time in Eastern Turkestan. Responsibility for the failure of the insurrection is attributed to Enver Pasha, who, playing for his own hand, supported a scheme for the restoration of the Emirate of Bokhara. The movement was opposed by the progressive Young Sarts and Kirghiz, who resent any proposal savouring of the Tsarist régime, and the death of Enver Pasha is held to have removed an element of weakness in the insurgent ranks.

The Rehabilitation of Greece.

The Revolutionary Committee is making itself responsible for the political regeneration of Greece. To this end the Union of National Salvation, under the Committee's auspices, is to cover the country with a political network inspired by the following aims:—The final elimination of Constantinism, the abolition of the old political parties, the termination of internal strife, and the definite re-establishment of social peace, the fostering of national sentiment, and the creation of a new and sound progressive political life. Most of these aims are too unexceptionable to call for comment. Domestic peace would be an invaluable asset for Greece to-day; but in the playground the schoolboy's ruse of crying "Pax" when he has managed to get in his blow is not always successful. Rightly or wrongly, the impression conveyed to the outside world is that the country lacks political leadership, and the Revolutionary Committee, having no desire to abandon its privileged position in order to step down into the political arena, is trying to build up a political edifice from the foundations. Such a scheme takes time, and it remains to be seen whether a number of questions which call for the nation's serious attention will wait for leadership to be evolved in this way.

Bulgaria and the Ægean.

The Allied Governments, it is satisfactory to note, are not easy in their consciences over their treatment of Bulgaria; but, so far, they have not been able to abandon the idea of trying to solve the question by tinkering with it instead of boldly adopting a policy that has some chance of proving a permanent settlement. The latest proposal is that, in addition to the controlled corridor to the Ægean Sea, Bulgaria should be allowed to possess a narrow strip of territory to enable her to build a port at Dedeağaç. This suggestion is intended to meet the Bulgarian objection that she cannot be expected to spend money on a port that is to remain Greek. It is obvious, however, that the proposal does not offer a final solution of the question, although it may represent the limit to which the Allies feel justified in going, in view of their obligations to Greece. The only satisfactory settlement must be reached by agreement between Greece and Bulgaria, and it is unfortunate that the political situation in Greece is not sufficiently clear to enable the Government to take a step that would prove of untold benefit to the country in the future.

Britain in Palestine.

It is to be hoped that if those who are intent upon adding to Great Britain's difficulties in the Middle East by girding at her presence in Irak and Palestine read the recently issued report on the administration of Palestine from July, 1920, to December, 1921, they will remember that since the latter date very necessary economies have been introduced in the Government system. One advantage of the report, however, is that the reader can get away from the rights and wrongs of Zionism and the Jewish National Home, and consider Palestine as a few years of British administration has made it. Of course, the initial plans were formed on too large a scale—that was inevitable in wartime—but the object was worthy enough, and the conception one to be proud of. To-day there has to be retrenchment, and Palestine must cut its coat according to its cloth. The one legitimate ground for complaint is the cost of the military garrison, which falls entirely on the British taxpayer. The reason for this is to be found in an excessive anxiety for the personal safety of everyone in Palestine, and a not unnatural tendency on the part of the British Government to keep up the strength of its forces in what was formerly Turkish territory until peace with Turkey had been signed. It may also be argued that the machinery of administration that is so fully described in this report is rather top-heavy for a population of three-quarters of a million. But this in no way invalidates the Mandate or calls for a volte-face in policy that would inevitably prejudice British Imperial interests.

The Indian Extremists.

The messages received last week make it possible to speak with some confidence regarding the prospects of extremist activities in India during the next few months. The party is still united, in so far that all its members are committed to the destruction of the existing Constitution, but there is a definite split as to the means to be adopted for that purpose. The idea of wrecking the legislatures from within was rejected by a majority of the delegates voting at the Congress, who prefer a policy of civil disobedience—in other words, overt rebellion; but the methods of choosing delegates are such that they rarely represent the party with numerical accuracy, and, apparently, four out of the five important provinces are determined to pursue the former alternative. We must look forward, then, to a period of revolutionary action on both lines. In some places the masses will be incited to break the law, while elsewhere they will be organised for next winter's elections, and the two campaigns are perhaps more likely to assist each other than to clash. There is less powder lying about than a year ago, but the danger of an explosion has by no means passed.

The Failure of the Liberals.

Apparently there is little to be hoped for from the Liberal Party just yet. The proceedings of their Conference at Nagpur seem to show that, taken as a whole, they are still content to live in the cloudland of phrases, and no commanding figure has emerged to lead them to the fruitful country which lies ready for their occupation. One is tempted to recall that in the old allegory the Valley of Humiliation came before the Delectable Mountains, and it may well be the case that a period of adversity will be necessary in order to bring out the practical capacity which the party undoubtedly possesses. Hitherto the lines have lain in pleasant places for the Liberals. The Act of 1919 gave them place and power far beyond anything of which they had dreamed, while its provisions have been administered with the utmost regard for their susceptibilities. No one hoped for the immediate evolution of an expert political body, and friendly observers were content to watch for slow progress in that direction, but, comparing 1923 with 1921, we must confess that such movement as has occurred seems to have been retrograde. The best tonic for the party would be something like a real election next winter.

The New Royal Commission.

A definite stage in the handling of the complex problems affecting the Indian Services is marked by the announcement that they are to be referred forthwith to a Royal Commission. The decision will, we fear, be exceedingly unpopular among Indian politicians, who desire to settle the questions at issue without interference, and we should not be surprised if they decide to boycott the Commission, a course which might save a great deal of time, but there can be no reasonable doubt that the procedure decided on is appropriate. Opinion has moved considerably in the five months which have elapsed since we urged that the desirability of a fundamental change in organisation required to be examined, and it is now generally recognised that an important part of the Commission's task will be to consider whether recruitment for a province should not be substituted for the traditional system of single services for the whole of India. The final decision on that question must be given by Parliament, and not by any authority in India, and we do not think that any less cumbersome machinery could be expected to satisfy Parliament's demands, but, at the same time, the President of the Commission will need plenty of driving-power, for the matter must now be dealt with promptly.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

England and France.

At last the truth has been spoken. The Paris Conference, at which Mr. Bonar Law and M. Poincaré had been trying to reconcile irreconcilable points of view, last week broke down finally. Into the details of the matter it is needless to go, because on the question of reparations there has been between the British and French Governments a fundamental difference. Both countries rightly envisaged their own interests, and whereas ours happened to coincide with a scheme for the general rehabilitation of Europe (for which, incidentally, let us not take any hypocritical credit), those of the French ran, as perhaps they always will run, on narrower and more immediate lines. This difference, which in the time of Mr. Lloyd George was either obscured or maliciously exploited, has been frankly recognised by both Mr. Bonar Law and M. Poincaré, with the result that British sympathy with France is now fuller and more shot with regret than at any time since 1920.

But it is decidedly premature to talk of each country going its own separate and independent way. Such a course is almost inconceivable. The best opinion seems to be that America will find some bridge between the schemes of the two countries; but there is no time to lose. The French are due to be in the Ruhr by the 15th of this month, and after that the river of discontent may become so fast and wide as to become unspannable by ordinary means.

Other Conferences.

It has become the fashion among the educationists to make the beginning of January a period for conferring one with another, and during the past week we have seen the usual result of the clashing of dull, orthodox, provincial minds with the lighter and occasionally iconoclastic type. There were meetings of strict educationists, of musicians, and of scientists. On the whole, the sentiments uttered do not appear to have been unworthy, though it was left very late in the week and to the ex-headmaster of Eton to drop the inevitable cadences on the lack of discipline amongst modern children. This deploring of modernity is, of course, a sine quâ non of these conferences, but we have never before seen it pushed to such limits as a certain Dr. Lyon reached at the conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians at Oxford, when, amid the time-cracked laughter of other zanies, he compared the music of Delius and Scriabine with the random slinging of ink on paper. In no place more than the educational professions, I should imagine, are fools suffered so gladly. But youth goes on its own sweet way unperturbed, and the problem of teaching will always be acute. There are those, I know, who believe that fuller and more efficient education is the panacea for most of England's ills; but it is a stage of naïveté through which most people manage safely to pass.

The National Labour Club.

To many ears the project of a National Labour Club will come with a strange ring—the two adjectives being in such unwonted proximity each to each as they themselves are to the noun. But such a club is actually being built up. During the sessions of Parliament, Labour members have probably more difficulty in finding accommodation than have members of the older parties, so that a residential club, with many bedrooms, has really become a necessity. The subscription proposed is three guineas a year for a single member and four guineas for a man and his wife. The premises, on the Embankment, near Norfolk Street, are said to be large and handsome; certainly they are conveniently situated in regard to the "House." With a charge of six shillings a day for bed and breakfast, it is anticipated that most of the Labour members will avail themselves of the very bourgeois advantages offered by the club. But imagine the scorn with which Socialists of other countries will look upon their comfort-loving British brothers! The club is strongly supported by those elements of the Labour Party that their opponents call "sober"—the Hodgeses, Thomases, Webbs, and so on—and about fifty members have already promised to use it. One wonders what our Mr. Newbold thinks of it all.

After Long Years.

For cricketers last week there was no need for the customary worry over Reparations, Lausanne, or the Ilford murder case, those stern and bitter things which inexorably claim a gigantic share of space in the newspapers, for their one topic of conversation could only be: Would we beat South Africa in the Second Test? How we did actually win the first match since the War, and that by one wicket; how, when all post-War doctrine indicated safety-play, F. T. Mann chose to play a glorious captain's innings, and went for sixes (the first two he got: the third got him); how Brown, the man of iron nerve, who used last year to go in first for us against Macdonald and Gregory, ran himself out at the

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
:: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE ::
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

most critical time for a duck; and how Macauley, the maker of easy centuries for Yorkshire, had, as last man in, the hilarious luck to be beaten but not destroyed by a tie-worthy ball from a wonderful Colonial bowler, Hall—these are details of ancient history. But it would be childish not to admit our childish delight in the sweetness of this victory, which, incidentally, makes us admire the South Africans all the more.

A winter without news of cricket would be almost a nightmare to us now, for seemingly those things which our fathers deemed an adequate substitute—skating, tobogganning, and the rest—are denied to our time. Without any doubt this tonic from South Africa has shortened the drizzling winter; and hundreds of bats were brought out this week-end, to be anointed with loving oil, the while their owners babbled o' green fields and extracted fair promises from them.

Taxicab Fares.

An interesting little controversy arose recently on the matter of taxicab fares. Taximen are not a class of men over whom sympathy is commonly spilt—no men whose motto is reported to have become “watch and prey” could steal their way into our upright hearts—but, in any case, they are to have their will a little longer. They know that never will come again those halcyon days and nights when subalterns jumped a taxi from the Circus to Verrey's, but they do not see why they should rush too hurriedly to the other extreme. It was proposed that there should be a sixpenny instead of the shilling minimum, sixpence to cover a half-mile, with threepence for the next quarter and a shilling for the mile. But by demonstrating that the alteration of the taximeters would be both long and costly, the owners and drivers between them have overthrown the proposed reduction. If, as is stated, the running cost of a taxicab to-day is eightpence a mile, there would seem to be no case for the plutocrats who use these vehicles; but we have become a little cynical about official figures.

The Death Penalty.

The British public has recently suffered a surfeit of sensational murder cases, and the only thing that attracts one to the Ilford case—in which a man and woman were sentenced to death—is the fact that it raises the whole question of the hanging of women. It is fifteen years since a woman was hanged in this country. Much wild speculation was indulged in whether Mrs. Thompson would be reprieved by the Home Office, but, officially, she and Bywaters are to be executed to-morrow.

Undoubtedly there is, quite apart from the foolish prattlings of sentimentalists, a large section of decent opinion which revolts from the idea of hanging a woman; but the law can take no notice of such unreasonable, though wholly natural, feelings. And whether this repugnance is so widely and deeply felt as its propagandists assert is far from certain. It is improbable, I should say, that anyone now living will see capital punishment for women abolished—the whole trend of the fictional “equality” between the sexes points against it.

The Church in 1922.

The Church of England ended the past year with a deficit of £40,000, but, in spite of constant financial stringency, much interesting work was accomplished. There are many able men in the Church who are fully aware that the divorce between it and public life is growing wider—whatever religious impulse the War may have created it was not towards the Anglican Church—and it was in some way to stem this, one imagines, that it was resolved by Convocation of the Provinces of Canterbury and York that permission be given to duly qualified women, subject to the approval of the Bishop of the diocese, to speak in consecrated buildings on occasions other than the appointed services of the Church. This resolution, whatever one may think of it, was certainly a sign of vitality, which was further emphasised in the heresy charge brought against the Rev. H. D. A. Major, though this latter fizzled out. It would, perhaps, be extravagant to say that the Church of England is undergoing a crisis—one rather suspects that that has always been said—but there can be little doubt that its stock, at the moment at any rate, is falling; and that £40,000 is likely to be a very heavy mill-stone round the necks of those in authority in 1923. The choice would almost seem to lie between the creation of a determined, progressive minority and a loose, decaying majority. After all, that is a choice which has befallen many churches in many countries.

The Winter Sales.

To write about the winter sales that are “now proceeding” is a most embarrassing duty, for the simple reason that I know nothing about them. It is stated by every other woman whom one meets that wonderful bargains are to be had, though that is an old story of which we men have by now nicely adjusted the degree of our credibility; but it also stated in the newspapers that males also are to be found obscurely swirling in the maze of humanity that invades Regent Street and Oxford Street on these occasions, and, still more fantastic, that they are to be seen actually inside the shops. One can only wish these brave explorers in hitherto uncharted country joy when they get there.

Some Recent Books.

A subject that is of endless interest is the story of vanished England, and a book called “English Coastal Evolution,” by E. M. Ward (Methuen), will attract many readers. There are numerous theories current on coastal development, and they are all weighed in this book, in which, moreover, the author has something to say upon the remedies against erosion.

It would be a fairly safe generalisation to make that the War sent our young men back to Nature, asking her the same eternal questions that the inheritors of trouble have asked since the world began. That there is not always a reply to this questioning can be inferred from Henry Williamson's “The Lone Swallows” (Collins), in which a sensitive mind is seen in sad reaction.

There seems to be at the moment a perfect glut of books on painting, upon which art there are possibly more curious opinions floating round than on any other. One such is to be found in “Masters of Water-Colour Painting” (The “Studio” Offices), which fails to include the work of a single living artist.

ALTER EGO.

For Hire

PRIVATE CARS
OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS & SONS

10 DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE W.1

Langham 222

Hampstead 6203

Finchley 2777

The Near and Middle East.

From Our Own Correspondents.

EGYPT.

Cairo, December 28.

The High Commissioner.

The High Commissioner has been laid up for the past few days with an attack of influenza. It is understood that the attack is not serious, but that, as a precautionary measure, he has been advised by his doctors to cancel his engagements and keep quiet.

Christmas Festivities.

There were great doings here at Christmas, and all seem thoroughly to have enjoyed themselves. Christmas Eve was celebrated by a dinner and dance at Mena House, which attracted an enormous crowd of residents and visitors. What would otherwise have been a most enjoyable evening was, however, completely marred by the disgraceful breakdown in the transport service between the Pyramids and Cairo, which had been guaranteed to run half-hourly up to 4 a.m.

On the other hand, Christmas Night at Shepheard's was in every respect most successful. There were quite five hundred guests at dinner, for which an excellent menu was provided. The Egyptian hall has rarely presented such an animated and really joyous appearance as it did afterwards when dancing took place, and was kept up until a very late or, more correctly, early hour.

Recent Outrages.

The general dissatisfaction with the proceedings in regard to the acquittals in the recent outrages cases continues to manifest itself. While, on the one hand, surprise is voiced that men against whom there was practically no evidence should be kept in prison for so long; on the other hand, strong disapproval is expressed of the manner in which the execution of sentences, when secured, is postponed. It has certainly been with satisfaction that we have learned that the two men sentenced to death on September 6 for shooting at the informant in the Sarwat conspiracy case had been executed last Saturday, but it has to be admitted there must be something seriously wrong in procedure when men under sentence of death can be detained for three months before the sentence is executed. It is true that, owing to our very just English methods, the ideal of punishment swiftly following the crime cannot be attained, but, on the other hand, there is little doubt that these delays in bringing to trial and in carrying out sentences have not acted as the much-desired deterrent on the assassin clique.

Presumably, as the sequel to the recent failure of the Criminal Investigation Department to secure conviction, Mohamed Bey Bedr Eddine, the Egyptian Director-General of Public Security, has resigned, and he is to be succeeded by Mahmud Pasha Abdel Razek, Mudir of Behera. It is to be hoped that at the same time steps will be taken so as to reorganise the department that it may be in a position to follow up with more success than has hitherto attended its efforts the various political and criminal organisations which exist in the country. Much valuable time, it is agreed, has been lost in connection with the series of outrages that has marked last year, but it is believed in well-informed circles that it should still be possible to bring to book certain of the guilty parties.

Irrigation Works on the Upper Nile.

Mr. Tottenham, the Under-Secretary of State for Public Works, is shortly proceeding to the Sudan to inspect the Upper Nile. This does not, however, mean that the Government is about to resume construction work on the White Nile Dam, which was suspended two years ago. Mr. Tottenham's mission, I understand, is, among other important irrigation business, to collect some of the data still missing in connection with the projects already outlined for the upper reaches, and to arrange for the taking of readings at points where so far the data in this respect has been doubtful.

As regards actual execution, there is little prospect of any active operations being embarked on now. The Egyptian Government is not prepared to undertake constructional irrigation work on the Upper Nile or to resume work on the White Nile Dam until the Egyptian Parliament has had an opportunity of discussing the question and voting the money. Thus work on the White Nile Dam cannot in any case be resumed, while, with regard to the works contemplated on the upper reaches, these are still more or less in project form, and for completion must wait the further data which are now about to be obtained. Even then, before submitting any proposals to the new Parliament, the Government will have to await the final report of M. Dupuis, who has been entrusted with the mission of advising the order in which the great public work undertakings should be carried out.

The Anti-British Outrages.

Just as I close this letter comes the sad news of another anti-British outrage. The victim this time is Dr. Newby Robson, Professor at the Royal School of Law, who was shot dead while cycling home. It appears that he was attacked by three effendis, who fired five shots at him, four of which took effect, and killed him almost instantaneously. Mr. Rowntree, of the Survey Department, passed at the time, and was also fired at, but without success. He turned and made after the assassins, but they managed to get away.

This new outrage has aroused the liveliest indignation in the British community, for, apart from the fact that Dr. Robson, who had only been a short time in the country, was everywhere held in the highest esteem and temperamentally was the last man to offend, the continuation of these anti-British attacks, coming after the two recent acquittals, is a most glaring demonstration of the ineffectiveness of the measures taken by the British and Egyptian Governments in general and the Public Security Department in particular. Incidentally Mr. Rowntree's experience is an unfortunate illustration of the mistake in not carrying a revolver. A good many Englishmen scoff at the idea as being inconsistent with the British character. In reality, however, the carrying of a revolver has become a duty to society, for the fact must not be overlooked that, while it will not protect a man from being shot in the back, it would enable him to fire at and possibly apprehend men whom he might catch in the act of shooting at one of his fellow-countrymen. Were it known that

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

every Englishman carried a revolver, and were the assassins only once to have the experience of being fired at while committing one of these cowardly outrages, there is little doubt that the effect would be that of a salutary deterrent, though even the failure of Englishmen to carry revolvers can in no way absolve the Public Security Department for its abject failure during the past twelve months to bring anyone to book for any of the long series of outrages that have marked that period.

PALESTINE.

Jerusalem, December 13.

"Liberation Day."

Last Saturday, December 9, was the fifth anniversary of the capture of Jerusalem. This day has naturally become our most important anniversary. Its importance may be gauged from the fact that, whereas, last June, the King's Birthday had to be postponed for two days owing to its falling on a Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, "Liberation Day" was observed strictly according to the calendar, Sabbath or no Sabbath. The routine habitual to official observances was followed—military parades and formal receptions; also, as in the two past years, a "State Service" of thanksgiving and commemoration was held in St. George's Cathedral. In its own way this service has become one of the most impressive of Jerusalem functions. Though the form of service is definitely Christian and follows generally the lines of the Church of England Prayer-book, the ceremony is attended and approved by all Jerusalem's multi-religiously coloured officialdom—including the Jewish High Commissioner, Moslem, Christian and Jewish members of the Government, heads of practically every religious community, the Greek and Armenian Patriarchs (the Latin Patriarch invariably abstains), Coptic, Abyssinian and Syrian Jacobite bishops, the Grand Mufti and the Grand Rabbi, Mayor and Municipality, members of the Palestine Advisory Council, of the Moslem Supreme Council, and of the Zionist Commission (or Zionist Executive or Jewish Agency—the general public has not yet grasped its definitive title), together with most of what are locally known as "notables" of the various communities and organisations. The form of service was printed in full in the three official languages—English, Arabic and Hebrew, and certain portions read in these languages. Ecclesiastically significant is the fact that the Greek Patriarch marks these occasions by himself vesting and reading the Gospel (in Greek) in a Church of England service. Immediately before the service, at the door of the Cathedral, the High Commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel, formally invested the Greek Patriarch with the K.B.E. After the sermon General Tudor unveiled a copy of Watts' "Sir Galahad," which had recently been presented to the Cathedral by a battalion of the London Regiment in memory of their comrades who fell in the Jerusalem campaign.

The Census Forecast.

The Palestine census returns are understood to be now ready, but at the time of writing nothing has been authoritatively published. A good many details have, however, been vouchsafed from official quarters to persistent questioners. The general totals have been found to tally more closely with the results of a more or less haphazard census carried through in 1920 by the military in O.E.T.A. days, than with the figures published a little less than a year ago. The proportions of Moslem, Christian and Jew are not, as in that last return, roughly seven, one and one, but more like eleven, two and two. The main surprise in the present returns is the unexpectedly large number of Christians. This is due to the fact that now, for the first time, an accurate return has become available of the inmates of convents and foreign religious institutions. Jerusalem is thus discovered to contain more Christians than Moslems; the total population of Jerusalem is 62,000, of whom 34,000 are Jews. Jaffa district returns a total of over 40,000, half of whom are Jews; this, of course, includes the densely populated Jewish suburb of Tel-Aviv, which has grown to comparatively huge proportions during the past six or nine months. Less gratifying from the Jewish standpoint is a decrease in population of the agricultural colonies in the Jaffa district.

As was to be expected, the returns under the head of "Religion" give an extravagant assortment of sects. What might not have been anticipated was that some thirty described themselves as "Christian Scientists," while the one who was popularly understood to be a "Christian Scientist" filled the form and hopelessly baffled the census tabulator by the description "Monotheist." Given the three main divisions, Moslem, Jew and Christian, what was to be done with "Monotheist"? I understand that the question was solved by regarding Monotheism as a Protestant sect. Nearly all the "Christian Scientists" hailed from the British Gendarmerie, which is mainly Irish. The census officials suspect a practical joke.

The only persistent opposition to the census came from certain Bedouin tribes in the Beersheba district, and with them the cause was not political, arising out of a desire to withstand the orders of a Government whose policy did not please them, but only "traditional." As a result of their refusal to make any returns some of their principal sheikhs were imprisoned. They have since sent out an open letter of piteous protest, in which they say: "The Turks used to give us special privileges, and among them the right not to be

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 12.

The "BEAR." Devizes, on the old coaching road to Bath and the resting place of many notabilities of the 18th Century.

Shade of Mrs. Siddons: "In my day I acted in many parts; but you, JOHNNIE WALKER, are found in all parts."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

included in any census (i.e., of not serving in the Army, since in Turkish days the census was only intended as a basis of conscription levies), and the English, when they entered our country, promised to let us maintain all our customs intact as in the days before the occupation. But now they demand to count our numbers, although this is contrary to our customs . . . they have already kept us in prison thirteen days . . . Briefly, there is nothing to keep us tied to Palestine, neither fine palaces, nor business occupations, nor great wealth—but only the fact that it has provided a resting place for our ancestors. Therefore, we must guard it together with all that we count precious. Only if the Government's pressure against us goes on, we shall have to wander away from here, and forsake the country."

Palestinian Citizenship.

The Government has just published the results of the recent offer of Palestinian citizenship to such as desired it. The offer was kept open from September 1 to October 31: 19,293 certificates were granted, representing an aggregate of 37,997 persons registered as citizens when the number of children under eighteen years and the number of wives included on the same certificates with their husbands are added. Apart from 91 Christians and eleven Moslems, the holders of these certificates are Jews. Applications were received from seventeen towns in Palestine, and 41 different nationalities were represented among the applicants.

ALBANIA.

Tirana, December 26.

A Patriotic Ceremony.

M. Justin Godart, the French deputy for Lyons, who is an Albanophil much beloved of the Albanians, has just visited Tirana for the third time since 1921. This time M. Godart brought with him from France (and has since placed it in the Tirana Museum) the Albanian flag which, at Koritsa in 1916, was hoisted by Colonel Descoins when, during the war in the East, the Albanian Republic was proclaimed at Koritsa. Colonel Descoins kept this flag as a relic, and has just presented it to the Albanian people. This restoration of the flag was made the object of a patriotic ceremony in the presence of the Minister of Foreign Affairs and of a company of soldiers.

Albania and Her Neighbours.

Fate seems to dog the steps of the young State, preventing it from establishing normal relations with its neighbours, and depriving it of frontiers definitely established. Hence so much difficulty and misery.

This time it is Serbia that is closing the Albanian frontier, preventing all relations between Albanians on either side of the frontier. Thus all traffic from Dibra, Prizren, and Yakova is suspended. Serbia finds a pretext as justification of these measures in the troubles in Montenegro—troubles caused by the armed bands which are fighting against the Serbs.

On the other hand, Greece has taken a very severe attitude towards the Albanians of the Chamouria (that part of the Adriatic coast which stretches as far as Preveza). The conduct of the Greek authorities amounts to nothing less than forcing the Albanians, through exasperation, to leave their homes and to emigrate.

As another terrible blow, Turkey is hastily expelling the Albanians from Constantinople. Other Albanians coming from the regions of Prishtina and Skopie (in Serbia), who had sought refuge in Constantinople, have been driven away by the Turkish authorities and forced to return to their native country.

CYPRUS.

Nicosia, December 18.

A Government Land Case.

It may be remembered that some months ago an action in which the Government sought to confiscate certain lands in the Kyrenia district, belonging to Mr. G. L. Houstoun, Laird of Johnstone Castle in Scotland, on the ground of non-cultivation, was decided in favour of Mr. Houstoun. The Government thereupon appealed. The Supreme Court, presided over by Sir Stanley Fisher, Chief Justice, after hearing the arguments of the King's Advocate at great length, has confirmed the judgment of the District Court. The case has evoked considerable interest, general sympathy being with the landowner, the more so as Mr. Houstoun has been, not only in respect of these lands, but in other respects also, a generous benefactor, and supporter of all local interests in the picturesque district of Kyrenia, which has for so many years been his home.

Greek Feeling.

Little is heard now of "Union with Greece." The Greek community recognises that in present circumstances an exchange of British administration and protection for those of Hellas would not by any means be for the benefit of the island. General opinion now openly condemns any agitation on this subject. At a late meeting of the so-called "National Assembly," it was decided to send a memorial to the Secretary of State, asking that the number of Greek members in the Legislative Council may be increased. This is held to indicate that, whatever reply may be given, Greeks desire again to sit in the Council, from which they have so foolishly excluded themselves, and even to co-operate with the Government in passing measures for the good of the island. The futility of their late attitude, which can only be regarded as in the highest degree puerile, is practically admitted by the educated classes; and as to the uneducated, they have never in truth had any desire to dabble in "politics" at all.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The columns of THE NEAR EAST are always open for the discussion of subjects of general interest to its readers. The publication of such letters must not be taken; however, as indicating that the views expressed by the writers are those of THE NEAR EAST.

Letters intended for publication MUST be accompanied by the writer's full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith. They should be worded as briefly as possible and must be written on one side of the paper.

REFUGEES IN GREECE.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—The report that the financial situation of the Greek Government will no longer permit the daily pittance of 2 drachmas to each refugee increases the obligation upon the common humanity of the rest of the world to make every effort to save these latest of war's victims. Still stunned by their sufferings, now deprived of that scant bulwark against starvation, with what despair these wretched people face the New Year it is difficult to imagine. The most inclement days of winter are yet to come, and already the death-roll has reached 30,000, and every day disease and exposure claim fresh victims. The Greek Government is straining its resources to the utmost, but there can be no solution without foreign intervention on a large scale.

This has already begun, but it is not enough. The position is a very desperate one, and more must be done. It is unthinkable that it will not be done, and in this yet greater effort I am sure the British people will play a worthy part. Already they have earned the gratitude of these people. With the donations received since their appeal was first made, the British relief societies co-operating in the All-British Appeal are feeding some 20,000 souls. The British Government has spent a large sum on the transport of refugees; it has made a contingent grant to the League of Nations, and has handed over to the British societies a gift of stores, and, while stating that it is impossible at present to afford further official aid, it has expressed the desire that the fullest support should be given to the appeals of these societies.

That support I am confident will be forthcoming. But it must come quickly. There are a great many of us whose New Year resolutions take the form of an unspoken, perhaps an almost unconscious, resolve to help our fellow-men, and at the present time I can point to no such mass of misery as present these hordes of refugees. Here is not a question of politics: it is a question of human lives. It is the stark appeal, from a depth of hopelessness and suffering well-nigh impossible to envisage, of one fellow-being to another. I am certain that all those whose imagination and pity have been stirred by the descriptions of these unhappy peoples' plight and have not yet responded, will confirm or add to their resolutions by sending a donation to the Imperial War Relief Fund, General Buildings, Aldwych, London, W.C.2.—I am, etc.,

ROBERT CECIL,
President, Executive Council,
Imperial War Relief Fund, General Buildings,
Aldwych, W.C.2.

January 2.

ZIONISTS AND EDUCATION.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—In your issue of December 14 in the Palestine correspondence the statement is made apropos of the educational budget of the Zionist organisation that "The local parents have not risen to the invitation to pay more (or even something) towards their children's education—it will be a long time before Palestinian Jews or Arabs shake themselves free of the evil of generations of pauperisation and dependence on charity from abroad. . . ." Your correspondent, as a rule accurate in his facts and fair in his comment, has gone astray on this occasion. The contribution of Jewish parents towards the education of their children in the Zionist schools is increasing year by year, and has already attained a considerable amount. The amounts actually paid in school fees for the last three years were:—1919-20, £E12,080; 1920-21, £E19,459; 1921-22, £E24,452, representing respectively 11.5, 15.2, and 18.6 of the total budget.

This is not an isolated instance. Towards the budget of the Zionist hospitals and medical services (the Hadassah Medical Unit) the local Jewish population has increased its contribution from £2,000 in 1918 to £13,000 in 1922, and an increased contribution is anticipated in 1923 to at least 15 per cent. of the total budget.

These facts should be a sufficient refutation of your correspondent's remark on the pauperisation of Palestinian Jewry—a remark which is quite inapplicable to the present attitude of Palestine Jewry to its responsibilities.—I am, etc.,

J. JACOBS, Palestine Zionist Executive.
Jerusalem, December 27.

Salonika Fascisti have presented Signor Mussolini with a Turkish sword of honour, bearing an inscription from the Koran, as a mark of admiration from the Italian colony.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

Turkish Mentality.

The Times of January 4 rather discounts the threats that have recently been made from Angora, and it comments curtly on the phrase, often used by Russians and Turks, that "Europe does not understand our mentality":—

It is a good phrase, with just such an air of Western science about it as particularly commends phrases to half-educated and uneducated reformers in the East. It may indeed contain a considerable element of truth, but then—and, strangely, this does not seem to have struck the Angora reformers—it is at least equally true that Turkey, including even the most progressive sections of Young Turkey, does not understand "the mentality" of Europe. Her whole attitude at Lausanne and this latest attempt to defy Europe, or to "bluff" Europe, are conclusive proof of that. If she did understand the merest rudiments of our "mentality," she would be aghast at the dangers of the fatuous game she is playing.

Turkey at Lausanne.

The possibility of a breakdown of the Lausanne Conference was dealt with in The Times of December 28, which said:—

It is for Kemal Pasha and for all Turks with authority of any kind over their countrymen to weigh well what the consequences of a rupture will be to Turkey and to themselves. Should they be mad enough to make it inevitable, whether by defiant refusal of the united demands of the Allies or by persistent and unreasonable resort to tactics of delay, they will stand utterly alone in the civilised world. They will, indeed, have the Bolsheviks as their friends, to use them and to exploit them. But they know that the Bolsheviks cannot give them the assistance which is indispensable to them, if they are ever to emerge from the misery and the ruin which the war has brought upon them, and they know that the policy of the Bolsheviks towards them and towards other Oriental peoples does not materially differ from the traditional policy of the Tsars. Nearly a hundred years ago three of the Great Powers agreed by treaty to secure the autonomy of Greece under the suzerainty of Turkey, while preserving intact their amicable relations with the Porte. The Sultan Mahmud had haughtily rejected their friendly recommendations. They contemplated no sterner measures of putting pressure upon him than, at the worst, a pacific blockade. The Turks would do well to recall what followed. A certain "untoward incident" at Navarino was presently followed by the recognition of the independence of Greece. The situation to-day is not the same as the situation of 1827, but the lesson of that year deserves consideration at Angora and Constantinople as well as at Lausanne.

Articles to Note.

"The British Services in India," by George Pilcher; "Roumania and her Bessarabian Frontier," by E. Chivers Davies; and "Lausanne and its Antecedents," by H. Charles Woods, in the Fortnightly Review (January).

"Constantinople During the Crisis," by David H. Loch, in the Contemporary Review (January).

"War's Aftermath in Persia," by F. M. Stead; and "Problems of the Work for Moslems," by Robert E. Speer, in the Moslem World (January).

"The Turkish Question," by Major-General Lord Edward Gleichen; "The Near East," by Lieut.-Colonel A. C. Yate; and "War-Time in the Sudan," by F. A. Edwards, F.R.G.S., in the Asiatic Review (January).

Near East Bookshelf.

GREECE: THE OTHER SIDE.

"GREECE AND THE ALLIES." By G. F. Abbott. With a Preface by Admiral Mark Kerr, C.B., M.V.O. (London: Methuen and Co. 7s. 6d. net.

If it were possible that Greece should be able to let bygones be bygones, and to settle down to normal conditions without any further troubling of the domestic waters, her real friends—not those who, living in a world of theory and unreality, cannot see the modern wood for the trees of a legendary past—her real friends would be tempted to deprecate any attempt to revive the sores of the last few years. It is to be feared, however, that Greece, before she can achieve salvation, has still to pass through a stormy period of political readjustment. In these circumstances it is well that foreigners and, above all, Britons should try to see Greek affairs in a truer perspective than has been available hitherto for the majority of outside observers. It may be that Mr. G. F. Abbott, in his "Greece and the Allies," shows himself prejudiced—as some of his critics allege—and that as a result his book presents a one-sided picture, but there cannot be the least doubt that his point of view is shared by a substantial majority of the Greek people, and that it is one to which the British public may, if it likes, shut its eyes, but which will yet make itself felt in Greece. For this reason the book should be carefully studied by all who wish to understand what is happening and what is yet likely to happen in that country.

The view generally held in Great Britain regarding Greece's attitude in the Great War is that there was a trial of strength between, on the one side, a pro-German clique, headed by King Constantine, which stood for neutrality or even for Greece's entry into the struggle on the side of the Central Powers, and on the other side the rest of the nation, which, under the brilliant leadership of M. Venizelos, was enthusiastically devoted to the Allied cause, and eager to circumvent the obstacles placed in the way of Greece's entry into the war by an unconstitutional monarch. Now comes Mr. Abbott, who, on the strength of much documentary evidence, tries to prove an entirely different thesis. A brief summary of his "case" will, perhaps, provide the reader with the strongest incentive to study it in the book itself, in order to decide whether he substantiates his point or not.

In July, 1914, when the rupture between Austria-Hungary and Serbia threatened to disturb the peace of Europe, M. Venizelos, the Greek Prime Minister, held that the Greek Treaty with the latter country did not oblige Greece to go to Serbia's assistance in the event of an outbreak of war unless Bulgaria attacked her. When, in August, war broke out the avowed policy of both M. Venizelos and King Constantine was the same at first—that Greece should not be embroiled prematurely in the European cataclysm, but should reserve her forces for the defence of Balkan equilibrium, with special reference to Bulgaria and Turkey, Greece's avowed enemies. A tentative inquiry by Russia, reported to a Greek Cabinet Council on August 18, as to whether Greece would send 150,000 men to support the Serbians on the Danube brought about the first divergence of opinion:—

On hearing this, M. Venizelos impulsively declared that he was ready to place all the Greek forces at the disposal of the Entente Powers in accordance with their invitation. M. Streit (who had received the tentative inquiry) remonstrated that there had been no "invitation," but at most a sounding from one of the Entente Ministers. . . . M. Streit resigned, and M. Venizelos offered to the Entente Ministers the adhesion of Greece forthwith. . . . King Constantine seconded the offer, expressing himself quite willing to join the Entente there and then with the whole of his army, but stipulating, on the advice of the General Staff, that the Greek forces should not be moved to any place where they could not, if need arose, operate against Bulgaria.

Greece was thanked for her offer, but the Allies, in replying, suggested that she should use her efforts to make Turkey observe her promised neutrality, "and to avoid anything that might lead the Turkish Government to abandon its neutrality." M. Venizelos remained eager to commit Greece at once to war, without conditions. The King and his military advisers were more cautious:—

M. Venizelos chose to interpret their circumspection as prompted by regard for Germany, and did not hesitate to convey this view to Entente quarters. It was, perhaps, a plausible insinuation, since the King had a German wife and M. Streit was of German descent. But, as a matter of fact, at the moment when it was made, King Constantine voluntarily presented to the British Admiralty through Admiral Kerr the plans for the taking of the Dardanelles which his staff had elaborated, and for a long time afterwards continued to supply the British Government through the same channel with information from his secret service.

If the author's diagnosis is accepted up to this point, it is not difficult to follow him through the rest of his recital. He gives M. Venizelos full credit for his imperialist ambitions on Greece's behalf, but shows that his "Colonial policy" was advocated in direct opposition to the advice of Greece's military experts, who held that Greece had neither the men nor the money required for the permanent occupation and efficient administration of Asia Minor, and that she would be undertaking responsibilities wholly incommensurate with her resources. It is not difficult to understand the contempt and disgust which M. Venizelos's platform oratory about national ideals must have aroused in the minds of these matter-of-fact soldiers, who were to be responsible, with their reputations and their lives, for the attainment and maintenance of those ideals, that they knew to be unrealisable. But M. Venizelos had the Entente Powers behind him, and the soldiers, together with King Constantine, had been branded as pro-German. From that moment everything that M. Venizelos said or supported was believed abroad, and the point of view of the King or his military advisers was never given a hearing. In one passage Mr. Abbott marshals evidence suggesting that documents were deliberately forged to lend colour to the Venizelist case. Certainly he offers an adequate defence of King Constantine

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

against the charge that he violated the Constitution, and he puts a different complexion on the surrender of Fort Rupel from that which the incident has generally carried. It will come as a surprise to many who conscientiously believed King Constantine to be a traitor to Serbia no less than to the Entente, to learn that in November, 1914, when the Allies seconded a Serbian appeal for assistance to M. Venizelos, the latter gave "a flat refusal," stating his reasons. Not until a year later, October, 1915, when fresh fuel was required for his quarrel with the King, did M. Venizelos propound the view that the Greco-Serbian Treaty imposed an absolute obligation upon Greece to make war on Bulgaria and Turkey.

On Mr. Abbott's showing the point at issue between King Constantine and his masterful Prime Minister was not whether Greece should or should not join the Allies, but whether Greece should enter the war with or without certain guarantees from the Allies. While M. Venizelos was prepared to risk everything for his Asiatic ambitions, the King and his military advisers cared nothing for these ambitions, but were concerned to safeguard Greece from the loss of territory that she actually possessed. Who will contend to-day that they were not justified in their attitude? Our French Allies, however, would have nothing to do with conditions, and, finding M. Venizelos prepared to dispense with them, supported him in his contention that only the King's treacherous intentions prompted him to stipulate for safeguards. Special emphasis is laid in this book on the sinister rôle played by French diplomacy, which, thanks to the supineness or preoccupations of the British Government, was endorsed by the latter without question.

Here and there Mr. Abbott exposes himself to the charge of allowing his personal animus towards M. Venizelos to influence the presentation of his case; but no dispassionate observer acquainted with Greece since the Armistice can doubt that his view holds the field in Greece to-day, in spite of the return to power of Venizelism (without M. Venizelos, it will be noted), through the agency of the Revolutionary Committee. At the root of the ills that Greece has suffered since 1914 lie the ambitions of M. Venizelos—patriot of outstanding ability though he may be—and the hot-headed, unprincipled methods that he adopted to achieve his aims. It is Venizelism that has embroiled Greece in a huge political vendetta, sacrificed hundreds of thousands of lives in Asia Minor, emptied her treasury, and loaded her with debt and with a refugee problem which almost defies solution. The Allies, however, have their share of responsibility, and ought now to play their part in the rehabilitation of Greece. There is little chance of their doing this so long as it is imputed to Greece as a crime that she hesitates to bow the knee and her neck to Venizelism. Let it once be realised that the policy associated with M. Venizelos's name was an error of judgment, as now proved by the Asia Minor débâcle, and that those who opposed him differed conscientiously from him in political opinion without being the whit less patriotic, the ground will then be cleared for the help that the Allies owe to Greece. "Greece and the Allies" should be read by all those who wish to arrive at a true appreciation of recent Greek history.

PICTURES OF IRAK.

"MESOPOTAMIA (IR'Q) WATER COLOURS." By Edith Cheesman (London: A. and C. Black, Ltd. 2s. 6d. net.)

This selection of sixteen reproductions in colour from the set of pictures painted by Miss Cheesman in Irak last year forms a pleasing little book, and will be welcomed, especially by those who have visited the subjects of her talent. In reproduction these water-colours naturally lose something, but in some of them the charm of the original has been at least sufficiently retained. We still get, for instance, the finely graded sweep of "Birs Nimrod, or Tower of Babel," the rich modulations of "The Euphrates at Ramadi," and the concise picturesqueness of "Hilla." Other pictures, such as "Mosque and Mahailas on the Tigris, Baghdad," or "Kerbela," or "Hit," have become in book form either a little vague, vapid, or coarse. But, in spite of these things, there is ample here to interest and please, and we do not doubt that the book will find a ready sale among visitors to Irak.

A BOY AND A WOLF.

"DUSTY STAR." By Olaf Baker. (London: Thornton Butterworth. 7s. 6d. net.)

It seems, perhaps, rather unfair that, because "Dusty Star" deals with the friendship between a boy and a wolf, the reader's mind should at once jump to "The Jungle Book" and comparisons—but it also seems inevitable. In this case the boy is a Red Indian, and his adventures with the wolf and with many other animals take place in the Western Prairies, of which the author writes as though we knew the country well. We think that this book would have been more successful if Mr. Baker appeared to take his own knowledge and the likelihood of our interest in it more seriously, and had not so obviously tried to make a "pretty story" out of it nor so often allowed himself to become facetious.

THE SLAVONIC REVIEW.

"THE SLAVONIC REVIEW." Vol. I. No. 2. (Published by the School of Slavonic Studies in the University of London, King's College. 5s. net.)

The second number of this excellent review maintains that authoritative standard which the first had gained for it. As it happens, there is nothing in this present volume that very nearly concerns THE NEAR EAST, but we may particularly mention, as likely to be of general interest to our readers, the first of Dr. Seton-Watson's historical articles upon "Transylvania," taking us down to the end of the sixteenth century, and M. Gavrilovitch's second article upon "The Early Diplomatic Relations of Great Britain and Serbia." Besides these, there are articles connected with Poland, Russia, and Czecho-Slovakia, the most interesting of them, perhaps, being "Poland," by M. Skirmunt; "Some Thoughts on the Style of Dostoyevsky," by Eugene Lyatsky; and "Leos Janacek and Moravian Music Drama," by Rosa Newmarch.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"The Balkans" (Roumania, Bulgaria, Serbia, and Montenegro). By William Miller, M.A., The Story of the Nations Series. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 1s.)

"The Decadence of Europe." By Francesco Nitti. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. net. Postage abroad 6d.)

"The Ins and Outs of Mesopotamia." By Thomas Lyell. (London: A. M. Philpot, Ltd. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 4d.)

TURKISH SELF-TAUGHT

(In Turkish and Roman Characters.)

Revised and re-edited by

Prof. G. HAGOPIAN & Prof. A. GEORGIUS, B.A.

Containing the Alphabet, Orthographic Signs, Pronunciation, Classified Vocabularies, Travelling, Necessary Phrases, Elementary Grammar, Tables of Money, with illustration of Turkish Coinage, Weights and Measures, ENGLISH & TURKISH DICTIONARY.

Red Cloth, 4s. net; Blue Wrapper, 3s. net. Postage, 3d. extra.

Sold by all ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKSELLERS.

Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.

London: E. MARLBOROUGH & CO., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

January 11 (New Style).

December 29 (Old Style).

Gumada I., 24, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Tibet 23, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Lady Ribblesdale has arrived in Egypt.

Lord Leigh and the Hon. Agnes Leigh have left for Egypt.

Sir Edwin Lutyens will return to London from India at the end of this month.

Mrs. Henry Sturgis will shortly leave London to visit her daughter, Mrs. Malcolm Aird, in Egypt.

Viscountess Ridley, Lord Ebury, and Brig.-General A. C. Bailward have left by the P. and O. s.s. Malwa for Bombay.

The Roumanian Minister and M. Radu T. Djuvara, First Secretary at the Legation, have returned to London from Paris.

Seyyid Talib Pasha, formerly Ministry of the Interior in the Irak Government, is now in England on a visit to his two sons, Najid Mddim Bey and Tofk Bey, who are at Oxford.

In the annual chess match between past-members of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Major R. W. Barnett, M.P., played second board for Oxford. The match took place, as usual, at the City of London Chess Club.

Mr. Monteith Smith, Director-General of Public Security, Egypt, has resigned. Mr. A. W. Keown-Boyd, formerly Oriental Secretary and recently appointed Secretary-General to the Foreign Ministry, is appointed to succeed him.

A marriage has been arranged, and will shortly take place in British Burma, between Captain Henry Ozanne, 128th Pioneers, I.A., elder son of the late Edward Ozanne, I.C.S., of Guernsey, Channel Islands, and Miss Margaret Sylvia Lutyens, younger daughter of Charles B. Lutyens, of Great Amwell, Herts.

The King has given orders for the following appointments to the Order of the British Empire for valuable services rendered in connection with minor military operations undertaken by the South Persia Rifles:—O.B.E. (Military Division): Capt. (2./Maj.) J. T. Avison, 8th Bn., Midd'x R. (T.F.). M.B.E. (Military Division): Lt. (T./Capt.) J. A. Forsyth, R.G.A. (S.R.); Condr. J. C. Gypson, I.O.D.; Condr. W. Skinner, I.O.D.

The following three lectures have been arranged by the Central Asian Society, to take place at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall: January 18, at 5 p.m., "Central Asia: Its Rise as a Political and Economic Factor," by Lieut.-Col. P. Etherton; February 8, at 5 p.m., "The Operations on the Bushire-Shiraz Road, 1918-19," by Major-

General J. A. Douglas; and March 8, at 5 p.m., "China and the Powers," by the Rt. Hon. Sir John Jordan.

OBITUARY.

The death occurred recently of Mrs. Madeleine Cole, of Putney, who for about thirty years was treasurer and secretary of the "Women's Armenian Relief Fund." She was able during that period to transmit from the committee over £30,000.

The death is announced, at the age of 57, of Dr. Walter Juvelius, a Finnish savant, best known for his work dealing with Jewish chronology, which led to the sending of an English research expedition to Palestine to conduct excavations.

It is announced from Khartoum that the death has occurred at Um Dafog (South-Western Darfur) of Colonel Hugh Drummond Pearson, R.E. Colonel Pearson, who was President of the Wadai-Darfur Boundary Commission, was a distinguished African explorer. In the Sudan particularly his survey work was of immense value.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,
At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO.
Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOUY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October.

Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOUY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.

Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lanington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."

Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1923.

PEACE STRATEGY.

Until a settlement has been reached in the Near East the Turkish question retains its paramount importance in any consideration of Near and Middle Eastern affairs, and no apology is needed for returning again and again to the subject in these columns. For the moment the attitude of the Turkish delegation at Lausanne is of secondary importance compared with the confirmation of Allied solidarity supplied by the French Government after the failure of France and Great Britain to reach agreement regarding German reparations. Against a united front on the part of the Allies Turkish intransigence must break itself sooner or later; any delay in this connection the Allies can view with equanimity, for it is the Turks who must suffer the most in the long run. Lausanne has established a fact that has long been insisted upon in these pages, that peace in the Near East can never be attained by round-table agreement. Pressure from above in some form or other is indispensable. We urged it before Greece was encouraged to attack the Turks, and at the time of the abortive attempts to bring Greeks and Turks together. On each occasion solidarity on the part of the Allies would have supplied the necessary pressure, provided that the terms of peace bore some relation to what was just and practical. Before the Greeks landed in Asia Minor the solidarity of the Allies was adequate, but the proposed terms of peace were vitiated by ignorance and vindictiveness. Since that time Great Britain, France, and Italy have slowly and under dire compulsion moved towards unity of purpose and just conditions of peace. But while Greece has been subjected to the pressure required to bring her into line, the Turks have been led to suppose that by no manner of means can pressure ever be exerted on them again. Nationalist Turkey was loud in its asseveration that it was something quite different from anything known in Turkey before, that it had touched a higher plane of civilisation, and was, indeed, quite European, and there was a general readiness to believe that a peace conference would at last bring about a settlement. It has failed, however, because the Turk has not yet rid himself of the old Adam. The Lausanne Conference, nevertheless, has not been a waste of time. It has two great achievements to its credit—the establishment of Allied unity of purpose in the face of Turkish intransigence, and of a fair basis for an ultimate Turkish settlement—and the Allies can await without much anxiety the acceptance of that settlement.

It remains as true as ever that the Turks will not accept a settlement, save under pressure. If we regard it as an axiom that the Allies will not attempt to force upon the Turks the new terms of peace, when formally drafted, this is by no means equivalent as an admission that they will not take up whole-heartedly a Turkish declaration of war, and carry the business through as thoroughly as they did before. A sense of proportion enters into the question. Deliberate provocation to war will have to be met at once; but in the absence of such provocation Turkey by herself is not important enough to justify an Allied mobilisation. The pressure needed to bring the Turks to an adequate appreciation of realities can be supplied, in all probability, by the mere agency of time. This policy is at least worth a trial. It may entail a rearrangement of the Allied forces in the Near East. Chanak, for example, might with advantage be evacuated by the British troops now there, in order that Asia Minor, with the possible exception of the Asiatic suburbs of Constantinople, should be left entirely to the Turks; Constantinople itself may have to be more strongly held, and the Allied fleets in the Straits and the Bosphorus reinforced. There would be no provocation on the Allies' part; but the Turks would be made to realise that the West can play for time as stubbornly as the East. Nationalist Turkey, it is evident, suffers from a plethora of leaders or advisers, if it is not wholly in the hands of Army officers. The proceedings at Lausanne have shown that no one willingly takes responsibility; all are eager to shield themselves behind Angora, where a handful of Anatolian fanatics call the tune to which Mustapha Kemal Pasha and the others have to dance.

Turkey has missed her opportunity. There is some truth in the declaration of Signor Nitti that "the cause of Germany and of the other vanquished peoples is henceforward the cause of the whole world, for on that cause alone depend the peace and the economic prosperity of the whole earth." But Turkey, of her own accord, has placed herself outside the Italian statesman's picture. She has been offered the full benefit of the Allies' desire to correct the mistakes of the Treaty of Sèvres, and to make her cause their own, but she refuses to identify herself with the peace and economic prosperity of the world. The attitude of her delegation at Lausanne has been a travesty of diplomatic procedure; but the Angora authorities are as incapable of appreciating this fact as they are ignorant of Western standards of administration. The Allied appeal to the Turks' intelligence has failed; time must now be given for their cruder instincts to prompt the necessary response. Angora to-day imagines that it can exist for itself and by itself without reference to the rest of the world. For a limited period it may be able to do so; but it will soon tire of the experience, when all sources of revenue for the pay of officers and officials have been exhausted. The Allies can afford to wait until this latter stage has been reached. The economic position in Turkey, so far as other nations are concerned, has become so bad that it can hardly be worse; its effects, however, have not yet been fully felt by the Turks. The Allies must wait in patience until Turkey has tired of her isolation and is prepared to welcome a settlement that guarantees her independence and sovereignty, with the single proviso that, in one or two particulars where uncertainty legitimately prevails regarding Turkey's capacity at once to live up to her intentions, sufficient time must be given for her claims to be substantiated. The Turks have been met in a frank and generous spirit; but so far they have failed, as they have always failed in the past, to understand that normal intercourse between civilised States must needs be based on the principle of reciprocity and good faith.

THE SUDAN—II.

IMPORTANT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE SUDAN.

Cotton Growing Projects.

The New Year has opened auspiciously for the Sudan, with the launching of two Loan projects—one for the Kassala Railway, the other, the larger, for the great Blue Nile Dam at Makwar, just south of Sennar. Both enterprises are linked up with the extension of cotton growing, and, in view of the fact that Sudan cotton has already established a reputation on a level with that of the best Egyptian variety, the new development cannot fail to have an interest for the Empire in general, and for Lancashire in particular. Everything points to a world shortage of cotton these years. The extension of land under cotton, therefore, is to be encouraged wherever the plant grows, but it is doubly welcome when it occurs within the Empire, with the prospect of long staple, fine quality cotton being produced. The Sudan authorities are fully alive to the interests of the country, and have worked hard to launch the two schemes which had first to secure the approval of the British Government. In the Sudan Plantations Syndicate, which is directly concerned with the growth of cotton, they have active supporters on the spot. Both, however, will be ready to testify to the advantages derived from the existence of the Empire Cotton-Growing Corporation, which has done so much to stimulate public interest in the growth of cotton, and thus helped to obtain the support of the British Parliament for the Sudan enterprises.

The Gezira Project.

South of Khartoum, between the confluence of the Blue and White Niles, lies a vast plain of about ten million acres, of which it has been estimated that an area of some three million acres is capable of growing cotton of high quality and of satisfactory yield. The irrigation of this block of land is to be provided for by the construction of a dam across the Blue Nile at Makwar, 190 miles south of Khartoum, with a main canal from the dam to the portion of the Gezira plain to be irrigated, which begins about 35 miles to the north, and a system of smaller irrigating channels. Work was started in the autumn of 1919, and was pushed on steadily until the spring of 1922. Already in June, 1920, it was apparent that the original estimate, £3,000,000, of the cost of these works would be largely exceeded owing to the general increase in prices resulting from the War. A revised estimate subsequently doubled the prospective cost. Towards the end of 1921 it was hinted that the scheme, if it was to be completed, would probably be found to require an expenditure of £12,000,000. In any case, the funds originally provided by a Sudan Loan were nearly exhausted, and the Sudan Government was not in a position to provide additional funds without the support of the British Government. In view of the uncertainty attaching to the cost of the undertaking, the Treasury insisted upon an investigation by an independent expert, and sent out Mr. F. T. Hopkinson, of the firm of Messrs. S. Pearson and Son. As a result of his report, which was issued last February, the Sudan Government terminated its agreement with the firm of local contractors who had been carrying

GELLATLY, HANKEY & CO.

LLOYD'S AGENTS FOR THE RED SEA.

KHARTOUM, PORT SUDAN, SUAKIN, MASSOWAH AND JEDDAH (Arabia).

Branches at:—GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, ANTWERP, MARSEILLES, HAMBURG, COLOGNE.

Head Office:—Dock House, Billiter Street, LONDON, E.C.3 West End Office:—62, Pall Mall, LONDON, S.W.1

Agents for:—

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.
THE MARINE INSURANCE CO., LTD.

THE UNION-CASTLE MAIL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.
THE PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD.

ELLERMAN AND BUCKNALL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. ELLERMAN'S WILSON LINE, LTD.
THE ARMY & NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. COX'S SHIPPING AGENCY, &c.

Regular Service of First-Class Passenger and Cargo Steamers between Port Sudan and the Continent, United Kingdom, New York and East African Ports.

COAL, PATENT FUEL, CEMENT, PETROLEUM, SHELL MOTOR SPIRIT, EXPLOSIVES AND GENERAL MERCHANTS

Telegrams

"GELLATLY."

out the work up to that time on the basis of a percentage payment on the cost, and for some months operations on the dam were practically suspended. Arrangements were made for a new contract, which was secured last September by Messrs. S. Pearson and Son, the lowest tenderers, and work has now been resumed. It is expected that the first planting on the new land will be possible in July, 1925, and that the formal opening of the Makwar Dam will take place early in 1926.

As a beginning, a narrow strip of 300,000 acres, 55 miles long, and between 9 and 10 miles wide, is to be brought under cultivation. The suitability of the Gezira soil under irrigation for cotton and other rotation crops has been established as a result of experiments extending over the last eleven years. The first experimental station was formed in 1911 at Tayiba, six miles north of Wad Medani, which lies roughly at one-third of the distance between Sennar and Khartoum. Some 2,000 acres were put under cultivation here, and the success of the scheme led to the establishment of two other stations at Barakat, a short distance south of Wad Medani, and at Hag Abdalla, thirty miles north of Sennar. The area under cotton each year at Barakat is 2,000 acres; at Hag Abdalla 6,000 acres; and this year arrangements have been made for the planting of a further 10,000 acres with cotton at a fresh centre, also within the block of land to be irrigated by the Blue Nile Dam. At these test stations irrigation has been provided by means of steam-driven pumps raising water from the Nile. Cotton in the Sudan is a winter crop, in contradistinction to Egypt, where it is a summer growth. It is sown in the latter half of July or early in August, and is gathered by the latter end of March.

GRAIN MARKET, TOKAR.

All the cotton areas enumerated have been established and managed by the Sudan Plantations Syndicate, which will act as the Government's agents in the whole area now to be irrigated. The system in vogue is to lease the land to tenants in blocks of thirty acres. Each block is worked on a three-year rotation, one-third of the block being under cotton, one-third under lubia, and one-third lying fallow. The syndicate undertakes to maintain an adequate staff to instruct cultivators and to supervise cultivation. Starting with the 60,000 acres that are to be under cultivation this year (20,000 actually under cotton), the syndicate should have no difficulty in arranging for a cultivated area of 100,000 acres by the time of the formal opening of the dam. In addition to advancing to its tenants seeds, food, and implements, the syndicate is in the habit of ploughing and ridging their land mechanically. It also arranges for the cooperative marketing of the cotton. The tenants, on their part, have to conform to the orders of the company's officials in regard to the cultivation, irrigation, and harvesting of their crops.

The Kassala Railway.

This week has seen the issue of a loan for £1,290,000, guaranteed by the British Government under the Trade Facilities Act, 1921, on behalf of the Kassala Railway Company, Limited, to provide funds for the building of an extension of the Sudan railways, 217 miles in length, from Thamiam, a station on the Atbara-Port Sudan line, to Kassala, on the borders of Eritrea. One of the main purposes of this line is to render possible the expansion of the cotton area in Kassala province. After crossing the south-western corner of Eritrea the River Gash, which rises in the Abyssinian foothills and drains a mountainous country of heavy but spasmodic rainfall, loses itself in the ground a few miles north of Kassala. It flows on the average for about seventy-five days in the months of July, August, and September. As a result of constant variations in its channel over the latter portion of its course, it has formed a delta of rich alluvial soil, in which excellent cotton of the Egyptian long staple variety (Sakellaridis) has been successfully grown for a number of years. In the absence of a railway, no considerable extension of the cotton industry in this district has been possible owing to the limitations imposed by camel transport to the railway or the coast. The acreage which can eventually be brought under regular cotton cultivation is governed by irrigation possibilities, but no difficulty is anticipated in growing within a few years after the opening of the new railway at least 100,000 acres of cotton annually by means of simple training works to regulate the flow of the river.

The Kassala railway is to be open for traffic by April 1, 1925. An irrigation expert, who has had experience of flood rivers, has been lent to the Sudan by the Government of India, and leaves England this week for Kassala. As he will have at his disposal all the data compiled in recent years by irrigation officials on the spot, it is anticipated that there will be no difficulty in completing the necessary training works during the construction of the railway. Indeed, it is estimated that an area of 40,000 acres will be under cotton in time to take advantage of the opening of the line, which coincides with the harvest period. Ultimately it is expected that a railway will be built from Sennar to Kassala by way of Gedaref, which will open up a fertile district in the Eastern Sudan, and increase the export of cereals and cattle. In the meantime the completion of the Kassala railway will liberate all the camel transport now serving that area and enable it to be transferred to the Gedaref route, thus stimulating the development of that region as well.

As in the case of the Gezira plain, the management of the new land will be vested in the Sudan Plantations Syndicate, which has also made itself responsible for the formation of the Kassala Railway Company. Of the total cost of the railway, which is placed at £1,550,000, only £300,000 will be expended in the Sudan. The balance, representing the amount to be raised by loan guaranteed under the Trade Facilities Act, has by the terms of that Act to be spent in Great Britain, and will be used to purchase plant, materials, and rolling stock. The Sudan, therefore, appears at this juncture as an Imperial asset in a double rôle. By its large orders to British manufacturers it offers immediate employment on a considerable scale at a time of industrial depression, and it promises a valuable supply of high quality cotton in the future for English mills.

THE GORDON MEMORIAL COLLEGE.

Special interest attaches to the report on the Gordon Memorial College at Khartoum for the year 1921 by the Principal, Mr. John W. Crowfoot, C.B.E., owing to the fact that it covers the year in which the College "came of age." The first annual report gave an account of the work that had been undertaken until the end of 1901, and accordingly Mr. Crowfoot takes the opportunity of summarising the progress made in the various branches of the educational system during those twenty-one years. The educational programme laid down by the first Principal, Mr. (now Sir) James Currie, was based upon the economic conditions then existing in the country, and fell into three main divisions—the training of an artisan class, the spread of the elements of vernacular instruction among the masses, and the education for Government service of a certain limited number of native-born Sudanis and of the children of Egyptian employees in the Sudan. Dealing with the present position after the experience of twenty-one years, Mr. Crowfoot writes:—

After Twenty-one Years.

In the sphere of skilled labour Mr. Currie noted that "carpenters, bricklayers, blacksmiths, tinsmiths, tailors, and weavers are all alike wanting." Since his report was written the Mather Workshops have turned out nearly 500 carpenters, blacksmiths, fitters, turners, and painters, and the Omdurman Technical School has turned out 101 bricklayers and stone masons. The bricklayers and stone masons are for the most part working with contractors, and there are few of the larger building works in Khartoum, in Omdurman, or elsewhere, in which they have not had a hand: one or two of them are already acting as small contractors themselves. Of the carpenters and other mechanics from the Gordon College Workshops, the majority are working as skilled tradesmen in Government shops, but there is a large number of them in private employment.

Tailors and weavers, it will be seen, we have not tried to train, but, on the other hand, a pottery section has been working for the last twelve years in the Omdurman School. Our experience in regard to the latter has been interesting. The trade of turning pots on the wheel was unknown in the country, though it had been regularly practised in the Middle Ages, but our instructors, Egyptian master-craftsmen, found no difficulty in teaching Sudanese boys to become competent potters. The boys, however, on leaving the school proved quite incapable of setting up and running kilns and shops on their own account, even when supplied with the initial plant; consequently, they either returned to the school to work for a wage there, or drifted off to other occupations. The output of the school found a ready sale, and evidently satisfied a regular demand, so it was decided two or three years ago to maintain this section as a business pottery with a minimum number of apprentices. Quite recently, however, one of the Egyptian craftsmen whom we ourselves originally brought to Omdurman has established a pottery of his own, and at once several old pupils have joined him as assistants. The conclusion is obvious: for the present it is useless to train tradesmen in any trade which is not already sufficiently established in the country to enable boys to apprentice themselves to some outside master. Carpenters, blacksmiths, fitters, builders, and stone masons have always been able to find work either in Government shops or with private contractors and tradesmen, but the introduction of new trades, whatever the demand for the finished article, should only proceed pari passu with the establishment of private shops.

In the sphere of vernacular education steady progress has been made from year to year, and the number of schools started, which now amount to eighty-seven, is limited only by our means. The schools are very popular with the people. They are not seriously abused as nurseries for petty employees, and the standard of attainment compares more than favourably with the standard of most Kuttabs in Egypt. During the last two years the syllabus has been entirely recast and room found for instruction in the elements of history, geography, hygiene, and agriculture. The subjects are popular with the boys, but very few of the older teachers, who have spent years in teaching nothing but the elements of reading, writing, arithmetic, and religion, have risen to the new demands now made of them, and without the Arifs' Section for the training of elementary teachers in the Gordon College we could not not have made much progress. In the Gordon College, thanks to the existence of the laboratories, the museum collections, and, above all, to the enthusiastic co-operation of the research staff, we have succeeded in widening the outlook and extending the knowledge of all grades of teachers.

The expansion of the syllabus in vernacular schools was closely connected with the decision not to increase the number of primary schools: in making the latter decision we were only reaffirming a principle laid down in the beginning. "Schools of this type teaching English," wrote Mr. Currie in his report for 1901, "are emphatically for the few, not for the multitude." There were three of these schools in 1901, the number was raised to six by 1906, and the number is still six, though the number of boys is now 1,238. But this restriction of English teaching to the few has laid upon us the duty of providing for the multitude as generous a portion of knowledge as we can afford, and this duty we are doing our best to meet, by enlisting all the help we can get from both sides of the college.

The Educational System.

Briefly, the educational system that has grown up in the Sudan round the Gordon Memorial College is as follows:—Pupils enter the Kuttabs, or vernacular schools, where no English is spoken, at eight years of age. At the age of eleven selected boys proceed to a Primary School, and of these, as stated above, there are now six. If they remain at the Primary School for four years they become entitled to employment at £E4 per month, or they proceed to the Higher School. At the Primary School they learn English thoroughly, and there is authority for saying that Arab boys in their second year at the Gordon College Primary School are found to speak and understand English and to write English composition better than many Egyptians who may be nearing, say, their final year in the medical course at Cairo. Pupils who are considered qualified to continue their studies pass at the age of fifteen to the Upper School of Gordon College, being drafted to one or other of the four sections:—(1) Literary (with a view to clerkships); (2) Kadis (Mohammedan Religious Law section); (3) Arifs (school teachers); (4) Workshops (artisans, engineers). There is also an Army Cadet School. At the end of a four-year course a pupil can claim to have attained a wage-earning capacity of £E8 per month.

BOY SCOUTS AT GORDON COLLEGE.

The authorities of Gordon College have set themselves to guard against the mistake of "turning out" more pupils than the country can conveniently absorb into its commercial, industrial, or professional life. The number of those receiving secondary education is limited, and every effort is made—hitherto with marked success—to see that pupils on leaving the College find employment, and do not become mere educated loafers.

A Personal Impression.

At this point in this short account of Gordon College it is permissible to strike a more personal note. No one can visit the College without being impressed by the admirable spirit that guides and pervades the whole institution. On general lines the English public school system is in vogue. There are three "houses," and day boys form a fourth. "House" patriotism, it is noticed, provides an excellent corrective to tribal prejudices. Discipline is maintained by prefects, who can inflict six strokes with a cane or impose afternoon work, such as moving sand, etc. No interference is attempted with the racial or religious sentiments of the boys. Only Egyptians—i.e., sons of officials in the Sudan—wear European clothes and wear the Arab and Sudanese pupils wear turbans, ghelabehs, and sandals. Games are compulsory, the masters being associated with the boys in them, and it is impossible to watch a game on any of the eleven football grounds that the College boasts without being impressed with the keenness and esprit de corps of the players. In this connection reference must be made to the Boy Scout movement, the College contributing a useful quota to the Sudan Boy Scouts' Association. It is hardly necessary to point out that the domestic side of the College leaves nothing to be desired, special attention being paid to the cleanliness of the boys and to their clean feeding.

In an introduction to the annual report Sir Reginald Wingate, chairman of the executive committee of the Gordon College, writes:—

"The playing of games, the encouragement of dramatic entertainments by the students, and the Boy Scout movement all tend towards the inculcation of that public school spirit which is of so much importance in improving the outlook of the native youth—in fact, 'playing the game,' which must in time favourably affect the growth of a right spirit and help the students to realise that truthfulness, courage, fair play, respect for authority, honesty, self-control, industry, good manners, the duties and privileges of citizenship, and true patriotism are essential to successful administration, and must therefore be cultivated assiduously if they wish to aspire to positions of responsibility in either a Government or private career."

The number of boys in Gordon College at the beginning of 1921 was 798, distributed as follows:

Upper School, 154; Kadis' section, 26; Arifs' section, 65; Primary School, 366; workshops, 187. The total number of boarders was 358. Of the 187 boys in the workshops, 86 were being trained as carpenters, 79 as fitters and turners, and 22 as blacksmiths.

No account of Gordon College would be complete without a reference to the completely equipped bacteriological and analytical laboratory presented by Mr. Henry S. Wellcome. The staff now includes three bacteriologists, with three English assistants, four chemists, four entomologists, with an English entomological assistant, besides several native assistants. The research side of the department has been further expanded by the addition of a geological section, and the museum, which was started in 1901, has grown into three museums—for antiquities, natural history, and ethnological collections respectively. As some indication of the work done in the laboratories, it may be mentioned that in 1921 no fewer than 4,925 routine examinations were carried out, the investigations relating to animal as well as human diseases. The activities of the chemical section, which examined for analysis purposes 2,133 samples during the year, covered the following fields: Forest products, native drugs and poisons, milk analyses, and soil analyses, the latter with special reference to soil of the Gezira, where irrigation is to enable so large an area to be placed under cotton cultivation.

Work on the Sennar Dam, Blue Nile, has been begun by Messrs. S. Pearson and Son, the successful contractors who have collected the staff and most of the labour required for this season's work. A considerable number of natives, it is reported from Khartoum, have gone to Makwar to get work, and no difficulty is being experienced in finding all the hands required.

Further information regarding the Sudan will be found on page 42.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,
At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

An Inauspicious Commencement.

It cannot be said that the New Year has begun its course auspiciously. Of the two things that were hoped for from the present month—a settlement of the Reparations question and peace with Turkey—the former has proved impossible of achievement for the moment at any rate. It has been a conflict between two diametrically opposed points of view. British policy has aimed first and foremost at the development of conditions which will enable the reconstruction of Europe; France is actuated (as a consequence of special factors that operate in her case) by the desire to obtain compensation immediately, no matter what the consequences. It is not open to doubt that France will gain at first by the occupation of the Ruhr Valley, but the ultimate results of this policy are very doubtful, and it is not at all improbable that the upshot will be that America will desire to interest herself in the European position and that the whole Reparations question will be reopened. At Lausanne developments have not been such as to give grounds for any overwhelming confidence in a speedy settlement. The Turks have been showing anything but an accommodating attitude over outstanding questions, but it is a moot point how far they have been bluffing and whether their seeming intransigence has not been a diplomatic essay in the importance of being earnest.

An Interesting Move.

That the prospects of an early settlement with Turkey are regarded very favourably in influential quarters in the City is evident from the recent registration of a company entitled "The Corporation for the Economic Development of Turkey, Limited," particulars of which will be found in another column. Among the subscribers to the company is Mr. Leslie Urquhart, chairman of the Russo-Asiatic Consolidated, which company is the chief participant in the new concern. The objects of the corporation range from mining to the construction of railways and docks. It must be borne in mind that as yet Turkey is, in the main, undeveloped, but it possesses immense natural resources, and the corporation will have a vast field for enterprise before it, and should play a leading part in the reconstruction of the country, and in doing so should materially contribute to the support of British interests in Turkey.

Trade With the Ukraine.

It has long been obvious that the Black Sea region is destined in the future to be of constantly growing commercial importance, and special interest therefore attaches to the formation, under very influential auspices, of a company for the promotion of commercial relations with the Ukraine Republic. The Ukraine might not inaptly be termed the granary of South Russia. It is a region of great fertility and extensive resources, and as a potential market for British goods it has great possibilities. It is eminently satisfactory to know that the prospects are realised here, and that endeavours are now to be made to develop trade with the Ukraine on comprehensive lines.

The Egyptian Market.

The extent to which the Egyptian market has been affected by the prevailing conditions is brought out very clearly by the figures for the import trade for the ten months ended October 31. For that period the value of the imports was £E34,492,342, as compared with £E46,278,292 for the previous year, a decrease of £E11,785,950. There was, on the other hand, a substantial rise in the value of the exports, and, including the value of re-exports, Egypt has a small trade balance in its favour. The latest reports suggest a slight development of the trade inquiry from Egypt, and this market is bound to be one of the first to reflect any general improvement in the trade position.

Cotton Ginners of Egypt.

Elsewhere we give the report of the Associated Cotton Ginners of Egypt for the year ended August 31 last. There was a marked decrease in the gross factory profit, but, on the other hand, there was a substantial reduction in expenditure, and the net profits are about £E9,000 higher at £E33,322, which, considering the conditions, must be regarded as a very satisfactory result.

The Kassala Railway.

That no time is to be lost in proceeding with the important scheme for the development of cotton growing in the Kassala district of the Sudan is evident from the appearance last week of the prospectus of the Kassala Railway Company, offering to the public £1,290,000 guaranteed $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. debenture stock. The company has acquired a concession for the construction of a line from Kassala to Thamiam, which is needed in connection with the cotton-growing scheme which is projected under the auspices of the Sudan Plantations Syndicate. It is expected that the line will be opened in two years' time, and within a few years of the opening great developments are anticipated in the region.

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

TRADE WITH THE SUDAN

THE SUDAN TRADING COMPANY.

Head Office : Khartoum.

Branches :

Port Sudan, El Obeid, Nahud, and principal stations in the Sudan, Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said (Egypt).

General Wholesale Import Merchants and Exporters of Sudan Produce.

London Agency :

35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3.

ECONOMICAL EXCAVATIONS

We specialise in Dragline Excavators, suitable for drainage, irrigation, trenching and general work.

Full range of standard models available with bucket capacities from 3/4 to 9 cubic yards.

If you have any excavations to carry out, ask us for particulars of Ruston Draglines and Shovels.

RUSTON & HORNSBY LTD.

LINCOLN

ENGLAND

FIRE PROTECTION IN KHARTOUM.

Fire hydrants with a pressure sufficient to throw water forty feet into the air are now fixed throughout Khartoum, with notices in English and Arabic indicating their position. The pressure is sufficient for normal purposes, as few houses in the town have more than one storey, so that a forty-foot jet can play on the roof of almost every house. Furthermore, pumps are being obtained to work auxiliary to the hydrants, and Khartoum is thus being brought into line in this respect with European towns.

Another innovation is the placing of electric wires underground. During the fierce storms of last summer the overhead wires were occasionally broken by the force of the storms and became a source of danger to the public.

ARMS REGULATIONS.

It is of importance to all intending visitors to the Sudan that they should be cognisant of the regulations governing the import of arms into the Sudan. During the past two years many new regulations have been framed.

The importation of .303 rifles, .450 and .455 revolvers and ammunition for the same is absolutely forbidden.

.450 and .455 bore rifles are allowed for shooting parties only.

The importation into the country of automatic pistols of any kind whatsoever is prohibited.

Visitors who bring arms of the above calibre and description with them will have them impounded at their port of entry into the Sudan, where they will remain until arrangements can be made to export them.

CONTOMICHALOS, DARKE & CO., LTD.

Registered Office : 35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3

Sudan Branches :

Port Sudan, Khartoum, Suakim, Tokar, Kassala. STEAMSHIP, INSURANCE, FORWARDING AND BUNKERING AGENTS, COTTON AND COTTONSEED EXPORTERS.

General Agents in the Sudan for :

The Clan Line of Steamers; Ellerman's City & Hall Lines; The Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.; The Harrison Line; The Sun Line; The Bank Line (Andrew Weir & Co.); The Hansa Line; The London Assurance; etc., etc.

Through freights quoted from Sudan to all U.K., Continental and U.S.A. ports, and from Port Sudan to the principal stations in the Sudan.

Bunker Coals always in stock at Port Sudan, and steamers supplied at short notice.

For full particulars apply to London and/or Khartoum Offices.

SUDAN MERCANTILE CO., LTD.

IMPORT & EXPORT.

Representing:—

DUNLOP RUBBER CO., LTD.,
BRITISH FIBROCEMENT WORKS, [Ltd.]

BURRELL'S PAINTS,
MAJOR & CO.'s SOLIGNUM, [&c., &c.]

Telegrams: SUDANILE.

P.O. Box 97
KHARTOUM.

P.O. Box 22
PORT SUDAN.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Egypt.

Binding and Printing Material.—The Government Press, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of binding and printing material required for the year 1923-24. January 21. (D.O.T.)

School Materials.—The Sub-Director of Stores, Ministry of Education, Sharia Qasr el Aini, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of large quantities of school materials, such as exercise books, Arabic reed pens, pencils, black ink of local manufacture, white and coloured chalk, pens, rulers, pieces of indiarubber, slates, etc., required for the school-year 1923-1924. January 31.

Clothing, etc.—The Director of Stores, Department of Public Health, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of clothing, equipment, etc., required for one year from April 1, 1923. February 3.

Steel Pigeon-hole Cupboards.—The Postmaster-General, G.P.O., Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply and erection at Port Said Post Office of seven sections of steel pigeon-hole cupboards for private letter-boxes, each section to consist of fifty-four boxes. Specifications can be seen at the office of the Egyptian Government Representative, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster, London, S.W. February 10.

The Sudan.

Sugar.—The Director, Commercial Intelligence Branch, Central Economic Board, Khartoum, invites tenders for the supply of 5,500 metric tons net of cane or beet loaf (Ras) sugar to the Sudan Government c.i.f. Port Sudan. January 31.

Other Tenders will be found on page 44.

Commerce and Industry.

(Reports from Our Own Correspondents.)

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubiana, December 21.

The Finance Committee.

The question of the financial position after the dissolution of Parliament is a source of considerable embarrassment to M. Pashitch's Government. Even after the dissolution the Finance Committee will continue in being, as its sanction is required for all expenditure, but in the Finance Committee the Radicals have only nine members. This means that they are in a decided minority in that body. This came out very clearly at the last sitting of the Finance Committee, when the Radicals claimed the chairmanship for one of themselves. When this was refused by the Opposition, they asked for the vice-chairmanship, and this demand, too, was turned down. Thereupon the Radicals left in a body. The Opposition, having established the fact that a quorum was still present, then proceeded to elect as chairman M. Veljkovic, a bitter opponent of the Radicals.

A New Financial Policy?

One of the first acts of the Minister of Finance, M. Stojadinovic, has been to recall the Commissioner appointed by his predecessor, M. Plavcic, to control operations in exchange. He has also given assurance that he will remove the embargo upon imports and exports so far as this may be at all practicable. This would mean a complete reversal of the policy of his predecessor, who sought to re-establish the economic balance of the country by all manner of trade restrictions, which only resulted in the total paralysis of business with other countries. It is to be hoped that the new policy will prove more satisfactory.

ALBANIA.

Tirana, December 26.

The Ottoman Debt Question.

The representatives of the Great Powers at Lausanne have considered the question of the redistribution of the Ottoman Debt, which exceeded 150,000,000 gold louis in 1912, when Albania became independent. It has been suggested that Albania should be made responsible for a part of the debt in proportion to the population of the country, its area, and its revenues.

Albania's representative at Lausanne will no doubt oppose this; while here at Tirana in the best-informed quarters it is thought that Albania ought not to be burdened with any debt. Several reasons are advanced in support of this view: (1) Because Albania inherited nothing from Turkey in the shape of structures and works of public utility, such as bridges, roads, schools, hospitals, and public edifices. (2) The economic and financial state of the country would support with difficulty the weight of a foreign debt. It would deal a mortal blow to Albania's reconstruction. (3) Because Albania has claims against Turkey for civil and military pensions, for reparations and requisitions prior to 1912, so that, if a balance were struck, it would perhaps be Turkey who would remain debtor to Albania.

Parliament and the Budget.

The Chamber of Deputies had to close its session yesterday, being Christmas Day, but it will prolong it up to and perhaps after New Year's Day because of the Budget. The estimates for 1923 total at 18,000,000 francs for expenditure and receipts. To arrive at that result the Government is compelled to make every possible economy. The total indicates very clearly that the Budget is of a very modest character, but every Albanian thinks that it is necessary above everything to avoid making debts. With such a Budget it is naturally impossible for Albania to take over a part of the Ottoman Debt; she could not pay even the interest on the debt.

STEUA ROMANA PROGRESS.

Steaua Romana (British), Limited, have received advice that the gross fields production of the Steaua Romana Company of Bucharest for December was 19,830 tons. This brings the total production for the year to 227,798 tons, as compared with 225,430 tons during the year 1921, or an increase of 2,368 tons. In view of the difficult circumstances under which Roumanian companies have been operating during the past twelve months, such as lack of electrical current, etc., this result is very satisfactory. The new electrical power station at Floresti, which the Steaua Romana Company have constructed in conjunction with the Electrica Company, is expected to be working within the next few weeks, and consequently a full supply of electrical current is assured to the company during the coming year.

MOLYBDENUM ORES.

A new volume on molybdenum ores in the series of Monographs on the Mineral Resources of the Empire, issued under the direction of the Mineral Resources Committee of the Imperial Institute, has just been published by Mr. John Murray (price 5s.). It is written by R. H. Rastall, Sc.D., M.Inst., M.M., F.G.S., Lecturer on Economic Geology in the University of Cambridge.

The use of molybdenum was formerly principally restricted to certain chemical purposes, but during the last twenty years it has been mainly used as a constituent of special varieties of steel—e.g., high-speed steel and mild structural steel. During the war molybdenum was in great demand in the making of munitions, and the world's production of the metal rose from about 250 tons in 1915 to upwards of 800 tons in 1918. When the war ceased production fell, until in 1921 it amounted only to a few tons; for, although the use of molybdenum in steel employed for constructional purposes is extending, especially in the United States, there is still enough molybdenum left over from the war to last for a long time, and, consequently, prices in England are at present nominal.

The first chapter of the monograph deals with molybdenum minerals, their concentration and reduction, as well as the properties, uses, values, and world's production of the metal. In the second chapter the molybdenum deposits of the British Empire are described. The third and last chapter describes the molybdenum deposits of foreign countries. A map shows the chief molybdenum occurrences, and the volume concludes with a list of publications on molybdenum.

Oakey's WELLINGTON

The Original Preparation
for polishing Cutlery.
Canisters, 1d., 2d., 3d., 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d. and 4s. each.

SILVERSMITH'S SOAP, for Cleaning and Polishing Silver, Electro Plate, etc. Tablets, 6d.
"WELLINGTON BLACK LEAD" in Solid Blocks,
1d., 2d. and 4d. 1s. Boxes.

KNIFE

Polishing Paste, Furniture
Polish, Plate Powder.

POLISH

Glass Paper, Emery Cloth, Black Lead Packers,
WELLINGTON MILLS, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD, LONDON. S.E.1.

Stock and Share Markets.

STONE RATHER IRREGULAR.

Gilt-Edged Strong.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday morning.

The unsatisfactory position with regard to Reparations is, of course, the dominant influence on the Stock Exchange; but it has not affected the markets to anything like the extent that might have been expected. Its effect has, however, been quite pronounced enough. It has produced a very irregular tendency, and in some directions, notably in foreign Government securities, distinct weakness has developed. Until it is clear how the situation is going to develop, the tone of the markets generally is likely to be very uncertain; for the tendency of investors is naturally to avoid commitments at such periods.

Gilt-Edged Firm.

A feature of the market has been the firmness of gilt-edged securities. Yesterday, indeed, stocks showed an upward tendency as a result of a fairly considerable demand for investment, and prices make quite a good showing compared with those of the previous week. Consols have gained $\frac{1}{4}$ at 55 $\frac{3}{4}$, War Loan Fives at 100 7-16 are $\frac{3}{8}$ up, the Conversion Loan is $\frac{1}{4}$ up at 75 5-16, while Fundings at 86 $\frac{1}{4}$ show a gain of $\frac{3}{8}$.

As noted above, the Foreign group has made a poor showing, the adverse movements of the exchanges having an effect on the stocks. French loans have weakened somewhat. War Loan Fives at 27 $\frac{3}{4}$ being 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ down, while the 4 per cent. at 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ have shed three points. German 3 per cents. have been dull, and at $\frac{3}{4}$ show a decline of $\frac{1}{4}$. Italian Rentes at 21 $\frac{1}{2}$ xd. are about the same. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified have been a specially weak spot, and at 24 are 5 down. Greek Monopolies have made a firm showing, and at 24 $\frac{1}{2}$ are unchanged. Czecho-Slovak 8 per cents. have weakened to 88. The South American group has displayed some irregularity, Argentine and Brazilian securities showing a tendency to give way. In Far Eastern securities Chinese bonds developed weakness.

Industrials Steady.

Considering the conditions, a fair tone has been maintained in the Industrial group. Business has, however, been on a very restricted scale, as was to be expected in the circumstances. The feature of the market has been the strength of Nitrates, which have made an upward movement on the improved position.

Textiles have been rather variable. Coats are 65s. 3d., while Courtaulds are 64s. 9d., at which they are 1s. 6d. up. Listers have gained 1s. at 30s. 3d. Tobaccos have been fairly steady. Bats are unchanged at 89s., while Imperial Tobaccos are 6d. lower at 73s. Iron and Steel descriptions have shown a rather better tendency. Vickers are 6d. up at 15s. 9d., Armstrongs are unchanged at 20s., Dorman Longs are 3d. up at 19s., while Guest Keens at 40s. are 1s. 3d. up. Dunlop Rubbers have shed 3d. at 8s. 9d.

The Shipping group has been fairly steady. P. and O. Deferred are 5 down at 325, Cunards are unchanged at 23s. 9d., Furness Withys are 3d. up at 35s. 6d., while Khedivial Mails are $\frac{1}{8}$ up at 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Oils Dull.

Oils are always the first group to be affected by unfavourable conditions, and, as was to be expected, a very dull tone has developed in certain directions. Anglo-Persian Ord. are 1-16 lower at 1 5-16, while Burmahs are $\frac{1}{8}$ up at 5 3-16, Mexican Eagles are 1 29-32 xd., while Shell Transport are 4 1-16.

Anglo-Egyptian B have gained $\frac{1}{8}$ at 1 $\frac{3}{4}$. In the Roumanian group, Phoenix are 2s. 3d. down at 25s. 3d., Roumanian Consolidated are 11s. 3d., x.r., a decline of 1s. 3d. Steaua Romanas are 9s. 6d., Dacia Romanos are 13-16, while Hamilton's Concessions are 2s. 6d.

TENDERS INVITED.

Iraq.

Stores.—The Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, invites tenders for the following stores to fill the annual demand of the Iraq Army Ordnance Department:—Bedding: blankets, G.S., 600; Bedsteads, F.S.: boards (sets of 3), 3,242; trestles, pairs, 3,880; Textile Stores: carpets, bedside, 750; flannel-ette, doz. yards, 3,935; bunting—black, yards, 366; green, yards, 366; red, yards, 200; white, yards, 366; thread, linen, machine, No. 50 reels, black 10, red 6, white 10; flag, musketry inst., red, 14; Games Gymnasia: jackets, fencing, canvas, large 26, small 25; masks, bayonet-fighting, large 38, small 38; pads, fencing, body, canvas, 95; gloves, fencing, leather, left, padded, 88; right, padded, 100; footballs 300; inflators, 40; awls, lacing, 40; nets, sets, 14. Tenders, on the proper form, should reach the Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, before noon on February 15, 1923. (D.O.T.)

Yugoslavia.

Army Supplies.—The Ministry of War and Marine invites tenders for Army supplies as follows:—

Boots (to be presented on January 20).—3,000 pairs top-boots for the infantry and cavalry regiments of the Royal Guards.

Cotton Thread (to be presented on January 22).—300 gross of white thread, No. 10 to 20; 1,000 gross white thread, No. 30 to 40, half of each; 100 gross white thread, No. 50; 50 gross black thread, No. 10 to 20; 200 gross black thread, No. 30 to 40, half of each; 50 gross black thread, No. 50; 50 gross khaki thread, No. 12 to 20; 1,000 gross khaki thread, No. 30 to 40, half of each; 100 gross khaki thread, No. 50.

Spurs (to be presented on January 25).—40,000 pairs of spurs.

Offers can be submitted for smaller quantities than those mentioned above. Before the adjudication takes place a deposit must be made at the Cashier's Office of the Army Clothing Department, Donji Grad, Belgrade, of 5 per cent. of the offer for Yugoslav subjects, and 10 per cent. for foreigners, in accordance with Article No. 88 of the Law concerning Government accounts. The contractors must produce to the President of the Commission before the adjudication commences:—(1) A receipt that the deposit has been made. (2) A written certificate of their ability to deliver the goods offered, in accordance with Article 91 of the Law concerning Government accounts. (3) Yugoslav subjects must submit a certificate that their firm is registered and that they have paid their Government taxes for the current quarter. (D.O.T.)

Egypt and Sudan Tenders will be found on page 42.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

As a result of the unfavourable developments regarding reparations most of the European currencies have sharply depreciated during the week. Marks reached a new low level, while francs have been very dull, closing at 68.32. Near Eastern currencies have moved unfavourably. Sterling exchange in New York has remained very steady.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97 $\frac{1}{2}$	97 $\frac{1}{2}$
Athens	Drachmae to £....	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	385-395
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	420-430*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	44,750-45,250
Berne	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	24.57-24.59
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ -1 4 $\frac{1}{2}$
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	74.35-74.45
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	860*
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	11,500-12,500
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ -1 4 $\frac{1}{2}$
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ..	110	780-820*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4 64 $\frac{1}{2}$ -4 64 $\frac{1}{2}$
Paris	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	68.30-68.35
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	166 $\frac{1}{2}$ -167 $\frac{1}{2}$
Rome	Lire to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	93 $\frac{1}{2}$ -93 $\frac{3}{4}$
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	700-725
Teheran	Krans to £	50	59
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	320-340.000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	83.000-87.000

* Nominal.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Oil Cakes Weak.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Monday Night.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in fair request at last prices. Tate's cubes have come to business at 56s. 6d.; Lyle's granulated has been done at 50s. 6d.; while London granulated remains at 50s. 3d. Foreign descriptions have been fairly steady. West Indian crystallised is 45s., at which it is 3d. lower, while white Mauritius is 4½d. up at 48s. 1½d. White Java is unchanged at 48s. 1½d. Quotations are:—March 21s. 10½d., May 22s. 3d., August 22s. 3d.

Coffee.—A quiet tone has ruled. East Indian is unchanged at 108s., Costa Rica remains at 100s., while Nairobi is unaltered at 92s. Quotations are:—March 59s., May 58s. 9d., July 58s.

Desiccated Coconut.—Business has been very brisk in this commodity, and prices have advanced.

Rice.—A strong demand has developed, and buyers are evidently replenishing stocks. Spanish Japan rice is harder, while American rices are up on the week.

Green Fruit.—There is no shortage of supplies of oranges, but the demand is scarcely up to expectations, and prices have tended to ease off somewhat. A slackening in request was only to be expected after the Christmas season, and no doubt the market will wake up again after a week or two. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 13s. 6d. to 30s. box (300's to 360's). There have been large arrivals of lemons, and the market shows a somewhat weaker tendency. Quotations are:—Messina lemons (new crop), 13s. to 25s. box (300's), 26s. to 47s. 6d. case (300's). Apples have been in poor request, and are much easier.

Dried Fruit.—The market has ruled quiet after the holidays, but as stocks are small an early development of demand is anticipated. Stocks of Smyrna sultanans are now very limited, and rates are hard. Other varieties are, however, fairly plentiful at reasonable rates. The demand for figs is exceptionally poor, and prices have fallen very sharply without, however, increasing the consumption.

Oilseeds.—The market has been steady. Indian linseed is unchanged at 21s. 6d., while La Plata remains at 18s. Rape seed has been quiet. Toria is 17s. 4½d., and bold Ferozepore is 16s. 10½d. Cotton seed has been dull. Egyptian is 6d. down at 11s. 6d., Indian is 1½d. lower at 8s. 10½d., while Sakellaridis is 11s. 4½d.

Oils.—A rather weak tone has prevailed. Linseed oil is 2s. down at 38s. Rape oil has been steady, with crude unchanged at 42s. 6d., and technical refined at 45s. 6d. Cotton oil has been firm. Refined common edible is 44s., Egyptian crude is 39s., technical is 40s., and deodorised is 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The market has been rather variable. Linseed cake is unchanged at 280s., but coconut cake is 20s. up at 190s., while cotton-seed cake is 10s. down at 160s. Cottonmeal cake is weak at 270s., a drop of 20s.

DRIED FRUIT TRADE IN 1922.

Smyrna and After.

Messrs. J. C. Houghton and Co., in a report dated January 2, review the dried fruit trade in 1922:—

The experience of 1922 will go down to trade history as another landmark similar to that provided by 1900, the contributory cause on this recent occasion being the Smyrna crisis, followed by the conflagration that reduced this great city to ashes. Happening on the very eve of shipments of new crop Smyrna sultanans, the catastrophe came as a thunderbolt and completely staggered the trade. At no other period of the year could its effect have been so sensational. Practically no fruit had arrived, and it was quickly realised that no surplus of old crop was being carried over, so that the possibility of shortage for the Christmas trade became imminent. Prices were forced up for all dried fruits (Greek currants, California soda-bleached sultanans, and Valencia raisins being extensively dealt in), and quotations continued to advance by leaps and bounds. Unfortunately, too late to avert disaster, it was found that a large proportion of the Smyrna crop had escaped damage by the fire, and as soon as it became known that shipments would be resumed in November values commenced to decline rapidly, the fall at the close of the year having assumed staggering proportions.

Currants, in sympathy with sultanans, were actively dealt in, and all old fruit being cleared values rose from 50s. to 84s. per cwt., the highest point reached. New fruit opened on arrival at 65s., and steadily appreciated in value, Pyrgos fetching 75s., Vostizza 102s. 6d. At one period the weakness of the Greek exchange forced prices down, and sellers were soliciting bids as low as 50s. A distinctly better tone developed towards the end of the year, attributed in a great measure to the improvement in the Greek exchange and to the late purchases of country operators, who had delayed filling their requirements to the last moment. We finish 1922 with Pyrgos recorded at 56s., a welcome improvement, and there are signs that the New Year promises a renewal of the demand, as stocks are light, and buyers are also carrying very short supplies.

Valencia Raisins.—Torres y Bages brought the first of the new crop, and ½-boxes realised 90s., ¼-boxes 95s. to 115s. Prices kept steady for a few weeks, but eventually were affected by the decline in other fruits, values falling sharply until 45s. for ½-boxes and 50s. to 55s. for ¼-boxes was reached.

Cape raisins participated in high prices at the opening of the season, and sold readily at 55s. to 70s., but owing to the heavy shipments attracted by these results, and in sympathy with the fall in Valencias, prices tumbled rapidly, and even at reduced rates the sale was most disappointing, considering the good value they showed compared with Valencias. Final quotations are:—Grade 1, 26s. to 28s.; grade 2, 25s.; grade 3, 20s.

Sultanans.—Prior to the arrival of the Esneh with the first of the new fruit, news of the Smyrna disaster came to hand, and the market had become very excited. Business had already taken place on overland samples on the basis of 70s. to 75s. c.i.f., and upon arrival of the steamer several parcels changed hands at 82s. to 100s., but prices quickly jumped, until the extreme value of 180s. was paid. The information that further shipment per s.s. Egyptian was on the way caused prices to fall rapidly, and we close the year with the cargo of s.s. Pavia, arrived in December, selling at 72s. 6d. to 85s. for fair to good qualities, Carabournas 100s. to 120s. A very heavy business was transacted in Californian soda-bleached for October shipment; prices opened 59s. c.i.f., and steadily advanced at 78s. c.i.f. On spot, first arrivals realised 108s., quickly falling to 70s. Greeks move slowly, 90s. to 105s., up to 130s. for special dry coloury lots. Afghans are arriving in increasing quantities, but are quite neglected. Cape sultanans, in sympathy with high prices of Smyrnas, realised 95s. for good quality sun-dried variety, and up to 130s. for sulphured, but as values declined for the Smyrna variety they became most difficult to sell, and are now offering at 50s. to 60s. without attracting any attention.

Figs.—The small supply available ex Cavallo arrived in October, opened at the extreme price of Layers 190s. to 200s., Locoums 250s., but quickly declined, as the keeping quality left much to be desired, and sales were made as follows:—Layers, 125s.; Locoums, 150s. Bags Naturals opened 80s. to 90s., falling to 45s. A further small consignment came to hand in December, Layers selling at 80s., 90s. Bags Naturals at 33s. Very heavy business was done to arrive in Spanish, Malaga, and other varieties, with disastrous results to buyers, as upon arrival forced sales of considerable quantities of Lepe Figs were made at 20s.

CROP CONDITIONS IN IRAQ.

Exceptional Yield of Dates.

The following extracts are taken from the Agricultural Bulletin of Iraq for the month ended November 15:—

The weather has been slightly cooler than in the preceding month. Conditions have been favourable for ripening of the later varieties of dates. The continuance of warm weather has brought forward the cotton crop which previously was inclined to be backward. The year has been an exceptionally good one for dates, which have yielded heavily. Average crops of early rice have been harvested, and good crops of late rice are anticipated. Small patches of rice in the Diyala area have been severely attacked by a fungoid disease identified as "Pericularia Oryzae."

There has been a continuous supply of summer vegetables, and early winter vegetables are now appearing on the market. In the Mosul area the tobacco crop is reported to have been well above the average both in regard to quantity and quality.

As previously indicated the cotton crop has come on well in the last month, and the majority of cultivators appear to be well pleased with the monetary return from cotton growing. A significant fact is that even those who have not done well this year state their intention of cultivating cotton again next season. A certain amount of alarm was occasioned by the appearance of a small pink worm, which appeared in the cotton on the Kut Testing Station. In appearance it was identical with the pink boll worm of Egypt, but shorter. Its habits, however, indicated that it might be something else. Specimens were sent by air mail to the Egyptian Ministry of Agriculture for identification. Within a week a reply was received by cable stating that the specimens sent were not pink boll worm. In connection with this our indebtedness to the Egyptian Ministry of Agriculture is expressed for the prompt and willing assistance rendered.

Condition of Stock.

All classes of animals appear to be in good condition. The director of Civil Veterinary Department reports outbreak of Rinderpest (Abu Hadlan) in the Baghdad Liwa. Outbreak report of the disease at Hajra and its vicinity was received from the Qaimmaqam, Samarra. The veterinary officer who visited the area found the disease had subsided. No inoculations were performed. The sick animals, however, were treated medicinally, and sufficient medicines were provided to continue treatment. This outbreak was recrudescence of the disease that occurred in August last, and it would have been to their interests if the stockowners had had their remaining cattle re-inoculated. They opposed re-inoculation saying that they consider that the previous single inoculation in August should confer perpetual immunity on their herds. The fallacy was explained, but not accepted. In course of time they will no doubt realise their mistakes. As to the number of the cattle that died no accurate information could be gathered, but there is hardly any doubt that the mortality would be at least 300.

An outbreak was reported from Balad-Ruz. 205 head of cattle were protected with anti-Rinderpest serum. Five deaths took place before veterinary aid could be rendered. An outbreak report of contagious pleuro-pneumonia (Abu-Fashsha) disease among sheep and goats was received from the Commandant, Kut Camp. It was attended by the Civil Veterinary Officer, Kut, and the sick ones were treated, and precautionary measures were taken to check the spread of the disease. Twenty-one animals died before veterinary aid could be rendered.

Agricultural Experimental Station, Rustum.

Exotic varieties of lucerne and grasses have been harvested, and the seed re-sown with a view to propagation and further study. Of the "Flint" and "Dent" varieties of maize which are being grown, both are suffering from insect attack. The latter variety appears to withstand the attack better than the former. For this reason it has been given out in small quantities to prominent cultivators, who have had an opportunity of trying it for themselves. Its superiority to local maize has impressed them, and already there have been demands for further supplies of seed.

Flax date-of-sowing tests have been commenced. From experience already gained the best quality of flax which has been grown so far has been from sowings made at Ba'quba in February. Samples of this straw which were sent to the United Kingdom have been described as equal to good English flax. Yields from the varietal tests of cotton have in all cases exceeded 1,200 lb., four have exceeded 1,400 lb., and two have exceeded 1,500 lb. per acre. Picking of bulk cotton crop on the estate has been continuous. Difficulty may be experienced in getting it all in unless the dry weather continues.

Miscellaneous.

Much interest is being shown among landowners and others in Basrah in the work of the Creek Dredger, which has been erected by the Port Authorities. It is understood that estimates of working costs are in course of preparation.

There is a demand for the Punjab wheat No. 11, which was grown by the Department of Agriculture this year. Owing to the late arrival of the threshing machine it has not been possible to issue this to cultivators in as clean a condition as could be desired. Endeavours to grade the wheat into two sizes have been successful, but the rate at which it can be done is economically too slow.

Barley export continues brisk, but export of wheat is temporarily at a standstill owing to fall in prices at home. In certain quarters it is feared that the slump in prices of wheat and barley will have an adverse effect on the area to be cultivated in the coming season. It is questionable if the export price has any such effect. It would seem rather that the area sown is affected by sufficient and seasonable rainfall except for that irrigated by pumps.

ENQUIRY BUREAU.

Merchants, etc., may insert a paragraph in the following column free of charge. Letters in reply should be addressed to "The Enquiry Bureau, 'The Near East,' 1, Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2." It must be understood that "The Near East" accepts no responsibility in connection with such replies.

129.—Principal of old-established textile manufacturing and import firm in Aleppo (Syria), now in Switzerland, wishes to get in touch with cotton and woollen yarn manufacturers or exporters in Lancashire and Yorkshire.

130.—Import and export merchants in Beirut (Syria) in a position to export dried carobs in any desired quantity wish to be connected with interested British firms.

131.—A Yugoslav firm is in a position to deliver white asbestos up to any quantity, and invites inquiries.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

NEW ELLERMAN CITY LINER.

The launch has taken place at Wallsend-on-Tyne of the single-screw passenger and cargo steamer City of Canterbury, which is being built for the City Line of Ellerman Lines, Ltd., by Messrs. Swan, Hunter, & Wigham Richardson, Ltd. The vessel is designed to carry nearly 10,000 tons d.w. on a draught of 27.10 ft., and her dimensions are:—Length, between perpendiculars, 448 ft.; width, 56.4 ft.; moulded depth, 34.1 ft. The engines, which are of the inverted direct-acting quadruple expansion type working on four cranks, balanced on the Yarrow, Schlick, and Tweedy system, and also the boilers, of which there are four, are being built by the Wallsend Slipway and Engineering Co., Ltd., Wallsend-on-Tyne.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Vindelia for Bombay (Liverpool, January 16).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mahanada for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 18); s.s. Anchoria for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 20); s.s. Mandasor for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 3).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Herefordshire for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, January 13); s.s. Leicestershire for Marseilles, Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, January 17).

British India Line.—S.s. Pruth for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 13); s.s. Malda for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 19); s.s. Domala for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 26); s.s. Nevasa for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 2); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Pavia for Genoa, Leghorn, Naples, Palermo, Messina, and Catania (Liverpool, January 18).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Cressado for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, January 20).

Ellerman, Bucknall, and Strick Line.—S.s. Kormark for Persian Gulf (London, January 20).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of London for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 22); s.s. City of Exeter (Birkenhead, February 5).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Guido for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, January 17); s.s. Venetian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 7).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Aviemore for all ports, including Syra, Smyrna, and Constantinople (Liverpool, January 13); s.s. Peruvian, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (the first steamer of the season for Galatz and Braila) (Liverpool, February 10).

Papayanni Line.—S.s. Cavallo for Alexandria (Liverpool, January 24); s.s. Gerano for Malta, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 3).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Khyber for Bombay (London, January 12); s.s. Padua for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 26); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, January 26); s.s. Devanha for Bombay (London, February 2); s.s. Nagoya for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 9).

The White Star Line has opened an office at 9, Rue Miligui, Cairo.

The Cunard s.s. Samaria sails from New York on January 24 on a world's tour in the course of which twenty-six ports will be visited.

Czecho-Slovakia's exports in November amounted to 708,192 tons, as compared with 574,775 tons in the previous month, fuel accounting for 464,146 tons, fruit and vegetables for 50,334 tons, and sugar for 45,912 tons. For the eleven months ended November the exports of fuel amounted to 6,558,233 tons, of minerals to 648,618 tons, and of sugar to 262,836 tons.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Tone Rather Weak.

The Commercial Company of Egypt, in their report for the week ended December 22, state:—Since our last report the futures market has fluctuated very little, but the undertone has been rather weak. There is very little news to report this week. The continued firmness of the American markets had a very small effect on our own, which remained depressed owing to the absence of fresh business with spinners and the consequent accumulation of stocks. The increase in the estimate of this year's production by about $\frac{3}{4}$ million kantars has made a considerable difference to the position; had the crop turned out in the neighbourhood of 5 million kantars, as it was originally expected, the present break would not have occurred, as it was caused by the persistent hedges against the heavy arrivals of cotton from the interior. We think that growers and merchants have hedged this season a far greater proportion of their cotton than in any previous year; this is, of course, a bullish factor in the situation. The difference between the prices of New York and Alexandria futures has lately narrowed considerably, and is now, for the near positions, only $7\frac{1}{2}$ dols. for Sakellaridis and $1\frac{1}{2}$ dols. for Ashmouni, in spite of the fact that many speculators have been buying Egyptian and selling American futures. Ashmouni contracts have been comparatively firmer, but dealings have been rather restricted. This week's reduced figures of arrivals are due to rain in the interior, which has compelled ginning factories to stop work. Exports are satisfactory; the total quantity shipped since September 1 is now 2,892,516 kantars, against 2,314,580 kantars same time last year.

Spot.—Minet-el-Bassal has been rather less active this week, and sales amount to about 14,100 bales, of which we estimate 9,400 bales Sakellaridis, 4,500 bales Uppers, 200 bales Brown, and a few bales of White. There is as yet no improvement in the demand from abroad, and such offers as are received are only executed with difficulty, as the stocks of cotton here are well held and not at all freely offered.

Sakellaridis.—All styles have changed hands, but such demand as there is centres mainly on the medium qualities. The prices of spot against contracts are rather dearer than last week and distinctly firmer.

Uppers.—All grades have been dealt in. Prices of spot against contracts are rather dearer than last week.

Brown.—A fair business has been done. Prices are firm and inclined to go dearer.

White is neglected and only a few bales have been done, at unchanged rates.

THE MANCHESTER MARKET.

Increased Inquiry for Cloth.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended January 6 states:—

The week's trading opened with a feeling of relief that the year 1922 had ended. It is generally admitted that it has been one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, the cotton trade has ever experienced. Confident hopes are expressed that 1923 will bring about the gradual dissipation of the very numerous difficulties which undoubtedly still exist, and there certainly appear to be more grounds for this belief. The mere efflux of time, of course, means the wearing out of cotton goods, which must inevitably be replaced sooner or later.

Yarn.—Quotations in the yarn market are virtually unchanged, but the tone of the market is felt to be slightly healthier, particularly as regards yarn spun from American cotton, in which there has been rather more business done than for some time past. It is admitted, however, that prices remain far from satisfactory to the spinner.

Cloth.—Increased inquiry is reported, but once again the differences between sellers' and buyers' ideas of price have ruled a large proportion of it out; nevertheless, the difference is said to be narrowing and the prospect of a larger business a little nearer. A modest business has been done for India. China remains very quiet, with possibly a little more doing. The demand for Egypt is steady, and, although by no means as large as could be desired, it is certainly the largest of any of the Near Eastern outlets. Home trade remains quiet pending the conclusion of stocktakings; in the meanwhile only small lots change hands in order to satisfy immediate requirements.

Raw Cotton.—Quotations at the close of the week were fairly steady, in spite of the unfavourable political developments from Paris. There is no special item of interest to report with regard to this section. Closing prices are as follows: American Fully Middling 15.11d., Egyptian Fully Good Fair 17.50d.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended January 3:—

The advent of the New Year has so far failed to arouse any fresh enthusiasm in this department, and business has been on very quiet lines up to date. The inquiry has remained on much the same lines as before, with perhaps a slight tendency towards the better grades in Sakellaridis. A good deal of interest has been displayed in Uppers, but the amount of actual business which has developed from this source has been disappointing. The principal event of importance during the period under review has been the Egyptian Government's increased crop estimate, which has now reached the figure of 4,900,000 kantars (approximately 700,000 bales). A very reliable private source gives us a figure of 5,750,000 kantars, to include last season's "carry-over" up country. This is equivalent to approximately 820,000 bales, and to this, of course, has to be added the stocks lying in various parts of the world on August 1 last if we are to arrive at the available supply of Egyptian cotton for the current season. Altogether, it would appear to be represented by a figure of well over one million bales. In view of these somewhat disconcerting figures, and lacking any moral support from the American side, the tendency here has been for prices to ease somewhat, but this easiness has not emanated from Alexandria, nor has it been reflected there. Indeed, prices in that quarter remain extraordinarily firm. The demand for low cotton has become very persistent again, and a considerable proportion of the daily sales are derived from this source; 6d. to 8d. seems to be the popular range for these qualities at the moment. Weekly deliveries to spinners remain steady at about the 6,500 mark, even with the intervention of the holidays. C.i.f. business has been done on conservative lines only, and so far spinners have displayed but little inclination to alter their tactics in favour of larger lines.

Manchester reports are promising. There has been a considerably enhanced inquiry, both from India and China, chiefly for cloth, and evidently some useful lines have been booked, although buyers are not eager to pay current rates. A healthy tone appears to exist, and one does not hear so often the blatant pessimism that, but a few months ago, was rife everywhere. There are bound to be alarms and excursions, and ups and downs, during the next few months, but we firmly believe that the forces now at work to achieve the social and economic peace of Europe (and elsewhere) are bound to succeed, and that the slow but gradual improvement in the cotton trade, already admitted, will achieve during the present year significant proportions. Total sales, 1,300 bales (includes 350 Sudan). Quotations of Sakellaridis are reduced 25 points. In Brown and Upper quotations of Good and above are reduced 20 points, whilst those of Fully Good Fair and below are 15 points lower. Fully Good Fair Sakellaridis to-day, 17.65d.

The prohibition of the export of coal by sea from British India has been cancelled as from January 1 last.

The British Trade Corporation has opened a branch at Zagreb (Agram), Yugoslavia. A branch has been in existence for some years at Belgrade.

THE ADRIATIC BANK

(Jadranska Banka).

Head Office - - - BELGRADE, JUGOSLAVIA.

Cable Address: "Jadranska."

Capital - - - Dinars 60,000,000

Surplus - - - " 30,000,000

BRANCHES:

Beograd, Bled, Cavtat, Celje, Dubrovnik, Ercegnovi, Jelsa, Jesenice, Korcula, Kotor, Kranj, Ljubljana, Maribor, Metkovic, Prevalje, Sarajevo, Split, Sibenik, Trzic and Zagreb.

Foreign Department.

Affiliated Banks:

BANCO YUGOSLAVO DE CHILE: Valparaiso, Antofagasta, Punta Arenas, Porvenir and Puerto Natales, Chile.

BANCA ADRIATICA: Abbazia, Trieste and Zara.

ADRIATISCHE BANK, Vienna.

FRANK SAKSER STATE BANK, New York City.

Banking business of every description transacted at all Branches, Affiliated Banks and through Correspondents. Bills collected and negotiated. Letters of Credit and Drafts issued. Commercial Credits established at all Branches and Agencies of the Bank in Yugoslavia and abroad.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Beyrout, November 30.

The market has been very quiet during the month. The commercial centre generally has shown great satisfaction at the ready disposal of merchandise, particularly that of Italian, French, or Belgian origin. The presence of foreign traders here and the important purchases made by them are due principally to the rise in the Turkish pound compared with Syrian money. A great number of our merchants have ceased altogether or have greatly reduced their wholesale transactions, and have increased their prices by 10 to 15 per cent. retail. This increase affects all articles. On the other hand, the rise in the French exchange during the second half of the month has decreased the wholesale demand; it has not influenced the retail position at all, however.

Zahle.

The report for November states:—The market was quiet during the first half of the month; then it showed a certain activity due to the provisioning of the population for winter. The prices of cereals have risen sharply in view of the demand. Douchani wheat is sold at P.S. 12 per rotol (2½ kg.), Kaurani wheat stands at P.S. 10½-11, while Békaai wheat realises P.S. 8. Békaai barley is quoted at P.S. 7½ per rotol, and Hamaoui at P.S. 7. Maize stands at P.S. 5½-6. The stock here is almost exhausted, as well as that of peas and lentils. Efforts continue to be made to encourage the manufacture of Lebanon cigarettes.

The rain, which is late, fell in abundance during the first ten days of the month. The seed commenced to spring up at the end of the month. The area of the land cultivated this year in the plain of Békaa and on the plateau of Baalbek is about equal to that of the previous year.

Tripoli, December 5.

The heavy and continuous rain that has fallen during the past month has delayed the sowing of cereals, and a great part of the olive trees have been damaged.

The principal products of the country are oranges, lemons, onions, cocoons, and cereals. The oranges and lemons are sent chiefly to Smyrna and Constantinople. There have been recently some shipments for Liverpool. The cereals and onions are consumed in the country. The cocoons are intended for France and Italy.

The chief industry of the country consists of the manufacture of soap, which is partly consumed in Syria. Mesopotamia and Anatolia are for the time being the only outlets for this commodity. The silk mills were damaged to a great extent during the war. At the present time only six are working normally in this region. The production is exported to Italy and France. A small part is absorbed by the weavers of Damas and Homs.

The prices at present ruling here in Syrian piastres per 100 kilos. are:—Sugar 880, coffee 3,000, rice 1,030, Australian flour 635, native wheat 390, barley 270, soap 2,140, butter 7,265.

The quantity of gold extracted from the mines in India during September last amounted to 35,078 ozs., valued at Rs. 22,76,179.

An additional duty of 2 piastres per kantar is now levied on all carobs exported from Cyprus, the proceeds of this duty being paid into the rat destruction fund.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.

A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
J. UNGAR
E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
HAMID BEY.
NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
E. W. H. BARRY.
THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
C.M.G.
THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
O.B.E.
SIR W. GUY GRANET.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
K.B.E., C.I.F., M.P.
LORD HILLINGDON.
GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
K.P., P.C.
LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
JEAN BOISSONNAS.
CHARLES DE CERJAT.
HORACE FINALY.
GEORGES HEINE.
ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
RAOUL MALLET.
LE COMTE FREDERIC
PILLET-WILL.
FELIX VERNES.

London Office: 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
7, Rue Meyerbeer.

MARSEILLES:
41-43, Rue Grignan

CONSTANTINOPLE.
(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

COMPANY MEETING.

ASSOCIATED COTTON GINNERS OF EGYPT.

The following is the report of the directors, with statement of accounts as at August 31, 1922, submitted to the shareholders at the seventeenth ordinary general meeting, held at Alexandria on December 28:—

We have pleasure in placing before the shareholders, for their approval, our seventeenth annual report, together with the audited accounts, to August 31, 1922. The quantity of cotton ginned in our factories during the year 1921-22 was 605,442.60 kantars, against 645,260.75 kantars in 1920-21. During the season ending August 31, 1922, we did not steam press. The following are the results to August 31, 1922:—

Factories profits	£E.	53,710
Less: Sundry repairs and renewals in the factories	2,814
		50,896
Add: Interest earned	4,790
		55,686
Less: Expenses and management at head office	£E.	4,389
Insurance premiums	4,991
Sundry expenses	2,472
Commissions	54
		11,906
		43,780
Less: Depreciation on buildings and machinery	6,801
Depreciation on stores	1,331
Special reserve for contingencies	1,800
Reserve for bad debts	526
		10,458
		33,322
Less: Statutory reserve, 10 per cent.	3,332
Dividend, as per Statutes, 6 per cent. to the shareholders	21,060
		24,392
		8,930
Less: 10 per cent. to the board	893
		8,037
		47,627
We have therefore to deal with the following amounts:—
Statutory dividend of 6 per cent.	21,060
Above-mentioned balance of	8,037
Amount brought forward from last year.....	18,530
		47,627
of which your board propose to distribute as dividend to the shareholders 1s. 9d. per share, making	30,713
and to carry forward	16,914

You will notice that the insurance item was this season in excess of last season by £E.2,717, owing to the fact that we thought advisable to insure our property, factories, and buildings against the risk of riots and civil commotions and increase the insured value on all our buildings. During this season we have sold at favourable prices two plots of land at Mansourah, which were of no great utility to the company. In order to meet the requirements of the clients of our ex. Démétriadis factory we acquired 10½ kirats of land, close to this factory, to enlarge the yard. As the Mehalla cotton district is becoming yearly more and more important, we decided to demolish the old ex. Carver factory and to rebuild it according to the latest ideas in order to cope, in a satisfactory manner, with the clients' exigencies in that centre. We also constructed in several factories "Tadribas," to enable the preparation of cotton previous to ginning, an operation which answers the present wishes of the clients ginning in our factories. Mr. T. S. Richmond retires from office by rotation and is eligible for re-election. You are now asked to approve and adopt the report and balance-sheet for the year ending August 31, 1922, as presented. You have also to appoint auditors for the ensuing year and to fix their remuneration. Messrs. Russell and Co. offer themselves for re-election.

The market for boots and shoes in India is steadily increasing.

The production of the sugar factories in Yugoslavia in 1921 is estimated at 22,500 metric tons.

It is estimated that last year's crop of almonds in Greece amounted to 8,883,000 lbs., or more than double the production of the previous year.

NEW COMPANIES.

Anglo-Ottoman Petroleum.

The Anglo-Ottoman Petroleum Syndicate, Ltd., has been registered as a public company, with a nominal capital of £1,000 in 1s. shares. The objects are to acquire oil, petroleum, and mineral-bearing lands in the Turkish Dominions and elsewhere, etc. Messrs. J. W. Creasser and S. C. Rogers (respective secretaries of the Oilfields Finance Corporation, Ltd., and Baku Consolidated Oilfields, Ltd.) are two of the signatories to the memorandum. The first directors are:—Mr. R. R. Tweed, 13, Third Avenue, Hove, petroleum technologist; Mr. A. G. Parker, 12, Mount Park Crescent, Baling, W.5, petroleum technologist; Sir William W. Rutherford, M.P., 28, Brunswick Square, Brighton (director of petroleum companies); Major R. W. Barnett, M.P., Park Lodge, Park Village West, N.W.1 (director of petroleum companies). The registered office is at 48, Cannon Street, E.C.4.

Economic Development of Turkey.

The Corporation for the Economic Development of Turkey, Ltd., has been registered with a nominal capital of £250,000 in £1 shares. The objects are to search for and deal in minerals, oil and products, etc. The subscribers (each with one share) are:—Mr. Leslie Urquhart, Pinners Hall, Austin Friars, E.C.; Rustem F. Nedjib, Hotel Cecil, W.C.; Mr. Robert G. Brown, Pinners Hall, Austin Friars, E.C.; Mr. Deane P. Mitchell, Pinners Hall, Austin Friars, E.C.; Mr. John P. B. Webster, Pinners Hall, Austin Friars, E.C.; Mr. H. J. Fisher, 9, Great St. Helens, E.C.; Mr. Herbert Gibson, 9, Great St. Helens, E.C. The first directors (to number not less than three nor more than twelve) are:—Rustem F. Nedjib Bey, Hussein Fuad Bey, Constantinople; Nedjib Zihni Bey, Smyrna; and Nedjib Niaz Bey, Constantinople. The registered office is at Pinners Hall, Austin Friars, E.C.

Strick Line (1923).

Strick Line (1923), Ltd., has been registered as a private company with a nominal capital of £250,000, in £1 shares (125,000 6 per cent. cumulative preference and 125,000 ordinary), to acquire the steamships Avristan and Registan; to adopt an agreement with Frank C. Strick and Co., Ltd., and Gray Dawes and Co., and to carry on the business of shipowners, etc. The subscribers (each with one ordinary share) are:—D. N. Black, C.A.; T. J. Downes, clerk (both 122, Leadenhall Street, E.C.). The first-directors, to number not more than seven, are to be appointed by the subscribers.

Trade with the Ukraine.

The British Association of Ukraine Trade, Ltd., has been registered as a company limited by guarantee. The objects are to promote and protect commercial intercourse between the United Kingdom and the Sovereign Republic of the Ukraine in all branches of trade, banking, insurance, manufacture, agriculture, transport, shipping, mining and other mercantile businesses, etc. The number of members is 150 and each undertakes to contribute not more than £5 in the event of winding-up. The management is vested in a council, the first members of which are: Mr. J. Spence, Moran, Kenley, Surrey (managing director, Debenham's); Mr. R. M. Bewick, Lyntoncroft, Caterham (director, United Alkali Company); Mr. J. Maitland, Blythwood, Enfield (chairman, Ridgway's); Mr. J. T. Steele, 87, Victoria Street, S.W. (director, Spicer's); Mr. G. A. Watson, The Haven, Hoylake, Ches. (chairman, Ship Canal Portland Cement Manufacturers); Sir Rowland F. W. Hodge, Bart., Chipstead Place, Sevenoaks (chairman, Eltringham's); Mr. N. G. Gwynne, 16, Collingham Gardens, S.W. (managing director, Gwynne's Engineering Company); Mr. H. E. Williams, 27, Chatsworth Road, S.E.17 (manager, Wm. Walker and Sons, Bolton); Mr. E. C. Snow, Thornhill, Kenley, Surrey (secretary, Export Corporation of British Leather Manufacturers); Mr. P. Hutchinson, Cranford, Oxhey Wood, Northwood (manager, Thos. and Wm. Smith); Mr. G. W. N. Nicholls, Allerton Road, Southport, Lancs. (director, Edward Wood and Co.). The registered office is at Woburn Lodge, Upper Woburn Place, W.C.

A trade convention between Portugal and Czecho-Slovakia was signed at Lisbon last month.

The head office of Messrs. United Brassfounders and Engineers, Ltd., has been changed from Manchester to Ormskirk.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

Digitized by Google

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 610—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	51	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		A Balkan Need	62	Notes and News	65
Egypt	55	THE WEEK AT HOME	53	Commerce and Industry	66
Bulgaria	56	CORRESPONDENCE	58	Shipping Intelligence	67
Irak	57	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	59	Commercial Correspondence	68
Persia	57	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	60	Near East Markets	69
SPECIAL ARTICLES—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	61	Stock and Share Markets	71
The Late King Constantine	52			Company Meetings	73
Indian Students in England	63			Cotton and Cotton Goods	74

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Lausanne Conference.

A detailed analysis of the week's proceedings at the Lausanne Conference would resemble a meteorological report for the British Isles, running through the whole gamut of variations from "stormy" to "very dry" inclusive. Before long a draft Treaty will be presented by the Allies to the Turks, but whether peace will be signed immediately would seem to depend mainly on the Turkish attitude on the subject of Capitulations, or, rather, of the guarantees that are to take their place. The question of Mosul is to be left for separate settlement between Great Britain and Turkey. A compromise has been effected over the Orthodox Œcumenical Patriarchate, to the retention of which in Constantinople the Turks have agreed, on condition that the Patriarch is shorn of his temporal powers. For the rest, the Allies have waived a number of points, some at least of which would seem to have more practical importance than the sentimental interest attaching to the Patriarchate. Among these may be mentioned the creation of national homes for Armenians and Assyro-Chaldeans, the exemption of Christians from military service, and the return of Bulgarians to Thrace.

Angora Tactics.

In the meantime the Angora Government is talking openly of peace and calling up 50,000 men for military service in Anatolia, apart from any surreptitious enrolment in Thrace. The return of Hassan Bey from Angora to Lausanne with instructions that seem to amount to a free hand for the delegates suggests that Mustapha Kemal Pasha at least is satisfied with the concessions already secured by Turkey, and would be content with a Treaty embodying them. This will not mean that the delegates will prove more accommodating in regard to points that have yet to be settled—they have since proved more perverse than ever on the Financial Sub-Commission—but it is safe to expect that Allied patience and good temper will win through in the end. If it be correct that Mustapha Kemal Pasha, on his approaching tour in Asia Minor, is to combine military inspections with the organisation of a political party with a view to elections, ending up with the inauguration of an "economic congress" at Smyrna, this is the first evidence of New Turkey attempting to settle down to business. The sooner the people of Angora and their leaders are brought into touch with realities the better. If the Allies in their subsequent dealings with the Turks can adopt the good-humoured tolerance that has characterised the proceedings at Lausanne in the face of ignorance, bad manners, and exasperating methods, the course of future events will undoubtedly run more smoothly than seems likely to-day.

Hungary and the Little Entente.

Trouble would seem to be brewing on the frontier between Hungary and Roumania. The Budapest Government protests the innocence of its intentions; but there can be little doubt that there has been too much irregular warfare of the platform and press variety indulged in by patriotic and indignant Magyars. From the Hungarian point of view provocation of this kind is the height of un wisdom, as it merely justifies the Little Entente in keeping, metaphorically speaking, its guns trained on Hungary. On the other hand, experience suggests that it takes two to make a quarrel, even on a frontier, and there are ugly suggestions abroad that some of Hungary's neighbours have been encouraged by France's action in the Ruhr territory to ask themselves whether the policy is not one to adopt with advantage in the case of Hungarian reparations. In these circumstances, as the Magyars would have no chance against such a powerful combination as the Little Entente, they will act wisely in avoiding provocative words, as well as provocative acts.

Troubled Waters.

It is difficult to believe that Roumania is anxious to stir up trouble on any frontier at the present time. We may leave it to Belgrade publicists and correspondents to draw pen pictures of Soviet armies taking Bessarabia and Roumania in their stride and passing on to attack the British on the shores of the Ægean with Bulgarian help. But there can be little doubt that the prospect of the Roumanians finding themselves embroiled with Hungary, either on their own account or on behalf of the Little Entente, would be a strong temptation to the Russians to test the strength of the Bessarabian settlement. It is, therefore, to their interest to influence their partners in the Entente towards a peaceful solution, if possible, of their difficulties with Hungary. The work of reconstruction in Roumania is proving more arduous than was anticipated, and the enlarged kingdom is not settling down as was hoped. An easy war, of which the success was assured beforehand, might be popular, and might distract attention from domestic affairs; but no Government ought to contemplate such a step in view of the present position of Roumania's currency, except under very real provocation.

The Death of Ex-King Constantine.

The refusal of the Athens Government to allow the remains of ex-King Constantine to be buried in Greece, on the family estate at Tatoi, will be regarded as confirmation of the reports of the unstable condition of things in the country. A political vendetta, it would be thought, would not be pursued into the death chamber; but the Revolutionary Committee must be very uncertain of its ground if it fears an exhibition of the nation's homage to the dead monarch. Its attitude, we cannot help thinking, is a tactical mistake. The late King, if he had lived, might, even against his own will, have proved a rallying point for the dissatisfaction with the new régime; now that he is dead the danger is removed. By allowing the nation to pay its tribute to one who was undoubtedly for a considerable period of his life the national hero, the Revolutionary Committee might have cleared the ground for a general acceptance of the new order, to the lasting benefit of Greece. By pushing vindictiveness to the utmost point it is to be feared that the Committee has encouraged another swing of the political pendulum.

Great Britain and Palestine.

It was inevitable that the Palestine Arab Delegation should wish to test at first hand the attitude of the new British Government towards the question of Palestine. Last week the Delegates submitted their views to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and were informed that the subject was being considered by His Majesty's Government without bias. The Duke of Devonshire added, however, that he could hold out no hope that there would be any departure from the policy of the late Government as set out in the White Paper of June, 1922. No other answer could, with propriety, have been given. It is admitted that most regrettable mistakes have been made in connection with Palestine, and not least of all in the liberty accorded to the Zionist Organisation to read more into the Balfour Declaration than it really contains, and probably was ever meant to contain. The door by which that mistake entered is now being closed quietly and becomingly, not with a yellow Press bang. So far as the Arabs are concerned, it cannot be denied that there was a gross contradiction between the promises made to them and the Zionist interpretation of the Balfour Declaration. On the other hand, they would find it difficult to show that those promises entitled them to play the dog-in-the-manger in the Holy Land. Mr. Lloyd George's Government, it would appear, knew its Arabs as little as its Zionists, and, having made mistakes, had to retrieve the position in the way that promised the maximum good for Palestine in the future. It drafted a programme on paper last June, which promises to achieve the object sought; but time must be given to see how the programme works.

THE LATE KING CONSTANTINE.

Seized suddenly with cerebral hæmorrhage on the morning of January 11, ex-King Constantine of Greece died a few hours later, at the Villa Igea, Palermo, where he had been living quietly since his abdication.

In the death of ex-King Constantine there passes a man who for the joint measure of love and hatred meted out to him in his lifetime was conspicuous above his fellows. The love came from his own subjects, the hatred from foreigners; he died an exile from his country, but simply as he had lived, with his family round him, and although his lot had at times been particularly hard, his cheerfulness and kindness of heart never forsook him; he knew and showed by his manner and bearing that in his case the good things of life outweighed the bad. It was Constantine's misfortune to be the victim of hasty popular judgments. The first great event with which his name is associated was the Greco-Turkish War of 1897, when at the age of twenty-eight he took command of the Greek Army in Thessaly. The blame for the disaster to Greek arms fell upon him, and years passed before he was fully exonerated for a condition of things for which he was not responsible. Again, in 1909, when the Military League tried to rescue the country from the effects of its politicians' mistakes, the Crown Prince Constantine and his brothers were made the scapegoats of Greece's military plight. Recalled from his voluntary exile the next year to be Inspector-General of the Army, the Prince devoted himself wholeheartedly and with marked success to the reorganisation of the Greek army. His victories in the Balkan Wars of 1912 and 1913 made him a national hero, and in March, 1913, he ascended the throne on the assassination of his father, King George I., with a hold on popular imagination in his country that no other ruler of recent times has enjoyed. This hold was further strengthened when, with his life already despaired of by his physicians, King Constantine made a wonderful recovery from a grave illness after a sacred Ikon, to which miraculous powers were attributed, had, in response to popular clamour, been brought to his bedside.

Such, then, in the estimation of his people was the Greek Sovereign who, at the time of the Great War, incurred the enmity and hatred of the Allied Governments. It is not possible here to traverse the whole of the ground covered by the controversy that has raged round the person of King Constantine. The facile condemnation of the great bulk of the British and French Press is not likely to be endorsed by history, which will require far more substantial evidence, and will bring a more critical spirit to bear on the subject than sufficed while war passions were at their height or had not altogether been eliminated. A more sober verdict, it may well be found, will pronounce King Constantine's attitude during the War as being prompted by genuine devotion to Greece's interests and an honourable desire to do the right thing by his country. There was no reason why he should have taken sides at the beginning of the struggle. His refusal of the German Emperor's invitation to join the Central Powers was followed almost immediately by an offer, on conditions, to place the Greek Army on the side of the Allies. The conditions that he imposed were both legitimate and prudent, although the Allies found it inconvenient or impossible to grant them. It was King Constantine's misfortune, not his fault, that a Greek Prime Minister was in power who had no use for caution or conditions. To gain his own way, the latter labelled King Constantine pro-German, and accused him of hedging himself behind the Divine right of kings. The sinister reputation that pursued Constantine to the grave rested on no other evidence; but it is now known that allegations from the same source had in more than one instance to seek support in forged documents. [Forged documents, subsequently exposed by the Inter-Allied Commission, were also produced at the Paris Conference in support of the Greek proposals.]

Whatever the verdict of foreign Governments and countries, it found no echo among the Greek people. The national grief at the King's deposition by the Allies was sincere, as was the rejoicing at his restoration. Of more recent times it is less easy to speak with certainty. The confidence in the King was shown by the way in which a war-weary nation responded to Constantine's appeal to the army to finish the task that he had inherited in Asia Minor, but to which he was opposed from the outset. The campaign failed to achieve the desired result. Greece was caught in the toils of a rash scheme, and, owing to the attitude of the Allies, could find no way of extricating herself. When the inevitable end came, the disaster found the nation too stupefied to assert itself. Once more Constantine was made the scapegoat, and this time the people acquiesced in his abdication in the belief that by this way only lay reconciliation with the Allies and peace for distracted Greece.

King Constantine has not survived his exile many months. He refused in the interests of his country to challenge the military pronouncement that deposed him, and it is difficult not to regard him as felix opportunitate mortis. Had he lived, he must necessarily have proved an incentive to militant loyalism, and Greece might well have been exposed to a long period of domestic unrest. Her future is still clouded, but dynastic affairs need not complicate the political settlement.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

England and the Ruhr.

France has gone to the Ruhr; and the heavens (in other words, the French and Belgian francs) have not yet fallen. England is watching her movements there with intense interest and wondering sympathy—in fact, I have been almost surprised during the last week at the amount of well-wishing to the French in their venture. One had come rather to think that that section of the Press which Mr. Lloyd George has been (and is still) able to influence, and that school of economics in which Mr. J. M. Keynes shines most brightly, had shaped the opinions of the public more than is now seen to be the case. Among Englishmen there is not that sentimental detestation of force which pacifists love to assert has been bred of the War, and if, when first the French went to the Ruhr, there was a natural inclination to support the views of the British Government, it has since changed into a vast—ignorant, if you will—and genuine sympathy. Of course, I am not here speaking of the views of some so-called "British" industrialists, who, it is said, stand to profit much by a complete collapse of Germany's trade; I am talking chiefly, and so far as I can judge, of the men and women who took part in the War.

I do not wish to suggest that our Government has lost popularity in this matter of Reparations, though I am convinced that those papers and persons that back its point of view for the purpose of demonstrating that M. Poincaré is an immortal madman are, except for a certain type of intellectual and an uncertain type of business man, out of touch with public opinion. You cannot now alarm people here with horrid talk of tanks, aeroplanes, and so on; they have, rightly or wrongly, made up their mind that Germany will not pay unless she is made to pay, and France has gone to the Ruhr with, I believe, the more significant part of British opinion behind her.

Looking Inwards.

But, apart from this Ruhr question, in relation to which, happily, there is no intention to withdraw British troops from the Rhine, there is at the moment a tendency to cut ourselves free from foreign entanglements and to concentrate upon the Empire, particularly upon the English-speaking part of it. This tendency, the natural outcome of the fatigue engendered by the War, is being exploited by many politicians, who plump for isolation, crying that the words of the Poincarés and Mussolinis may waste themselves on the Channel waters for all that we care. Of this we have seen many traces in the last week. Yet this desire to ignore the opinion of the Continent is, I think, but a temporary indulgence; it will pass, and we shall have other leaders who will make England's weight in the counsels of Europe considerable on moral grounds alone.

For it is the older generation mainly that is thus looking inwards. The new generation, born of the War, is at this time without leaders; it is looking everywhere and nowhere in particular, and, rudderless, it tosses round, in an apparently shoreless sea. But when a skipper is found (as in Italy they have found Mussolini), its vision will once more embrace the world. It will not shrink from commitments because they are difficult, from voyaging because it is far; one can easily see, indeed, that a British Fascisti movement might lead and guide the world. But until such a movement does arise—the day will not perhaps seem so distant to those who know anything of the work of the National Federation—we may expect an increasing disinclination by those who shape this country's destinies to participate in any ventures but those which increase our material wealth. Spiritual values are now, it is true, at a discount, because spiritual standards are lacking, but we shall probably never again take the pride that our forefathers took in material possessions. The Englishman will always have a reserve of energy to be used in the service of lands other than his own, and to suppose that we can, either

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

LONDON: Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
CALCUTTA: 1 & 2, Old Court House Corner, H.L. Bell, Gen. Man.
CAIRO: 48, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Loc. Director.
ALEXANDRIA: Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
CYPRUS: Najem Houry & Sons.
JERUSALEM,
JOPPA, HAIFA, } Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.
KHARTOUM,

with dignity or with success, go back to a pre-Norman isolation, is absurd.

Broadcasting.

To one so ignorant of scientific things as myself the highest inventions scarcely cause even marvelling, but I must admit that my crass indifference was stirred recently when I heard "The Magic Flute" twenty miles away from Covent Garden, where it was being performed. How this broadcasting by wireless was done I do not begin to understand, but I can testify to the wonderful results achieved. You could literally hear such things as the turning from one side of the stage to another of the singers, or the nervousness of the Queen of the Night as she began her famous aria; though in the quieter orchestral parts it was difficult to be quite certain that you heard all, for here imagination and knowledge could come strongly to the rescue.

But what strange sights will this broadcasting reveal! Soon enough, one may think, musical critics can be dispensed with; it will either lighten their job or destroy it altogether. No alarming prospect that, perhaps. Again, it will bring culture to the most suburban of homes, though whether culture will not be sent reeling back may well be doubted. On the night that I heard Mozart there was also a lady present, listening to him with her ears; her eyes roved spasmodically over some darning or crocheting design, the while her hands played obediently with knitting needles. Where her mind was I leave to psycho-analysts to discover!

While on the subject of these incredible things I may mention that I was told a day or two ago that the obtaining of fuel from the air was within realisable distance. Apparently British scientists have been working on the methods by which German scientists during the War circumvented the difficulty of the absence of nitrates (of which our blockade deprived them), and are now hoping that such troublesome things as coal and oil will soon be out of date. One cannot guess what will take the place of the Mosuls and the Essens of the modern time!

The Olympic Games.

The recent decision of Great Britain to participate in the Olympic Games of 1924 in Paris has much interest, both topical and general. It shows not only recognition by representatives of British sport of the fact that Great Britain ought, for the sake of everybody concerned, to compete in international sport, but also the desire to forget certain past incidents which have rankled in the minds of sportsmen in this country. There is no need to rake up these matters; we can leave the story where Sir Theodore Cook left it—"certain parts of the rest of the world, having tried both good and bad sport, had come to the conclusion that good sport was the best policy, so nothing more need be said." And Mr. P. J. Baker, whose enthusiastic support of the League of Nations need not be supposed to have warped his judgment, said that the standard of sportsmanship in every country in Europe was now much the same. It is at any rate obvious that there is no surer way of guaranteeing a universal standard of sportsmanship in Europe than by Great Britain's participation in the Games. Whether we win or lose will depend upon the extent of our specialisation, but the great point is to make a worthy entry.

There is no doubt that unchecked specialisation tends towards professionalism, and that without very severe training amateurs cannot hope to compete successfully with professionals. It was delightful, therefore, to notice that in the F.A. Cup on Saturday the Corinthians, whose type of Soccer is a model to the whole country, were able to draw with a strong professional side, Brighton. This is the first time for many years that the Corinthians have entered for the Cup, and the fact is of as much national importance in sport as is the entry of Great Britain in the Games of international importance.

The Rent Strikes.

We are having an amusing reversal of political principles in the rent strikes that are now being waged, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and his Labour followers coming out on the side of law, if not of order, and his opponents wishing to alter the law. Last year the House of Lords established that landlords could not collect the increases of rent specified in the Act of 1920 unless they previously gave their tenants notice to quit. Now, many landlords had not given such notice, and were thus automatically in debt to their tenants; and in Scotland, and also, of course later, in England, the worthy tenants have been collecting the money owing to them by simply withholding rent.

At first most people were on the landlords' side, the withholders being sometimes confused with Bolsheviks—for that seems to be the most convenient way of dismissing such problems of life. But when no less a publicist than Judge Parry came out on the tenants' side it was realised that there was something in it, after all. A Judicial Committee has been appointed by the Government to regularise this awkward situation, which has arisen merely through the careless wording of the 1920 Act.

Mr. Frederic Harrison.

The end of the long life of Mr. Frederic Harrison reminds us forcibly of the wide gap that separates our modern generation from the Victorian. Here was a man, worthy, generous, and of unflagging zeal, who in the social formations of his middle age was of considerable account, and yet, it would seem, ageing down uncomfortably in the hastier and more pushing years of our time. There were few important points of life which he did not touch—he was, in common with many of his fellow-Victorians, worker, teacher, preacher, and artist in one—but the most remarkable fact of his career was that he was able to co-ordinate all his ideals under the system of Positivism.

He was essentially a man of his generation, and it is doubtful whether his influence will make itself actually felt in future years. Such a philosophic co-ordination as he achieved is almost impossible to the battered peoples of to-day; but it is not a little thing to have lived, in the maligned nineteenth century, so strenuously sincere a life as his. Of the books that he has left most will be found useful in the didactic sense, but they lack that touch of incandescent imagination which fires the reader.

ALTER EGO.

For Hire

PRIVATE CARS
OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS & SONS

10 DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE W.1

Langham 1222
Hampstead 5203
Tinsbury 2771

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

EGYPT.

Cairo, January 4.

A Mass British Meeting.

The New Year has opened with an episode unique in the history of Egypt, viz., a mass meeting of the British community. Hitherto, for one cause or another, it has never been possible to get the various elements which constitute the British community in Egypt to meet together for any specific purpose. It has needed a tragedy following on a succession of tragedies to bring this about, and on Tuesday night we had the unprecedented spectacle of a mass meeting of the British community, including representatives from Alexandria and the provinces, at Shepheard's Hotel, which had been convened in order to consider the situation arising out of the series of murders of British subjects culminating in that of Dr. Newby Robson, and of framing resolutions embodying the views of the British community on the best means for protecting themselves against the continuance of these outrages.

Shepheard's dining and ball rooms, which had been kindly lent by the Egyptian Hotels, Limited, were literally packed, with an overflowing crowd outside the various entrances—it is computed that over one thousand persons, of whom a large proportion were ladies, were in the rooms—when Mr. Harry Farnall, as chairman, took his seat on the platform. With him were Mr. A. H. Hooker, the oldest British resident, as vice-chairman; Sir Reginald Oakes, managing director of the Heliopolis Oases Company; Brigadier-General R. B. D. Blakeney, C.M.G., Under-Secretary of State for Railways; Mr. B. Hornsby, manager of the National Bank of Egypt; Mr. W. E. Kingsford, president of the British Union of Egypt; Judge J. F. Kershaw, Major Fanner, and Messrs. Beasley, Roberts, and Merton. The meeting opened with an admirable speech from Mr. Farnall, which by general consensus of opinion set the tone of the subsequent proceedings. He explained how the meeting had come about and what its objects were, and he read messages of support of the action of the British community in Cairo from the British Chamber of Commerce in Alexandria and from the British residents in Port Said, Zagazig, Mansura, Assiut, and Tanta.

Before the general business of the meeting was embarked on the chairman, seconded by the Venerable Archdeacon Horan, moved that "the meeting expresses to Mrs. Robson its heartfelt sympathy in her terrible bereavement."

The Resolutions.

The proceedings lasted for a little over two hours. The following resolutions were unanimously passed by the meeting:—"This meeting, consisting of the British official and unofficial community in Egypt, views with indignation and abhorrence the unpunished but systematic murdering of British subjects. The strongest representation on the subject should be made to H.B.M.'s High Commissioner, requesting him to use such measures as are in his power to assist the Egyptian Government to put an end to such crimes and to detect the criminals. This meeting resolves that a British committee be formed for the purpose of organising the British community with a view to taking such steps as may be necessary for the protection of the lives of British subjects in this country, and in particular to ensuring that the members of the British community arm themselves for their mutual protection as a public duty, as has also been advised by H.B.M.'s Consul. This meeting is of opinion that the Public Security Department is inadequate, and that the police should be reinforced by a further and adequate European element. This meeting urges the highest authorities to make such representations to the Egyptian Government as may be conducive to the suppression of insubordination in the schools and colleges of Egypt, and that the practice by students of introducing politics during the course of their studies, or upon the school premises, shall be put down with penalties. The next-of-kin of all victims murdered should be at once compensated on a scale to be decided by the President of the Society of Actuaries, and that in the event of the Egyptian Government not paying forthwith the British Treasury should pay the amount due without delay and recover eventually from the Egyptian Government."

Throughout a very high tone was maintained, and some admirable speeches were made, notably by Mr. Hugh-Jones, Judge Kershaw, Mr. George Robb, and Captain Creswell, of all of whose remarks the audience thoroughly approved.

It was evident that all those present realised the solemnity of the occasion and the unique event in which they were participating. Notwithstanding the high feeling which one could sense was running in the hall, not a single discordant note was struck. The speeches both from the platform and from the body of the hall were delivered with commendable restraint, in so far as criticism was concerned, but they were nevertheless marked by a note of determination that adequate measures should immediately be taken to put a stop to the disgraceful state of affairs which had led up to the murder of Dr. Newby Robson.

It was a meeting that in dignity fully responded to the solemn occasion, and one trusts that the authorities, strengthened by the knowledge that the British community will be at its back, will not hesitate to adopt strong measures, and so be able to prevent any other occurrence necessitating such a meeting. At the same time one cannot help hoping, now that the British community in Egypt has thus at last been brought together, that out of this union there will spring some permanent organisation, which, while watching over the common interests of the community, will give it that cohesive form which, compared with the other European communities in Egypt, it has unfortunately lacked in the past.

The Public Security Department.

One of the first steps that have been taken by the authorities has been the reorganisation of the Public Security Department. Mr. Monteith-Smith has retired on pension; Mr. Keown-Boyd has been appointed to succeed him; and the Special Commission for the investigation of political crimes has been reconstituted under the direction of Colonel C. F. Ryder. These changes have not unnaturally aroused some comment, but in my opinion no useful purpose can be served by discussing them, and the fairest thing is to leave those who have now been appointed to deal with the public security free to carry out the exceedingly responsible and onerous duties falling to them. All I think necessary to say is that Mr. Monteith-Smith retires after a quarter of a century of patient and faithful service to Egypt, and that Mr. Keown-Boyd succeeds him amid all the goodwill and sympathy which his attractive personality has gained for him.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

BULGARIA.

Sofia, January 3.

Bulgaria and Lausanne.

So far as Bulgaria is concerned, the Lausanne Conference has been abortive. Bulgaria hoped to receive a free outlet to the Ægean—that is to say, she hoped that Dedeagatch or some other place would be given her in order that she might construct a port which would be her own. It is not quite clear what the Conference intended to offer Bulgaria, but the most favourable terms will apparently consist of an internationalised corridor along the Maritza, culminating in a port under the protection of the League of Nations. This is not enough for Bulgaria. She will not spend any money on developing a free port unless she knows that it is to be her own.

The Bulgarian Delegation at Lausanne are of the opinion that the question of a free outlet to the Ægean was decided by the Big and Little Ententes before the Conference assembled. In this they are probably not far wrong. Neither England nor the Little Entente is at this moment willing to lay aside Greek claims to Western Thrace, and in these circumstances the granting of a strip of territory to Bulgaria was out of the question. Naturally Bulgaria is disappointed. She had hoped that the Allies had at last recognised the justice of her claims, and were prepared to grant her a free outlet. As they have failed to do so, the only thing left for Bulgaria to do is to wait quietly until Balkan events so shape themselves that it will be in the Allies' interests to do what they should long ago have done.

Internal Politics.

It is now a month since the Kustendil disorders took place. The Cabinet have not been at all in agreement as to the wisdom of the attitude taken by M. Daskaloff on this occasion. The latter, who as Minister of the Interior is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, is accused of having been too violent in the way he subdued the so-called Sofia riots. Bands of armed peasants were let loose in the town, and for two or three days did a certain amount of indiscriminate damage. M. Thomoff, Minister of War, has been the foremost in opposing M. Daskaloff's policy. In fact MM. Thomoff and Daskaloff have had a personal quarrel which threatened to divide the Cabinet into two parties. On M. Thomoff's side were M. Tourlakoff and M. Manouloff, Ministers of Finance and Railways respectively, whilst MM. Janeff and Bakaloff supported M. Daskaloff. As is always the case, however, the return of M. Stambolisky has settled this quarrel. On almost every occasion that the Prime Minister goes abroad his Ministers take it on themselves to quarrel, but the return of their chief invariably brings them to reason. None of the Ministers wishes to resign, so they are always forced to become reconciled.

It is, however, possible that the divergence of opinion which undoubtedly does exist in the Cabinet will one day become so acute that even M. Stambolisky may not be able to avert the crisis. Rightly or wrongly, M. Daskaloff is regarded as being the chief of the extremists among the Agrarians, whilst MM. Thomoff and Tourlakoff are considered the chief moderates. Latterly there have been rumours that the ex-Liberal Minister, M. Guenadieff, was going to re-enter political life and form a coalition together with the Agrarians. This rumour found a great deal of credence in certain quarters, but so far as can be gathered, it is quite without any foundation. To begin with, the Liberal Party is divided into at least two groups, namely, the Radoslavists and the Stambolovists. In addition, since the end of the World War the Liberals have been discredited, and, although they are certainly regaining power in the country, their day is not yet. Besides this, M. Guenadieff has published in the Liberal organ, Nezavisimost, a denial of the whole affair.

Now that M. Stambolisky is back in Sofia again the Cabinet will probably become more united, although it is just possible that one or two Ministers may be forced to resign.

Allied Military Control.

Readers of THE NEAR EAST will remember that the disbandment of the Inter-allied Military Organ of Liquidation has often been recommended in these columns. Two months ago it was arranged that the "Organ" would definitely go at the end of 1922, and that the Control Commission at Budapest would occasionally visit Bulgaria. When the Bulgarian Government were informed of this arrangement, they very naturally protested, as the Treaty of Neuilly does not in any way provide for the Control Commission, who are liable to continue to function for several years. The result has been that the "Organ" remains.

The Russian Legation.

On the 10th of this month M. Petriaeff, who has represented the "old Russian régime" in Sofia for the last three years, is leaving. This departure has been brought about in the following way:

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

LEE BAY HOTEL, LEE—Originally an old Manor House in North Devon associated with the Drake family. It commands magnificent views of crags and cliffs and sea.

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 13.

Johnnie Walker: "Good-day, Sir Francis! Seeker of the Treasure Main."
Shade of Sir Francis Drake: "Ah, JOHNNIE WALKER! you are now the main Treasure."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., Scotch Whisky Distillers,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

M. Petriaeff had on several occasions told M. Stambolisky that if his presence in Bulgaria was not desired by the Government he would at once go. Early in December an Agrarian Deputy gave him to understand that the moment for him to leave had now come. After certain inquiries M. Petriaeff found that the Government were indeed desirous that he should leave, so he at once took the necessary steps. The Legation will be closed, and will be under the protection of the Dutch Diplomatic Representative. The Bulgarian authorities will in future issue passports, while it is understood that the League of Nations will also protect the legal interests of the Russians resident in Bulgaria. The departure of M. Petriaeff is deplored by all "White" Russians, as it is felt that one more landmark separating the "Whites" from the "Reds" has been swept away.

IRAK.

Baghdad, January 4.

Baghdad and Basrah Racing.

The weather usually does its worst in this country at Christmas and New Year, and this year was no exception. Heavy rain on Christmas Eve and on New Year's Eve caught many shooting parties out "in the blue," and not only spoiled the shooting, but made it impossible in some cases for them to get back home again. The Christmas week races were run, however, although the third day had to be postponed from Tuesday to Saturday. There is a great difference between Basrah and Baghdad in the matter of racing. Much more interest is taken in the Basrah meetings by the local population, and this is due to some extent, no doubt, to the better arrangements. In Basrah the racing is in the hands of a company formed for this purpose, and disposing of capital sufficient to enable it to make adequate arrangements, whereas in Baghdad it is run by the Race Club, which has the golf course, tennis courts, and a club house to attend to, as well as the racing. There are rumours that a company is to be formed shortly to manage the racing in Baghdad, and it is hoped that an improvement will result.

Irak and Lausanne.

The negotiations at Lausanne are not going well from the point of view of this country. The Turks are disquietingly insistent in their demand that Mosul shall be given back to them, and the Baghdadi is no less insistent that it shall not. Lord Curzon's handling of the negotiations, and especially his declaration that Mosul cannot be separated from Irak, has created a very favourable impression here, and almost everyone hopes that an agreement will be reached. Though Turkish propaganda is still active and often but little concealed, there are very few who really want to see the Turk come back, and the propagandists would in most cases desist from their efforts if they saw that the Turk was really not coming, and that the reward they hope for would not be forthcoming.

The Elections.

The attempt to persuade the electors to boycott the elections is causing the Government some embarrassment, and is hindering the preparatory work which must be got through before the actual voting can take place. The Turkish menace and the obvious Bolshevik support which is driving the Turks on to the maintenance of their intransigent attitude is tending, however, to make the various parties draw closer together, and one result of this is the attempt which is being made to persuade the Shiah ulema to withdraw the fatwa issued by them a month or two ago, in which they declared that participation in the elections was an offence against God and His prophet.

The Arrival of Sir Henry Dobbs.

Sir Henry Dobbs arrived in Baghdad by the last air mail to take up his duties as counsellor to the High Commissioner.

PERSIA.

Teheran, December 9.

The Return of the Shah.

The Shah arrived at Bushire on November 29, on his return from his European trip, and was welcomed on landing by the Minister of War, who had gone there specially from Teheran, and who will accompany His Majesty back to the capital, where he is expected to arrive towards the end of next week. Already great preparations are being made here for his reception, and triumphal arches are being erected on the way from the gate by which he will enter to the Palace.

The Financial Advisers.

Dr. Millspaugh since his arrival has not let the grass grow under his feet, and has been busy making a tour of inspection of all the Government Ministries and Departments, and putting himself au courant with their financial affairs. Five more Advisers arrived last Sunday, and have been allocated to the departments of indirect taxes, land taxes, Crown landed properties, and one is a technical adviser and expert in currency matters for the bank, formerly the Banque d'Escompte de Perse, which was ceded to Persia under the Russo-Persian Agreement of 1921, and which the Government intend to turn into a State bank for the collection of revenue and taxes.

Swaraj in Persia?

A great deal of discussion has lately been taking place in the Mejliss on whether all officials employed in the Government service should be forced to wear only clothes made in the country from material produced here, and although Soleyman Mirza announced that this figured in the programme of the Democratic Party, the majority of speakers seemed to be against the adoption of the measure, and the Prime Minister in winding up the debate asked for a secret session at some future date to discuss the matter further. The Minister of Public Instruction, however, has issued orders to the teachers in the schools that pupils should wear only

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

clothes produced in Persia, and that no European pens or inks be used.

An Aerial Postal Service.

An Austrian here has applied to the Government for a concession for an aerial postal service in the country, and has submitted plans showing the proposed routes, etc. Such a service would undoubtedly be welcomed, but there are innumerable difficulties in the way of its successful accomplishment. At present the air mail from Baghdad to Cairo, with which the Persian post is connected by a fortnightly service from Teheran to the Mesopotamian frontier and vice versa (by ordinary post), lessens the time of transit for correspondence by at least two to three weeks.

TURKEY.

Under the heading "S.S. Constantinople," a correspondent writes:—

One of the most uninteresting towns in Europe at the present moment is, perhaps, Constantinople. Periods of panic have been succeeded by feelings of boredom and depression. The state of suspense and uncertainty as to the future which the population has now experienced since August last is beginning to tell on the most phlegmatic of minds, on the most optimistic of natures. "Any news?" one asks the other at every encounter throughout the day, until the phrase has become a by-word, and one feels tempted at times to invent something merely to test its reception. Never has the old saying, "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick," found better expression than in the malady from which Constantinople is suffering at the present time.

One feels like a passenger on a derelict ship, bereft of skipper and crew, which is being directed to a predestined fate from a distance by wireless. An experiment is being undertaken. Wave currents are centred on the old ship from many quarters. Undoubtedly the most powerful and effective reaches her from Angora, and is meeting with more response on the part of the old machinery than any of the others. Weaker currents are recorded from other centres, known for the purposes of the experiment as "Allied control" (with a small c), "Lausanne," and "Foreign public opinion." While it is recognised that these last-named are, in a feeble way, keeping the pumps going and the old ship afloat, it has been noticed, especially latterly, that they have ceased to have any effect whatever on the navigating machinery.

It is the fate of many to remain on board and, by watching and awaiting the effects of the various experiments, to take their silent part in the "trials." The ordeal, however, has lasted longer than the stoutest had expected. The old boat is now becoming so overcharged with concentrated electric waves that the onlookers aboard are being caught by them, and should the "trials" be much further extended, the passengers of s.s. Constantinople will be resembling a crowd of marionettes on a rubber deck, dancing to the whim of every current emitted. Thus I am tempted to throw this "line" out to the readers of THE NEAR EAST with the hope and prayer that succour in some form or other may soon reach us; that, failing rescue, and in the interests of all on board—minorities and majorities—one's faith in the old adage may be confirmed—that Britain rules the "waves."

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALBANIAN REFUGEES FROM GREECE.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—Appeals have been sent out to the whole civilised world asking for assistance for the tens of thousands of unfortunate Greek refugees whom the warlike folly of their own Government has caused to be driven back into Greek territory.

The Near and Middle East Association had already taken active steps in the matter, and had endeavoured to obtain from the British Government the allocation of a substantial sum from the unissued portion of the Greek loan for the relief of the immediate wants of the sufferers. Since taking this action the Association has learnt with dismay from the Albanian Minister in London that the Greek Government is expelling with violence and cruelty Albanian residents in Greece, especially in the district of Chamouria; that the houses, lands, and goods of these Albanians are being seized, and that Greek refugees are being installed in their homesteads.

While the plight of the Greek refugees is pitiable in the extreme, it is obviously unjust that these sufferers should be a cause of further suffering to others through the mistaken policy of their Government. Therefore, in the interests of all those who, for humanitarian reasons, are giving time and money for the relief of distress in the Near East, we would urge that steps should immediately be taken to obtain a satisfactory assurance from the Greek Government that these outrages have ceased, and that the Albanian victims shall be reinstated in their homes and fully compensated for their losses.—We are, etc.,

EDWARD GLEICHEN,
E. N. BENNETT,
AUBREY HERBERT.

Near and Middle East Association,
7, St. James's Terrace, N.W.8.
January 11.

BRITAIN IN PALESTINE.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—Your reference in this week's number to "Britain in Palestine" cannot be allowed to pass without comment. You state that "one advantage of the recently issued report on the administration of Palestine is that the reader can get away from the rights and wrongs of Zionism and the Jewish National Home," and can consider the benefits introduced by our Administration there.

The fundamental principle of just government, is it necessary to say, is that there shall be no getting away from rights and wrongs. Whatever benefits may have been conferred by the Administration, those benefits are beside the mark, if Zionism has entered Palestine on an illegal basis. We pledged ourselves with the utmost solemnity to give the Arabs independence in every sense of that word in Palestine. Our only duty, the only thing that concerns us as a people of honour, is to redeem that pledge. To get off the platform of right and wrong on to the shifting ground of advantage and expediency and value obtained is, to my mind, infinitely discreditable. "Unless the Lord shall have built the house, in vain do they labour who build it."—I am, etc.,

J. M. N. JEFFRIES.

Chelsea, S.W.3, January 12.

[We cannot subscribe to our correspondent's contention that, if Venus happened to be met wearing high-heeled shoes, it would not be permissible to comment upon the beauty of her form because the shoes had been stolen.—Ed.]

Near East Bookshelf.

A DOG WITH A BAD NAME.

"THE INS AND OUTS OF MESOPOTAMIA." By Thomas Lyell.
(London: A. M. Philpot, Ltd. 7s. 6d. net.)

When a dog has been given a bad name, it is generally supposed that only one fate is in store for him. There can be no doubt as to the tendency to give Irak a bad name, and if it survives the ordeal—in spite of Mr. Lyell's admirable book, we suspect that it will—the reason will be that its would-be executioners cannot agree among themselves as to the method of putting it out of existence. Our author, however, is not purely iconoclast. As Political Officer in one of the Holy Cities of Irak and District Magistrate in Baghdad, Mr. Lyell had exceptional opportunities of studying the Irak, and he has set down in this book the results of his studies. "The Ins and Outs of Mesopotamia" is a mine of interesting information regarding conditions in the country, the psychology, religion, habits, and customs of the people; but the reader is left with the feeling that all this information, unchallengeable though it may be in statements of fact as distinct from inferences and interpretations, has been marshalled for the definite purpose of supporting a pet theory, and not for an impartial elucidation of the Irak question from all points of view. In closing with a frank appeal for a return to the "administration established in war," the author must know that he is pressing his thesis beyond the limits of practicability. To parade so boldly the bee in one's bonnet is at least honest; but it necessarily places the reader on his guard.

It would certainly be folly to ignore in any consideration of the Irak question the side on which Mr. Lyell lays special emphasis. The great bulk of the population belongs to the Shiah sect of Islam, and in this book we are given an insight into the atmosphere of prejudice, bigotry and ignorance in which the people are kept by the blighting influence of the Shiah Hierarchy in the Holy Cities. The author in his preface states his own deduction from this fact: "Being firmly convinced, as I am, from close personal acquaintance, that the Creed of Islam is unprogressive, personally enervating, and destructive of any instinct for citizenship, social integrity, or national aspirations, I have endeavoured to show that the Muslim, and particularly the Shia, is—and for many years must remain—totally unfit for self-government, which he only 'desires' as an opportunity to escape from all law and order." Mr. Lyell satisfies himself that the establishment of King Faisal on the throne of Irak confirms his contention; but he has more knowledge of his subject than to support the ignorant and short-sighted demand for British evacuation.

By the frequent references to Christianity and religious observances the reader is assisted in his understanding of Mr. Lyell's point of view. Residence in a Shiah Holy City must be particularly trying to anyone who can write the following: "Many Arabs have a truer knowledge of real religion than hundreds of pious Anglo-Saxons who attend their Sunday service and peruse the Church Times on Friday mornings. For every Arab knows that religion means a certain amount of discomfort. . . . We hoped at the first perusal that it was solely the Arab's view of religion, but on the strength of the connecting particle, which we have italicised, we fear that it is Mr. Lyell's own. Those who are more fortunate than the author in finding religion a joy instead of a discomfort will be heartened in clinging to a more optimistic outlook in regard to Irak. No doubt the situation is trying; but we cannot help thinking that great Britain, or the British Empire, for which Mr. Lyell, peering out through a narrow slit of an Irak wall, is so genuinely anxious, has puled through much worse troubles and rounded tighter corners. Some people will even be led to suppose that the signs of the times point to the possibility of a gradual elimination of the worst features of the Shiah incubus rather than to the strengthening of the power of the Mujtahid on Irak. On the subject of Islam, as we have seen, Mr. Lyell is a convinced pessimist, as are so many others. "Islam," he says, "imposes upon its followers an intellectual tyranny that is unbelievable to those who have not lived in its midst."

It is utterly impossible for Muslim Powers to keep abreast with the general advance of civilisation, for intellectually they are incapable of expansion. Originality of thought is sin. Speculation, within the limits laid down by the four legalists, is the utmost to which they can aspire." He calls Islam a system "as rigid as is possible to conceive, which admits of no originality, no progress, which is narrower than the narrowest Calvinism, which is intellectually and morally dead, and which holds its followers bound hand and foot to a legalism that kills all aspiration and strangles at birth every effort." On another page he writes: "Had it not been for the new social and intellectual obligations imposed upon it from without by a Christian Power, it is not inconceivable that, however popular as a domestic faith, Islam would have died long since of inanition. Almost certainly, it would not now have to be reckoned with as a world force. It has been bolstered up and rendered strong by institutions utterly foreign to its own spirit." Such passages almost inevitably challenge comparison with "The Spirit of Islam," recently mentioned in these columns. "Islam," says Mr. Ameer Ali, after summing up Moslem-Arab achievements in the domain of astronomy, medicine, mathematics, the arts and physical sciences, "inaugurated the reign of intellectual liberty. . . . From the time of its birth in the seventh century up to the end of the seventeenth, not to descend later, Islam was animated by a scientific and literary spirit equal in force and energy to that which animates Europe of our own day. It carried the Moslems forward on a wave of progress, and enabled them to achieve a high degree of material and mental development." Such was the past. As for the future, we must needs wait to see; but at least, let us the while hope.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"The Martyrdom of Smyrna and Eastern Christendom." By Dr. Lysimachos Oeconomos. Sold on behalf of the Refugees. (London: George Allen and Unwin, Ltd. 7s 6d. net. Postage abroad 4d.)

"L'Eternel Ulysse ou La Vie Aventureuse d'un Grec d'aujourd'hui." By Jean Leune. (Paris: Plon-Nourrit et Cie. 7 francs. Postage abroad, 2½d. extra.)

"History of the Fatimid Khalifate." By De Lacy O'Leary. (London: Kegan, Paul, Trench, Trübner, and Co., Ltd. 10s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 5d.)

"The American Jewish Year-Book, 5683." Edited by Harry Schneiderman. (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society of America.)

That book you want

on the Commerce or Industries of the East, the Study of Oriental Languages, Oriental Literature, Sport, Tropical Medicine, etc., etc.

FOYLES have it, or will quickly obtain it

SECOND-HAND OR NEW.

Over 1,000,000 volumes in stock on every conceivable subject. Write for Catalogue 165 (free), mentioning requirements or interests. Books sent on approval. Books Purchased—Best Prices paid.

FOYLES, 121, Charing Cross Rd., London, Eng.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Late King Constantine.

We append a few representative opinions upon the late ex-King of the Hellenes. The Morning Post says :—

Ex-King Constantine was a sincere patriot, and it is more than probable that history will question the verdict of many of his contemporaries about his being a pro-German and the henchman of his Imperial brother-in-law. He had great ambitions, natural in a man who bore such a name, and who was the ruler of the Hellenes, but he ruined them by a series of unfortunate blunders which revealed his lack of real statesmanship. The fates decreed that he should be pitted against one of the ablest sons of Greece in a desperate struggle for power between two contending factions, and there can be no getting away from the vacillation and infirmity of purpose of the King compared with the steadfast will and unvarying aims of M. Venizelos. King Constantine, whose friendship for this country was probably sincere, permitted himself to be identified with plans and acts which played into the hands of England's enemies. M. Venizelos, on the contrary, never wavered in his devotion to the Allies' cause throughout the most sombre moments alike in his own fortunes and in those of the Allies. The late King had a great opportunity of wiping out those mistakes when he was recalled to the Throne. Unfortunately, however, he persisted in following the same mirage which had brought disaster to his great antagonist, and backed that fatal policy which ended in the disasters of the Sakaria. His, indeed, was an ambition which overreached itself. Now that he is dead, all friends of Greece may hope that an end may soon be reached to that internecine struggle which has brought such misfortunes to Hellenism, and to those shameful feuds of which King Constantine was the victim rather than the originator.

From the Westminster Gazette :—

He has perhaps been fortunate in the fact that his death has prevented his witnessing the final acts which will re-establish the Turks in Thrace. There is no reason to suppose that this series of disasters which has marked his reign was due to anything more than his folly and that of his advisers. He seems to have been unable to look ahead and to foresee the inevitable consequences of the courses he chose to follow. He associated with himself the wrong men and adopted the wrong methods, both political and military. His crime, in short, was no more than conspicuous inadequacy for the position he had to fill, coupled with a supreme unconsciousness that the inadequacy existed. It is a common fault, but, fortunately, most of those who suffer from it are not called upon to be kings.

The Manchester Guardian attempts thus to get this historical figure into perspective :—

Failure and crookedness were his nature.

and with a certain amount of aid from foreign art they brought him and his country to such a cropper in Asia Minor that no amount of foreign opposition might have sufficed to reinstate him once more in Greek hearts. In all probability he would, if he could have kept his health, have enjoyed thirty or forty years of tranquil felicity in such earthly paradises—so far as excellent scenery may make a heaven—as Palermo, where he has died, and the banks of the Lake of Geneva, where he was said to be looking about for an agreeable house—there are hardly any others. His was a queer life, inconvenient for us, unreposeful for himself, and far from advantageous for Greece.

The Daily Telegraph says the time has not yet come when we can rightly appreciate the events of the late King's last stormy years, but it says :—

The death of Constantine, ex-King of the Hellenes, removes from the world's stage a figure unequal to the task of dominating, controlling, or even of comprehending the mighty forces aroused by the greatest war recorded by history. Some of the attributes of kingship he possessed. He was tall, bluff, soldierly, and not unattractive to his peasant people and to private friends. But he was not a clever man, and was totally devoid of the flexibility, finesse, and perspicacity needed for guiding his little country in days of appalling difficulty. . . . We have good cause to blame the late King for acts of hostility difficult to forgive or forget; yet in the welter of clashing forces it would have required a far stronger figure than that of Constantine to avert the tragedy of errors which appears to have been accumulated by some malignant destiny upon the heads of the Greeks and their late King.

The Question of Mosul.

The Times of January 11 looks at Mosul from the point of view of Irak, and explains Britain's duty regarding it thus :—

The British Government may not be enamoured of a commitment which brings neither gain nor glory, and involves an expenditure for the benefit of a race which does not always appear to be unduly grateful for the improved administration of its country; but it cannot merely repudiate its signature. A Treaty with a third State cannot be properly discussed between Britain and Turkey alone; the third party must be consulted. Mosul was once a flourishing city, but has decayed steadily since it came under Turkish rule. It might become once more an important centre of trade and industry, and economic pressure will certainly in the course of time compel the development of its resources of oil. International interests are already involved, and cannot be abandoned. If the present ruler of the district should come to the opinion that his own interest demands either a transfer of suzerainty or complete freedom from any mandate, he would probably find no insuperable objection raised by his present ally and protector. We are bound in honour to keep our part of the bargain so long, and only so long, as it is maintained on the other side.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

A telegram that we have received from a Greek Press Bureau at Limassol states that at the elections for seven Greek vacancies on the Legislative Council of Cyprus only 2,400 out of 32,000 electors voted.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

January 18 (New Style).

January 5 (Old Style).

Gumada II., 1, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Shebat I., 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Lord and Lady Decies have left for Cairo.

General Sir John and Lady Maxwell are leaving for Egypt.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Elves have left for Ceylon, and will return at the end of April.

Mr. and Mrs. Raoul Foa have left for Egypt, the Sudan, and Palestine, and will not return until May.

Viscount and Viscountess Chelmsford are expected to be back in London within the next few days.

Brigadier-General Sir William and Lady Manning will leave London at the end of the month for Ceylon.

Lord and Lady Swaythling and the Hon. Stuart Montagu will leave Kensington Court for Egypt on January 26.

The Ceylon Association in London will hold a luncheon to-morrow (Friday) in the Mirror Room at the Savoy Hotel.

Before the Royal Asiatic Society on Tuesday Miss E. G. Kemp read a paper on "Chinese Idealism in Temple and Bridge."

A Kipling Society is in process of formation. Those who wish for further particulars should communicate with Major-Gen. L. C. Dunsterville, C.B., The Cronk, Port St. Mary, Isle of Man.

The Bishop of Gibraltar (Dr. Greig) will be in England this month for a short visit, and will preside at a meeting of the Gibraltar Diocesan Council. He has recently visited Constantinople and Sofia.

The King has appointed the Right. Hon. Sir James Rennell Rodd, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., to be a member of the Council of the British School at Rome for a further period expiring on October 11, 1925.

The Count de Salis, formerly British Minister to the Vatican, has telegraphed to Sir Roper Parkinson for a remittance of 4,000 lira for the relief of destitute Montenegrins in Rome, who have remained loyal to the Queen Regent. This sum brings the total amount remitted by the Montenegrin Red Cross and Relief Fund to 100,812 lira.

Under the auspices of the Anglo-Hellenic League a public lecture will be given at University College, Gower Street, on Friday, January 19, at 5.30 p.m. The subject is "Prehistoric Greece," with special reference to the new excavations at Mycenæ, illustrated by lantern slides, and the lecturer, Mr. A. J. B. Wace, Director of the British School at Athens. The chair will be taken by the Hon. W. Pember Reeves.

APARTMENTS.

QUIET SEASIDE RESORT.—Apartments or furnished. BRONAUULT, Nevin, N. Wales.

The Earl of Ronaldshay will address the Royal Society of Arts (Indian Section) to-morrow (Friday) on "A Clash of Ideals as a Source of Indian Unrest." The chair will be taken at 4.30 p.m. by Viscount Peel, Secretary of State for India.

At the University of London a course of six lectures on "The Nomads of Central Asia" is to be given by Professor W. Barthold, of the University of Petrograd. The lectures, which will be held at King's College, London, will take place on Thursdays, at 5.30 p.m., on January 18 and 25, and February 1, 8, 15, and 22, and admission to them is free, without ticket. At the first lecture the chair will be taken by Sir Denison Ross.

Among passengers by the P. and O. Bombay Express, which left London last week to join the Kaiser-I-Hind at Marseilles, were the Hon. Roger Coke, Lord Claud Hamilton, Mr. Samuel Samuel, M.P., Lord Somerleyton, and Sir John and Lady Wilson (for Port Said); Sir John and Lady Harrington, for Aden; Lady Archer (for Mombassa) and Lieut.-General Sir A. S. Cobbe, Lady Guernsey, Hon. Mr. Justice and Mrs. Odgers, Hon. Mrs. F. G. Stanley, Sir Henry and Lady Proctor, and the Maharani of Cooch Behar (for Bombay). Lord Dewar (for Port Said) and Lady Petit (for Bombay) joined the steamer at Marseilles.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TEODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1923.

A BALKAN NEED.

A recrudescence of alarms in South-Eastern Europe—Roumania and Hungary are both strengthening their frontier forces, each attributing the first move to the other; irregular bands are said to be active on the Greco-Bulgarian frontier—proves that there is still a quantity of inflammable material left in the Balkans. It would be more satisfactory if the rumours and actual incidents could be attributed solely to the condition of the different countries' nerves, for then they might pass; but, taken in conjunction with the tiresome and ceaseless output of false reports (Belgrade being the chief place of origin), they suggest the deliberate product of a firm belief that some advantage is to be derived from them. There would seem to be no one in any of the Balkan Governments at the present time capable of realising that the better and more advantageous course to adopt in the face of any feared aggression would be frank and amicable discussion between the respective countries. If this course should be unsuccessful, and the matter serious, many ways are available of bringing a culprit to book. The foolish conviction, however, obtains that the complainant Government stands to gain something by stirring up hatred or suspicion abroad against a neighbour. There is no ground for the supposition; the bulk of public opinion in Western Europe is tired of these petty squabbles and alleged intrigues. "Wolf" has been cried so often in regard to countries that have had their claws and teeth removed, that each fresh appeal is written down to the discredit of the alarmist. Some signs of statesmanship are now asked for from the Balkans which will testify to a capacity to benefit from the victory of the Allies. Propaganda may have been necessary during the War; like explosives, it was used for its disintegrating effect. There is no scope for it now, when the whole world is concerned to see every single country, ally and enemy alike, bent upon consolidation and the building up of its strength for the general weal. A nation's value in the post-war scheme of things is proportionate to its contribution to that general weal. If it is seen to be adopting a policy that merely hinders the reconstruction of Europe, it runs the risk of finding that it has permanently estranged the good opinion of the West just at the time when it may stand most in need of it.

It would probably suffice if a single man in the Balkan States could shake himself free from past political standards in the Peninsula. Whether he appeared in Roumania, Greece, or Yugoslavia would be immaterial, provided that he could carry his own country with him in the new policy for the Balkans. The name of M. Venizelos will at once occur to everyone. Of his ability to play the part brilliantly and successfully there can be no doubt; but so far there has been no indication that he intends to run the personal risk attendant upon a return to Greek politics. Neither Roumania nor Yugoslavia has yet produced a politician of the right calibre; those who have come to the front have either not been able to mould the political system to their own way of thinking or have been more concerned with their own personal position than with the country's interests as apart from their own. There remains the possibility of M. Venizelos' undertaking, without becoming first Minister in Greece, the work of convincing the Balkan States that their interests lie in the immediate burying of hatchets and the preparing of a scheme for gradual co-operation. The task would be a natural continuation of work already begun at Lausanne, but interrupted owing, perhaps, in part to uncertainty regarding Turkey. It would be a mistake to attempt to force the pace. A valuable beginning would be made, if there were merely a clearing house for complaints, as it would serve to familiarise the different peoples with the fact that they have far more in common among themselves than they have divergent interests. The present method of dealing with matters between the various Balkan States which call for discussion is too apt to entail one of two courses, the launching of what is practically an ultimatum, or an exaggerated denunciation in the European Press, according to the supposed gravity of the matter. In each case bad feeling is increased between the countries concerned. We should like to see four representatives of Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, and Bulgaria appointed as a permanent Commission domiciled outside the Balkans. To this body would be submitted all matters of dispute between any two or more of the four countries with a view to their amicable settlement, on the principle that the Peninsula as a whole has an interest in the maintenance of good relations between all the component States. Each country would make a point of selecting as its representative only a thoroughly suitable man. When agreement on any particular subject could not be reached by the Commission the matter would have to be dealt with by other means; but the Commission would exist as a practical recognition that the interests of the Balkan States in general are reconcilable, and that the countries are prepared to work towards co-operation.

When not called upon to deal with a matter specially submitted to it, the Commission would explore the ground for an ultimate agreement between the four States. The members would not be plenipotentiaries; but if they found themselves on common ground in regard to any of the outstanding points at issue, this fact could hardly fail to influence their respective Governments. At the present time it is understood that the question of facilities for Yugoslavia at the port of Salonika is exercising the Greek and Yugoslav Governments. It would be much better for both countries if this subject could be discussed, without prejudice, in its relation to Balkan affairs as a whole, and the future development of the Peninsula. No satisfactory agreement has been reached at Lausanne with regard to an outlet for Bulgaria on the Aegean Sea. It is possible that, with time for fuller discussion and for adjusting the matter to a Balkan perspective, some of the difficulties that now seem insuperable could be smoothed away. If the members of the Commission could be non-party men in their own countries, not liable to be moved with each change of Government, the value of their services would be enhanced. At Lausanne the four States have become accustomed to joint conferences, but the Turkish shadow has prevented complete agreement on any one point. It is in the interests of all four to continue the practice of joint deliberations until the old bitternesses have been removed and their place taken by a realisation of the necessity for working together in the common interest.

INDIAN STUDENTS IN ENGLAND.

By OUTIS.

In October last the India Office circulated a Blue-book of 500 odd pages containing the proceedings and report of Lord Lytton's Committee on Indian Students. It was accompanied by a singularly judicious summary, which, I suppose, was intended primarily for the convenience of the Press; at any rate, the notices I have seen have not penetrated below this summary, and consequently they have been in the strict sense uncritical. What I have to say is based not on the report, still less on the summary, but on the record of evidence; and readers who have the patience to follow me will, I hope, recognise that, whatever the value of the conclusions, my method at least may justly be described as critical.

To begin with, it is well to record that the Committee could not pursue their studies in India, because the Indian Legislature refused to pay. On the whole, I think the Legislature's instinct was sound. A sum in simple proportion will show that if 260 witnesses were required in England the number to be examined in India would have run into the thousands, and the result would have been one of those monumental reports which are apt to lead to nothing. At the same time, the want of any evidence from India, especially from Indian parents and guardians, makes the report lop-sided, if not top-heavy; and, even apart from India, the subject has been handled very unequally. The grievances urged by students against English educational institutions are duly set out, and are demolished out of the mouths of 139 dons of sorts who were called as witnesses. The grievances of students against English landladies are also set out, but not demolished, and, so far as I can find, not one single landlady was examined. This was surely unfair to the landladies, but it is also significant. There is a very seamy side to the whole student question: the report admits this, but says as little as possible about it, and it was evidently distasteful to the members of the Committee. If they had pursued their inquiries in Hampstead, and Bayswater and Putney they would have learned much that is relevant, and might even have got nearer the bottom of the main problem; but, as it is, they have left the landladies' case to be imagined.

I regard this omission as significant, because it gives a clue to the spirit in which the Committee worked. As their own statement of the problem shows, they set out to devise methods by which students should obtain education "with the least trouble and the most advantage to themselves." Applying modern methods of psycho-analysis to this statement, to the report as a whole, and to the evidence on which it is based, I find the dominant subconscious idea to have been to wrap students so completely in cotton-wool that there should be no chance of their coming in contact with any of the sharp edges of life, and to do this in such a way as not to offend their susceptibilities. The recommendations made are implicit in this idea. Irra-tionally, perhaps, but quite naturally, many of the students object to anything in the form of State control; therefore the wrapping up must be done by private agency, but, of course, the State must pay. Indian universities are to place their students in England, the State paying the cost, but not interfering in the expenditure. Social hostels in England cannot, we are assured, be self-supporting, so the State must subsidise them, but must not interfere in their management. For want of other agency, the High Commissioner must force students on reluctant manufacturers, but he must make it clear that he can take no sort of responsibility for their character or conduct. Perhaps he may have to use his power of giving contracts as a lever and supply India with bad and dear railway plant to ensure that a single student shall get practical experience of its manufacture. One way or another, quite enough money is proposed to be spent to invite Lord Inchcape's serious attention, and everyone can see that the amount is bound to grow from year to year with the increasing demoralisation of the recipients of the various doles; but it is this inevitable demoralisation which, in my opinion, damns the whole elaborate structure beyond hope of redemption. It may be consistent with equity that the Indian masses should pay more for salt and clothes in order to give a few young men a better chance in England; it is neither equity nor sense that they should pay a single pice to further the process of demoralisation.

It is time, however, to get away from the Committee's subconsciousness and come to the facts. The evidence shows that Indian students in England can be divided into three broad classes:—

CLASS I.—"Men who are . . . able not only to derive full benefit from a course of study abroad, but also to cope for themselves with the ordinary difficulties of life." (The italics are mine; the phrase is the Committee's.)

CLASS II.—Men who may succeed with varying amounts of help.

CLASS III.—Wasters on whom all help is thrown away.

The first class is numerically small but very important, because it leads the opinion of the mass. It is primarily these self-reliant and competent young men who object to State interference of any sort, and all honour to them for their objections. India may want lawyers, or tanners, or potters, but she wants men most of all, and these are men in the making; to spend money on them is at once insult and waste. Students of the third class are much more numerous. They come to England looking for short cuts to a success of which they are incapable; they are an infernal nuisance to everyone concerned; they prejudice dons, landladies, and employers alike against Indians in general; and, while the State may be unable to suppress them summarily, it has no justification for spending money except on their funerals. Between these two classes come the remainder, students who, in fact, need some help in order to make good. The real problem, as I see it, is how to put help within the reach of Class II. without insulting Class I. or wasting money on Class III..

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

and I believe this can be done on the following lines :—

A. Not a penny of State money to be spent on Indian students as a whole, and no attempt whatever to be made by the State either to help them or control them. At this point, however, humanity steps in, and I would provide, as exceptions to the general rule, for relief of actual destitution, upon application, and also for a subsidy to the Indian Gymkhana Club, if there is any risk of cricket falling through; I hope there is not.

B. An efficient organisation to be maintained by the State for the benefit of such students as ask for help, and undertake to submit to the control without which no help will be given. This would be the duty of the High Commissioner, so far as England is concerned; and to ensure reality, the test to be applied should be that the funds for a student's maintenance should be paid into an Indian treasury and disbursed by the High Commissioner, assuring to him the power of the purse. The official staff would then have such students met on arrival, find them lodgings, place them in Universities, arrange for vacations, watch the progress of individuals, and generally act as a guardian, and a very much more efficient one than has hitherto been provided.

C. Each province in India to maintain an organisation to correspond with the High Commissioner, but it must be definitely a State institution, with no pretence of being unofficial. Every person who wants to send a student to England—parent, guardian, giver of scholarships, or whoever it be—would have a definite option, either to make all his own arrangements, or to make the student a ward of the State on the State's terms, and similarly a student could, if he wanted to, put himself under the State, but the option must be free.

Some people who have read the report may say that this scheme would break down because the State would get no wards. I answer: Try it for five years; if there are no wards, all the potter is at an end, and the High Commissioner can go out of this branch of his business. But remember that the Committee met no Indian parents. I have met them in fair numbers, and I believe many of them would welcome a straightforward State guardianship such as I have outlined, though they get hopelessly muddled among hybrid advisory and quasi-philanthropic bodies such as now hold the field. At any rate, the State will have done its duty if it offers such an option, and at the same time removes the defects in its machinery which are pointed out in the report. The guardianship must be thoroughly efficient if it is offered at all.

A word must be added regarding the vexed question of practical industrial training. The evidence taken on this point is perhaps the most valuable part of the Blue-book, and it may be summarised as follows :—Students can usually hope to gain admittance to concerns such as gasworks or power stations, which do not export their products. They may also be admitted into machine shops, because some manufacturers hope that they will become, so to speak, agents for the sale of those particular machines. They are not wanted in any other works which manufacture for export; by friendly arrangement with the leaders a very small number may possibly be taken in leather, pottery, glass, chemical, or other industries, but the mad threat to limit contracts to the firms which agree to take students will, as every Englishman ought to know, merely put manufacturers' backs up. This statement of the position is not limited to Indian students, but applies to all nations, and it ought to be widely grasped in India, where it has become the fashion to demand this kind of training as a right. In fact, it is a very rare and costly privilege, and, in the best interests of India, the High Commissioner should not attempt to obtain it except for the very small number of students who are specially qualified to benefit by it, and whose behaviour he is in a position to control.

TURKESTAN STUDENTS IN EUROPE.

The arrival in Berlin is reported of a number of schoolboys from Bokhara, and also of some young men (Sarts and Kirghiz) from Turkestan. Their object is to obtain school and University training in Western Europe. It is not quite clear how these students managed to reach Germany, but it is understood that they were given special travelling facilities by the Turkestan Soviet authorities. The Moscow Government, however, has now disapproved of natives of Turkestan coming to Europe, and has strictly prohibited any more leaving Turkestan for that purpose. It is said to have been the intention of certain influential Turkestanis to send some of these young people to France or England, but the expense proved an insuperable difficulty. If this statement is correctly founded, it seems a great pity that some means cannot be devised for overcoming the difficulty of expense in bringing these Turkestanis to England.

The report for 1922 of the Indian Gymkhana Club states that, in order to complete the purchase of the new Sports Ground at Osterley £1,887 had to be borrowed from the bankers of the club, and hopes that the debt will soon be cleared off. Last year two cricket pitches and four lawn tennis courts were laid down. The weather, here as elsewhere, spoiled the season, and the majority of the cricket matches were drawn. Next season, it is hoped, it will be possible to run two elevens, and a strong fixture list is being arranged, which includes games against the M.C.C., both away and at home, and against the Free Foresters at Osterley.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Position.

It cannot be said that outwardly the situation is improving. While, on the one hand, there is an increasing prospect of a settlement at Lausanne after further evidence of the art of procrastination by the Turk, we are further off than ever from a settlement of the Reparations question. Indeed, as a result of the French move, we are faced with conditions that may develop into anything. As far as this country is concerned, however, there is no need for undue disquiet, for it is perfectly certain that we shall gain far more by peace with Turkey than we shall lose by developments on the Continent. Indeed, we stand to gain in the latter case also, if, as seems likely, events impose a further handicap on Germany in her endeavour to regain her old markets, of which we have had such obvious evidence of late from various quarters. There is, however, no escaping the fact that as long as the great European markets are wholly or partly inaccessible there can be no real trade revival on a scale which will end unemployment and bring us within measurable distance of the conditions that obtained in 1914. Nothing but a general peace that is a real peace can do that, and in the interests of all it is much to be hoped that the crossing of the Rubicon by the French will merely prove a short cut to a final settlement of the questions at issue.

The Anglo-Persian Issue.

As was expected, the new issue of 850,000 ordinary shares, at £3 15s. per share, by the Anglo-Persian Oil Company was an instantaneous success. The lists, as a matter of fact, were closed at 10.30 on the morning the prospectus appeared, and the amount required is understood to have been subscribed about twelve times. This is a wonderful result, considering the conditions that have been obtaining and in particular the dullness of the oil market in recent months, and shows very plainly how fully the investor has grasped the great potentialities of the A.P.

Sudan Railway Issue.

While the Anglo-Persian issue was taken up so readily, the offer of £1,290,000 4½ per cent. debenture stock by the Kassala Railway Company at 93 failed to attract the investor, 83 per cent. going to the underwriters. Various reasons are responsible for this result. The return was not adequate for one thing, as similar stocks can be bought in the market at slightly below the figure; then the political situation on the Continent had a certain amount of influence, while a third factor was the stipulation that stock must be purchased in multiples of 100, which effectually warned off the small investor, who does not mind subscribing for a few hundreds when he knows that, if necessity arises, the market will readily take them off his hands without loss, but who naturally thinks twice when it is evident that the market at the commencement is likely to be weak. Saturday saw the issue of a further Sudan loan, this being a Sudan Government issue of £3,250,000 4½ per cent. guaranteed stock at 93. It will be noted that the terms are similar to those of the Kassala, and it will be interesting to see what will be the result.

The G.I.P. Report.

A gradual improvement is shown in the report forthcoming from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for the half-year ended September 30. Compared with the same period of the previous year, there was a substantial increase in the gross receipts and a marked fall in expenditure, with the result that there is a considerable increase in net revenue. The net receipts, excluding the State lines, totalled Rs. 92,45,300, but, allowing for the interest charges, there is a deficit on the half-year of Rs. 84,02,200. For the previous period the deficit was Rs. 1,44,15,200, so that it will be seen that considerable headway has been made, and the improvement in the net revenue, combined with the trade recovery in India, suggests that future reports will make a much better showing.

Imperial Bank of India.

For the second half of 1922 slightly smaller profits were earned by the Imperial Bank of India, the figures being Rs. 52,88,500, as compared with Rs. 63,52,242 for the previous six months. The total brought forward was considerably larger, however, and the available total is Rs. 69,16,900, as against Rs. 76,26,736. It is proposed to maintain the dividend at the rate of 16 per cent. per annum, to place to the reserve fund Rs. 10,60,700, to the pension fund Rs. 3,00,000, and to carry forward Rs. 10,56,500.

London County and Westminster.

The report of the London County Westminster and Parrs Bank, Limited, for the past year shows that the net profit amounted to £1,888,021, as compared with £2,167,846 for 1921. A larger amount was brought forward, and the available total is £2,407,729, as against £2,628,760. It is proposed to pay a dividend of 20 per cent. on the £20 shares and to distribute 12½ per cent. on the £1 shares.

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

Commerce and Industry.

(Reports from Our Own Correspondents.)

BULGARIA.

Sofia, January 3.

Reparations.

On January 1 Sir Elliot Colvin, English Delegate on the Inter-Allied Reparation Commission, took over the duties of President of that body. It is said that the Allies are at last resolved to put an end to the impasse that has so long existed regarding Reparations. Italy is reported to have demanded that money be forthcoming, whilst France is also becoming impatient.

Meanwhile, Bulgaria is not worrying about the matter, taking the line that payment cannot be made. This argument may have its defects, but as the lev has been showing a decided weakness ever since the suggestion of Reparations was raised, the Bulgarian case is somewhat strengthened. To-day the lev is worth approximately four Swiss centimes—that is to say, it is worth 0.04 of what it was before the war. The question at issue, therefore, is whether a country with a currency greatly depreciated, and liable to depreciate still further, can pay Reparations. The view in London is that it is impossible without a moratorium of three to five years. If this is so, it would surely be best if the moratorium were granted forthwith, and the present state of uncertainty ended.

IRAK.

Baghdad, January 4.

Mosul Farms, Ltd.

Gloomy reports are received regarding the first fifteen months' working of the Mosul Farms, Limited, an agricultural company formed in Mosul with all its capital subscribed locally. Its losses are said to be almost a lakh of rupees, due to a very large extent to the almost complete destruction of this year's cotton crop by locusts. Cultivators assert that never have the locusts been known to be so bad as they were in the Mosul area this year. The company is carrying on, and hopes with better luck to make a much better showing this year.

Death of Prominent Merchant.

The death occurred in Baghdad in Christmas week of Mr. Aghop Ohanian, a well-known Armenian merchant and contractor, and a prominent figure in the commercial world of Baghdad and Mosul.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - - - Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES - - - - - 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47

(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.

Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMIRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL - 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.

Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

PERSIA.

Teheran, December 9, 1922.

Anti-Russian Feeling Growing.

Owing to the prohibitive tariff imposed by the Soviet authorities on Persian goods entering Russia (as mentioned in my last letter), which is strangling the export trade from the north of Persia, relations between the two countries have recently become very strained, and a few days ago the Russian Legation presented a Note to the Persian Government protesting against the unfriendly attitude of the present Government, as evidenced by the interruption by the Persian Commissioners in Moscow of negotiations for a commercial treaty between Persia and Russia, which have been in progress for many months. The Note was presented by the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, M. Shumyatski, in person to the Crown Prince (Valiahd), and has created a strong feeling in political and mercantile circles against the Northern neighbour. In consequence, Russia has quite taken the place of Britain in the daily attacks in the local Press! In fact, most Persians are now beginning to find out that the Russo-Persian Agreement was not all it purported to be on the surface, and this last Note, which suggested the possibility of a rupture of diplomatic relations should the Government persist in their unfriendly attitude, has awakened the country to the bad faith of the Soviet Government.

Opium Cultivation.

The question of the prohibition of the cultivation of opium in this country, which is one of the most important exports, has recently been considered by the Government and the Parliament, as a result of the decision of the League of Nations to endeavour to limit the production of this drug. A number of merchants dealing in this commodity having protested against the Government's intended action in falling into line with other countries and limiting the production, the Minister of Finance reminded them that as the import of opium is prohibited in most countries, there will naturally be no market for it, and its export will, therefore, prove useless.

PHŒNIX OIL.

Progress Report.

The progress report of Phoenix Oil and Transport Company, Ltd., and allied companies for December shows that the crude oil production for the month was 6,470 tons. The throughput of the refinery was 3,447 tons. Well No. 1, in the Runcu district, continued to flow at the rate of 260 tons weekly. Well No. 5 Moreni recommenced producing on December 9 at the rate of over 200 tons daily; now producing at the rate of 180 tons daily. Well No. 8 Moreni-Stavropoleos, at a depth of 2,959 ft., entered the oil sand on December 21; sand and oil flowed on to derrick floor immediately the horizon was struck; preparations are now being made to handle well.

BRITISH ORION OIL.

The progress report of "Orion" Societate Anonima de Petrol for December shows that the crude oil production for the month was 4,746 tons. The throughput of the refinery was 3,122 tons; converted into lubricating oils, 65 tons.

Runcu Wells—No. 602 started producing on December 26. No. 605 continues to flow intermittently; oil being baled between the flows. Tintea well No. 101 started producing pure oil on December 27; flowing intermittently.

Shipping Intelligence.

SHIPPING AT PORT SUDAN.

Equipment of Port.

In the current issue of the report of the Central Economic Board of the Sudan Government there is an interesting article on shipping at Port Sudan. Attention is drawn to the great increase in traffic at the port in recent years, and the article continues:—

Port Sudan Town and Harbour cost £E866,000 to build and equip, but the expenditure has been amply justified. In 1909, the year the harbour was formally opened, the total of international tonnage of ships calling there amounted to 383,692 tons. This increased to 700,313 tons in 1912, nearly double in three years. Since 1912 international tonnage of ships calling at Port Sudan has (except for one or two years during the war) increased steadily year by year, until in 1921 it reached its highest figure of 1,403,587 tons. The external trade of the Sudan has increased correspondingly, and in 1921 its value amounted to £E12,151,143, over five times what it was in 1909. This increase in the external trade is mainly the result of the railway to Port Sudan, but it has been greatly assisted by the fact that the quick despatch, up-to-date apparatus and safe entrance, both by day and night, which Port Sudan offers have made the port attractive to the important lines of passengers and cargo steamers which now call there. The safety of the port is attested by the fact that a large proportion of the vessels calling there arrive and are berthed by night, and that there is ample room in the harbour for the largest ships using the Suez Canal to swing.

The quay wall, as completed, is some 610 metres in length, with berthing for five ships. Each berth is 125 metres long, with a depth of water of 30 ft. at low water of spring tides. The harbour has a good entrance of two cables width; it is well protected from all winds, and the anchorage is good. The maximum annual variation of the level of its water is 3 ft. The rise and fall is almost entirely due to barometric causes combined with the semi-annual rising and lowering of the whole body of the Red Sea.

The town, harbour, and quays are lighted by electricity, which is furnished by a power station on the eastern side. The cargo-handling equipment on the quays consists of four 3-ton pedestal electric cranes, a 7-ton electric gantry crane, four electric coal transporters, which are specially designed to handle ordinary cargo as well as coal, and an electric coal re-handling bridge plant. Two 5-ton and four 1-ton electric capstans are also erected on the quays to facilitate the handling of shipping and of railway trucks. All this equipment is of most modern design.

In addition, a steam floating crane is available for heavy lifts up to 60 tons. The dockyard workshops are equipped with electrically-driven machinery for general repair work, but space does not permit of any detailed reference to other features of the undertaking—the stores and warehouses, the European town, Customs, Government, and Port offices, the rolling lift bridge, the slipway, capable of taking vessels of 800 tons, lighthouse and leading lights, and the hundred and one accessories which go to make a modern port.

TANKER CHARTERING REVIEW.

An Unfavourable Outlook.

Messrs. John I. Jacobs and Co., of London, in their half-yearly report on oil-tanker chartering, state:—

Tank steamer owners will have no regrets that the year 1922 has come to its end, for, unfortunately, the anticipations as to the future contained in our last half-yearly review have proved only too true. Rates in all directions have declined still further out of proportion to any drop in working costs, and the number of tank steamers laid up has been to some extent augmented. The amount of tanker tonnage afloat has further increased, and Lloyd's ship-building returns for the quarter ending September 30 show a total of 62 tank vessels building, with a total tonnage of 391,245 tons. Of this total, 306,971 tons were under construction in the United Kingdom. Orders for new tonnage, however, are practically non-existent, so that at no distant period it may be hoped that the demand will have an opportunity of equalising the supply with a consequent improvement of conditions under which owners can more freely operate. Returns published this year show that the registered tonnage of tank vessels has increased from 1,478,988 tons in July, 1914, to 5,062,699 tons in July, 1922.

The amount of oil-burning vessels, both internal combustion and steam-driven, is continually being added to. In the former category the figures are 234,287 tons in July, 1914, as compared with 1,542,160 tons in July, 1922; whereas in the latter category the tonnage so fitted has been augmented nearly tenfold.

The production of oil continues to increase in spite of pessimism in some quarters. Crude oil production has been in excess of the requirements of the refiners. The United States holds first place, with Mexico a poor second. The production in Russia still lacks comparison with that prior to 1914. Roumania has been very quiet so far as shipments are concerned; but much work is proceeding in the oil fields, and something approaching pre-war production may be hoped for at some not far distant date. Owners of tank steamers having a capacity of 6,000 tons and under have found it particularly difficult to pay their way at rates which have been ruling during the period under review. It is the larger tankers—i.e., those of 7,500 tons cargo capacity and over, which have been able to trade at a minimum loss. Charterers, quite naturally, have as far as possible arranged their cargoes so as to take tonnage of the largest possible size; and this is particularly noticeable on the part of Continental charterers, who at one time favoured the chartering of small tankers for one port of discharge, and now invariably negotiate where possible for larger boats, discharging at two or even three ports. During the period under review representative rates of freight have been as under:—

Northern States of America.—At the time of the issue of our last review the figure of 15s. 6d. was quoted for clean cargoes to U.K. Continent—Bordeaux/Hamburg range, but owners are now disposed to take over lower rates for boats of 8/9,000 tons capacity. Smaller boats have, as usual, when definitely required, commanded better rates, and 22s. 6d. has lately been conceded for 4,300 tons of lubricating oil from Northern States to the United Kingdom.

The Gulf of Mexico is now getting tonnage freely for U.K. or near Continent at 17s. 6d. for either dirty or clean cargoes. Spot boats have on occasion commanded 6d. to 1s. more. Small boats from the Gulf have obtained from 26s. 6d. to 30s., according to size; but the demand for moderate size boats is extremely limited, and in many cases these limited quantities are taken as a part cargo in a larger tanker at rates not far in excess of those paid for boats of 8,000 tons.

Mexico/United States Refineries.—We have to report that this trade has again taken a considerable amount of tonnage, principally of 8,000 tons capacity and upwards. Rates have on the whole been maintained, and are now showing an upward tendency on the basis of 25 cents from Mexico to New York, and 15/16 cents to New Orleans and the near ports.

California.—Little business has been done from this direction in the open market, although there have been several inquiries at rates in the neighbourhood of 27s. 6d.

Russia has done a moderate amount of business—in the main, for large boats of 7,500 to 9,000 tons refined and/or spirit capacity, at current Gulf rates to named ports U.K. Continent.

Roumania, as already mentioned, has been very quiet so far as fixtures are concerned, the last being a boat of 4,000 tons spirit capacity at 22s. 6d. from Constantza to Germany.

Time Charter.—Owing to the trend of the market and the fact that owners are only disposed to trade at a limited loss, this class of business has been kept within very narrow margins. Steam-propelled steamers can be obtained at 4s. 6d. on the deadweight for six or twelve months, and Diesel engine boats at 6s. for a similar period. Here again we refer to steamers of from 7,500/10,000 tons deadweight capacity.

The outlook for the New Year is, unfortunately, no more favourable for owners than at the time of our last issue. The amount of tonnage is still considerably in excess of the demand, but with the amount of tonnage to be built so strictly limited and the new production fields now being opened up all over the world tending to lengthen voyages, it is to be hoped that the bottom of the depression has been seen.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Circassia for Bombay (Liverpool, February 1).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Anchoria for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 20); s.s. Mandador for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 3); s.s. Makalla for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 17).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Gloucestershire for Rangoon (London, January 25); s.s. Herefordshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, January 31); s.s. Kandahar for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, February 10).

British India Line.—S.s. Domala for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 26); s.s. Nevasa for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 2); s.s. Matiana for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 9); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Cypria for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Cressado for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, January 20).

Ellerman, Bucknall, and Strick Line.—S.s. Kurmark for Persian Gulf (London, January 20); s.s. West Caruth for Persian Gulf (Manchester, January 24).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of London for Calcutta (Birkenhead, January 22); s.s. City of Exeter (Birkenhead, February 5).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Nagpur for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, January 29).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Bulgarian for Gibraltar, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, January 27); s.s. Venetian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 7).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Incemore, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz and Braila. The first steamer of the season for the Danube (Liverpool, February 10); s.s. Peruviana, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz Braila, Syra, Smyrna and Constantinople (Liverpool, February 17).

Papayanni Line.—S.s. Cavallo for Alexandria (Liverpool, January 24); s.s. Gerano for Malta, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 3).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Padua for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 26); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, January 26); s.s. Devanha for Bombay (London, February 2); s.s. Nagoya for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 9); s.s. Nore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 23).

Messrs. R. and W. Hawthorn, Leslie and Co., Newcastle, have received an order from the East Indian Railway Company for fifteen large super-heated goods locomotive engines.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS

PIRÆUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
::: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE :::

BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA

also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR

GENOA LEZHORN NAPLES PALERMO

MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI

ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF PALESTINE.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—In reviewing, in your issue of January 4, the recently issued Report on the Administration of Palestine for the period July, 1920, to December, 1921, you draw attention to the magnitude of the expenditure on the Civil Service, and suggest that an "Axe Committee" could be appointed with advantage. May I point out that since the close of the period to which the Report relates such a Committee has been set up, and that considerable administrative economies have actually been effected?

On April 11, 1922, it was officially announced that "the Government of Palestine has decided to effect a substantial reduction in the number of departments, and in the staff of the remaining departments." It was added that arrangements had already been made to dispense at an early date with the services of a number of senior officials. On July 1, 1922, the Official Gazette announced the reorganisation of the districts, which were reduced in number from seven to four. On September 1 the Gazette announced a number of departmental changes, involving further economies.

Meanwhile, on June 26, 1922, a body officially designated the Economy Commission was appointed, with the Treasurer of the Government of Palestine as Chairman. It is understood that the activities of this body have enabled still further economies to be effected. On all these measures the Report under review is, of course, silent—a further illustration of the misleading impressions created by its publication so long after the close of the period to which it relates.—Yours obediently, LEONARD STEIN.

97, Lansdowne Road, W.11,
January 8.

[Everyone is, of course, aware that very considerable economies have been effected by the Government of Palestine in recent months, but the fact that certain steps, as indicated by Mr. Stein, have been taken does not affect the argument of the writer of the article regarding the expenditure for the period covered by the Report. Further, the writer did not advocate the appointment of an "Axe Committee," but remarked, apropos of the heads of expenditure in the Financial Statement in question, that "an 'Axe Committee' could probably find scope for its operations," a different proposition altogether. Mr. Stein's letter may possibly give the impression that the article was a general attack on the Palestine Administration. It was, as a matter of fact, quite the reverse.—EDITOR.]

GREEK MARBLE QUARRIES.

Grecian Marbles (Marmor), Ltd., have recently issued a particularly attractive catalogue, with ten illustrations in colour, of marbles, found in various parts of Greece, that are quarried by the company. A list is given of numerous prominent buildings that have made use of Greek marbles, among them being the new Sessions House, Old Bailey, photographs of which are reproduced; the National Gallery; the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Westminster; and several banks. The catalogue should interest not only architects, but the general public as well, as it calls attention to the range of colour offered by Greek marbles. Those who care to see a number of varieties in a small space should visit the church built by Mr. Edwin Freshfield at Lower Kingswood, Surrey.

The East Indian Coal Company recommends a dividend of 7½ per cent., less tax, for the half-year ended October 31.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Monday Night.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in fair request at about the last prices. Tate's cubes have been done at 56s., at which they are 6d. lower; Lyle's granulated is also 6d. down at 50s., while London granulated has shed 6d. at 49s. 9d. Foreign descriptions have remained fairly steady. West Indian crystallised is 6d. up at 45s. 6d., while white Mauritius is 1s. 1½d. down at 47s. White Java has shed 3d. at 47s. 10½d. Quotations are:—May 22s. 6d., August 22s. 6d.

Coffee.—A quiet tone has ruled. East Indian is unchanged at 108s., Costa Rica is unaltered at 100s., while Nairobi remains at 92s. Futures are: March 58s. 10½d., May 58s. 10½d., July 58s. 4½d.

Desiccated Coconut.—A firm tone has prevailed, and with stocks reduced the tendency has been for prices to advance.

Rice.—The demand recorded in last week's report has continued, American rices being in special request. Rates have hardened, and with supplies diminishing it is not difficult to foresee higher prices.

Green Fruit.—The demand for oranges has improved somewhat, and as shipments are now on a reduced scale a rise in prices is to be anticipated. The fruit that is now coming to hand is excellent. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 15s. to 35s. box (300's to 360's). Lemons have been in much better request, and supplies have decreased, prices showing a rising tendency. Quotations are: 13s. to 25s. box (300's), 30s. to 47s. 6d. case (300's). The position with regard to apples remains much the same.

Dried Fruit.—There has been much more activity in this market than in the previous weeks. Currants have been a specially good spot, and have moved off easily. Supplies are far from plentiful, and prices have hardened. There is a good supply of sultanias on hand, but the market is quite firm. An improved demand for figs is to be noted, and Persian dates are in increasing request.

Oilseeds.—The market has been very steady. Indian linseed is unchanged at 21s. 6d., while La Plata is unaltered at 18s. Rapeseed has been quiet with Toria 4½d. down at 17s. Cottonseed has been fairly firm. Indian is 1½d. up at 9s. Egyptian black is 11s. 10½d., while Sakellaridis is 11s. 6d., at which it is 1½d. up.

Oils.—A firm tone has ruled. Linseed oil is unchanged at 38s. Rape oil has been steady with crude unchanged at 42s. 6d. and technical refined the same at 45s. 6d. Cotton oil has been quiet. Refined common edible remains at 44s. Egyptian crude is unchanged at 39s., technical is the same at 40s., while deodorised remains at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The tone has been steady. Linseed cake is unchanged at 280s., coconut cake remains at 190s., cottonseed cake is the same at 160s., while cottonmeal cake is unaltered at 270s.

There has been a marked increase in the production of tobacco in Algeria during the last four years, as compared with the pre-war production. In 1913 the area planted totalled 26,785 acres, with a yield of 23,955,184 lb., but in 1921 the area planted was 53,832 acres, yielding 49,629,955 lb. The production for 1922 will, however, it is considered, be considerably below that total.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN BULGARIA.

Unreal Level of Exchange.

The Bulgarska Banka, in its report dated January 1, states:—The position at the end of 1922 is that there are very few new orders, there is little merchandise en route, and existing stocks are decreasing, the tendency being to abstain from commitments in all directions because of the lack of liquid money and bank credits. It has become almost impossible to sell for cash, and the bills obtained in selling on credit are practically unnegotiable, or in those very rare cases where a merchant has obtained a little discount the rate of interest absorbs a large part of his profits. The position is very serious for the large commercial houses.

As regards the country's economic position, the decreased imports and the remarkable activity of the export trade have brought about a very favourable state of affairs, the influence of which on the rate of exchange has been clearly in evidence during the past two months.

The recent depreciation of the lev is probably due to the disquieting news that the Reparations Commission insists on the immediate payment of the amounts already due, and of the 1923 portion. Rumours of devaluation have been spread throughout the country of late, which has caused trouble among depositors of money on current account, and has increased the withdrawal of funds, as well as the purchase of foreign exchange: it is by that means that holders of banknotes have sought to avoid the eventual loss that would result from devaluation. This has greatly contributed to the depreciation of the lev. The economic situation of the country in general does not supply an adequate reason for the low value of the currency. A comparison of the parities in the centres where the lev is quoted gives the best illustration of this. While the Swiss franc is quoted in Sofia round 2,800, Geneva gives for Sofia the rate of 0.04 firm, and Swiss francs can be bought at that rate (2,500) in selling leva on Swiss centres. That situation has lasted for some days, and at the present time the lev is more in demand than offered abroad, especially for the payment of exports of tobacco. Nearly the whole of the stock exported has been sold in lev, and not a third of the value has so far returned to Bulgaria.

It is absolutely necessary that a solution in accordance with the economic position should be found for the Reparations question. If the state of uncertainty is prolonged the stabilisation of the exchange will be impossible, and the import trade will continue to present to the importer all the aspects of pure speculation, without anything on which to base forecasts. A large number of importers have had bitter experiences during 1921 and 1922, and their abstention from giving orders abroad is due to a great extent to that lesson.

EGYPTIAN CROPS.

The bulletin of the Egyptian Ministry of Agriculture gives the following particulars of crop conditions in December:—

Maize (Nili).—Most of the crop has been harvested, and is being sent to the markets. The yield is expected to be a little below the average.

Millet (Nili).—Harvesting is progressing and will soon be over. The crop is expected to be normal.

Wheat and Barley.—The weather, though variable and cold in some districts, has not materially affected the growth of the crop. Progress of sowing proceeded on normal lines. Occurrences of pests (cut-worms) have been few and unimportant. The present state of the crop is, on the whole, satisfactory.

Rice (Nili).—The crop has been harvested. The yield is above the average.

Bersim.—Sowing of late crops was completed under unfavourable conditions. The cold changeable weather affected in some districts growth, especially in late-sown crops. Cutting is almost general, and a second cutting is being taken from the early-sown fields. No enemies have been reported. The crop is normal in early-sown fields.

Beans.—Unfavourable atmospheric conditions somewhat retarded the growth of the plants. Flowering has started in the early-sown fields. Broom-rape has been reported from Minûfiya Province. The general state of the crop is satisfactory.

Sugar-cane.—Cutting for local consumption is progressing. Harvesting for sugar factories started in some localities. Attacks of stem-borer and mealy-bug were reported from most sugar-cane districts. An almost average crop is expected.

Lentils.—Flowers appeared in early-sown fields. No pests are reported, and the crop is growing satisfactorily.

Onions.—This crop also suffered from cold changeable weather which helped the development of mildew in some parts of Girga Province. Transplanting has practically been completed. The state of the crop is fairly satisfactory.

Helba.—Flowering is general, and pods have formed in early-sown fields. The general state of the crop is satisfactory.

SUDAN PRODUCE.

The following extracts are taken from the report of the Central Economic Board for November:—

Gum.

The exports of gum during November were as follows:—Via Port Sudan, 222,965 kilos of hashab of the value of £E11,056, 10,350 kilos of bleached of the value of £E675, and 201,663 kilos of talh of the value of £3,648.

Kordofan Province.—The amount of gum sold in El Obeid market during November was 64 kantars, as against 1,940 kantars same month last year, at an average price of £E1.508 m/ms. per kantar of 100 rottles (45 kilos). The arrivals at El Obeid from Nahud were 152 kantars, as against 572 kantars last year. 250 kantars were sold in Nahud market during the month, as against 846 kantars last year, the average price being £E1.300. 95 kantars were sold at Um Muaba at £E1.550 m/ms., as against 172 kantars last year. 741 kantars were sold at Rahad at prices ranging from £E1.540 to £E1.250 per kantar, as against 94 kantars last year.

The Fung Province.—100 kantars of talh gum were exported from Karkoj.

Cotton.

Red Sea Province.—Tokar.—Cotton has suffered from want of rain and the Hababi winds, which have been more persistent this year than usual. As the flood has again gone to the Eastern portion of the Delta, it is anticipated that the crop will not exceed 50,000 kantars of 100 rottles unginne, as compared with 109,000 kantars last season.

Dongola Province.—Nuri.—500 feddans are under cotton. Cotton is now being picked, and is coming in well. It is all looking well, is free from pests, and it is thought should give an average yield of 3 kantars (of 315 rottles) per feddan.

Gureir.—394 feddans are under cotton, which is looking well. A little has been picked, and is free from pests. Ghaba.—352 feddans are under cotton. Cotton is looking very healthy and free from pests, and picking should be general in December. A small quantity was picked at the end of the month.

Berber Province.—Mikeilab.—293 feddans are under cotton, which has begun to yield. There should be an average crop. Kitiab.—446 feddans are under cotton. Picking is now general, and 53 kantars of 315 rottles were delivered to store during the month. Gendettu.—667 feddans are under cotton. Cotton picking has commenced; 84 kantars have been weighed in to date, and there is a considerable quantity in the collecting zaribas. The sample as yet is not very good, being partly from immature and slightly damaged bolls, but the next picking is more promising. The weather is much colder than normally at this season, and this may delay the maturing of cotton to some extent. Plants are full of healthy bolls, and should give an average yield providing conditions are suitable. Bouga.—484 feddans are under cotton. The American cotton is opening well; 60 kantars of 315 rottles have been brought in to date. Sakellaridis cotton is later; the earliest sown is now beginning to open.

Wheat and Barley.

Berber Province.—Gendettu.—Work for winter crops is proceeding satisfactorily, wheat being the staple crop. Kitiab.—Wheat is now being sown, and is mostly in. Mikeilab.—The wheat is up. Bouga.—About 160 feddans of wheat have been sown between November 15 and 23. All of it is now up.

Dongola Province.—Nuri and Gureir.—20 and 80 feddans respectively are under wheat. Ghaba.—20 feddans will be under wheat. Most of the ground is prepared, and almost the whole area will be watered early in December.

Dura.

Darfur Province.—October.—Dura was sold at El Fasher at an average price of 525 m/ms. per ardeb of 300 rottles (135 kilos), the highest price being 600 m/ms. during the first week and the lowest price 450 m/ms. in the fourth week.

Red Sea Province.—Much dura has been spoilt by lack of rain. From reports it is believed that the crop is a poor one.

White Nile Province.—The rains in most places were sufficient for average crops, but the low price of grain held out no special inducement to the cultivators, while the prevalence of malaria interfered to a serious extent with the cleaning of the growing crops, and a great deal of promising grain was, in consequence, choked.

The Fung Province.—The highest and lowest market prices of dura in Singa per ardeb of 300 rottles (135 kilos) were 315 m/ms. and 285 m/ms. respectively. 128 ardebs of dura were imported into Singa and 10 ardebs into Karkoj. 69 ardebs of dura were exported from Singa.

Berber Province.—Gendettu.—172 feddans are under dura and maize. Dura is being harvested and is a fair crop.

Dongola Province.—Nuri.—239 feddans are under dura, which is only a fair crop. Gureir.—About 150 feddans are under dura.

Maize.

Berber Province.—Mikeilab.—The maize looks promising. Gendettu.—Maize is now being harvested, and is a fair crop.

Dongola Province.—Ghaba.—Maize will be a moderate crop. There is a slight attack of stemborer in early-sown maize.

Sesame.

Kordofan Province.—328 ardebs of 330 rottles (148 kilos) of red sesame were sold in El Obeid market at an average price of £E1.300 per ardeb.

The Fung Province.—1,897 ardebs of simsim were imported into Singa and 152 ardebs into Karkoj. 2,469 ardebs of simsim were exported from Singa, and 1,312 ardebs exported from Karkoj. The market prices of simsim at Singa in November were:—Highest, £E1.350; lowest, £E1.300 m/ms. per ardeb of 30 rottles (135 kilos)

Ground Nuts.

White Nile Province.—The market price at Kesti and Tendelti per ardeb of 200 rottles (90 kilos) was PT. 95.

Kordofan Province.—427 ardebs of ful Sudani were sold in El Obeid market at an average price of PT. 80 per ardeb of 210 rottles (94 kilos).

The Fung Province.—17 ardebs of ful Sudani were exported from Karkoj during November.

Dates.

Halfa Province.—A November report states that the date crop has practically all been sold. In Sukkot district prices of Gondeila opened at £E1.800 and fell to £E1.600, Barakawi at £1.500 falling to £E1.350 per sack.

TRADE OF BUSHIRE IN 1921-22.

In a review of the trade of Bushire in 1921-22, H.M. Consul at Bushire points out that at the beginning of the period the Bushire market was still overstocked with goods ordered during the year 1919-20, when the rate of exchange was very favourable to the Persians. Unfortunately, payment for goods was usually arranged on delivery, and owing to the scarcity of shipping these goods took a long time to be delivered, and in the meantime the rate of exchange had turned and the value of the kran had dropped very considerably. In consequence many merchants had to face very heavy losses and a good many failed, while British firms in many cases had to make easy terms with the importers in order to have their goods taken over. This applied also to Shiraz, for which Bushire is the chief port. In consequence the year under review was a bad one for trade.

The import trade amounted to 19,473 tons, valued at £1,526,594, as compared with 21,154 tons, valued at £2,462,797, in the previous year. The proportion of these imports supplied by the United Kingdom and India was 74.64 per cent., as compared with 71.86 per cent. in the previous year. Of the principal commodities imported, wheat, printing paper, furniture and indigo alone show increases.

The export trade amounted to 3,962 tons, valued at £680,097, as compared with 3,496 tons, valued at £698,571, in the previous year, whilst the share of the United Kingdom and India of these exports amounted to 38.76 per cent., as compared with 37.25 per cent. in the previous year. The principal exports which recorded increases included dates, raisins, almonds and pistachios, gum tragacanth and wool carpets, whilst decreases are recorded in the case of gum insoluble and raw cotton.

During the period under review 177 ships of a net tonnage of 398,289 entered the Port of Bushire, and 128 ships of a net tonnage of 278,208 were cleared. Of the ships entered and cleared 175 and 127 respectively flew the British flag.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

Stock and Share Markets.

GILT-EDGED STRONG.

Rubbers Active.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

The French advance has had singularly little effect on the markets up to the present. Indeed, from the cheerful tone that has prevailed in almost all sections, one might be inclined to think that matters were developing smoothly on the Continent. But the Franco-German position cannot be dismissed as a potential market factor, and there will be very general relief if the French advance leads to a settlement.

New Issues.

We have had quite a number of interesting new issues of late, notably the offer of A.P. Ordinary, which went off like hot cakes. So much cannot be said of the Kassala Railway issue, which was almost entirely neglected by the investor, who, for some time, has shown himself rather averse to issues of this nature. On Saturday a Sudan Government loan of the same type appeared, and it would seem very doubtful whether it will have a better fate. Among the new issues that are pending is one of a Roumanian oil company, and one or two more in connection with cotton cultivation in the Sudan.

Rubbers Buoyant.

To say that the rubber market has been buoyant during the past week is to put it mildly. There has been an advance literally all along the line as a result of the steady improvement in the price of the raw commodity, which now stands at over 1s. 3d. It is possible that for the time being, in some cases, at least, shares have gone ahead too fast, but if that is so, it is not less certain that the advance will be continued until the raw commodity reaches 1s. 6d. That means that shares will soon be back at the pre-slump level. I have named two or three shares on previous occasions which would repay a purchase. As a matter of fact, if the investor pays due attention to the valuation for acreage, he can scarcely do wrong.

Gilt-Edged Firm.

Gilt-edged have been a good market. Consols at 56½ have gained ¾. War Loan Fives at 100¾ are 5-16 up, the Conversion Loan is 77, a gain of 1 11-16, while Fundings at 88½ are 2 up.

The Foreign group has, of course, been affected by the prevailing conditions. French Loans have fallen away, War Loan Fives at 26¾ being a point down, while the 4 per Cents. at 21½ have shed a similar amount. German 3 per Cents. are unchanged at ¾, while Italian Rentes remain at 21½. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified have firmed up to 25¾, a gain of 1¾, while Greek Monopolies are 2 up at 26½.

APPOINTMENT VACANT.

Turkish delight manufacturers, established in Ireland for twenty years, require an energetic, reliable man, thoroughly experienced in the making of real Rahat Lokoum. Armenian or Greek preferred. Send copy testimonials, age, wages expected, and photo, to Batmazian, King Street, Cork.

Industrials Harder.

There has been a considerable increase in business in this group, and, generally speaking, very cheerful conditions have ruled. Textiles have been a firm spot, with Courtaulds at 63s. and Coats at 65s. 3d. Iron, Steel, and Engineering have again made a good showing. Vickers are 17s. 3d., Armstrongs are 20s., and Guest Keens are 40s. In Shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are 327, while Furness Withy are 39s. 6d.

Oils Steady.

A fairly steady tone has ruled in the Oil market. Anglo-Persian are 4½, Burmahs are 5 1-16, while Mexican Eagles are 2 3-32. In the Roumanian group Phoenix are 25s. 10½d., while Roumanian Consolidated are 12s. 6d. Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields are 1 7-16.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

The half-yearly report of the East Indian Railway Company to September 30 last shows that the net earnings, including those of the South Behar Railway, were Rs. 2,92,28,383. After deducting fixed charges a divisible surplus remains of Rs. 77,78,011, of which the company's share is Rs. 3,53,280, equal at the contract rate of exchange to £29,440. It is proposed to pay a dividend for the half-year on the Deferred Annuities and the Class "D" Deferred Annuities of £3 per cent., subject to English income-tax, made up as follows:—From the company's share in net earnings, 16s. per cent.; compensation in respect of Indian income-tax, 4s. per cent.; and guaranteed interest, £2 per cent.

The traffic receipts of the Suez Canal from January 8 to 12 amounted to 2,060,000 francs, as compared with 2,170,000 francs.

Mr. F. Eckstein, chairman of the Sudan Plantations, Ltd., has left London for the Sudan, and will be away for two or three months.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended December 20 amounted to £E10,460, making the total for the year £E245,751.

Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields output: Gensah (week ended January 12) 9 tons (last week 10 tons). Hurghada (week ended January 12), 1,611 tons (last week 2,384 tons).

The Hon. Oscar Guest has arrived in Bucharest to await expected developments on the Gura Ocniței property of the Hamilton Concessions Company, and to conclude certain negotiations for the company.

Messrs. John Baker and Sons, of Rotherham, have received an order from the East Indian Railway Company for 2,300 pairs of broad-gauge wheels and axles with rolled steel disc centres. The order represents approximately £100,000.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

The feature of the week has been the violent depreciation of German marks following the Ruhr occupation. French francs have depreciated to some extent, while Italian lire have also weakened.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½
Athens	Drachmae to £.....	25.22½	360-375
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	440-460*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	50,000-67,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	24.79-24.82
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4¾-1.4¾
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	73.50-75.45
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	835
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	12,000-13,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4¾-1.4¾
Constantinople	Piastres to £	110	735-765
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.66½-4.67½
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	67.10-69.10
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	162½-164½
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	94.95
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	700-750
Teheran	Krans to £	50	59
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	320-340,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	99 000

* Nominal.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Haifa, December 16.

The grain market has been active, but sellers have had to make considerable concessions on the high prices that ruled at the end of the last week.

Aintab, November 30.

During the month this market has displayed the same features as in October. Transactions have been unimportant. A marked decrease is to be recorded in the export of tanned hides. The principal consuming centres for this commodity are Aleppo, Tunis, and particularly Alexandria.

Damascus, November 30.

The prices of cereals have been maintained at the same level as in the previous month. The abundant rain that has fallen during the current month has favoured the wheatfields. A rise of 15 per cent. has to be recorded in the butter market, which is usual at this period. A marked rise in colonial produce, notably petrol, has taken place in this market during the month. Holders of stocks, anticipating still better prices, are showing themselves reserved as regards sales.

There has been considerable activity in retail business in the market, due to purchases for winter; importers are very satisfied with the recovery, the effects of which will naturally react on trade in general.

Alexandria, December 28.

The activity recorded during the last two months as regards manufactures has continued up to the last two weeks, since when it has fallen off a little in consequence of the European holiday season and the approach of the end of the year. Stocks continue to decrease, and certain commodities are totally lacking here, which keeps prices firm at the same level.

Nicosia, January 3.

Only some insignificant transactions were recorded during December. Business is affected by the uncertain political situation. Other elements, also, of a local nature, such as the fall in the prices of the island's products, contribute to the dullness of the market. The agricultural situation looks promising, for during the month there has been a good rainfall, and sowing followed under favourable conditions. But the economic situation of the peasants needs improving. In order to support themselves they require credit, which, however, they cannot obtain either from the exporters or the Government. The price of 14s. per cantar paid lately for carobs is not remunerative for the growers. Exports of wheat and barley to Greece (via Egypt) continue. This branch of business, which is transacted by a limited number of merchants, or rather by the buyers of tithes, will leave the latter a handsome profit. The market at Marseilles for cocoons has been quiet during the month. The depreciation of the franc makes the prices ruling at present of little interest to the exporters, who prefer to wait.

The lack of exports tends to create a difficult financial situation, owing to the impossibility of finding the necessary counterpart of exchange to cover imports. The available cash in the hands of banks increases steadily. It is not possible to invest it, since the general situation dictates prudence. On the whole, the coming year, or at least the first half of it, does not promise well. The only bright spot in the situation is the activity in carob exports, these having reached £12,000. A similar figure is expected in January. It is to be hoped it will continue.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.

A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
J. UNGAR
E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
HAMID BEY.
NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
E. W. H. BARRY.
THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
C.M.G.
THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
O.B.E.
SIR W. GUY GRANET.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
K.B.E., C.I., M.P.
LORD HILLINGDON.
GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
K.P., P.C.
LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
JEAN BOISSONNAS.
CHARLES DE CERJAT.
HORACE FINALY.
GEORGES HEINE.
ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
RAOUL MALLE.
LE COMTE FREDERIC
PILLET-WILL.
FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.

Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.

Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
7, Rue Meyerbeer.
CONSTANTINOPLE.
(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Company Meetings.

LAND BANK OF EGYPT.

The following is a translation of the report of the Land Bank of Egypt for the year ended September 30, which was presented at the annual meeting held at Alexandria on December 5:—

The year presents characteristics similar to those of the previous year. Dependent on foreign countries for the sale of its staple product (cotton), Egypt has of necessity suffered a marked decrease in her revenues, owing to the lesser value of the commodity on the world markets, but a considerable restriction of imports tends ultimately to re-establish a favourable balance of trade. After fluctuations, often difficult to follow and to explain by economic factors alone, prices tend to something like stabilisation at a rate favourable to the Egyptian producer. The mortgage business of the company, which diminished for a time during the war, and recovered subsequently, has enabled us to conclude 129 loans and 101 sales for £E458,929.435, bringing our mortgage transactions to £E3,710,370.991. Annuities to be collected stand at the time of closing the accounts at £E336,679.381, represented by £E102,006.766, arrears of previous years, and £E234,672.615 applying to the current year. Our property has risen from £E45,789.723 to £E50,784.451, as was to be expected in the period which we are passing through, but a development which we are now in a measure regarding with some confidence. After various allocations, which come under the following headings: movables, brokerage on mortgage loans, liquidation of book debts, the price at cost of the real property of the company, and which stand together at £E7,312.418, we have to deduct from the favourable balance of the profit and loss account the ordinary provision for the redemption of bonds and of their charges, which is this year £E15,734.117. We have further increased our allocations for contingencies by £E11,000 for loan risks, and by £E957.112 intended to bring to 10 per cent. the variable reserve created some years ago with a view to guarding against possible losses on the collection of annuities. The divisible profit thus stands at £E133,873.817, practically equal to that of the previous year, which was £E133,468.014. We propose a distribution of 10s. per share and of £4 3s. for each founders' share, the amounts to carry forward being respectively £E14,281.171 and £E5,863.797. The board of directors has full confidence that, in view of the satisfactory results obtained, you will adopt its recommendations, and will accept the proposals that are presented to you both as regards the allocations and provisions that are deemed necessary, and as regards the division of the profits realised during the year. Our staff, to the devotion and the competence of which it is a pleasure to us to render here a public tribute, have continued their satisfactory service, for which we thank them all. The chairman, M. le Comte Charles de Lasteyrie, who during the war played an important part in financial affairs, has been appointed to the important post of Minister of Finance in France. It is a worthy reward for a career of able and fruitful activity of which your company has been honoured, specially in observing the results during a period of ten years. We are sure we shall be interpreting your desires in expressing to our former chairman our best wishes for his complete success in the high mission with which he has been entrusted at a time of delicate circumstances, but in conditions much gratifying for him who has thus been entrusted with the confidence of his country. M. R. Abdy, our vice-chairman, has been willing to accept the chairmanship in the place of M. le Lasteyrie, while M. Péricles Zarif takes the place of M. R. Abdy as vice-chairman. To fill the place on the Paris Committee, we have appointed M. Cazalet, president of the Société Marseillaise de Crédit Industriel et Commercial, to which we have been linked since our foundation by business and by common interest. M. E. Cazalet will be the worthy continuer among us of the work and the traditions of the lamented M. J. Charles Roux. S. E. Ahmed Ziwer Pasha, the former Minister, whose honourable and arduous career is held in esteem throughout the country, has consented to give us the valuable co-operation of his deep experience of Egyptian affairs by taking part in the work of the board of Alexandria. We do not doubt that these different appointments that we submit to your votes will meet with your entire approval.

Profit and Loss Account.

The receipts of the year arising from interest on mortgage loans, short-term advances, etc., have been £E374,120.703. The service of the bonds, general expenses, fiscal taxes paid or due to the French Government, and various redemptions, which stand at £E35,003.647, which we propose to you, absorb a total amount of £E240,246.886, leaving profits to be distributed at £E133,873.817. From that sum there has first to be deducted the statutory 5 per cent. in favour of our 195,000 shares, £E47,531.250, and there remains to be divided £E86,342.567. In accordance with our statutes 10 per cent. is placed to the statutory reserve £E8,634.256, and 10 per cent. goes to the board of directors £E8,634.256, £E17,268.512, leaving £E69,074.055; 70 per cent. to the shares £E48,351.838, to which has to be added the amount brought forward from the year 1920-21 £E13,460.583, making £E61,812.421. We propose to you to give out of this sum to the 195,000 shares 5s. per share, £E47,531.250, which, added to the statutory interest of 5 per cent. already mentioned, will represent a total dividend of 10s. per share. The carry forward for the shares will thus be £E14,281.171. An interim dividend of 3s. having been paid on June 15, it will remain to pay a dividend of 7s. per share. The 30 per cent. belonging to the founders' shares represents £E20,722.217, to which has to be added the amount brought forward from the year 1920-21, £E5,372.830. We propose to distribute a dividend of £4 3s. on each founders' share, and to carry forward £E5,863.797.

The general meeting (1) approved the accounts and balance-sheet for the year ended September 30, 1922, and gave the directors their discharge for their administration. (2) Approved the division of profits proposed by the directors, and fixed the dividends as follows: 10s. on the ordinary shares, £4 3s. on the founders' shares. An interim dividend of 3s. per share having been paid on June 15, it will remain to pay as a final settlement for the year 1921-22 7s. per share. (3) Decided to carry forward £E14,281.171, or 370,218.08 francs for the ordinary shares and £E5,863.797, or 152,010.29 francs, for the founders' shares. (4) Re-elected MM. M. C. Salvago, R. J. Labruyère, and R. Ismalun, the retiring directors, and ratified the appointment as directors of MM. Ed. Cazalet and S. E. Ahmed Ziwer Pasha. (5) Nominated as auditors MM. Franz Sofio, H. Pouglin, and H. Ferreux. (6) Fixed the directors' fees at £5 per meeting.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Egypt.

School Materials.—The Sub-Director of Stores, Ministry of Education, Sharia Qasr el Aini, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of large quantities of school materials, such as exercise books, Arabic reed pens, pencils, black ink of local manufacture, white and coloured chalk, pens, rulers, pieces of indiarubber, slates, etc., required for the school-year 1923-1924. January 31.

Clothing, etc.—The Director of Stores, Department of Public Health, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of clothing, equipment, etc., required for one year from April 1, 1923. February 3.

General Stores, etc.—Tenders are invited by the Ministry of the Interior, Egypt, for the supply to the Department of Public Health of various general stores for the year 1923-24. The stores required cover a fairly wide range, and include clothing, hardware, glassware, furniture, boots and shoes, brushes, oils and paints, etc. February 3. (D.O.T.)

Steel Pigeon-hole Cupboards.—The Postmaster-General, G.P.O., Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply and erection at Port Said Post Office of seven sections of steel pigeon-hole cupboards for private letter-boxes, each section to consist of fifty-four boxes. Specifications can be seen at the office of the Egyptian Government Representative, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster, London, S.W. February 10.

Iraq.

Stores.—The Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, invites tenders for the supply of small quantities of stores to fill the annual demand of the Iraq Army Ordnance Department. The articles required include, among others, the following:—Brooms, brushes, spring balances, fire buckets, and stoves (1,000), meat choppers, school desks (100), hurricane and globe lamps (1,460), fire engines, fire alarms, butchers' implements, metal stamps, folding tables. February 28. (D.O.T.)

Roumania.

Tinmen's Rivets and Split Pins.—The Roumanian Railway Administration invites tenders for the supply of 8,500 packets, each containing 1,000 tinmen's rivets, and 5,545,000 split pins of various sizes. Tenders, which should be addressed La Direction Générale des Chemins de fer Roumains, Service P. (Calea Victoriei No. 124), Bucharest, will be received up to 11 a.m. on February 2. (D.O.T.)

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Business Very Limited.

The Commercial Company of Egypt, in their report for the week ended December 29, state:—

Since our last report the futures market has been poor in tone, the turnover of business passing being again very limited. The dullness of our market may be explained by the continued scarcity of fresh business with spinners since the beginning of December, in consequence of which heavy stocks have been accumulated here which weigh heavily and exercise a depressing effect on the market. The firmness of the New York market, where quotations are again 60 points up this week, has helped to keep the Ashmouni quotations steady, but has had little effect on Sakellarides; thus the difference between New York and Alexandria futures has further narrowed, and stands now for the near positions at about $6½ for Sakellarides and $1½ for Ashmouni (close Alexandria December 29 against New York December 28). In these differences no allowance is made for exchange and shipping expenses, which, if taken into consideration, would further reduce them. The above demonstrates the cheapness of Egyptian cotton compared with American—a cheapness, however, which is accounted for by the reluctance of consumers to use expensive goods and the fair size of this year's Egyptian crop. Speculators continue to keep practically out of the market, and export houses through lack of orders from abroad have dealt very little; the daily fluctuations are mostly caused by jobbers' operations.

Spot.—Minet-el-Bassal has been open for four days only this week owing to holidays, but we have had a somewhat improved demand, and sales amount to about 13,000 bales, of which we estimate 8,900 bales Sakellarides, 3,700 bales Uppers and 400 bales Brown. Cotton continues to be well held generally and is not easy to buy.

Sakellaridis.—All grades have been dealt in, but the business continues to centre on the medium qualities. Very high prices have been paid for fair quantities of extra class cotton. Prices are generally without quotable change, but are not inclined to ease, and the good grades are now getting harder to buy at reasonable rates.

Uppers.—All styles have changed hands. Prices of spot against contracts are without much change for fully good fair and above, and a little easier for good fair and below.

Brown.—A good business has been done. Prices are without much change except for fair and fully fair, which are a little easier.

White.—No business is reported.

Crop 1923.—The Government has this week published a note correcting the acreage of land under cotton to 1,800,000 feddans and estimating the crop at 4,900,000 kantars. The figures given previously were 1,465,136 feddans and 4,004,000 kantars. It is a correction made under pressure of realities; the arrivals from up-country have already reached 4,362,548 kantars, and the ginning factories in the interior are still well stocked with cotton. Should all the cotton existing at present in the interior come down before the new season, we expect to receive about 5½ million kantars.

Weak Market.

A later report, dated January 5, states:—

Since our last report, the futures market has been very dull in tone, this being especially the case for Sakellaridis cotton. The continued steadiness of the American markets has had the effect of keeping Ashmouni prices fairly firm; the latter, however, are now almost at par with the former if the difference of exchange is taken into account. The difference between Alexandria Sakellaridis contracts and New York American contracts has further appreciably narrowed, and if the demand for Sakellaridis continues as it has been of late it looks as if we are going to see also this cotton at almost par with Americans. The volume of business passing has been almost negligible; speculation does not take much interest in the market. Transfers from January to March have formed the bulk of the transactions; the premium of March over January reached 115 points, but has now dropped to 95 points. The first tender of January amounted to 18,750 kantars, but all this cotton has been readily received by an export company. Exports continue on a fairly satisfactory scale, and amount now to about 3,280,000 kantars since September 1, that is, 720,000 kantars more than during the same period last year. On the other hand, total arrivals from up-country now exceed 4,500,000 kantars, and we estimate that there are still about 1,250,000 kantars in the interior. Despite the present dull tone of our market, we consider that the actual level of prices of Egyptian cotton is reasonable, and we are of opinion that the high prices of the American will sooner or later compel spinners to interest themselves in our cotton, the consequences of which will be the lightening of our stocks and substantially higher prices in the long run.

Spot.—Minet-el-Bassal has not been so active this week, and sales for the five days amount to about 11,000 bales, of which we estimate 7,450 bales Sakellaridis, 3,400 bales Uppers, and 150 bales Brown. Both arrivals and exports show some decrease from last week, and the stock shows a slight increase. A weak and falling contract market has made spot cotton very hard to buy except in high grades, and stocks are generally very strongly held.

Sakellaridis.—The bulk of the business has lain in the low and medium qualities, which have been in active request and are hard to buy. Good grades are neglected and offered at reasonable prices. The prices of spot against contracts for good fair to good are without much change, but for fair, fully fair, and extra, they are appreciably dearer.

Uppers.—All grades have been dealt in, and medium qualities continue to be in good demand. Prices are without much change.

Brown.—A small business has been done at unchanged rates.

White.—No business is reported.

Crop, 1923.—The preparation of the cotton lands has been started in the southern regions of the Delta. The last Government report on the state of the Nile is not very bright, and may mean that the new crop cotton plantations may again suffer from excessively long irrigation rotations. The extent of the damage that this system may cause depends on the temperature during the summer months.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

More Optimistic Feeling.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended January 13 states:—

The healthier tone noted last week has been continued, and there is generally a more optimistic feeling; it is said that buyers' and sellers' ideas of prices are much nearer meeting than for some time back. The bulk of the increased inquiry comes from India, other outlets not as yet having shown much improvement. The Board of Trade returns for last month have now been issued, and show that the quantities of goods shipped during last year were considerably more than in 1921; but, of course, the latter was an exceedingly bad year, so that too much encouragement cannot be drawn from this fact. In view of the increased inquiry noted within the last week or two, it is perhaps rather unfortunate that raw cotton has shown a tendency to go higher. Several times during the past two or three years a similar movement has started what appeared to be a revival of confidence on the part of buyers abroad; it is to be hoped that a similar result will not recur.

Yarn.—This section has reflected the more cheerful tone, and although the business actually done is "patchy," it is at least of an encouraging character. Many offers from abroad have again been unacceptable. Shipments last month amounted to 11,711,000 lb., against 15,113,600 lb. in November and 16,048,000 lb. in December. The total shipments for 1922 were 201,220,000 lb., against 145,895,000 lb.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	Dr. C. A. ANDEKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

in the previous year. Shipments were larger to India, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland, but there was a reduction in those to Turkey and the Balkan countries.

As mentioned above, the Indian inquiry has been of a fairly substantial character and on a better basis of prices, though the actual volume of trade is said to have been less than expected in some quarters. Egypt has done quite a good business, but China remains very slow, and other miscellaneous markets continue to do little. Shipments last month amounted to 360,517,000 sq. yds., against 398,726,300 sq. yds. in November and 330,273,000 sq. yds. in December. The total for last year was 4,181,176,000 sq. yds., against 2,902,289,000 sq. yds. in 1921.

Raw Cotton.—As mentioned above, this market has been strong. Demand has improved, presumably following the better state of affairs in the yarn market. Closing prices are as follows:—American Fully Middling, 15.65d.; Egyptian Fully Good Fair, 17.50d.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Improved Inquiry.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended January 10:—During the early part of the week the enquiry was poor, but during the last few days a considerable improvement occurred, mainly for Uppers 14.00d. to 15.00d. At the moment, there is a small quantity offering here at these prices, but should the demand be sustained, even for two or three days, the market will speedily be swept clean of this cotton (which seems ridiculously cheap compared with American), and the basis should harden rapidly. This has already occurred to-day in Alexandria where, despite a considerable break in the futures market, prices remain surprisingly firm, superficially at all events. Occasionally, a low bid cabled out discovers a weak spot. In connection with the above the following cable received yesterday (January 9) from the Commercial Co., of Egypt, may be of interest:—"Alexandria stock Upper Egypt Good Fair and below, owing to American purchases, almost exhausted. Better grades medium staple plentiful, but likely to become scarcer and dearer, owing to small difference with Americans. Expect about 30,000 bales further arrivals from Upper Egypt."

Sakellaridis cotton, except for bargain lots of the lower qualities, 15½d.—16½d., has been but little in request, although here and there an occasional order struggles through for an odd 25 bales or so of the better grade cotton. We fear that the time when the trade can buy freely of the grade-and-staple variety is still some way off. Low cottons are still in quiet and steady demand, and this week rather more has been done in Sudan, and also in Brown (Afifi) cotton. The selection of the last, of course, is very restricted, and few shippers care to sell c.i.f. White and Pilon cottons have been neglected. Some slight improvement has been noted in c.i.f. business. For the week ending January 5, 11,224 bales of Egyptian cotton were forwarded to spinners in Great Britain, and the weekly average since August 1 now verges on 7,000 bales. On the other hand, stocks in Liverpool and Manchester now stand at 150,000 bales, and there are already another 40,000 bales at sea bound for these ports. Total sales, 2,300 bales (includes 600 Sudan). Quotations of Brown and Upper and Sakellaridis are reduced 25 points, those of Sakellaridis Good Fair and above are reduced 40 points on the week. Fully Good Fair Sakellaridis to-day 17½d.

ADEN MARKET FOR SHOE POLISH.

A constantly increasing amount of shoe polish is needed to supply the demand in the Aden district as the natives become more and more accustomed to the use of boots and shoes (says an American Consular report). There are at present on sale in the bazaars two kinds of brown polish, two kinds of black, and two kinds of white for use on canvas shoes. The brown or black polishes come in paste form in tins and also as a liquid in small bottles. The liquid polish is supposed to be of a superior grade and consequently higher in price. The white, which comes in zinc cans or in paper wrapping, has the greatest sale because of the climatic conditions, which make the use of white canvas shoes very popular.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

The net revenue of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company for the half year ended September 30 totalled Rs.1,03,85,584, an increase of Rs.75,19,646 compared with the corresponding period of 1921. The net revenue (excluding State lines) amounted to Rs.92,45,301, and after providing for interest charges there is a deficit of Rs.84,02,241. Meeting, 48, Copthall Avenue, E.C., January 19, noon

PROMINENT INDIAN INDUSTRIES

LALIMLI PURE WOOL

Manufacturers of
"Everything made of Wool"
from Coolie Blankets to Fine
Worsts including Braid
Felt, Hosiery & Knitted Goods
Tweeds and Tartan Rugs.

The CAWNPORE WOOLLEN MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

N.W.T.

FOR HARNESS, SADDLERY,
TRUNKS, SUIT CASES,
FANCY LEATHER GOODS,
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Taxidermists etc.

The NORTH WEST TANNERY &
CAWNPORE.

Kakomi Cawnpore

Manufacturers of

TENTS,
DURRIES,
TWEEDS, DRILLS, FLANNELETTES,
SHEETINGS, TOWELS ETC.,

The CAWNPORE COTTON MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

Dhariwal

LONG LIFE WOOL WEAR

BLANKETS, TRAVELLING
RUGS, KNITTED GOODS, TWEEDS
SERGES WORSTEDS BRAIDS
HOSIERY ETC.

The NEW EGERTON WOOLLEN MILLS &
DHARIWAL, PUNJAB.

Branches of The British India Corporation, Limited.
CAWNPORE.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - - - - £310,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohammerah, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shuster Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Busreh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd. LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - - - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - £485,580
RESERVE - - - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
 1, Devonshire Square,
 London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
 weekly for _____ months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION RATES U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum;
 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
 Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NORCOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - - Rs. 5.62.35.500
Reserve - - - - Rs. 4.11.82.805

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
 London Branch: 5, Whitlington Avenue, E.C.3.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
 Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	£2,600,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.	SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.	ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.	ROBERT MILLER, Esq.
SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD.	J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.	J. N. STUART, Esq.	J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe Kampala Jinja	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital
12,000,000 Leva
Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS, ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIATION DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - - L.lt. 400 millions.
Reserves - - - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA,
 Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk, Philippopolis and Sliven

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 611—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	77	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Lausanne, Turkey, and Bul-		Notes and News	91
Egypt	81	garia	88	Yugoslavia's Economic Position	92
Yugoslavia	81	THE WEEK AT HOME	79	Shipping Intelligence	94
Albania	83	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	84	Commerce and Industry	95
Turkey	83	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	85	Stock and Share Markets	96
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	87	Near East Markets	97
Jackals	89			Company Meetings	98
				Cotton and Cotton Goods	99
				Tenders Invited	101

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Lausanne Conference.

Last week at Lausanne the field was held mainly by the Exchange of Populations Sub-Commission, and agreement on a large number of points was reached. The mutual return of civilian hostages and prisoners of war was readily accepted by both Greeks and Turks. Within seven days after the signing of the agreement Turkish civilians in Greek hands will be repatriated to Smyrna and Constantinople, the operation to be completed within fifteen days; by the end of that period all Greek civilians in Turkish hands will have been collected at the same ports, and will be ready to be taken away by the Greeks. The exchange of prisoners of war will then begin, and will be effected at Smyrna, man for man and officer for officer. It is estimated that the Turks will have a balance of twenty thousand Greek prisoners; these are to be detained in Turkey until the conclusion of peace, and repatriated within three weeks from that date. All these operations are to be supervised by an International Red Cross Commission, comprising three nationals of countries that did not take part in the War and Greek and Turkish representatives.

The Exchange of Populations.

The question of the exchange of populations, Greeks in Turkey and Turks in Greece, presented greater difficulty. It is a matter on which the Turks have been insistent, and the Greeks acquiesced, because they realised that they had no alternative. As far as Greeks are concerned, the exchange affects those domiciled in Asia Minor only, as the Constantinople area is exempted, and Eastern Thrace has already been evacuated by the Greek population. Controversy turned mainly on the method of compensation. The Allies favoured a plan that would make a Commission of Supervision responsible for seeing that each emigrant should receive the money due to him. Both Greeks and Turks, however, objected to this, and preferred an arrangement by which the total value of the property involved in each country should be ascertained, and that the Government of that country whose valuation was the higher should pay the balance directly to the Government of the other without the intervention of the Commission. A stipulation is made that compensation shall be, as far as possible, in kind—that is to say, a farm for a farmer, a shop for a shopkeeper.

False Economics.

An exchange of populations has always seemed the only satisfactory way of dealing with debatable frontier territory in the Balkans; but its application to the Greeks of Asia Minor approaches the reductio ad absurdum. Some justification might have been found for confining the Greeks to the coastal area, in view of the tendency of so many in the interior to combine usury with more legitimate forms of trading, with unpleasant results for their Turkish debtors. To eliminate Greek traders from the whole of Asia Minor, however, is to administer a serious set-back to the economic development of the country. Mustapha Kemal Pasha has admitted that the Turks have not yet produced economists. Possibly when they do they will set to work to undo the mistakes of Angora's representatives at Lausanne, if the Conference confirms the Greco-Turkish arrangement.

Conditions in Constantinople.

The Angora authorities, it would be thought, must find in the abnormal situation existing to-day in Turkey a strong inducement to cut short the policy of delay at Lausanne. Even in Constantinople the humiliating conditions under which the foreign population are now living can give only a modified satisfaction to the Turks, as the latter are also subjected to uncongenial restrictions. Credit may be given to new Turkey for some of its municipal regulations, such as the measures directed against gambling in public places. Already the roulette tables and games of chance that were to be found on the Taksim Parade Ground, in the Municipal Gardens, and in certain cabarets have been cleared away, and the work of suppressing the social evil in the streets begun by the Allied police is being carried on by the Turks. All this reforming zeal is to the good, but it will not go far, unless economic conditions enable new Turkey to put the rest of its house in order. The formation of two companies anxious to interest themselves in Turkey—the Corporation for the Economic Development of Turkey and the Anglo-French Near Eastern Syndicate, suggests that important developments promising pecuniary advantage to Turkey are only waiting for an accession of common sense on the part of the Turks at Lausanne; but the delegates continue to prejudice their country by procrastination.

Greece's Plight.

In spite of the urgent appeals on all sides for a definite and practical policy to meet the refugee problem in Greece, it is to be feared that little is being done to cope with the difficulty on scientific lines. Private charity continues to do its best, and in this respect it is well that it should be known that the Greeks are not sheltering themselves behind foreign aid. "It is as much as we can do to manage to live," runs a private letter from Athens; "there is not much to be got in the market," and a little later on: "the refugee problem is ghastly. We have eighteen in the stables and lofts, all women and children except two men, one of them 75 years old, the other paralysed." Perhaps the saddest feature is the physical and moral stupor into which the nation has largely fallen as a result of its disasters. So far since the defeat in Asia Minor it is not Greece that has spoken, but a handful of men on her behalf. The country, it would seem, is conscious of the need for action, but has not the strength to take it.

The King-Crane Report.

The publication in America last month of the King-Crane Report, embodying the findings of the Commission sent by President Wilson to investigate conditions in the Near East with a view to formulating a basis for the post-War settlement, is too belated to arouse more than passing curiosity at this juncture. In view, however, of occasional echoes of the old controversy, it may be useful to place on record the main recommendations of the Commissioners. These were, in regard to Syria, as follow:—

1. That whatever foreign Administration is brought into Syria should come in, not at all as a colonising Power in the old sense of that term, but as a mandatory under the League of Nations.
2. That the unity of Syria be preserved.
3. That Syria be placed under one mandatory.
4. That Emir Faisal be made head of the new united Syrian State.
5. Serious modification of the extreme Zionist programme for Palestine of unlimited immigration of Jews.
6. That the United States of America be asked to undertake the single mandate for all Syria.

Other recommendations have to-day a still more curious ring about them, for the Commissioners also contemplated an American mandate over "the Armenian State, the Constantinopolitan State, and the continued Turkish State."

A Confidential Appendix.

It may readily be admitted that in the circumstances actually prevailing in the Near East, a Commission of this nature, consisting of two people of the same nationality, was almost worthless, because it was inevitable that the majority of the people whom they questioned on the spot should try to say what they thought the Commissioners desired. But whatever criticisms may be passed on the recommendations, the report itself is not without interest. On the strength of the petitions presented to them, the Commissioners urged that, if for any reason the mandate for Syria were not given to America, it should be given to Great Britain "in harmony with the express request of the majority of the Syrian people." Their earlier hope, Messrs. H. C. King and C. R. Crane record, was that they would be able to recommend that France should be given the mandate for a unified Syria, but "more than 60 per cent. of all the petitions presented to the Commission directly and strongly protested against any French mandate." They added, however, that "if France feels so intensely concerning her present claims in Syria as to threaten all cordial relations among the Allies, it is, of course, possible to give her a mandate over the Lebanon (not enlarged), separated from the rest of Syria, as is desired by considerable groups in that region." The curious will find the most piquant section of the report in the "Confidential Appendix—prepared by the Commission for use of Americans only." Among the various sub-headings of this section are the following:—The Interference of the Occupying Governments with the Commission's Inquiry, Summaries of Arguments Presented to the Commission for and against Zionism, Arab Feeling Toward the French, French Feeling Toward the British, The Emir Faisal's Position, and, lastly, Syrian Nationalism, Pan-Arabism, and Pan-Islamism. It was most unkind of the Commissioners to suggest that this appendix should be for American consumption only.

India's Finances.

India's annual financial agony began earlier this year than usual. It used to be an unwritten rule to get Christmas well over before starting to talk seriously about the Budget, but since November last the subject has taken a prominent place in the Press, and, judging by what has been written, the Indian public tends to regard Lord Inchcape and his colleagues as a party of butchers. Everyone agrees that the larder must somehow be replenished, but each individual is concerned mainly to save his own pet lamb from the slaughter, and the air has been filled with anticipatory bleatings. It is impossible to withhold sympathy from the advocates of scientific research, long-distance telephones, and all the other developments which India needs so badly, but a balanced Budget is the first condition of orderly progress, and we think the public would be well advised to concentrate attention on this primary requirement. There are now strong grounds for hoping that the corner has been turned. Business is improving, the railways are moving more traffic, and though the change has come too late to clear off the deficit of the current year, it is permissible to anticipate that by the beginning of 1924 the necessary equilibrium will be in sight so far as the central Budget is concerned.

The Needs of the Provinces.

Taking a wider view of the position, it seems to us that there is more reason for anxiety regarding the provinces than the central Government. It is the provinces that have to find money for what it has become the fashion to call "nation-building"—education, sanitation, industrial development, and all the rest of it. The money is not there, the legislators shrink from raising it, and many of them still seem to base their hopes of progress chiefly on starving the police. Some new revenue has indeed been provided, but nations cannot be built out of enhanced court-fees or taxes on "the pictures," while suggestions for more remunerative measures seem to meet with a very cold reception. In the Punjab, for instance, the Government sells water for irrigation at rates which, originally perhaps fair enough, have now become ridiculously low. Of course, the peasants ought to be willing to pay more for their water, and thus provide funds for the new needs, but as a matter of fact they utterly object to do so. They can already compel legislators to respect their views, and their position is bound to become stronger with each constitutional advance.

The Peasant Mind.

One must sympathise with the enlightened dwellers in the towns, who are in such a hurry to go forward, but find themselves held back by a stubborn peasantry, which refuses even to think of paying the bill. Democracy, however, works in that way, and the best advice we can give to Indian politicians is to study its operation in the peasant countries of the West. In France, for instance, politicians are allowed to play their game only within limits set by the peasant-voters, and, while those limits may be very inconvenient, as the rest of the world is experiencing just now, Frenchmen know that they must be observed strictly, and that offending players will be promptly ordered off the field. In order to get peasants to pay, you must first convince them that they will receive good value for their money, and, though the necessary spade work may be heart-breaking for the enthusiast, he will get nothing done without it. When Indian politicians have begun to realise that truth, and to act on it successfully, it will be time enough to talk about extending their constitutional powers.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

Britain and Reparations.

It is difficult to discern any change in the attitude of England towards France's moves in the Ruhr; it remains one of wondering hope. Certain guesses on future events have been verified: the Germans have whined as only a Boche can whine, they have defied as so patriotic a nation was sure to defy, and the French have gone about their business with decent determination, as we knew they would. But that is all. The possibility of exacting Reparations in this way is not yet clearly proved, though we cannot, in the nature of things, have long to wait to be certain on that point. The strain on France is too great for success or failure not to come quickly.

Meanwhile, the comments that one hears here are either superficial, as from those who confine themselves to explaining the future lot (could they will it) of Herr Stinnes and his commercial brethren, or darkly fearful, or else—and these are the wisest—extremely and constantly brief. The fact is, no one does know what is going to happen. If France succeeds, unexpectedly well and exceedingly good; if she fails, then goodbye to Reparations from Germany. This is the characteristically adopted philosophy for the Englishman, and, moreover, one that is just workable. I think, therefore, that all the anti-French stuff that one finds in such heady sheets as the Spectator, the Outlook, and the New Statesman is very largely discounted by the ordinary man. And he, by the bye, no more believes the Daily Mail, which proclaims the triumph of the French plan, than he credits The Times, which is against the Ruhr venture. He is, as far as I can see, taking a very calm and level view of the affair, and is content (for are there not royal marriages, cup-ties, and wireless experiments to think about in the meantime?) to await the publication of facts, as apart from the coloured fancies which pour unheeded from the partial pens of journalists.

The Ex-Prime Minister.

This leads me on to remark the extremities into which the most notorious journalist of our time, Mr. Lloyd George, has fallen. There are still politicians who refused to blazon their views in the pages of popular journals, but their number is sadly declining, and the extra-Parliamentary presentation of members' views has become a feature of our social life. Now, when they are in office, this habit of turning words into money may be reckoned merely an infirmity; when they are dispossessed of office it is something worse; but when a man writes, for a syndicate of papers among which are included some which were hostile to us in the War, articles calculated, possibly ordered, to undermine the relations with foreign Powers which our present Government is trying to confirm, one feels no other feeling than that of nausea. This last, needless to say, is what Mr. Lloyd George, from his retreat in Spain, has been doing; and until last Saturday it was our lot in this country to find his utterances, inspired by whom you please, in both the Daily Chronicle and the Daily Telegraph. On Saturday, however, the Editor of the Telegraph suppressed the ex-Premier's article, which contained sentiments that would, in his opinion, interfere seriously with Anglo-French relations.

This action of the Telegraph will infinitely benefit us in the eyes of France, which is moved, as we are not, by such gestures. I am no admirer of the Telegraph, which fatigues one more certainly and more thoroughly than any other daily paper, but for its independence in this matter one can have nothing but praise.

One would hesitate to say that the star of Mr. Lloyd George will never rise again, but one can surely say that, if it does rise, it will be from a still more distant and lower horizon than that from which it now is so dismally twinkling.

Rugby Internationals.

The first two Rugger internationals were played on Saturday—England meeting Wales at Twickenham and Scotland France at Inverleith. England have never been beaten at Twickenham, with the exception of that memorable South African match just before the War, when Douglas Morkel's preposterous conversion of two huge penalty kicks gained for his side a victory, and this year the gods were again with her, for the score was a drop goal and a try to a try in her favour. Most of the "experts'" calculations were falsified during the game; particularly the experiment of playing two wingers, H. L. Price and Voyce, in the home pack was a complete success, and the English forwards thrilled the mighty company of 40,000 people. Wales, however, had some very bad luck, and did not deserve to lose.

In the North Scotland apparently had France well in hand, winning by 16 points to 3. It is impossible as yet to have any opinion on the Calcutta Cup, but after such a performance as this Scotland must have a considerable chance.

Sex and Education.

The question of education almost obscures the atmosphere nowadays, for, with the cheerfulest monotony, the psychologists, the physiologists, and the academicians insist on obliterating their varying views upon the altar of our ignorance. To me the whole matter of education, unless it lead, as it very rarely does lead, to culture, is rather a beating of the wind, but without any doubt it fascinates the general public, and it has been possible during the

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

last few days to hear all sorts of opinions on the report, recently issued, of the Consultative Committee on Differentiation for Boys and Girls respectively in Secondary Schools. This document, it must be said, is fresh, sensible, and useful. It says straight out that, though the education of girls should not be inferior to that of boys, it should not be identical—a truism, for, though at least a fictional equality between the sexes has been attained, no one but a psycho-analyst would dream of practising identity. Further, the report, though denying any difference in educable capacity (a euphemism which decorates an empty value) does emphasise the difference in interests between the sexes.

The report may do something to stem the strong tendency—strong because it is the strongest girls who indulge in it—to make the girls' school a replica of the boys. The imitation of man by woman has in this country gone far enough: in fact, we're so tired of ourselves, I suppose, that we'll let the women do what they like, so long as they don't copy us. Equality we will spare to them, but identity we simply must inhibit.

The Fog.

Even the merriest of devil-may-cares can scarcely call the 1923 weather kind, and last week we so realised the sunlessness of our clime that The Times was induced to include a leading article upon the fog. I have not become so bursting with common-sense as to have developed the habit (incurable, I believe, when once caught) of regularly reading leaders in The Times, but, as a matter of fact, this particular article was a very charming one, and, withal, of considerable significance. English people are so utterly supercilious that they forget or forgive, or even, gross materialists that they are, like their fogs, but surely this unconscious pose cannot for ever be upheld. The time will come, the necessary improvements in our manufacture or avoidance of smoke having been made, when the time-honoured excuse of the employee late at his (seldom her) office will no longer be heard. Last week this important section of our community were able to revel in the tallness of their several tales.

The Cymmrodorion Society.

The Cymmrodorion Society met in London last week—a fact which will doubtless appear to be of stupendous insignificance to most readers. English ignorance of Welsh matters is not quite so complete as it was before the War, but it is still pretty crass, and when a Welshman speaks of his country's achievements in literature, science, and art, which, incidentally, the Honourable Society of Cymmrodorion, founded in 1751, is designed to promote, he generally meets with a sceptical smile.

To such an attitude towards the Celt the Prince of Wales was able in the Hotel Cecil on Saturday to rise completely superior, and he made the most charming of speeches, taking advantage of the occasion, withal, to address the company in that most persistent of tongues rival to the Welsh—English. Perhaps it was just as well that he succumbed to our peninsular prejudices, for there was a widespread impression abroad in London over the week-end that the place was inundated with foreigners. The explanation was, of course, that several hundred sons of the Principality had come up to be disappointed by the Twickenham Rucker; and we are further reassured by this fact that the Prince was able to address them in English and still find intelligent response.

The American Debt.

There was a certain amount of disappointment caused by Mr. Stanley Baldwin's leaving America without a cut-and-dried arrangement in his pocket, but the difference between America's minimum offer and our maximum is so small as to allay any grounds for serious apprehension. That difference is said to amount to about three millions a year—or about a penny on the income-tax.

Presumably the Chancellor of the Exchequer had absolute instructions on the maximum that he was to offer, for obviously on so inconsiderable a sum there is no room for quarrelling. The Treasury is manifestly thinking of the future, and is taking care that the generation after us shall not be burdened beyond its strength in paying off the debt. But it must be confessed that these long cuts and long views are very wearing.

Some Recent Books.

"Sir Walter Raleigh and the Air History," by H. A. Jones (Arnold), is an account of Sir Walter's work in the compilation of the history of the Air Force. It reveals very intimately the scholar and the man.

"The Life of George, Fourth Earl of Aberdeen," by Lady Frances Balfour (Hodder and Stoughton), does not add very much to our knowledge of the man who muddled the Crimean War. But it does explain the personal causes which led to his being caught up and overthrown by events. He appears from youth to have developed the qualities of slowness and sympathy; in short, he was an unpolitical creature.

One hears it said on all sides that there are far too many journalists in the world, but this fact will not prevent people from reading Low Warren's "Journalism" (Cecil Palmer). The author depicts the successful journalist as one who has laboriously and with difficulty acquired a special technique—a false picture, but one which, nevertheless, may frighten various superfluous persons from attempting to get their views into print.

"Man and the Attainment of Immortality," by J. Y. Simpson (Hodder and Stoughton) shows in its title the direction of the book. Professor Simpson's work is a fine blending of scientific knowledge with religious instincts. He does not believe that man is inherently immortal, but that immortality can be obtained through the development of individuality—in other words, his is a straightforward account of the fashionable belief that Man's highest destiny is the sinking of his consciousness into God's consciousness.

Very few first-class novels have been recently published, though we have had all too many of the horribly readable and efficient kind. The host of thoroughly competent minor novelists increases week by week, but they never give us anything of great stride or sweep. It may be true that the novel as a form of art is nearly doomed: certainly the Hardy of the post-war generation has yet to arise.

ALTER EGO.

FOR HIRE

PRIVATE CARS
OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS & SONS

10, DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE, W.1

Langham
1222
Hampstead
6203
Titchley
2777

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

EGYPT.

Cairo, January 11.

The British Community.

The British Community is still very much occupied with the public security situation, and every action of the authorities is not unnaturally watched. The High Commissioner has issued an order that every British subject should carry a revolver, not merely for his own protection, but also in view of the possibility that thereby he may be able to assist in catching assassins. The Egyptian Government, on its side, has authorised all British officials to journey to and from their work in conveyances, which will be supplied by the Egyptian Government, or for the hire of which the latter will pay, while everyone has been strongly advised not to go about on bicycle or motor-cycle.

Meanwhile, the Organising Committee of the British Community is very active. A joint committee, representing the British officials and the non-official British Community, has been constituted for the purpose of providing for the protecting and watching over of the interests of the community, while an Arms Committee, with sub-committees in every district of the capital and its suburbs, has been formed for the allocation of revolvers, of which a large quantity is now available, and for the provision of practice grounds.

The Question of Compensation.

The Egyptian Government has agreed to pay Mrs. Robson, whose husband was murdered last week, an annual pension of £E700, and her son an annual pension of £E300. In the event of Mrs. Robson remarrying her pension will be reduced to £E300 per annum, and in the event of her death her son's pension will be increased to £E500 per annum. It is laid down that her son will cease to draw any pension on his attaining the age of twenty-three.

The promptitude with which this decision has been reached is satisfactory, but what everyone wants to know is whether all the amounts of compensation so far agreed to in previous cases have been paid, and what guarantee there exists for a punctual payment of such pensions in the future. It is pointed out that so long as there was British control over Egypt's finances no fear as to these pensions existed, but now that the Egyptians have secured control of their finances no such guarantee exists, and it is considered that all such pensions should be vested in the Public Debt Commission.

A Motor Accident.

A tragic motor accident this week has removed a well-known member of the foreign community, Mr. Oscar Flood, who met with an accident while motoring along the Suez road and died almost instantaneously.

Mr. Flood, who was the son of the Swedish doctor who towards the end of the last century was on the staff of the Suez Canal Company, had been in Egypt for nearly twenty-five years. He entered the service of the Egyptian Hotels, Limited, and rose steadily from secretary to general manager, displaying in the various posts he filled an activity and an efficiency which undoubtedly marked him out as an able organiser and administrator. Everyone in Cairo, one might say in Egypt, knew Oscar Flood as well as they knew his brother-in-law, Charles Baehler. Like the latter, he was directly identified with the good fortunes of the company which he so faithfully served, and his untimely loss—he was only forty-two when he died—will be almost as irreparable to his directors as it will be to his wide circle of friends.

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubliana, January 15.

Relations with Hungary.

The occupation of German territory by France would seem to be responsible for a renewal among the Magyars of a hope that Europe may be on the eve of great events, and that a restoration of Hungary in all her former greatness may yet become possible. There has been a marked recrudescence of activity in nationalist circles in Hungary, and once more the neighbour States were systematically inveighed against, especially those of the Little Entente, and demonstrations against these neighbours were arranged on the eastern and southern frontiers. Whatever may be the facts with regard to the conflicts with the Roumanians on the Yugoslav frontier, the Magyars have arrested Bozidar Sever, formerly Government Commissioner in the Prekmurje, and incidentally a member of the International Frontier Commission. He had entered Magyar territory on private business, and in spite of his protests he was arrested there as a spy and condemned to death by hanging. In the face of further protest the Hungarian Government proposed to carry out the sentence; but Sever went on hunger strike, and the execution was postponed. He was transferred to a hospital in Hungary, and only then was the reason of his disappearance discovered in Yugoslavia. The Belgrade Government at once demanded his release, and the Papal Nuncio Peligrinetti took a similar step. At the time of writing the reply of the Hungarian Government has not yet arrived.

The position created by the Irredentist movement in Hungary was considered by the Little Entente Cabinets, and united action has been taken in Budapest in concert with the Great Powers. In the name of the States of the Little Entente the Roumanian Minister presented the Hungarian

*Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

—COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.—

Prime Minister, on January 13, with the following declaration :—

"For some time past a continual agitation against the neighbour States and the Peace Treaties is being tolerated in Hungary. During the last weeks this agitation has greatly increased, and hostile demonstrations in Parliament, at public meetings, and in the Press have become visibly more frequent. Magyar public opinion is strongly inflamed, and the population of the neighbour States seriously disquieted. The Government has done nothing to cause this agitation to cease, and the action of official personages tends rather to support than to curb it. It is no wonder that, such being the situation, frontier incidents are becoming increasingly frequent. It is unconditionally necessary that the Magyar Government should stop this agitation, as otherwise it may lead to consequences for which we shall hold the Magyar Government responsible."

To this the Hungarian Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Darnovary, replied that the importance of the demonstrations was being exaggerated, that freedom of speech and Press existed in Hungary, and that the Magyar Government was powerless to interfere with the said agitation. The Minister pointed out that the intentions of the Magyars were altogether pacific, and that the Government would, therefore, do its utmost to calm public opinion.

The same evening the Italian Minister called on the Hungarian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and handed him the Note signed by Great Britain, France, and Italy. This Note demands that the Hungarian Government shall prove in an official Note that it disapproves of all agitation calculated to endanger good neighbourly relations with contiguous States. In the interests of peace the Hungarian Government's attention is drawn to the peril of the present situation.

As it is assumed that the step taken by the two Ententes will prove successful, the Hungarian situation is not viewed too pessimistically. On the contrary, the situation in Thrace is regarded as far more serious. There can be no question, however, of "a Yugoslav mobilisation," as such a step is neither necessary nor, in view of the approaching elections, desirable.

The Internal Situation.

M. Pashitch's attempt to include the right wing of the Moslems and the Slovene Peasant Party in his all-Radical Cabinet has proved only partially successful. After repeated negotiations the Moslems consented to come in, but, in spite of all inducements offered, the Slovene Peasants refused to compromise with the Radicals.

The date of the General Election is now definitely fixed for March 18. All over the country election campaigns are in full swing, and every party is working hard to maintain itself or to overthrow its rival, as the case may be. The chances of the various groups may be summed up as follows :—

The Radicals have inaugurated their campaign very judiciously. The Democrats have been ousted from the Government and split into two camps, the Agriculturists (Zemljoradniki) even into three, and the Communists are badly hampered by the Defence of the State Law. As, moreover, the party in power is ipso facto apt to score in many cases, especially in the southern regions, the Radicals stand to do pretty well at the forthcoming election. On the other hand, they cannot hope to increase their number of mandates, as the new Skupshtina will have only 313 members, as against 419 in the old. The chief plank in the Radical platform will be the Great Serbia idea, which will draw especially in the Banat and in Bosnia. Their compact with the Moslems is also likely to help the Radicals in Macedonia, which will most probably vote solidly for that party. Radical efforts to gain ground in Croatia and Slovenia, on the other hand, may well prove a waste of energy, as the Great Serbian idea is too well known, and not popular there. Taking things all round, the Radicals have no reason to be dissatisfied with their prospects, although many circumstances militate against them, above all, their extreme party spirit.

The Democrats will be hard put to it to maintain unity in their ranks, and for that reason they will probably lose ground. The Democrats of Srem and Lika (Lika—colloquially famous as the export region of brave soldiers and sturdy policemen, where every man is by birthright a hero) are sure to stand firm, however, and in Old Serbia they may score several successes. But under the new system of Proportional Representation they stand to lose their representatives in Slovenia, where they have hitherto held three seats.

The Agriculturists ought to be the strongest party in Yugoslavia, if they were only united and had better leaders. As it is, they are broken up into groups, which are at feud with one another. One might even say that they are—unconsciously, of course—playing the Radicals' game, so suicidal are their quarrels. A little time ago they had the chance of obtaining the greater number of the Communist votes, but that opportunity was lost, and the Communists are trying to enter the lists under the new name of the Proletariat Party.

In Croatia, Stephan Raditch has unquestionably lost ground heavily; but public opinion is by no means settled, and surprises are to be looked for.

In Slovenia the contest will lie mainly between the Clericals and the Peasant Party. The smaller parties are likely to disappear. Many Socialist votes will probably go to the Clericals, and many Democrat votes to the Peasants.

It is unlikely that this election will clear up

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 14.

The "OLD GEORGE," Salisbury:
Built in 1320, and full of the well-preserved timbering and panelling of the Middle Ages. Here Pepys stayed and grumbled at the heavy bill.

Shade of Pepys: "Ah, JOHNNIE WALKER! had I known you there would have been many another line to my famous diary—'Another JOHNNIE WALKER and so to bed!'"

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

the political situation altogether. But one may safely expect from it a notable recovery in the political outlook of the nation. And this is the primary condition for that internal consolidation which is Yugoslavia's chiefest need.

ALBANIA.

Tirana, January 12.

Italy and Albania.

On New Year's Day Italy suppressed the post offices which she has been maintaining in Albania for the last twenty-five years—that is to say, from the time of the Turkish régime. These offices (four in number—at Saranta, Valona, Durazzo, and Scutari respectively) not only competed with the Albanian post offices, but recalled the Capitulations régime to Albania—a relic of the encroachments on the independence and sovereignty of the country. At the same time, Italy has also given back the cable office (linking Otranto and Valona), and shortly the radio telegraphic station at Durazzo will either be delivered up to Albania or will be suppressed by Italy. In this manner Albania finds herself finally freed from the weight of the Capitulations, although these had already been disregarded by the new Albanian State, which does not grant to Consuls the right of interference in matters at issue between Nationals and Albanian subjects, and which has never tolerated the establishment of Mixed Tribunals.

The Chamber of Deputies.

The Chamber of Deputies has adjourned, from January 4 to March 1, in accordance with the new Statute of Parliament, which allows for two sessions a year, from September 1 to the end of November, and from March 1 to the end of May. As the last session was prolonged to the end of December, the next session must not extend beyond the end of April. The session closed in rather a stormy atmosphere as the result of a discussion on the subsidy to be accorded to the clergy. The Deputy for Permeti (Argyrokastró), M. Vinjahn, referred to the clergy as parasites, and cited Article 93 of the Organic Statute, according to which the State is declared to have no official religion. In spite of this, Albania has allotted in her budget a sum of 10,000 gold louis for the Mohammedan, Orthodox, and Catholic clergy. It must be remembered that the Catholic Church has not yet obtained its independence, in the absence of a Concordat between Albania and the Vatican.

The Albanian Parliament was not able to consider, before it rose, the request of the French Government for the grant of a monopoly of archaeological excavations in Albania for a period of twenty years. The view of the Government at Tirana is that excavators and archaeologists must be content with the fixed localities (Durazzo, Oricon, Apollonie, Byllis, etc.), and not aspire to a monopoly over the whole country. The objects which are found must become the property of the Albanian Government, except for the duplicates, which will be given to France.

Diplomatic Relationships.

In addition to the relief caused by the Parliamentary recess, Albania may congratulate herself on two events—first, the departure for Belgrade of M. Ali Riza Kolonja, Albanian Minister in Yugoslavia, to take up his post there, and, secondly, the nomination by Greece of an Albanian Minister in the person of M. Panourgias. The arrival of M. Panourgias is expected immediately, while M. Midhat Frasheri, who has been appointed to Washington, is about to leave for Athens on a special mission. Let us hope that Albania's relations with her neighbours will thus be placed on a normal basis.

A Frontier Dispute.

The first half of this month has passed off well, with the exception of a single incident, but at the moment it is difficult to say whether it will have serious consequences or not. The trouble occurred on the Serbo-Albanian frontier, at Yunik and Krouma, in the neighbourhood of Yakova. I have already referred in previous letters to the troubles in Serbian territory owing to the operations against the Albanian band of Azem Galitza and to the severity displayed towards the Albanians in Serbia. Five hundred of these Albanians, rendered homeless, sought refuge at Yunik, in the neutral zone, because the Conference of Ambassadors persists in the delay in the definite ratification of the frontiers, and thus maintains so-called neutral zones—that is to say, localities deprived of any administration. The people gathered together at Yunik have been an easy prey for Hasan Prishtina and Bairam Cur, both outside the arm of the law and refugees in the neutral zone. Hasan and Bairam are doing all in their power to create difficulties for the present Albanian Government, which they accuse of neglecting the interests of the Albanians of Kossova (Serbia). It is thus that the unfortunate and desperate refugees of Kossova were led by Hasan and Bairam in person, and laid siege to Krouma, the chief town of the prefecture of Kossova (in Albania). An engagement took place which lasted twenty-four hours (January 7 and 8), and the assailants retired, leaving eight killed and ten wounded. On the side of the gendarmerie there were only a few slight casualties; no one was killed. At the moment of writing it is reported from Tirana that the "rebels" have been put to flight and entirely dispersed. Nevertheless, some detachments have been sent there from Tirana, Scutari, and Dibra. The trouble at Krouma has produced a very painful impression, as there is sure to be a violent campaign in the Press against Albania, which has never enjoyed a reputation for order and quiet. It is being asked on all sides whence Hasan and Bairam were able to obtain arms, ammunition, and money?

TURKEY.

Constantinople, January 17.

Anticipations.

While the man-in-the-street is anxiously marking time on the happenings at Lausanne, the recently appointed officials of our new régime are making good use of their opportunities, by means of meetings, interviews, Press propaganda and censorship, to establish their authority, and to prepare the population of Constantinople for a full and free blast of the new Turkish Nationalism, which obviously it is intended shall herald the signing of the Treaty of Peace.

As straws indicating the direction of the wind, we have optimistic reports from Lausanne, London, and even Angora, to say nothing of the sudden rise in the Turkish Lira to-day from 760 piastres to the £ sterling to 715.

Anti-British Communiques.

There is a tendency just now for Nationalist official communiques to bear a distinctly anti-British character, and it is to be regretted that no adequate steps appear to be taken to refute many of the charges they contain. The cause for this apparent hostility to the British may in some measure be traced to Nationalist resentment at attacks on the Turkish Government system, that have appeared recently in the English Press. To-day the Anatolian News Agency publishes a statement refuting in general terms (but without much argument, or the production of facts to support their disclaimers) the cabled messages of certain Constantinople correspondents, and in particular the leading article on Turkey which appeared in The Times of January 8. It concludes its remarks by saying that "in refuting such false news, the Anatolian Agency is only rendering a service to British public opinion. As soon as British public opinion is better informed about us, British policy will take a truer course."

Turco-Armenian Rapprochement.

A meeting was held at the Armenian Club in Pera last Sunday afternoon under the auspices of "L'Association d'Amitié Turco-Arménienne," the principal object of which was the reading of a letter from Mustapha Kemal Pasha in reply to a telegram of greeting which had been sent to him by the Association. Amongst those present were Kerestedjian Effendi (Hon. President of the Association), Zia Bey, Prefect of the town; Assim Bey, Governor of Pera; Saadi Bey, Director of Police; and Mejid Bey, representing Adnan Bey, the Governor of Constantinople.

The object of the Association is to form a rapprochement between Turks and Armenians, to forgive and forget former troubles and grievances (which, according to the speakers at the meeting, have been due to the snare and delusion of foreign politics), and by throwing a veil over the past, to work with a view to the establishment of good relations between the two races. All well-wishers of both Turks and Armenians will wish the Association every success.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

Angora and Lausanne.

The Conference at Lausanne, said the Daily Telegraph recently, is near the end of its labours, and a finally drafted Peace Treaty will soon be presented to the Turks. But whether the Angora delegates will accept it is problematical:—

The prospect of their accepting appears by this time negligible. They have posed alternately as having full powers to conclude a Treaty and as being incapable of deciding anything without instructions from Angora. In all probability they will throw upon the National Assembly at Angora the responsibility of taking this, the final, momentous decision, which is to settle whether Turkey is to have peace on terms more favourable than she has enjoyed for centuries past, or to remain in hopeless isolation from the international life of Europe, and without any prospect of receiving that assistance in financial and other matters without which she will start life as a State in a condition of bankruptcy and beggary. Throughout the weeks during which the Conference has stumbled on from deadlock to deadlock, somehow surviving four first-class crises and many situations of minor difficulty, the Turks, supported by the counsels of Moscow, have clung tenaciously to the hope that at some point the Allies' united front might be broken, and the possibility of effecting separate arrangements more agreeable to themselves might present itself. As time after time that hope failed them, and the loyal co-operation of the Powers was maintained in every situation that was created to test it, they have grown more and more sullen and deliberately discourteous. But with the approach of a really serious crisis in regard to Reparations policy as between France and Great Britain in Western Europe, their confidence appears to have returned. There can be no doubt that Ismet and his colleagues counted with absolute assurance upon the breakdown in Paris four days ago having an immediate and, for them, highly favourable repercussion in Lausanne. As we have pointed out, there was no substantial ground whatever for any such expectation, since France was upholding at Lausanne interests of her own even more considerable than those in defence of which Great Britain was contending in the negotiations.

In conclusion, it definitely faces the prospect of the failure of Lausanne to arrive at a settlement:—

We see no reason to doubt that the Conference of Lausanne will come to an end, as is anticipated, within the present month. That it will end in a settlement appears to-day even less likely than it did at the outset, when we pointed out again and again what difficulties faced it with an ignorant, truculent, and fanatical nationalism established at Angora as the final arbiter of success and failure. But the details of a settlement tolerable to Europe will at least have been worked out to the full; and sooner or later those terms, though doubtless in a form much less favourable to Turkish pretensions will be revived to regulate the position in the Near East.

The Spectator of January 13 is not hopeful of an easy settlement at Lausanne, for it says:—

The only good news from Lausanne is that the Allies do appear to be working together. But that, important as it is, is only a negative advantage. As for any positive hopes of bringing the Turks to accept the Allies' conditions, they seem to grow fainter every day. The foundation upon which all the earlier hopes of converting the Turks were built was that they would in the end have to accept the main Allied proposals, such as those for setting up non-Turkish Courts as a substitute for those under the present Capitulations, if they wanted to raise loans and to trade generally with the West since nobody would live under undiluted Turkish law and police. As Lord Curzon put it, the Turkish delegates, if they remained obdurate, must be prepared to reduce their country to a state of isolation in the wilds of Central Asia Minor, cut off from all communication with the civilised world. But it now becomes apparent that this is exactly what a party, and probably a dominant party, at Angora wants to do.

It is hard for us, brought up on the ideas of progress and "the blessings of civilisation," to understand the point of view of an Oriental people to whom such things are wholly evil and whose one sincere wish is to be rid of the West and all its ways. The Times may be quite right in calling the Angora Government mere puppets worked by the military caste of officers who must conquer new lands or starve, but it must also be remembered that the Nationalist movement as a whole is only a part of the great renaissance of Islam which is going on in Asia and in Africa. This, of course, is all the more reason why Ismet can never be brought to what we call reason. If he were brought, he would be immediately denounced, and possibly shot, by Angora. . . . It is extremely difficult to believe that any solution will be arrived at along the present lines of discussion. It seems to behove the Allies to consider just what stipulations they are prepared to fight for and to let all the rest go.

Near East Bookshelf.

IN BLOOD AND WOOL.

"THE PEAKS OF SHALA." By Rose Wilder Lane. (London: Chapman and Dodd, Ltd. 12s. 6d.)

There was never a perfect book: "The Peaks of Shala" is less imperfect than most travel books; it is, as the Bordelais say of a fine vintage wine, "well-dressed." Mrs. Lane has given us a cameo of a portion of Northern Albania, in which primitive land she spent a mere fourteen days, and the impressiveness of the picture can be explained only by her literary skill. To this, despite a disclaimer, she adds evident political gifts and descriptive ability; her measurements of time and distance are femininely faulty, and here and there she attempts the dramatic where is merely the prosaic. But we close the book and we realise that we have been in the presence of real, living people; we might have shaken hands with every one of them, even the most sinister.

The scheme of the book is an account of the authoress's trip from Scutari to the Shala district on the Serbian border and the return through the Shoshi district. "Shala and Shoshi are in blood!"—she plays beautifully on this whisper of the Albanian vendetta—it serves for her most skilful motive and, to alter the metaphor, she insinuates it like arsenic into the doings of the new Tirana Government, into the echoes of the lofty mountains, into the din of the thousand waterfalls and into the very virtues and houses of the mountain and valley folk.

Two unmarried ladies going to choose village school sites on behalf, we assume, of the American Red Cross, furnish Mrs. Lane with invitation and excuse; these ladies' portraits are lightly sketched, and then, with the exception of one weird, gaunt, mountainous female mystery, our authoress makes place aux hommes. Indeed, she receives an offer of marriage (we hope she is free, otherwise these impetuosities are very reprehensible) from the very handsomest, tallest, bravest, noblest, loneliest of proud mountain chieftains. But not a lover's proposal; Lulash of Thethis, whose village lies underneath the hated menacing Serbian guns, merely thought, and perhaps still thinks, that such a Mrs. Lulash would have been a grand educator for his illiterate clansfolk. Then there is the Bishop of Pultit; Rexh (pronounced Redge), the twelve-year-old, chubby-cheeked Mohammedan boy-guide and interpreter; Padre Marjan; Cheremi, the indefatigable team-leader; the Byraktor of Shoshi, with its "five hundred" houses; and many another "wild Albanian kirtled to the knee." All, when not stripped naked to cross an angry waterfall, wear wool and reek of blood-feud. But the gem of Mrs. Lane's male gallery is Rrok Perolli of Kossova, Secretary to the Albanian Minister of the Interior, "patriot and friend," as she calls him in her dedication, and linguist and Government "spy." Perolli is the new Albania, the Albania of the League of Nations. We would greatly like to shake his hand. Mrs. Lane has done his country a great service, and we have not the slightest doubt but that "The Peaks of Shala" will be translated into Albanian and be read and re-read among those mountaineer descendants of our Aryan forefathers. There are some good illustrations and a map.

IN THE STEPS OF A DANCER.

"THE DANCER OF SHAMAHKA." By Armen Ohanian. (London: Jonathan Cape. 7s. 6d. net.)

This is an astonishing book. It is the first volume of the recollections of Armen Ohanian, a Caucasian who danced her way through Persia, Constantinople, Cairo, and, later, though Continental capitals. Though the authoress has been through amazing adventures, she still retains the simplicity, the freshness, and the charm with which she was born; and, indeed, it is this very naïveté, this utter lack of subtlety, that invests with significance, or, at least, lends attraction to, the events which she describes.

She begins her memories with a delightful picture of her home life in Zergueran, Armenia; and even at this early age can be seen the sensitive and rebellious nature that afterwards was to gain for her so many impressions, and to be constantly urging her forward to other lands. Her catholic powers of sympathy are revealed when she, though a Christian, feels pity for the poor Mohammedans of her village, who, in their Moharram, appeared to her to suffer more from the rigours of their religion than she from her Lent. She loves her diversified family, but is obviously destined to part from them, so easily does she react to outside influence. In these early pages, wherein are suggested the local customs and features of the Caucasus, we see Armen in love with Nature, seeing all things in terms either of mood or of movement—in fact, the dancer in embryo. This is how she writes of her little village of Zergueran, which "was not only the most beautiful nook in all the Caucasus; it was also chosen to be blessed by Heaven," for thither the sick were brought to its pools to be cured. She looks down in the evening from Zergueran, hears music and song from the tents below, and—"it was then that all Asia lay at our feet beneath the stars—Asia, with its profound melancholy, its languor, its mysticism, its vague desire for death, and its ardent love of life. To my heart of a child these voices brought a sense of beauty and of pain, and the mystery of existence seemed to penetrate like a mist the red veils and the silken folds that wrapped my small body. I melted, I dissolved into the stars and the night, while my feet, accompanied by the clinking of the anklets I had put on at play, led me as though in enchantment toward a white figure that danced near the pools."

The next stage of her life was spent at her winter residence at Shamahka, "formerly an Armenian city, later a principality of Tartarian Khans, independent and sumptuous until its capture by the Cossacks of Russia." Here she was fired by dreams of the Queen of Shamahka, who, legend said, married the Moslem King Dandouk. But this incentive to distinction did not last long, for Shamahka was destroyed by an earthquake, which, incidentally, is depicted vividly, but without the least exaggeration. Thence she was taken to

A. M. PHILPOT.

JUST OUT.

"The most important book yet written on the problem of Mesopotamia."—EAST ANGLIAN TIMES.

THE INS AND OUTS OF MESOPOTAMIA.

By THOMAS LYELL, late Assistant Director of Tapu and District Magistrate, Baghdad.

Intimate constructive criticism by an author whose official position in one of the Holy Cities gave him inside knowledge of political happenings, with the comprehension of the psychology, &c., of the people necessary in formulating a scheme for successful government.

Cloth,

7s. 6d. net.

"A wealth of interesting information . . . brings out the facts of the situation with perfect clearness."—Truth.
"A book to be digested, and all who are interested in the dark problem of Iraq should read it."—Times Literary Supplement.

A. M. PHILPOT, LTD., 69, Great Russell Street, W.C.1.

"another life by the white and sterile borders of the Caspian Sea." At first she was on the Cape of Apcheron, but afterwards had to go to school in Baku. "that Tartar city which had become Russian," in which she had to abandon her Asiatic customs and try to behave like a European. This chapter on Baku has not only a personal interest, but is of historical merit, too, for the racial tendencies of Armenians, Tartars, and Cossacks are drawn with political significance. The massacres here made it impossible for her to remain any longer, and, after the death of her father, caused by the ill-treatment arising out of the excesses with which the Cossacks celebrated the Constitution which the Tsar gave the peoples of Russia after Port Arthur, it was decided that she should be married off to a Persian and go to live in "the land of roses." Her journey over the Caspian to Enzeli and Resht is exactly told, but each detail falls convincingly into its place. We cannot sketch here the interesting preparations which were made at Resht for her wedding. But her husband, of whom she had formed such high hopes, proved to possess missionary proclivities, and left her at Teheran. Upon this unexpected development she attempted to commit suicide; yet, as it does not seem chronically to have impaired her health, and as it enables her to provide us with a beautiful description of the interior of a Teheran hospital, perhaps it was just as well. Hence she was taken and cared for by a Persian princess, and it was really this "Queen of the Crowns" who taught her the first steps of that bitter path through the world of men. Here she learned the delights of opium smoking, of attracting the other sex, of the exercise of compromise and of curiosity; here, in short, she lived for the sake of experience, not to say sensation. Here she had the honour of dancing before the Shah, an act for which she was rewarded with the order of knighthood, Shir and Khorsid. In a description of the dance she says: "When by chance my glance met that of the little Shah, he modestly lowered his beautiful velvety eyes. I then saw only the flash of the diamond lion which trembled on his forehead." However, the fact, now known, that she was a Christian, made it imprudent for her to remain in Persia, and she determined to go on a pilgrimage to the Patriarchate at Jerusalem.

She left Persia in tears. Persia manifestly had appealed to her, and she contrasts the freedom of the Mohammedan women with the lot of her Christian sister. "Beneath the same Persian sky, in the same walled gardens, among the Christians everyone languished, everyone sighed; among the Persians everyone laughed and sang. The brooks were more sparkling, the footpaths whiter, the shadows bluer, the groves more perfumed. Men did not walk here with the stern majesty of King Saul and King Nebuchadnezzar. Here were no grandmothers who returned from Mass after having eaten the body of Christ to freeze with their cold glances the careless mirth of the young." But she wended her way across the desert back to Baku, where she met again her "adorable" mother. On her way to the Black Sea she stopped at Tiflis, of which her chief recollections are of being forced to eat an impossible amount of food and of participating in a Schiller play in the ancient Armenian capital of Akoulis.

Across the Black Sea from Batoum she went to Constantinople, where she studied the Turkish woman and her dances. She found them "truly beautiful and worthy of admiration," but thought their beauty was due to the admixture of Armenian blood in this Mongolian race. With modern Greece, to which she next sailed, she was disappointed, observing that "the beautiful antiquity of Greece exists to-day only in my country, where it has been preserved unchanged in the amber of our reverence for ancient traditions." Finally, she came to Egypt, where she discovered scarcely any trace of her beloved East—where, in fact, she first met Europe. At Cairo she danced before the Khedive; and both here and at Alexandria she was the subject of much renown and attention. With Egypt she was disgusted and tired, and, almost in absent-minded sorrow, signed a contract to appear as a dancer in London. Here we leave her, having quitted Asia, but not yet arrived in that new world of which she professes to be so terrified, but in which, we are certain, she will quickly find friends and confidence.

We have called these memories astonishing. They have, indeed, a most unusual quality of fascination. There is little attempt to interpret experience, for Armen Ohanian is no philosopher, but behind all this apparent superficiality there is an unfathomable questioning, an unsounded deep, which has persuaded so acute an observer of life as Anatole France to write a Preface to this work. Perhaps in subsequent volumes we may have some attempt to summarise an almost unrivalled experience, some endeavour to estimate the respective values of Oriental and Occidental life. If no such endeavour is made, we will draw our own conclusions—a task to which we look forward with pleasure.

THE AMERICAN JEWISH YEAR BOOK.

"THE AMERICAN JEWISH YEAR BOOK, 5683. SEPTEMBER 23rd, 1922, to SEPTEMBER 10th, 1923." Volume 24. Edited by Harry Schneiderman for the American Jewish Committee. (Philadelphia: The Jewish Publication Society of America.)

In addition to the usual calendars, directories, and lists of the Jewish national organisations, local organisations, federated charities, members of Congress, and Jewish periodicals appearing in the United States, this comprehensive year book devotes a section to the statistics of the Jewish population of the world and of the United States, and of Jewish immigration into the United States, Canada, Argentina, and Palestine respectively. Reports are included of the activities of the American Jewish Committee and of the Jewish Publication Society of America for the year under review, and in connection with the latter society a list of the names and addresses of its 15,000 members is appended. In the section of the book entitled "A Survey of the Year 5682," Dr. H. S. Linfield, of the Bureau of Jewish Social Research, New York, deals in an interesting manner with the most significant events in the life of the Jews throughout the world during the past year, including a chapter devoted to the Jewish National Home, in which the text of the Palestine Mandate is given in full. Another feature in this volume is a list of Jews in the United States who are prominent in the various professions, in the arts, in science, or in other walks in the public life of America, compiled by Mr. I. George Dobsevage, Secretary of the Jewish Publication Society of America. This year book should prove a valuable work of reference.

ARABIC (SYRIAN) SELF-TAUGHT

(In Arabic and Roman Characters.)

By A. HASSAM and REV. N. ODEH.

Containing:—The Alphabet. Travelling.
Pronunciation of Arabic Letters. Railway.
Orthographic Signs. Hotel.
Classified Vocabularies. Outline of Grammar.
Conversational Phrases, etc. Exercises.
Illustration of Turkish Government Coinage used in Syria, Money, etc.

Red Cloth, 4s. net; Blue Wrapper, 3s. net. Postage, 3d. extra.

Sold by all BOOKSELLERS. Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.

London: E. MARLBOROUGH & CO., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

January 25 (New Style).

January 12 (Old Style).

Gumada II., 8, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Shebat I., 8, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir Edward and Lady Beauchamp have left London for Egypt.

Lord Leigh and the Hon. Agnes Leigh left London on Monday for Egypt.

Lord and Lady Lamington left London on January 19 for the Continent.

Viscountess Ridley, who is travelling in India, will return to London about the middle of April.

Viscount and Viscountess Chelmsford returned to London on January 23 from their tour in Algeria.

M. Grégoire Michaesco, Commercial Attaché to the Roumanian Legation, left London last Friday.

The Minister for the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes has returned from The Hague.

The Prince of Wales received the Persian Minister (Mirza Davood Khan Miftah-es-Saltaneh) on January 16 at St. James's Palace.

The Earl of Carnarvon left for Egypt last Friday for the purpose of being present at the opening of the sealed inner chamber of the tomb of Tutankhamen.

General Sir John and Lady Maxwell left London last Friday for Egypt in the P. and O. liner Narkunda. They will visit Luxor, and on their way home stay in the South of France. They expect to be away for three or four months.

The King has granted to Mr. Reginald F. H. Duke, C.B.E., licence and authority to wear the Insignia of the Fourth Class of the Order of Saint Sava, conferred upon him by the King of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, in recognition of valuable services rendered by him during the War.

Major-General Sir James Marshall Stewart is leaving for Athens to act as Chief Commissioner of the British Red Cross Society in the Near East, and will also act as the British representative on the Central Co-ordination Refugee Relief Committee at Athens, which has been specially established to deal with the refugee problem.

Among the passengers by the P. and O. Bombay express which left London last Thursday to connect with the s.s. Khyber at Marseilles were the Hon. Lady Maxse, Lady Macleod, and Lady Smith for Bombay, and Sir Geoffrey Archer and Lord and Lady Howard de Walden for Mombasa. Lady Archer will join the Khyber at Port Said; and, with other passengers for Mombasa, will tranship to the British India Company's s.s. Modasa at Aden.

Our Port Said correspondent writes (January 13):—"Possibly by the time these words are in print some large changes will have taken place amongst the officials at Port Said. Archer Bey, the Commandant of the Suez Canal Police, who has filled that post with conspicuous success for some years, is to be transferred to the post of Assistant Director-General of Public Security in Cairo. Bimbashi Beaumont, who has been Assistant Commandant of the Suez Canal Police, is to be transferred to the post of Assistant Commandant at Cairo. Teall Bey, now Assistant Commandant at Cairo, is to be transferred to Port Said to take up Archer Bey's post, and Bimbashi Ablitt, who is now Assistant Commandant of Division in Cairo, is to replace Bimbashi Beaumont in Port Said."

Where to stay in the East

THE CAIRO CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL, At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment. GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOLU) ALEXANDRIA. First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON. A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.
LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.
FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.
LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.
FOR SUMMER SEASON.
TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.
6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos. For Tickets and further Particulars, apply
NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus. Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores." Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca. Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL. All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.

Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."

Telephone No. : 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1923.

LAUSANNE, TURKEY, AND BULGARIA.

Although there is some reason for expecting that another week may see the end of the Lausanne Conference, the completion of two months of negotiation brings the Conference to a sufficiently significant point of time to justify further stock-taking. Unfortunately, the tactics of the Turks render it almost impossible to record any definite progress in regard to the main purpose of the meeting. Agreement on a number of subjects is reached in most of the sub-commissions; but as soon as the time comes for the formal endorsement of the separate items in the form of a report the Turkish delegates find some excuse for delaying the step. It would seem as if they shrink from fastening upon themselves responsibility for decisions that may be repudiated by, or may not give pleasure to, Angora. They were sent to Lausanne as plenipotentiaries, and their authority to act in this capacity appears to have been confirmed as recently as on the occasion of Hassan Bey's visit to Angora; but still they show a pathetic anxiety to evade any final decision. The delegates may be wise in their generation; they know their own people, and they may not be able to act otherwise. If this is the reason for their attitude, the fact should be known. It is of no use to protest at the Conference that Turkey must not be treated as an inferior by the Allied Powers, when the Turkish delegation at every encounter with the other members shows itself to be on a demonstrably lower plane, both intellectually and politically. Mustapha Kemal Pasha is reported to have said at Eskişehir last Tuesday that "If Europe recognises the Turks as a civilised people, peace can be made." The term is too vague to serve as a practical argument. Three days later the Turkish delegates at Lausanne betrayed their complete ignorance of the significance of scale maps. Now map-reading may not be an indispensable hall-mark of civilisation, but it seems to be obvious to all but the Turks that a people who are so far behind Western standards in such an elementary matter are likely to fall equally short of Western standards of justice and economics. The Turkish delegates were wise enough to allow themselves to be instructed by their foreign colleagues at the Conference in map science, without considering that thereby the sovereignty and independence of Turkey were in jeopardy; but when the Allies suggest that the Turkish judges should also allow themselves to be advised or assisted by foreign experts, there is a great outcry about Turkish freedom being impaired. The point at issue at Lausanne is a question not of civilisation, but of common sense, and the Allies cannot be blamed for noticing that those Turks who draw their inspiration from Angora seem to be afflicted with the excessive suspicion which hitherto has been the mark of uncivilised peoples in their contact with those of a higher plane of development.

In spite of Turkish intransigence at Lausanne and Mustapha Kemal's defiance-breathing speeches on his Asia Minor electoral tour, an increasing number of people appear to be sharing the views consistently expressed in these pages that the Turks have all along intended to effect a peaceful settlement. New Turkey no less than other countries with more political experience has to reckon with its extremists. The Allied delegations at Lausanne may console themselves with the reflection that, while they seem to have been wasting valuable time, every moment of the last two months has meant instruction in one way or another for the Turks. If Mustapha Kemal Pasha can remind the hodjas of Ismid that Turkey has now to turn to and produce economists, it may be inferred that the long-drawn ordeal at Lausanne is approaching its appointed end. Care must be taken, however, that the extremists in Turkey are not supplied with fresh arguments against the moderates. An approach towards a settlement has been rendered possible by separating the Turks and the Greeks. It was the Allies' employment of the latter that made a live factor of Turkish Nationalism, and any fresh attempt to use Greeks for the Allies' work will assuredly throw the whole Near Eastern question into the melting-pot again. For this reason a concentration of the Greek Army on the borders of Eastern Thrace must be viewed with misgiving. If the Turks are violating the terms of the Mudania Agreement, it is for the Allies to take measures against them. Greece, in her own interest, should not be allowed to do so; still less ought she to be encouraged by the Allies to suppose that her services are required by them. The temptation to the Greeks to prove that their reorganised army is capable of giving a good account of itself must be great; but it must be resisted. Underlying the agreement between the Allies and the Turks is the tacit assurance that there shall be no more provocation on the Greek side. In these circumstances it is regrettable that Greece, for lack of advice from the Allies, should be allowed to spend money that she can ill spare on the upkeep of an unnecessary army.

If the Conference is to be taken to task for showing too much lenience to Turkish obstruction and delays, it will have exposed itself to more lasting blame should it fail to arrive at a workable arrangement for a Bulgarian outlet on the Ægean Sea. So far the suggestions of the Allies on this subject—and they know it—have not been practical. Sovereignty over a strip of ground three kilometres long and one kilometre wide, reached by a railway in foreign hands, cannot offer the Bulgarians sufficient inducement to spend money in making Dedeagatch a serviceable port. It is difficult to see why the Allies at this stage boggle at the only feasible solution. They have accepted as axioms that Greece must be separated from Turkey, and that a strip of territory on the west of the Maritza River shall be taken away from Greek jurisdiction. The proposal at present is to have this corridor administered by the League of Nations, allowing Bulgaria to own enough land at Dedeagatch for the purposes of a port. There is no permanency in such a solution, for the League was not formed for the work of administering countries or districts. If, then, the separation of Greece and Turkey is to be a lasting feature—as it should be—of the Near Eastern settlement, the ultimate administrator of the Maritza corridor must be Bulgaria, whose frontiers already march with Greece and Turkey. In these circumstances a feasible solution now would be for Bulgaria to administer the corridor from the first under a mandate from the League of Nations. A period of probation could be fixed, and only in the event of the Bulgarians executing their task to the satisfaction of the League would they be confirmed in their possession of a port on the Ægean.

JACKALS.

By L. J.

From long residence in the East, I think there is little about jackals that I do not know. Jackals are dogs, and yet all dog-lovers hate them. They hate them because they love dogs. They are enemies of the domestic dog, and largely responsible for the horrible outbreaks of rabies in Eastern kennels. I frankly confess that I do not like jackals; as a master of a bobby pack they have given me no end of sport, as a lover of natural history I have reared them as cubs, and still have failed to like them. Tame as you can make them, and you can make them very tame, there is something in the presence of their wary and hostile eyes that makes you feel uncomfortable. It is impossible to like the expression of cunning and distrust, so unspeakably different from the frank and honest outlook of a British dog. Animals in a feral state are, and with good reason, everlastingly alive to any signs of danger; but jackals, even in domesticity, are always watching with the inherited instincts of their fears. They seem to see through and beyond their present comforts to the menace of some evil and ominous tragedy.

Still, though low in the social scale, it is a dog. It is lower in the scale than the pariah dog of the East, and that is low enough. The pariah is a homeless vagabond of the village middens or the gutters of the town bazaars, gleaning its offal and garbage where it may, ill-treated and unkempt, in terror of the human voice, yet it is a creature of the daylight. The jackal only dares to show itself at night, and is a step lower down the scale of pariahdom.

Still, it is a dog, with many dog characteristics which show themselves from time to time. Everyone in the East knows how dangerous it is to take a dog one cares about to places where the pariah congregates. The pariah is a coward, but with force majeure on its side it can be very brave. Its habit is to appropriate localities, into which no stranger may intrude, and the interloper, even if it be a gladiator of a bull-terrier, is powerless against the merciless ferocity of the crowd. The jackal has the same peculiarity. One of Captain Thomas Williamson's charming old aquatints of a century ago represents an incident in a jackal hunt. The two long dogs of the bobby pack, superior in speed to the rest, had run into their jack on the fringe of a jungle, and the spot happened to be a jackal stronghold. The picture shows a crowd of jackals attacking the greyhounds in typical guerilla warfare. The dogs, from being the aggressors, are strictly on the defensive, and at that are being steadily overpowered. Captain Williamson was not romancing. Many of us in the East have had the same experiences.

The dog is by nature the friend of man, and pariahs, ill-used as they are, will often long to be adopted. Few of us in the East have not at some time or another been followed by poor, hunted creatures with beseeching eyes, seeking protection and the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. The jackal has been known to display the same desire to be owned. I was riding along, accompanied by three dogs, when it suddenly struck me that I was followed by four. I pulled up, to find that the fourth was a jackal, and it was strange, because all three dogs were experienced jackal hunters. I shooed them on to the jack, and they pursued their quarry to a patch of thick thorn jungle, and emerged again a pack of four. That was also surprising, but the dogs explained that I was mistaken in thinking it was a jackal; it was a dog, a strange dog, no doubt, but an amiable fellow of meek and courteous manners, who had expressed a desire to form one of the party. I demurred, and was met with a respectful refusal. The dogs declined to be guilty of innocent blood. Accordingly we all galloped into camp, where there were more dogs. They, too, were astonished, but the stranger comported himself with such benevolence and good-feeling that in council they decided that, though a bit of a freak and a sycophant, he was a dog who knew his place, and was therefore to be tolerated. He accepted the terms of his adoption, and at times even joined with the pack in hunting his brother jackals with some enthusiasm.

But that was not perhaps so very remarkable. Dogs have one very unpleasant trait. When they find that one of their own particular fraternity is attacked and being mauled by a hostile pack, they are apt to dash into the fray—not to rescue their friend, but to assist in his undoing. They seem to think that to put the unfortunate out of his misery with prompt despatch is in the circumstances the truer kindness. Jackals have the same singularity. I was out one evening with three dogs when we came upon three jackals feasting eagerly on a dead buffalo calf. The dogs looked at each other and said, "Let's to it pell-mell," and pell-mell they went. The jackals, of course, fled. The dogs were a powerful greyhound of considerable speed, an Afghan hound of moderate pace, and a terrier by comparison afflicted with the slows. The sight in view then was: a fast jackal well to the fore, two less speedy jackals in the rear, followed by greyhound, Afghan hound, and terrier in that sequence. The greyhound had the legs of the lot, but to my astonishment he passed the two rearmost jackals as if he imagined that they, too, were participants in the chase, and pulled down the leader. The other two jackals, instead of seizing the opportunity to escape, also fastened on their friend as a sportsmanlike action, and soon there were three dogs and two jackals busily engaged in murdering the one unfortunate. The murder committed, the dogs and the treacherous jackals parted with mutual unconcern.

I said murder, but, after all, it may have been a put-up job. For that is where dogs and jackals really do differ. The dog is quite easily killed, but if the cat has nine lives, the jackal has lives seventy times seven, and is almost indestructible. One of my domesticated jackals was killed—that is to say, nominally killed—more times than I can remember. The bobby pack were fed from platters ranged in a circle, an arrangement the native kennelman considered suitable. As soon as each dog had made half a dozen voracious gulps at his particular dish he moved to his neighbour's, and there was a similar movement all round the circle. The dogs invented this manœuvre in order that there should be equality of treatment and no undue preference. But the jackal sometimes forgot the rules, and held on to his own plateful. In that case the dogs set on him and killed him; having been left for slain, the jackal rose and finished whatever was left of the repast.

I told that story to a friend, and he shook his head. He said that I might tell it to the Marines. He boasted of a couple of kangaroo-hounds, cross-bred, perhaps, but they would kill a jack in less time than it took to say it. Would I like to see? I said I would. It was a memorable occasion. I remember it as if it were yesterday. The country deluged in tropical sunshine, our horses fit to gallop for their lives, and the hounds showing the Rampur cross in their cruel topaz eyes. There was no trouble to find a jack; it was a jackal country, and the hounds made the run short and fast. The jackal made for a dhak forest, and through the trees we skeltered into an open glade. The dhak was in flower, and the orange petals seemed to shout aloud in their glory. In the open space the ground sloped to a pond of water reflecting the vivid scarlet of the blossoms, and the hounds ran into their jack on the damp margin of the pool. The jackal made no fight; it merely said: Ubi tu pulsas, ego capulo tantum, and lay down to be killed. "See," said my friend, as he snapped his gold hunter; "thirty seconds by the watch," and dismounting he took the jackal by the hind legs and slung it into the water with a splash. "Come on," he said; "we'll have another run." But as he turned his back a ripple in the pool caught my notice, a jackal's head appeared on the surface, slowly and cautiously the crafty eyes opened, and possibly seeing sympathy in mine, the jackal swam silently to the bank, and crawled out into the jungle on the other side.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The columns of THE NEAR EAST are always open for the discussion of subjects of general interest to its readers. The publication of such letters must not be taken, however, as indicating that the views expressed by the writers are those of THE NEAR EAST.

Letters intended for publication MUST be accompanied by the writer's full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith. They should be worded as briefly as possible and must be written on one side of the paper.

GREECE AND TURKEY.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—The economical and political interest of these two countries and peoples is to be staunch allies and the best of friends, as nowhere it clashes, except in the imagination of ambitious politicians.

It was right during the Great War that Greece should range herself on the side of the Allies, but as soon as Turkey sued for peace Greek troops should have stood still pending the signing of the Peace Treaty.

No one acquainted with past history, and the present condition of these two countries, could honestly contemplate an imperfect and poor Greece being for ever pitted against an imperfect and poor Turkey, for even a temporary success for either would have spelt ultimate ruin to both.

Repentance is now due from Greece, and if the new men leading it would think well they should not hesitate to come to terms with Turkey, independently of the Allies' peace terms, which, if imposed, cannot but leave an open wound to fester and hurt, where healing is desired.

Turks and Greeks should also stop avenging themselves on their own people, who happened to have different views from the prevailing section, unless they find them now in armed opposition to the established government. Such revenges are called murders.

This reconciliation should also lead to the disarming all round of religious fanaticism.—I am, etc.,
January 13

A. SEFI.

CENTRAL ASIA.

On January 18, at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, S.W., a lecture on "The Political and Economic Condition in Central Asia" was delivered before the Central Asian Society by Lieut.-Col. P. Etherton, H.M. Consul-General in Kashgar. The earlier part was descriptive of Eastern Turkestan and its inhabitants, and was illustrated by many beautiful and interesting lantern slides, showing, among other things, the extremely difficult nature of the roads between Kashgar and India.

Speaking of political and economic conditions, the lecturer said the Bolshevist propaganda had not had much effect. So also with Pan-Islamism, the people of Central Asia would not join, he thought, in any Holy War whose object was to save Turkey. They seemed to have an admiration for what they saw of India—it had been his job to question traders who travelled from Kashgar to Northern India, and he had never found one who had anything but admiration for the arrangements that the Indian Government made for them. Little could be done as regards trade with Central Asia at present, because the railway through Russia had been broken up; but with this restored, and with stable government in Central Asia, there should be a great commercial boom in that country. The articles required would be mostly household utensils, hardware, and machinery for factories; and the larger demand would come from Russian Turkestan. Japanese and Americans were already sounding the market with a view to capturing what they could of this trade. The opium question was of interest. A good deal of opium was cultivated in Russian Turkestan, and was brought into Chinese Turkestan by various circuitous routes. It was a very paying trade; although the roads were absolutely vile over which the stuff had to come, and the physical obstacles immense, when they had allowed for all expenses there remained a profit of roughly 2,500 rupees on every pony load. The Chinese were doing a good deal to check the opium trade, but with such an immense land frontier this was no easy job.

Sir Francis Younghusband, who took part in a debate that followed, said there were great possibilities of trade between India and Chinese Turkestan; but the difficulty was in getting to the country. It was true that of recent years the Indian Government had improved the road, but there were several mountain passes. The first of these was 11,000 ft.; then there were three of 13,000 ft., one of 17,000 ft., one of nearly 18,000 ft., one of more than 18,000 ft., another of 17,000 ft., and another of 10,000 ft., before you got down to Turkestan. Everything had to be carried on the backs of ponies, mules, camels, and in certain places yaks. The only real way of getting at the country was through Russian Turkestan.

Corrected figures of the census recently taken in Palestine show that the Moslem population numbers 590,890, and the total population 757,182.

The Sofia Municipality has recently named one of the streets of the Bulgarian capital after the late James Bourchier and another after the "Brothers Buxton."

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO

THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

Europe and the Trade Revival.

The expectation seems to obtain in some quarters that before very long the European situation will have cleared. It may well be that France has chosen a course which events will prove to have been the most direct route to reconstruction, but it is difficult at the moment (however much one may sympathise with the action of our Allies) to find justification for an attitude other than one of reserve as to the outlook. The situation is so obviously pregnant with unpleasant possibilities. Those who may be of the opinion that it is immaterial to us what happens in Germany (and there are such to be found) may remember the Prime Minister's remarks as to the effect of adverse developments on the Continent on a trade revival in this country. If it were purely a matter of direct trade we might affect indifference, but it is not so. Central Europe (and, it may be added, Russia, for the revival of the one depends on the revival of the other) provided one of the greatest markets for our principal customer, and the curtailment of that market means materially reduced purchasing power for our goods.

The Economic Development of Turkey.

Pessimism with regard to the future of Turkey would not seem to be shared by the board of the Corporation for the Economic Development of Turkey, Limited, which was registered at the end of last year. Associated with Mr. Leslie Urquhart in the enterprise are Viscount Goschen, Mr. C. J. Cater Scott (deputy chairman of the Russo-Asiatic Consolidated), and Mr. J. H. Scott; at a later date a number of Turks may be expected to join the board. It would be premature, I understand, to say that the corporation has been granted any definite concession, but there is good reason to suppose that the signing of peace at Lausanne will find it ready for various operations which are only awaiting that event. While Turkey officially affects to keep foreigners at arm's length, it is this co-operation in the economic sphere that is going to enable the Turks to find salvation. Reference in this connection may also be made to the recently formed Anglo-French Near Eastern Syndicate, with Major-General Sir Charles Townshend as chairman and Count de Forceville as managing director.

The Sudan Loan Failure.

The Sudan Government loan shared the same fate as the issue of the Kassala Railway, some 78 per cent. going to the underwriters. This result was, of course, only to be expected, since the terms of the two issues were identical. Of course, in a sense the result does not matter, seeing that the money is forthcoming just the same, while in both cases the shares will find a good market on the Exchange at a trifle below the issue price, but it is none the less humiliating that loans for a part of the Empire with such enormous potentialities as the Sudan should meet with such poor support, while issues for places outside the Empire should be over-subscribed. Particularly is it regrettable when it is borne in mind that the purpose of these loans is directly or indirectly the promotion of cotton growing, with a view to assuring Lancashire adequate supplies of the raw material in the time which will very shortly arrive when there is an actual shortage of cotton in the world, and when, in default of other than the existing sources of supply, the great British cotton industry would have to go short. Self-interest alone, one would have thought, would have ensured an adequate response for these applications for capital.

More Publicity Required.

The truth of the matter is that the average potential investor is far too little acquainted with the Empire and its prospects, otherwise it is unthinkable that sound securities of this order should be overlooked. Strange as it may seem, some people were not even aware of the situation of Kassala. I was told of one individual who thought it was in Russia! No doubt there were others who imagined it to be in even more unlikely places. It only goes to show that we need an Empire publicity campaign which will bring home to the people the vital facts of the regions with which our destiny is linked. Much may be expected in this connection from next year's British Empire Exhibition, which will give the Dominions, Colonies, and other parts of the Empire a unique opportunity of demonstrating their potentialities and of enlarging their markets. It is to be hoped that they will take full advantage of it, and that the Sudan, among other regions, will be worthily represented.

Egypt's Mascot.

The adage that lost opportunities never recur will have to be revised in the light of Tutunkhamen. History tells that the Theban priests egged him on to attempt the recovery of at least part of Canaan, with a view to getting back for them the golden

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

tribute which had previously flowed in a steady stream into their coffers. Tutunkhamen failed; but the golden tribute that he could not recover for the priests in 1375 B.C., he seems likely to deflect into the coffers of Egypt and the tourist agencies in A.D. 1923. There cannot be the least doubt that the wonderful discoveries made by Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter, together with the fact that their successes will be an incentive to other excavators, will prove an irresistible magnet to the travelling public. Anyone who goes to Egypt in the next few years stands a chance of being present at another discovery of the same kind. But tourist agencies, I am told, affected gloomy forebodings at the end of 1922.

Egyptian Delta Light Railways.

For the year ended March 31 last there was a considerable decline in the gross receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways, the figures being £396,658, as compared with £496,084 for the previous year. This was offset to some extent by a decline in the working expenses, which fell from £355,242 to £296,986, but the net receipts show a considerable reduction at £99,672, as compared with £140,842. After making provision for debenture interest, fixed charges, and the proportion of profits due to the Egyptian Government, the directors have transferred £50,000 to the reserve, and now recommend a dividend of 4 per cent. on the Preference shares, as compared with 5½ per cent. for the previous year, leaving £61,650 to be carried forward.

Alteration in Concession.

An alteration has been obtained by the directors in the terms of the concession by which the Egyptian Government participates in the profits of the railway. It is pointed out that owing to the rise in the percentage of working expenses to gross receipts, the results have become inequitable to the company. The Government have now agreed to forgo participation in interest on investments, etc., when calculating their share of profit. For the year under review the revenue from this source amounted to £12,435. An arrangement has further been concluded with the Government for the refunding of the money received from this source during the four years ended March 31, 1921, in three annual instalments. This is dependent on the construction of certain new lines agreed upon between the Government and the railway.

East Indian Railway.

The report of the East Indian Railway for the half-year ended September 30 shows that the experience of this company has been like that of other Indian railways, and that while the gross receipts have risen, the improvement in this respect has been counterbalanced by the increase in expenditure. The gross receipts rose from Rs. 7,55,35,000 to Rs. 7,96,97,600, but with the ratio of working expenses rising from 56.98 to 61.25 per cent. the net revenue was Rs. 3,08,77,400, as compared with Rs. 3,24,93,700. The divisible surplus is Rs. 77,78,011, as against Rs. 1,22,50,700, and the company's share is Rs. 3,53,280, which has produced in sterling £29,440, as compared with £33,200. It is proposed to pay 16s. per cent. on the Deferred Annuities and the Class D Deferred Annuities, and this, with the compensation in respect of Indian income-tax of 4s. per cent. and the guaranteed interest, gives a yield of 3 per cent., the same as for the previous year.

COMMENTATOR.

YUGOSLAVIA'S ECONOMIC POSITION.

M. Stoyadinovitch on the Exchange.

M. Stoyadinovitch, the newly appointed Finance Minister of Yugoslavia, made the following statement recently :—

"When I took office I was asked from various quarters whether I reckoned on a rise in the dinar. I lack the optimism of M. Plavtchitch, and the position is misleading. In fact, after the promises that the late M. Kosta Stoyanovitch thought fit to make some time ago, and after those made by M. Plavtchitch three months ago, it is absolutely necessary for those who find themselves in high office to be very reserved in their forecasts. As a result of experiences up to the present, business circles can no longer have faith in official optimism. It is necessary, then, to get back to realities and to consider the facts that influence the course of the dinar. The position that existed on December 16 when I commenced my duties is well known. The Ministry had exhausted all its reserves in gold and dollars. There only remained limited funds at Zurich, Belgrade, and Zagreb. Efforts were made to prevent to some extent the rapid depreciation of the dinar which had commenced on October 18. These attempts were in vain. The dinar continued to fall at Zurich, Trieste, and Prague, and generally on the foreign exchanges. Here, for example, is the progress of the fall at Zurich :—October 18, 10.30 Swiss francs for 100 dinars; November 1, 9; December 1, 7.30; December 11, 7; December 14, 6.25; December 16, 5.50. In consequence of this situation, profound pessimism took possession of all business circles. Towards the end of November the Finance Minister called a conference of bankers and authorities on exchange. That is always a bad sign, for it does not augur well for the patient when the doctors are called in consultation. A little later the Vienna review, Die Boerse, published a letter from Zagreb forecasting the continuance of the fall of the dinar at Zurich to a minimum rate of 4 Swiss francs for 100 dinars. At the same time, the Yugoslavenski Lloyd, in an exhaustive article, regarded the depreciation of the dinar pessimistically.

"It will be seen, then, that universal pessimism replaced official optimism. It is natural to pass from one extreme to the other. Happily, it is possible to say that this pessimism was not justified. The fall of the dinar has ended. Here are the quotations of the dinar at Zurich for the last few days : December 18, 5.40 Swiss francs; December 20, 5.78; December 22, 5.80; December 25, 5.76; January 2, 5.60. The course of the French franc at Belgrade has been as follows :—December 22, 690 dinars for 100 francs; December 26, 693; December 29, 671; January 2, 676. The rates of the Belgrade Bourse correspond almost exactly to those at Trieste, Vienna, Prague, Berlin, etc. Thus, contrary to all the forecasts, the depreciation of the dinar has ended. What is the reason for the change?

"The bulk of public opinion, including the Finance Minister himself, was impressed by the important orders in foreign exchange at Belgrade.

and Zagreb at the end of November and the beginning of December. These orders reached an absurd total. But it was impossible to make adequate offers, and the gentlemen of the Finance Ministry seemed to have lost their heads. Instead of taking count of the real situation, they conceived the expedient of keeping up at the Bourse official rates relatively favourable but fictitious, for they only served as a base for restricted transactions, and, on the other hand, they were not recognised outside the Bourse. It was estimated at the Finance Ministry that if they had ceased to apply fictitious rates the depreciation of the dinar would have continued, and the French franc would have risen to 1,000. But the Finance Ministry lost sight of two very important facts. They committed themselves to an exchange policy which threatened to bring our economic life to a standstill. The first fact which was not taken into account was that the official rates of the Bourse meant a substantial premium to the purchaser and a marked loss to the seller. Everyone was consequently trying to buy at the Bourse and not to sell. To purchase French francs at 5.40, for instance, meant a net profit for the purchaser of 160 dinars per 100 francs—even more, as 100 francs could be sold outside the Bourse at a rate of 700 dinars. This double rate was the reason for the increase in the orders in such an embarrassing manner. The buyers obtained the profit that the exchange policy of the Finance Ministry offered them."

M. Stoyadinovitch went on to point out that insufficient attention was paid to the economic laws. "It is said that generally an increase in the demand leads to an increase in the price; that an increase of supplies means a fall. In reality, it is not so simple. If it is true that a considerable demand makes prices rise, it is also true that high prices influence demand and make it decrease. On the other hand, if supplies can make prices fall, a moderate level of prices will increase the demand. The law of supply and demand can then be stated in another way. It can be said that prices influence supply and demand. This is the subject of controversy among all economists. But whatever their views on the subject, all are agreed that when prices rise demand decreases to the point of disappearing altogether if the rise continues. Another economic law states that the more prices increase the more supplies increase. Here there are two economic laws which those who had charge of our exchange policy have not adequately applied; they have thus laid upon our commerce and industry a very heavy burden.

"For this reason the first act on which I decided as regards the exchange was to free the economic life of the country from this handicap. I have thus authorised free dealings at the Bourse; in short, I have taken steps to allow free play for the economic laws. I have done this because I believe in the efficacy of these laws, and, despite the advice of several of my friends, who saw in that measure a cause of panic. So far there have been no ill results; on the contrary, at the present time supplies of foreign exchange on the Belgrade and Zagreb Bourses cannot be absorbed by buyers. Each day there remains a certain supply of exchange and foreign money which has not been sold, for the very reason given by the economic law, according to which higher prices lead to a decreased demand and increased supplies.

"Although the institution of free transactions on the Bourse has ended the hopes of those who believed that they would be able to realise considerable profits, all economic centres of the country have hailed with satisfaction the new régime, which has enabled them to carry out their transactions without hindrance and to calculate business on a sound basis. The numerous articles that have appeared in the Press (without distinction of political opinion) show that I have taken the right course. The end of the depreciation of the dinar proves that the first measures have been efficacious.

"Some have been afraid that free dealings on the Bourse would encourage smuggling and illicit trade in exchange. I do not share this view. On the contrary, the restrictions imposed hitherto—the regulations, the official rates, the system of permitted imports, etc.—constitute a much more favourable field for the development of smuggling and illicit trade. As regards speculation, I have always maintained that that cannot have a lasting influence on the exchange of a country. Speculators enter on transactions in favour of or against the dinar according to the general opinion regarding the outlook. If the forecasts—economic, political, and financial—begin to indicate an improvement in the dinar, speculation will follow that course, and vice versa. The Finance Minister ought to pursue a policy which will prevent harmful speculation by removing the causes which make it possible. What we have seen during the last four years has shown that that result cannot be obtained by decreeing rules and regulations regarding exchange. Everyone knows that the rate of exchange is influenced by the adverse trade balance and the Budget deficit. It is at this point that it is necessary to commence.

"As regards the trade balance, statistics show that it improves from year to year. Following the war we have been compelled to import vast quantities of goods. To-day the situation is much better, and production, and consequently exportation, is progressively increasing. The remittances in material by Germany as Reparations have a favourable influence on the trade balance, as we do not pay for these goods in ready money, and we are not compelled to export commodities against them. The debts of our traders abroad have influenced the rate of the dinar to a very serious extent. These debts date from 1919 and 1920. At the present time the situation has improved, considerable sales of dollars and gold having enabled our traders to obtain exchange to liquidate a part of these debts. The total of these debts has considerably diminished. That is one of the good results of the policy, mistaken in other respects, of the sale of State funds on the Bourse. If I add that the Government has taken measures, and will take others, for the encouragement of the export of the commodities that we possess in sufficient quantities, it can be said that our future trade balance would appear quite favourable."

Turning to the Budget deficit, M. Stoyadinovitch emphasised the need for economy, and pointed out that he had effected a saving of about ten million dinars per year by suppressing commissions for exchange on the National Bank and its branches, as well as the various organisations for the control of dealings in exchange. He commented on the surplus staffs of the provincial finance offices and of the State departments, and declared that that state of things must be ended. He continued:—"The present receipts, although inadequate, could be more usefully employed. The receipts would be considerably increased when order was established in the financial administration. The Customs receipts would increase when the export trade revived. The essential thing was not to borrow from the National Bank. It was necessary to avoid that at all costs." M. Stoyadinovitch concluded by saying that he would use every effort to improve the trade balance, and to bring about a Budget equilibrium.

Shipping Intelligence.

RECONSTRUCTION OF SMYRNA.

Turkish Plans.

According to information from a usually well-informed Turkish source (says a Reuter message from Smyrna, dated December 30), agents representing a group of French capitalists are now here making a general survey of the city with a view to obtaining from the Turkish Government a concession granting this syndicate an exclusive right to carry on building operations. The present intention of the Turkish authorities, however, is stated to be to assign a section to each nation desiring to participate in the rebuilding of the city. Even under this plan, however, the French are to be entrusted with the building of five main thoroughfares with the right to sublet portions of the concession. Among those here interested in trade with Great Britain, the hope is generally expressed that the British will manage to protect their interests, especially by securing as much land as possible at the Point Station alongside the railway pier.

LOWER DANUBE CONSERVANCY.

In order to improve navigation on the Danube at the mouth of the Sulina Channel, at present partially blocked by alluvial deposits, the European Danubian Commission will, it is reported, lengthen the two dykes of the Sulina Channel 300 metres each and block the Kilia Channel, which enters the sea at Stari-Stambul and carries its current across the Sulina entrance (says an American Consular report). It is estimated that the cost of the construction of the extension to the dykes will be approximately 2,000,000 francs, and that the cost of dredges and dredging equipment will reach 12,000,000 francs. Operating expenses are expected to require the expenditure of an additional 12,000,000 francs.

A CUNARD MEDITERRANEAN TOUR.

The Cunard liner s.s. Scythia, which left the Mersey for the United States on January 13, is due to leave New York on the 30th inst. for a cruise in the Mediterranean, with calls at a number of ports. She will remain at Alexandria nine or ten days to give her tourists, numbering 400, an opportunity of visiting the scene of the recent archaeological discoveries.

The export and re-export from Syria and Lebanon of horses and mares of all ages and categories are now permitted.

H. M. Minister at Prague reports that goods sent to Czechoslovakia by parcels post do not now require to be accompanied by import licences at the time of dispatch. In the case of parcels weighing not more than one kilog. no import licence is required by the addressee, but in the case of parcels exceeding that weight the addressee must, on arrival of the parcel in Czechoslovakia, obtain the licence before he can obtain delivery of the parcel.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Circassia for Bombay (Liverpool, February 1).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mandasor for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 10); s.s. Macharda for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 14); s.s. Makalla for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 28).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Herefordshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, January 31); s.s. Kandahar for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, February 10); s.s. Gloucestershire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 14).

British India Line.—S.s. Domala for Bombay and Karachi (London, January 26); s.s. Nevasa for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 2); s.s. Matiana for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 9); s.s. Neuralia for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16); s.s. Mulbera for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 23); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 2).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Cypria for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Roumelian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (Liverpool, January 31).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Exeter (Birkenhead, February 5); s.s. City of Marseilles for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 21).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Nagpur for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, January 29).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Bulgarian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, January 27); s.s. Venetian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 7); s.s. Egyptian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, February 17); s.s. Eden Hall for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 28).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Incmore, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila. The first steamer of the season for the Danube (Liverpool, February 10); s.s. Peruviana for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, Braila, Syra, Smyrna, and Constantinople (Liverpool, February 17).

Papayanni Line.—S.s. Gerano for Malta, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 3).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Padua for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, January 26); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, January 26); s.s. Devanha for Bombay (London, February 2); s.s. Nagoya for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 9); s.s. Nore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 23).

MOTOR LAUNCH FOR EGYPT.

At Messrs. Thornycroft's Hampton yard a fast launch, somewhat different in design from the usual high-speed craft, is being constructed for service in Egypt. The launch is 40 ft. in length, and is built of double-skin teak, with American helm transverse timbers. A novel feature is the fitting of a cabriolet hood, which is arranged over the cockpit. The hood can be rolled back to lie aft when not in use. The propelling machinery consists of two 70 b.h.p. Thornycroft petrol sets. The service speed is expected to be about 18 knots.

Messrs. Furness Withy and Co. have placed an order with Messrs. Doxford, of Sunderland, for four vessels of 10,000 tons each.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the eleven days ended December 31 amounted to £E12,030, making the total for the year £E257,781.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA

... SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE ...
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER ...
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Commerce and Industry.

(Reports from Our Own Correspondents.)

TURKEY.

(From a Correspondent.)

Constantinople, January 10.

Cross Currents.

The position of the average Constantinopolitan of Allied nationality in the present state of affairs is certainly somewhat paradoxical. The Turk is in a state of war with the big Powers of Europe. There is an armistice, it is true. Yet while a conference is sitting to determine whether there shall be peace or the struggle continued, while the armies of his enemies remain in nominal control of his capital, and their fleets stretch like a solid band of grey metal round his shores, he is allowed, on sufferance, to resume the reins of Government, to promulgate new laws and regulations, to increase taxation and to impose new taxes, to decree what shall and shall not enter or leave his ports—all these decisions and actions, many of which affecting, as they do materially, the vast alien population within his gates, are being submitted to and acquiesced in by the Allied forces in control, in anticipation of a peace which may never materialise.

Business Disabilities.

All sane men pray that the hoped-for peace may soon be an accomplished fact. Then the new laws and regulations, taxations and prohibitions will be accepted loyally or rejected as the powers of the new Turkish State shall permit, or the Turkish people by their free choice decide. But in the meantime business firms and private persons affected by the increased Customs dues, new or increased taxation, the prohibited importation of the hundred and one articles on the new list, on many of which, perhaps, their business and livelihood has depended in the past, passport regulations and the like, are not unnaturally asking themselves: (1) Whether they should reorganise or abandon, if needs be, their businesses on the accepted bases of these innovations; or (2) whether they would be justified in ignoring them where possible, and in awaiting the result of the Lausanne Conference, on the ground that they are promulgated by a power dependent on its authority on the signing of the peace.

Prohibited Imports.

With these questions unanswered, business is in a state of suspended animation. Many houses, not affected by the prohibited list, dare not renew their stocks by reason of the exorbitant duties or the uncertainty whether they will or will not be maintained.

The prohibited list covers a large field. To cite a few articles, one may mention beer, wines, spirits, tobacco, skins, horsehair, feathers, boots and shoes, gloves, furniture, brushware, playing cards, cotton tissues, ribbons and lace, garments for men, women, and children, umbrellas, precious stones and pearls.

Dry Turkey?

December 6 was the date when the prohibition of these articles came into force. In the case of alcoholic liquors, one was to be allowed till March 1 to consume, destroy, or otherwise dispose of all stocks. This had the immediate effect of sending up the price of all wines and spirits to unheard-of figures; and in spite of this, and within a few days, it became extremely difficult to buy a case of anything liquid in the town. Naturally, much discussion and speculation has centred round the prospects of a dry Turkey, and no little doubt has been expressed—especially by our local American friends—as to the chances of the aspirants to political fame in the new Turkey succeeding in Pussyfoot legislation, in connection with which the United States has so signally failed.

Whether influenced by the prevalence of this doubt or by the thought of the loss in Customs dues it is difficult to say, but something has decided the Government to postpone the enforcement of the dry laws, and the following announcement, under the heading "Le Régime Sec," appeared in the local papers yesterday:—"It appears that the application of the law on the prohibition of the consumption of alcoholic liquors, which should have commenced on the 1st March, has undergone a further adjournment, the decision having been repealed."

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubliana, January 15.

The Dinar.

After Dr. Plavtchitch's unsuccessful attempt to raise the value of the dinar artificially, the Ministry of Finance has been entrusted to Dr. Stoyadinovitch, who at once permitted freedom of exchange. This has caused a sharp fall of the dinar, and the movement has been all the greater on account of the foreign situation. According to the position on December 31, the National Bank had a bullion reserve of 3,493 million gold dinars, whereas the note circulation only amounted to 5,039 paper dinars. Yugoslavia's paper currency is, therefore, well covered, and, instead of being quoted at 5.80 in Zürich, it ought to stand at 8-10 centimes at least. We are, therefore, justified in assuming that the dinar is bound to recover, especially with an increase in the exports.

ALBANIA.

Tirana, January 12.

The Oil Question.

The Albanian Parliament has adjourned without having had time to discuss the question of the concession for the exploitation of the country's oil resources. The difficulty in regard to granting the oil concession lies in the fact that up to the present each of the foreign companies has endeavoured to obtain authorisation to exploit all the petroliferous regions of Albania, while the Albanian Government is desirous of conceding only the proved regions, following the practice in Roumania and other countries, in order not to exclude competition between the different companies.

The quantity of gold extracted from the mines in India during October amounted to 35,033 ounces, valued at Rs.22,49,438.

The Kassala Railway Co., Ltd., have placed an order with Messrs. Robert Stephenson and Co., of Darlington, for locomotives. The company has also given orders to Messrs. the Blake Boiler, Wagon, and Engineering Co., of Darlington, for waggons and brake vans, to Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan, and Co., of Middlesbrough, for steel rails, and to Messrs. Dorman, Long, and Co., Middlesbrough, for steelwork for bridges.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

Stock and Share Markets.

TONE AGAIN UNCERTAIN.

Rubbers Active.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

With the position on the Continent as it is it was unthinkable that the markets could continue to maintain the cheerful aspect which has characterised them of late, and yesterday the markets closed on a rather uncertain note. There was no sign of weakness, however, and, all things considered, the markets are bearing developments very well. Unless there is a pronounced change in the situation one way or another, I should think we are likely to be in for a period of stagnation. Certainly there can be no prospect of a return to buoyancy until the riddle of the Ruhr has been solved and the Reparations problem is no longer an obstacle to reconstruction.

Sudan Loan Result.

The result of the Sudan Government Loan has been no more satisfactory than that of the Kassala Railway, which, it may be added, was fully anticipated in the circumstances. The tide of new issues has now ebbed for the moment, and while there are a few Near Eastern issues in the offing, as I pointed out last week, it is unlikely that we shall see anything of them until conditions have altered.

Rubbers Still Firm.

The Rubber market remains by far the brightest feature on the Exchange, though even here there have been vicissitudes during the week. At one time there was a spell of profit-taking, which reduced price levels somewhat, but this soon ended, and the market closes quite firm. According to some people, prices in many cases have reached levels that discount prospects for some years. I do not agree with this view at all, and on the contrary look for much higher prices in the near future. But here, too, as in every other market, developments hinge on a general settlement.

Gilt-Edged Dull.

Gilt-edged are closing on a rather dull note on the political situation. Consols at 56 9-16 are 1-16 down, War Loan Fives at 100 11-16 have shed 1-16, the Conversion Loan is $\frac{1}{4}$ down at 76 $\frac{3}{4}$, while Fundings are unchanged at 88 $\frac{1}{4}$. Indian stocks have been firm with the 7 per Cent. Loan up to 116.

The market in Foreign Government securities has been affected by developments on the Continent. French bonds have been very weak, War Loan Fives at 24 $\frac{3}{4}$ being 2 down, while the 4 per cents. are 19 $\frac{3}{4}$ x.d. German 3 per cent. are nominally $\frac{5}{8}$, at which they are $\frac{1}{8}$ lower, while Italian Rentes are $\frac{3}{4}$ down at 20 $\frac{1}{2}$. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified have weakened to 23 $\frac{1}{2}$, a fall of 2 $\frac{1}{4}$, but Greek Monopolies have again advanced, and at 27 $\frac{1}{2}$ are a point up.

Industrials Irregular.

An irregular tone has developed in the Industrial group, and prices are lower in some directions. Business has been on the most restricted scale, in striking contrast to the conditions that obtained during the previous week. Textiles have been fairly steady. Coats are 3d down at 65s., while Courtaulls have shed a similar amount at 62s. 9d. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares have displayed dullness. Vickers are 6d. down at 16s. 9d., Armstrongs are unchanged at 20s., while Guest Keens are 3d. down at 39s. 9d. In Shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are unchanged at 327, while Furness Withy are 35s. 9d.

Oils Dull.

This group is invariably affected by political events more than other markets, and this week has seen the development of a very uncertain tendency in the market. Anglo-Persians are $\frac{1}{8}$ down at 4 $\frac{1}{8}$. Burmahs are also $\frac{1}{8}$ lower at 4 15-16, while Mexican Eagles are 1 13-16 x.d. In the Roumanian group Phoenix are 1s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. lower at 24s. 6d., while Steaua Romanas are 9s. Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields are 1-16 down at 1 $\frac{3}{4}$.

A trade agreement has been signed between the Netherlands and Czecho-Slovakia.

It is stated that cotton of a quality superior to the Egyptian variety is being cultivated in the Italian colony of Benadir.

The numbers are published of 1,070 bonds of the Greek Government Four per Cent. Loan of 1910, which have been purchased in the market for cancellation.

ALEXANDRIA EXCHANGE.

Supplied by G. L. Mortera, Alexandria and Cairo.

Prices on January 5 were as follows: Agricultural Bank of Egypt, £5 21-32; Alexandria Water Co., Ltd., £9 9-16; Anglo-American Nile Steam, £3 25-64; Associated Cotton Ginners, £1 1-64; Banque d'Orient, 39 $\frac{1}{4}$ fr.; Behera Ord., £E7 $\frac{1}{2}$; Brasseries d'Egypte, 53 fr.; Building Lands of Egypt, £1 3-32; Cassi di Sconto Priv., 100 fr.; Comptoir Fin et Com. d'Egypte, £1 9-16; Consolidated Lands, PT5 $\frac{1}{2}$; Credit Foncier Fondateur, 1055 fr.; Credit Foncier Act. 738 fr.; Credit Foncier 1886 Oblig., 324 fr.; Eaux du Caire, Capital, 90 fr.; Eaux du Caire Jouissance, 126 fr.; Egypt and Levant, S.S. Ord., 27s. 3d.; Egyptian Delta Light Railways, £4 7-32; Filature National d'Egypt, £9 $\frac{3}{4}$; Immeubles d'Egypt Soc. an des., £7 1-32; Khedivial Mail S.S. Ord., 60s.; Khedivial Mail S.S. Company Pref., £3 $\frac{3}{4}$; Kom Ombo Ste an de Wadi, £4 7-32; Kom Ombo Ste An. Fondateur, £33 $\frac{1}{4}$; Land Bank of Egypt, Parts de Fond, £56; Lots Turc., 35 $\frac{3}{4}$ fr.; Menzaleh Canal Navigation, PT325; Grand Hotels d'Egypte, £9 $\frac{3}{8}$; Ramleh Railways, £3; Urbaines et Rurales, £3 15-16; Union Fonciere Fond., £ $\frac{1}{2}$.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

The market has been very variable during the week in consequence of the European situation. Marks have fluctuated considerably, closing at 97,500, after being much lower. French francs have weakened, while Italian lire have also fallen away. Sterling has remained fairly firm in New York. Near Eastern exchanges have generally weakened.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97 $\frac{1}{2}$	97 $\frac{7}{8}$
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	370-375
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	550-650*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	95-100,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	24.98-25.02
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4 $\frac{1}{8}$ -1.4 $\frac{7}{8}$
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	81.90-82
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	910+
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	12,000-13,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4 $\frac{1}{8}$ -1.4 $\frac{7}{8}$
Constantinople	Piastres to £	110	730-770*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.65 $\frac{1}{2}$ -4.65 $\frac{3}{4}$
Paris	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	73.25-73.40
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	168-168 $\frac{1}{2}$
Rome	Lire to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	98 $\frac{3}{4}$ -99
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	680-730*
Teheran	Krans to £	50	59
Vienna	Kronen to £	24.02	320-345,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	122,000+

* Nominal

† Sellers.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Rice in Good Demand.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Monday Night.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in fair demand at the recently revised rates. Tate's cubes have been done at 55s. 9d., at which they are 3d. down; Lyle's granulated has also shed 3d. at 49s. 9d.; while London granulated is 3d. lower at 49s. 6d. Foreign descriptions have tended to ease off somewhat. West Indian crystallised is unchanged at 45s. 6d., while White Mauritius is 3d. down at 46s. 9d. White Java is unchanged at 47s. 10½d. Futures are:—March, 21s. 1½d.; May, 21s. 6d.; August, 21s. 3d.

Coffee.—The spot market has been quiet but steady. East Indian is unchanged at 108s. Costa Rica is unaltered at 100s., while Nairobi remains at 92s. Futures are:—March, 59s.; May, 58s. 10½d.; July, 58s. 1½d.

Desiccated Coconut.—There has been a decrease in the demand, but prices have been well maintained at recent levels.

Rice.—The demand has continued, and prices have advanced. American Blue Rose has been in special request, and it is to be anticipated that this variety will see considerably higher rates in the near future. Burma "Two Star" rice has been a good spot, and is very firm.

Green Fruit.—There has again been an improvement in the demand for oranges, but prices remain round about last week's levels. Supplies are getting short, however, and with smaller shipments it is not difficult to foresee an advance in rates in the near future. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 14s. to 35s. box (240's—504's). There has been a marked increase in the demand for lemons, and supplies have rapidly decreased. Stocks in sight are small, and prices are likely to increase. Quotations are:—13s. to 25s. box (300's), 30s. to 37s. 6d. case (300's). Apples have been in rather better request. The position with regard to onions is unaltered.

Dried Fruit.—The market has shown considerable activity during the week. Currants have again been a specially good spot, and have moved off well. Supplies are none too plentiful, and prices have shown a hardening tendency. Sultanias have been in improved request, and are very firm. The demand for figs has again increased, and the market is steady at moderate rates. Figs have been in good request. Bosnian plums have been a good spot during the week, and have advanced a few shillings. Persian dates have again been a good market.

Oilseeds.—The tone has been fairly steady. Indian linseed at 20s. 6d. is 1s. down, while La Plata at 18s. 1½d. is 1½d. up. Rapeseed has been steady. Toria is 6d. up at 17s. 6d. Cottonseed has been firm. Indian is 3d. up at 9s. 3d., Egyptian black has gained 4½d. at 12s. 3d., while Sakellaridis at 11s. 10½d. is 4½d. up.

Oils.—The tone has been firm. Linseed oil at 39s. has gained 1s. Rape oil has been steady, with crude unchanged at 42s. 6d. and technical refined 1s. 6d. up at 45s. 6d. Cotton oil has been steady. Refined common edible is unchanged at 41s., technical is 1s. up at 40s., while deodorised remains at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—A steady tone has prevailed. Linseed oil is unchanged at 280s., coconut cake remains at 190s., cottonseed cake is 5s. up at 165s., while cottonmeal cake is unaltered at 270s.

SUDAN RAINFALL AND CULTIVATION.

The following particulars are taken from the current report of the Central Economic Board of the Sudan Government:—

Darfur Province.—There are very full crops all over the province.

Nuba Mountains Province.—Excellent crop reports have been received from most districts. Some damage was done by locusts round Tegali (Rashad district) and by the sumta bug in Dilling district.

Dongola Province.—The results of this year's flood are most satisfactory, and the crops throughout the province are excellent and grazing plentiful. Year by year the basins in the province have been improved, and consequently greater benefit has been reaped from the flood of this year than from the flood of 1917, although the latter was a better one. In the larger basins of Letti, Argo and Kerma, a small portion of the land is cultivable owing to the limited quantity of silt covered land, but the remainder, which is only flooded with white water (i.e., after the silt has been deposited), affords excellent grazing. A high flood like that of this year is of much value owing to the amount of silt deposited. The Government Entomologist has succeeded in netting large quantities of sparrows in Letti basin.

Bahr el Ghazal Province.—The rainfall at Wau was 4.755 ins., which is 2 ins. more than last year, but 1 in. under the average. There was, however, a great deal more rain outside Wau, and hence the country is particularly wet, and all travelling has been very difficult. There will be a good harvest.

The Fung Province.—Natives are collecting their crops.

ALGERIAN MARKET FOR AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

In selling implements in Algeria there are three classes of farmers who must be considered (says an American Consular report). The first is the native farmer, whose farming methods are very primitive, and who uses a rough imitation of plough which hardly does more than loosen the crust of the soil. He believes that, results being determined in advance, it is beyond his power to change them by any act of his own, and he acts accordingly. The second class is the European working farmer, who has come from his home in Europe (generally from France) to establish a new home in this country. These farmers are ambitious to farm on a modern basis, but generally lack the capital to buy the necessary machinery. In some cases recent partial or total crop failures have aggravated this condition. The third class is made up of the big landowners, many of whom came to the colony from France with considerable money. They are not lacking in progressive spirit, but are hindered from buying modern equipment by recent crop failures, and in some cases are dependent on the Government for financial aid to carry them through the next season. Obviously, none of these three classes is in a position favourable to the purchase of farm implements at present, but an excellent potential market exists among the farmers from Europe. There are 55,000 farms owned by Europeans, and all are operated to some extent by modern methods, with modern implements. Machinery is also being used on a few of the 550,000 native-owned farms, and better economic conditions will offer at least an improved market among the owners of these farms.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - - - Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES - - - - - 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.

Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL - 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST.

Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI. Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

COMPANY MEETING.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

Present Year's Outlook.

The 146th half-yearly general meeting of the stockholders of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company was held on January 19 at the company's offices, 48, Copthall Avenue, London Wall, E.C., Mr. J. E. Dallas (managing director) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. R. H. Walpole) having read the notice convening the meeting,

The Chairman said: Gentlemen,—Sir Charles Armstrong, the chairman, having gone out to India on the business of the company, it devolves upon me to address you on the subject of the report for the half-year ended September 30, 1922. You will remember that at the corresponding time in the previous year we had to deal with a heavy deficit of Rs.144 lakhs. At the end of the half-year under review, in spite of an increase of 6.40 per cent. in gross earnings and a decrease of 5.70 per cent. in expenditure, we are still, after bringing interest charges to account, confronted with a deficit, but it is reduced to Rs.84 lakhs. The ratio of working expenses to gross earnings for this period was 84.63 per cent., as compared with 95.49 per cent. in the corresponding period of the previous year, when conditions were abnormal. We are seen, therefore, to be progressing in the right direction, but not so fast as we anticipated. The long-wished-for revival of export trade did not materialise during 1922. This is all the more disappointing, inasmuch as there were excellent monsoons in 1921 and 1922, and India is ready to respond to a demand from the outside world if only exchanges would right themselves and enable the market for Indian products to revive.

Glancing for the moment at the present year, the state of the European exchanges is not such as to encourage an early anticipation of a return to normal trade, but just at the moment news comes from India of excellent traffics, and there are other indications that trade is reviving. While we are waiting for a real improvement in trade, we have not been idle in regard to the expenditure side of the account. This has been, and is still being, subjected to rigorous examination, and no pains are being spared to enforce every economy that can be effected without impairing efficiency.

The receipts from coaching traffic were 8.00 per cent., and from goods traffic 4.54 per cent. higher than in the corresponding period of last year. It is too early yet to report the final effect of the recently raised fares and rates on passenger and goods traffics. A return to normal trade will have to occur before the result can be correctly criticised.

You will be glad to learn that sanction has now been received to proceed with the first thirty miles of the Bombay suburban electrification as far as Thana. Steps have been taken to start construction on the first twenty miles of this scheme. Preparations are far advanced, and contracts will shortly be let for the track work and special rolling stock. As I have already mentioned, Sir Charles Armstrong, the chairman, has proceeded to India, and is now engaged on a series of inspections. It only remains to add that the guaranteed interest of 1½ per cent. for the half-year was distributed in December as usual. I now beg to move: "That the report of the directors, together with the accounts now submitted, be received and adopted," and I will ask Mr. Finlay to second that.

Mr. J. F. Finlay, C.S.I., seconded the motion, and, no questions being asked, it was at once put to the meeting and was carried unanimously.

The proceedings then terminated.

According to a message from Tashkent several oil wells have been struck near the source of the river Karatal, in the district of Semiretchensk, in Turkestan.

The Ameer of Afghanistan is negotiating with the Government of India for the installation of a long-distance telephone between Peshawur and Kabul. The telegraph line from Kabul to Jallalabad has already been completed, and connection between Jallalabad and Peshawur is expected to be effected by the middle of February.

COMPANY NOTES AND REPORTS.

Egyptian Delta Light Railways.

The gross receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the year ended March 31, 1922, totalled £396,658. The number of passengers carried was 5,590,001, compared with 7,389,149 for the previous year. The working expenses amounted to £296,986, compared with £355,241. The reduction is largely due to the decreased cost of fuel under the head of "Locomotive." The reduction in expenditure is also shown under the head of "Maintenance of Works and Ways." Owing to the rise in the percentage of working expenses to gross receipts the calculation of Egyptian Government's share of profits in terms of concession gives results which have become inequitable to the company. The directors have made representations on the matter to the Government, and the latter have now agreed to forgo participation in interest on investments, etc., when calculating their share of profits. An arrangement has also been concluded with the Government relating to refunding to the company, in three annual instalments, of such participation as the Government have received from this source during four years to March 31, 1921. The amount of the first instalment refunded is shown as deduction from the Government's proportion of profits in the net revenue account. The payment of the remaining two instalments is dependent upon the net revenue for two years 1922-1923 and 1923-1924.

This assistance is granted subject to the construction of certain new lines agreed upon between the Egyptian Government and the company. Against the construction of these lines the Government will pay over to the company ££90,000, equal to £92,307, the balance of the purchase price of the Cairo Helouan Railway, which they have hitherto retained as a guarantee for this purpose. The balance carried to the net revenue account is £99,672, plus interest £12,435 and balance brought forward £95,282, making £207,390. After providing for interest on debentures and for all fixed charges, making provision for proportion of profits due to the Egyptian Government, and transferring £50,000 to general reserve, £103,281 remains. The board recommends a dividend of 4 per cent. on the preference shares for the year, leaving £61,650 to be carried forward. Meeting, Winchester House, February 2, noon.

Cyprus Oil Trust.

In a circular to the shareholders the directors of the Cyprus Oil Trust announce that an agreement is now being negotiated for the early commencement of drilling operations upon a proved area of the Fyzerbad oil district of Trinidad. The existence of the forest reserve series of oil sands, the source of the whole of the oil output of the Apex Trinidad Company has been proved beneath this area, and fountain production is anticipated at a depth of between 1,400 ft. and 1,500 ft. Contracts for the commencement of the drilling of the first well will be signed immediately upon the completion of the necessary preliminary arrangements. A provisional agreement has also been entered into for the sale of the company's important Roumanian oil properties in the Tazlau Valley to another company. A substantial guaranteed working capital has been made a condition of the contract, and the share consideration payable is in excess of this company's total issued capital.

Commercial Bank of the Near East.

The statutory report states that the total number of shares allotted is 21,345, all of which are allotted for cash. The total amount of cash received by the company in respect of the shares issued wholly for cash is £106,725. The preliminary expenses amount to £2,458. Meeting, 1, Broad Street Place, E.C., January 31, noon.

Bengal and North-Western.

The accounts for the year to September 30 last show net earnings of joint undertakings Rs.1,68,36,341, against Rs.1,57,59,456 for the corresponding period of 1921. The company's share is Rs.98,36,380, against Rs.93,62,357 in 1921. The rate of exchange during the period was slightly below that of 1s. 4d., the book rate, and deducting the actual loss in remittance, viz., £9,180, the net earnings for the year are £546,579, against £636,937 in 1921, when the gain in remittance was £12,780. After bringing in the balance from last year, £127,445, providing for corporation and income-taxes, interest on debenture and preference stocks, interim dividend, and bonus, contribution to provident fund, £35,000 for sinking fund for redemption of capital in 1982, and making other adjustments, the amount to be dealt with is £281,395. The directors recommend a final dividend of 4 per cent., plus a bonus of 2 per cent. on ordinary stock, less tax at 2s. 9d. in the £; forward, £126,145. Meeting, Gresham House, January 30, noon.

The Mercantile Bank of India have opened a branch at Bangkok, Siam.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Scarcity of Business.

The Commercial Company of Egypt, in their report for the week ended January 12, state:—Since our last report the futures market has experienced sharp fluctuations, but at the close the tendency has been rather firmer with marked disposition for a further improvement. The bad political news received in the week on the German reparations question and the fears that this might affect the fate of the Lausanne Peace Conference resulted in hurried liquidations of some weakly held "long" positions, which, falling on a narrow market deprived of real trade support, had the most depressing effect. Prices receded sharply, and January Sakel. has been quoted at one time as low as 30.70 dollars and February Ashmouni at 27.40 dollars. These low prices, however, attracted a good business from spinners; moreover, recent news from Lausanne has been brighter, on which the market reacted heavily, and in the last two sessions of the week more than recovered the lost ground. The American market has been again extremely firm, and reports received from America indicate a continued industrial activity with very heavy spinners' takings. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said about Europe, where the military measures to which France has decided to have recourse against Germany may cause a further depreciation in the Continental exchanges and greater depression in trade. Total arrivals from up-country since September 1 now amount to about 4,700,000 kantars, and a summary revaluation of the stocks still held at the factories and in the villages in the interior gave the figure of about 1,000,000 kantars; on the other hand, export figures continue satisfactory; in fact, on balance this week Alexandria stock shows a decrease and stands at just over 2,500,000 kantars. We continue to have a favourable opinion of the market, and we think that as soon as the international political situation improves the demand for Egyptian cotton will be increased, as the present prices of Egyptians compared with Americans are very attractive, and, sooner or later, spinners will not fail to take advantage of this to fulfil their requirements.

Spot.—Minet-el-Bassal was closed on Saturday last for the Greek Christmas holidays; total sales amount to about 17,000 bales, of which we estimate:—12,100 bales Sakellaridis, 4,850 bales Uppers, 50 bales Brown. Owing to the scarcity of business from abroad the market during the week, with the exception of Thursday's session, has been rather dull.

Sakellaridis.—A good business has been done in low grades middling to fair, and the price for this cotton has consequently stiffened. There has been a fair turnover of business in good fair to fully good fair, the price of spot against contract being slightly harder. The better grades have also been dealt in, but not to any great extent.

Uppers.—Although there is rather more cotton below fully good fair offering on the market holders are still difficult to deal with, the bulk of the demand being for these grades. A fair amount of good cotton has changed hands at about last week's rates.

Other Varieties.—A negligible business has been done, these cottons being practically non-existent.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Improvement Maintained.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended January 17:—

The improvement which began at the end of last week has been well maintained in this department; a strong tone has been everywhere in evidence, and a welcome increase to the total sales has been registered. The situation is still very obscure, however, and one may be easily misled as to what is actually happening. A series of "bullish" futures markets, coupled with unusually good trade reports from Manchester, have engendered a feeling of optimism that perhaps is not quite called for. Everyone is heartily tired of the state of semi-stagnation to which we have been subjected for so long, and the slightest sign of any break in the clouds was bound to secure more enthusiasm (and perhaps magnification) than the facts actually warranted.

Buying has not been general, by any means, and spinners are just as cautious as ever in filling their requirements. A fair amount of speculation has helped to swell sales, of which a large proportion has undoubtedly been composed of low cotton, in which a brisk business continues to take place. During the past week the demand has been centred chiefly in Uppers (as it was the week before), and the market was speedily swept clear of cotton, 14½d.-15d. per lb., and the basis hardened considerably, both here and in Alexandria. There is a good deal of speculation cotton floating about here, which tends to make the prices of Upper somewhat irregular. Rather more interest has been displayed in white cotton, but the net result has been small only; whilst brown, 16d. to 17d. and the "best," has also been sought for with some eagerness. Sudan has been in moderate request, but Pilon cotton has been neglected. In Sakellaridis a little has been done at about 16½d. to 17½d., whilst for the better grades there has scarcely been an inquiry. At the moment, owing to outside complications, a certain amount of uncertainty prevails as to the immediate trend of prices. However, granted that nothing serious intervenes on the political horizon, we consider that the stage is set for something in the nature of a mild revival in the Egyptian market. C.i.f. business has been very disappointing in face of the excellent reports received from Manchester, but we gather that in that city, as in ours, business is still very patchy. Forwardings to spinners continue good. Total sales, 3,600 bales (includes 430 Sudan). Quotations of Sakellaridis are advanced 75 points, those of Brown and Upper 60 points on the week. Fully Good Fair Sakellaridis to-day 18.00d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

Considerable Inquiry for India.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended January 20 states:—

This market continues in a more optimistic state, principally owing to the really considerable inquiry which is coming to hand from Calcutta. As has so often been the case, the prices offered are very low and usually in the first instance unstable. Nevertheless, by means of concessions on one side or the other more business than for some time past is finding its way definitely into the order book.

Yarn.—Speaking generally, conditions have been far better during the past week than for a considerable period. There is a fair demand for both American and Egyptian yarns. Prices are more firmly held at advances of from ½d. to 1d. per lb. over last week to correspond with the considerable rise in the raw material, although there is a strong feeling of doubt as to the possibility of maintaining a continuous business at reasonable returns to the spinners on the basis of raw cotton at 16d. per lb.

Cloth.—As mentioned above, there has been an extensive inquiry, and considerably more definite bookings for Calcutta, but other outlets have not shown the same activity. Calcutta is, however, Lancashire's largest individual customer, and has in itself the power to effect a considerable difference in the state of affairs here, but, as in the case of yarn, it is felt that the hardening of prices following dearer cotton may easily act as a check. China continues to disappoint the hopes of those who were looking for an active demand from that quarter. Egypt has done less than lately, and the minor overseas outlets may be described as dull. Home trade is still quiet, but a more active demand is anticipated after the completion of the January sales and stock-takings.

Raw Cotton.—As already mentioned, this has been a strong market, though the reasons are by no means as clear as they might be, particularly in view of the present political situation on the Continent. The present price of American is the highest for over two years, but Egyptian has not shared to the same extent in the advance of recent weeks. Closing prices are as follows:—American Fully Middling, 16.30d.; Egyptian Fully Good Fair, 18.23d.

ENQUIRY BUREAU.

Merchants, etc., may insert a paragraph in the following column free of charge. Letters in reply should be addressed to "The Enquiry Bureau, 'The Near East,' 1, Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2." It must be understood that "The Near East" accepts no responsibility in connection with such replies.

129.—Principal of old-established textile manufacturing and import firm in Aleppo (Syria), now in Switzerland, wishes to get in touch with cotton and woollen yarn manufacturers or exporters in Lancashire and Yorkshire.

130.—Import and export merchants in Beirut (Syria) in a position to export dried carobs in any desired quantity wish to be connected with interested British firms.

131.—A Yugoslav firm is in a position to deliver white asbestos up to any quantity, and invites inquiries.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Mosul.

The report for November states:—The heavy rain that has fallen during the last week of the month has resulted in a slight decline in grain prices, which rose at the commencement of the month. The market in foodstuffs was fairly active during the first half of the month. There has been some activity in gall-nuts as a result of orders by merchants for London.

Jerusalem, December 30.

There has been a little more retail movement owing to the holidays, but the cereals market remains quiet.

Jaffa, December 23.

The prices obtained in the United Kingdom for cases of oranges have fallen considerably. Prices averaged from 10s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. a case. There have been small shipments of dhari seed to Malta during the week.

Jaffa, December 30.

The prices obtained in the United Kingdom for Jaffa oranges continue to be low. If this goes on, the financial position of the orange-growers and exporters will be bad.

The report for December states:—The position of the grain market is much the same as in the previous month. There is nothing to record except some small shipments of beans to Alexandria and of millet to Malta, and a rise in the price of barley to 310 piastres per quintar. The prices of other cereals remain unchanged.

The prices obtained in Great Britain for oranges are not very encouraging. The first shipment was sold at about 15s. 6d. per case, but subsequent consignments have not realised more than 11s. 6d. to 13s. per case.

The Palestine market has been dull for some time, mainly because of the heavy imports. The merchants find themselves at present with too large stocks of goods.

Busrch, December 9.

The export of cereals continues. The news coming from the interior regarding cultivation is very encouraging.

Tripoli, January 6.

The intermittent rains during December have favoured the sowing of cereals. There has been a little business done in our market in consequence of the export of barley, beans, chick-peas, etc., to Palestine, Egypt, Malta, and Cyprus. The first consignments of lemons and oranges to Liverpool have been disposed of at remunerative prices. Those subsequently shipped have not given such good results.

Homs, January 6.

A new decline, exceeding 20 to 25 per cent., has taken place in wheat and cereals in general, with the exception of articles greatly in demand for export abroad, e.g. lentils and caraway seeds. A kantar of wheat fetches 420 to 500 piastres the kantar of 298 kg., according to quality, as against 550 to 600 ps. last month. This fall is attributed to the existing stock which is not suitable for export abroad, and which exceeds the needs for local consumption. The fall in the price of barley has not been so marked, a kantar of 298 kg. being worth from 310 to 330 ps. Maize is selling at from 270 to 300 ps. the kantar.

Railway traffic has been about the same as for the past month. There has been a decrease in the export of cereals for Tripoli, which has fallen to 40 tons per day, against an average of 55 tons for November. Owing to the rains and the bad weather the camel drivers are only able to transport 25 per cent., i.e., 10 tons per day. The remainder are sent by rail. Large quantities of petrol have arrived both by camel and by rail. There has been no change in freight.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.

A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
J. UNGAR
E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
HAMID BEY.
NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
E. W. H. BARRY.
THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
C.M.G.
THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
O.B.E.
SIR W. GUY GRANET.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
LORD HILLINGDON.
GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
K.P., P.C.
LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
JEAN BOISSONNAS.
CHARLES DE CERJAT.
HORACE FINALY.
GEORGES HEINE.
ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
RAOUL MALLET.
LE COMTE FREDERIC
PILLET-WILL.
FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager : E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary : C. E. L. CORTHORN.

Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary : R. S. C. PEARCE.

Assistant Manager : W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:

56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:

7, Rue Meyerbeer.

MARSEILLES:

41-43, Rue Grignan

CONSTANTINOPLE.

(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Bulgaria.

Dredger, Tugs, etc.—The Bulgarian Ministry of Railways and Ports is calling for tenders for the following dredging material:—(1) One bucket dredger. (2) Three lighters ("chalands à clapets"). (3) Three tugs, river type. February 26. (D.O.T.)

Egypt.

School Materials.—The Sub-Director of Stores, Ministry of Education, Sharia Qasr el Aini, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of large quantities of school materials, such as exercise books, Arabic reed pens, pencils, black ink of local manufacture, white and coloured chalk, pens, rulers, pieces of indiarubber, slates, etc., required for the school-year 1923-1924. January 31.

Clothing, etc.—The Director of Stores, Department of Public Health, Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of clothing, equipment, etc., required for one year from April 1, 1923. February 3.

General Stores, etc.—Tenders are invited by the Ministry of the Interior, Egypt, for the supply to the Department of Public Health of various general stores for the year 1923-24. The stores required cover a fairly wide range, and include clothing, hardware, glassware, furniture, boots and shoes, brushes, oils and paints, etc. February 3. (D.O.T.)

Various Articles.—The Ministry of the Interior, Prisons Department, invites tenders for the supply of various articles required by the Prisons Department for the year 1923-4. The range of articles required is extensive, and includes cotton yarn, cloth, clothing, sacks, hard haberdashery, thread, tents, cordage, etc., soaps, paints, oils, alcohol, acids, greases, electrical goods, leather, fibres, horsehair, bristles, copper articles, tools, machines, lathes, looms, etc., hardware, ironmongery, steel, iron, timber, and wood; while there is a section concerning the dyeing of articles of clothing. February 7. (D.O.T.)

Steel Pigeon-hole Cupboards.—The Postmaster-General, G.P.O., Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply and erection at Port Said Post Office of seven sections of steel pigeon-hole cupboards for private letter-boxes, each section to consist of fifty-four boxes. Specifications can be seen at the office of the Egyptian Government Representative, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster, London, S.W. February 10.

General Stores.—The Director-General, Cairo Tanzim Department, invites tenders for the supply of general stores during one year from April 1. February 15.

Photographic Materials.—Tenders are invited by the Egyptian Ministry of the Interior for various photographic materials required during 1923. The goods required include photographic apparatus and accessories, plates, paper, cinematograph film stock and apparatus, and small quantities of miscellaneous photographic chemicals, etc. March 15. (D.O.T.)

India.

Microscopes.—H.M. Senior Trade Commissioner in India (Mr. T. M. Ainscough, C.B.E.) states that a consulting engineer in Calcutta will shortly be in the market for a number of microscopes on behalf of his clients, and that he is anxious to obtain the best possible microscope produced. (D.O.T.)

Iraq.

Stores.—The Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, invites tenders for the following stores to fill the annual demand of the Iraq Army Ordnance Department:—Bedding: blankets, G.S., 600; Bedsteads, F.S.: boards (sets of 3), 3,242; trestles, pairs, 3,880; Textile Stores: carpets, bedside, 750; flannel-ette, doz. yards, 3,935; bunting—black, yards, 366; green, yards, 366; red, yards, 200; white, yards, 366; thread, linen, machine, No. 50 reels, black 10, red 6, white 10; flag, musketry inst., red, 14; Games-Gymnasia: jackets, fencing, canvas, large 26; small 25; marks, bayonet-fighting, large 38, small 38; pads, fencing, body, canvas, 95; gloves, fencing, leather, left, padded, 68; right, padded, 100; foot-balls 300; inflators, 40; awls, facing, 40; nets, sets, 14. Tenders, on the proper form, should reach the Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, before noon on February 15. (D.O.T.)

Stores.—The Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, invites tenders for the supply of small quantities of stores to fill the annual demand of the Iraq Army Ordnance Department. The articles required include, among others, the following:—Brooms, brushes, spring balances, fire buckets, and stoves (1,000), meat choppers, school desks (100), hurricane and globe lamps (1,460), fire engines, fire alarms, butchers' implement, metal stamps, folding tables. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Roumania.

Tinmen's Rivets and Split Pins.—The Roumanian Railway Administration invites tenders for the supply of 8,500 packets, each containing 1,000 tinmen's rivets, and 5,545,000 split pins of various sizes. Tenders, which should be addressed La Direction Générale des Chemins de fer Roumains, Service P. (Calea Victoriei No. 124), Bucharest, will be received up to 11 a.m. on February 2. (D.O.T.)

NEW COMPANIES.

Anglo-French Near Eastern Syndicate.

The Anglo-French Near Eastern Syndicate, Ltd., has been registered as a private company, with a nominal capital of £5,500 in 5,000 preference shares of £1 each and 10,000 ordinary shares of 1s. each. The objects are to adopt an agreement with Major-General Sir Charles V. F. Townshend, D.S.O., and Count de Forceville, and to acquire concessions in any part of the world. The permanent directors are Major-General Sir Charles Townshend (chairman) and Count de Forceville (managing director). The first named may nominate one other permanent director. Qualification, 250 shares. Preference share No. 1 is to be allotted to General Townshend, and preference share No. 2,501 to Count de Forceville. The holders of such shares may each nominate two directors. The nominees of the holder of share No. 1 must be of British nationality, and the nominees of the holder of share No. 2,501 of French nationality.

Slav American Trading Company.

The Slavenska Banka, in association with a group of the most important manufacturers in Yugoslavia and several exporting and importing houses abroad, has founded the Slav American Trading Co., Ltd., for the purpose of establishing direct business relations with foreign countries. This company, which has already connections in various foreign markets, will be particularly concerned in the export of Yugoslavian produce, such as timber, eggs, sour cherries, prunes, poultry, nuts, etc. The address is the Slav American Trading Co., Ltd., Zagreb, Vlasica Ulica.

Mr. William Dean, formerly associated with the British Trade Corporation, and Mr. F. O. A. Speed have been appointed additional managers of the British Overseas Bank.

Sir Walter Roper Lawrence, Bart., director of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, has been elected a member of the London Advisory Committee of the Canada Steamship Lines.

A Reuter message from New York states that a party of officers and engineers of the International Barnstall Corporation are sailing on the 27th for Baku for the purpose of drilling under the terms of an agreement made by the company with the Soviet Government to operate a large section of the Baku oilfields.

At an extraordinary general meeting of Morums Oriental Stores, Ltd., held on January 16 at Winchester House, E.C., the resolutions passed at the ordinary general meeting held on December 29 last regarding the proposed reduction of capital and its subsequent increase, together with necessary alterations to the articles of association, were unanimously confirmed.

OAKEY'S

SILVERSMITH'S SOAP, for Cleaning and Polishing Silver, Electro Plate, etc. Tablets, 6d.

WELLINGTON

"WELLINGTON BLACK LEAD" in Solid Blocks, 1d., 2d. and 4d. 1s. Boxes.

The Original Preparation for polishing Cutlery.

Canisters, 1d., 2d., 3d., 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d. and 4s. each.

KNIFE

Polishing Paste, Furniture Polish, Plate Powder.

POLISH

Glass Paper, Emery Cloth, Black Lead Packers,

WELLINGTON MILLS, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD, LONDON. S.E.1.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) £650,000 | RESERVE - - - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bander Abbas, Bushire, Duzdab Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohommereh, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shuhstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Busreh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd. LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - - - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - £485,580
RESERVE - - - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
1, Devonshire Square,
London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
weekly for months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
RATES 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum; 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NORCOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - - Rs. 5.62.35.500
Reserve - - - Rs. 4.11.82.805

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
London Branch: 5, Whitlington Avenue, E.C.3.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

*Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.*

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	£2,600,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.	SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.	ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD.	J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.	ROBERT MILLER, Esq.
		J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinia
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital
12,000,000 Leva
Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS,
ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIATION DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - - L.lt. 400 millions.
Reserves - - - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA,
Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk,
— Philippopolis and Sliven —

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 612—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK ...	103	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Russia and Roumania ...	114	Notes and News ...	119
Greece ...	107	THE WEEK AT HOME ...	105	Commerce and Industry ...	120
Turkey ...	108	CORRESPONDENCE ...	110	Shipping Intelligence ...	121
Irak ...	109	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF ...	111	The Abyssinian Market ...	122
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL... 113		Near East Markets ...	123
France and the Near East ...	115	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST 117		Tenders Invited ...	124
				Stock and Share Markets ...	125
				Cotton and Cotton Goods ...	127

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

At Lausanne.

This week the Allies are to present to the Turkish delegation at Lausanne the terms of the Treaty that they are prepared to offer Turkey in the place of the ill-omened Treaty of Sèvres. The document will contain several clauses which the Turks have announced their fixed resolve not to accept, but nothing was to be gained by trying to reach agreement on these points, in view of the attitude, merely intransigent and unsupported by argument, adopted by the Turks. As it is unlikely that the latter would in any case sign the Treaty immediately, the wisest course is being followed by the chiefs of the Allied delegations in leaving Lausanne, so that the Angora Government may have as much time as it cares to take to decide on its course of action. Were it not for the anomalous situation in Constantinople, where the position of the British community has long since become intolerable, the Allies could view with equanimity any attempt by Turkey to prolong indefinitely the present indeterminate state of affairs. The Turks have more to lose by such tactics than the Allies, and will tire of them first.

The Question of Mosul.

It would be interesting to know the real reason for the unyielding stand taken by the Turks in regard to Mosul. An attitude which cannot be supported by any valid argument must be based, it would be thought, on a very compelling reason, and the world is left to decide whether it is an exaggerated belief in the immediate pecuniary advantages to be derived from possession of potential oilfields, even if they may not be brought to a producing stage for a score of years, or outside backing from a very influential quarter. Ismet Pasha's stolid imperviousness to all logic was not the least arresting feature in a memorable sitting, and his determination, after undergoing intellectual humiliation on his country's behalf, to confine himself in the future entirely to a military career, eschewing further adventures in diplomacy, can be easily understood. Lord Curzon's masterly handling of the British case for the retention of Mosul within the boundaries of the Arab kingdom of Irak made a great impression on the Conference. His arguments, admirably marshalled, were supported with pitiless logic, and the Turkish delegate, being compelled to speak to his brief, could offer no reply that would have been convincing even to his own intelligence. He took refuge, therefore, in a non possumus, in spite of the appeal of the British, French, and Italian representatives that he should face facts.

Reference to the League.

When the Turks persisted in their refusal to yield on the subject of Mosul or to agree to a friendly reference of the matter to the League of Nations, Lord Curzon gave effect to his threat to take action under Article X. of the League's Covenant. On the ground that the question is one affecting international relations, which threatens to disturb international peace and good understanding between the nations, he has applied for leave to submit it to the forthcoming meeting of the Council of the League. It will probably be found that the question of Mosul will ultimately be settled between Great Britain and Turkey. In referring the controversy to the League of Nations, the British Government has acted wisely, and has helped to strengthen the position of the League. If the decision is entirely in Great Britain's favour, the League's most powerful weapon would be to declare a financial and economic boycott of Turkey. But it is difficult to understand how Turkey will find herself able to wait for the infliction of such a penalty; and we are disposed to think that she will prefer, before that time comes, to withdraw from an untenable position or to declare war, according to the wisdom or unwisdom of the moment prevailing at Angora. It behoves Great Britain, therefore, not to repeat the mistake of the last few years by omitting to keep in touch with the Turks in the event of the chief delegates leaving Lausanne. Angora has made some progress on the road from the wilds of Anatolia to civilisation; she appears, judging by her attitude on one or two points still outstanding, to have halted by the wayside for a space; but most probably she will wish to resume her slow journey before long.

The War Issue.

For the moment there is evidently to be a great rattling of sabres at Angora. Mustapha Kemal Pasha has been summoned to return from his political tour with all haste for an extraordinary meeting of the National Assembly. The situation arising out of the "failure" of the Lausanne Conference is to be the subject of discussion, and it is certain that there will be a demand for a declaration of war against Great Britain. Interest mainly centres in the action of Mustapha Kemal. Will he become merely the tool of the wild men of Angora, or, in keeping with the spirit of parts, at least, of his recent political speeches, will he lecture the Assembly on Turkey's economical position, and refuse to push the country farther down the steep slope of bankruptcy? In the meantime, it is well that the garrison at Mosul should be reinforced, and that the Turks should be enabled to realise that Great Britain has not the least intention of shrinking from a war deliberately forced upon her. A Turkish declaration of war at this stage will not be prompted by patriotic motives regarding Mosul; it will be the outcome of mere hot-headedness on the part of Angora, which imagines that, because it has defeated a demoralised Greek army, it is capable of challenging the world. Great Britain, in turn, will not be fighting for commercial ends in Irak, but to re-establish peace in the Near and Middle East, which can only be secured by a return to reason on the part of the Turks.

Bulgaria's Outlet on the Ægean.

At Lausanne the Bulgarian, no less than the Turkish, Delegation has found itself obliged to reject the Allies' suggestions; but it has been able to support its refusal with such reasoned and reasonable arguments that it has in no way sacrificed the good opinion previously formed of its tact and diplomatic savoir faire. In declining to accept the Allies' offer in regard to a port at Dedeagatch or Makri, the Bulgarian spokesman, Dr. Stancioff, made a point in drawing a parallel between Article 23 of the Treaty of Berlin and Article 48 of the Treaty of Neuilly. The former article provided for the introduction into Turkey of the Organic Law, and its non-fulfilment was responsible for much of the subsequent trouble in the Balkans. Article 48 of the Treaty of Neuilly stated that the Principal Allied and Associated Powers undertook to ensure the economic outlets of Bulgaria to the Ægean Sea, leaving the conditions of this "guarantee" to be fixed at a later date. The point of the comparison is that, if this guarantee also remains a dead letter, the results in time to come may be equally unfortunate for the Peninsula.

The Egyptian Constitution.

A telegram from Cairo reports that the future of the Sudan is still proving a stumbling-block in the way of the Egyptian Constitution. In spite of emphatic reminders that it has been agreed that the Sudan is a reserved subject, relegated to subsequent discussion, the Egyptian Government is endeavouring to include in the draft Constitution a reference to the King of Egypt as King of Egypt and the Sudan. Lord Allenby has again intervened to veto the step. The view is held in Egypt that the Cabinet, if it allows itself to be overruled on this point, will have to resign, and its opponents suggest that it is purposely riding for a fall on this subject, as one which would command popular sympathy, in order to obscure another issue on which it has adopted a less popular attitude. It would be thought that there could not possibly be any misunderstanding in Egypt as to Great Britain's attitude on this question. A Cabinet in affecting concern over its own position in regard to it is exaggerating its difficulties; it will probably find, after the first excitement has subsided, that public attention will be quickly attracted to a number of other subjects.

The High Commissioner for India.

The appointment of Mr. D. M. Dalal as High Commissioner for India is a satisfactory solution of the difficulty we pointed out when the vacancy occurred, that, while the selection of an Indian would be at once popular and appropriate, very few Indians with the requisite qualifications were available. Mr. Dalal's business abilities and personal qualities are not open to dispute, while his experience on the Secretary of State's Council must have given him sufficient familiarity with the way things are done in London, and his presence in Grosvenor Gardens ought to convince Indians in general that their Government is master in its own house.

Lord Peel's Dispatch.

Not the least merit of Lord Peel's reply to the Indian demand for further constitutional boons is that it contains absolutely nothing new. The writer himself claims Mr. Montagu as his principal authority, and the contentions which he urges would be commonplaces but for the fact that they have been overlooked by so many Indian politicians. Lord Peel points out that the legislatures have not yet taken all their chances, that the electorates on which they depend are still in embryo, and that the new administrative machinery is still being tested for speed and efficiency, and he concludes that Parliament is not in a mood to be hustled into premature changes. The last doctrine, by the way, is much needed in India just now, for the opinion has been widely expressed that a little violence and a good deal of clamour will obtain all that is wanted, but the facts put forward in the dispatch are really too obvious to require discussion. The Legislative Assembly will doubtless protest, but we hope that, when it has done so, it will gradually take the lesson to heart, and settle down to the honourable tasks awaiting it.

The New Royal Commission.

The dispatch to which we have referred ought to be of itself a conclusive reply to the fantastic theory which is apparently popular in Indian liberal circles—that Lord Peel is out to undo the work of Mr. Montagu; but, if further evidence were wanted, it would be found in the decision to undertake an inquiry into Service questions, which so nearly synchronised with Mr. Montagu's articles on the subject. The selection of a Royal Commission as the most appropriate machinery does not command universal approval, but, so far as we have seen, the need for inquiry has not been seriously contested, and now that the decision has been taken, the most important thing is that action should follow with the least possible delay. The questions at issue are large and complex, but most of the material required for their disposal is readily available, and it will be most unfortunate if the Commission allows itself to be submerged in a flood of what is called evidence in India, or to be tempted into the elaboration of detailed schedules, which may be obsolescent before they see the light. The call is now for principles, and their formulation should precede the attempt to translate them into regulations.

The End of an Epoch.

Among the first Indian criticisms on the appointment of the Royal Commission, perhaps the most striking is that which speaks of the announcement as "the obituary notice of the all-India Services." The expression is, of course, too strong, but it would be strictly accurate to take the announcement as a reminder that those historic organisations are not immortal. As we pointed out last year, the action already taken makes it indisputable that each province must ultimately be master of the staff employed within its limits, and to our mind the most important function of the Commission will be to indicate the transitional measures needed to bring about that change, and the stages by which it can most easily be reached. The all-India Services are really older than British rule, for they derive directly from the Mogul attempt to bring the country under a homogeneous and centralised despotism. That ideal has now been finally abandoned by Parliament, and, sooner or later, the machinery must follow the ideal. The change cannot, of course, be made by a stroke of the pen, but the time appears to have come for a formal recognition that it is inevitable.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

A Fateful Time.

It is possible that during the next week decisions will be made by the Government that will very closely affect the future of this country. I do not speak here of the result of the Lausanne Conference, except to remark that the possibilities of war therein are not totally extinct, or of the Cabinet meeting to-morrow to decide on the American proposals for funding the British debt, but of our relations towards France and the rest of Europe, which must soon be clarified and precisely defined. Such a definition should, in consideration of the presence of British troops at Cologne, be quickly made, for already there have been incidents which raise an extremely delicate situation between British and French commands. The exercise of a sovereign neutrality at Cologne would, in short, seem to be an impossibility.

With so many probabilities in the matter we have had, of course, many authoritative announcements upon the intentions of the British Government. It is asserted softly, and it is loudly enough demanded, that our Cologne garrison will shortly be withdrawn—such assertions generally being accompanied by a malicious hint that France may be left to “stew in her own juice” (a solution which a few fatigued islanders consistently apply to any knotty problem, whether it be that of the Irish, Russians, or Greeks); and some of our brighter déracinés have actually talked about a fundamental recasting of our whole European policy. One cannot help feeling anxious with all these weighty ideas floating, as it were, in the darkened air.

Britain's Future Policy.

I confess I am completely in the dark upon what our Government proposes to do, and perhaps am unjustified in suspecting that it is less ready to support the French in the Ruhr than the country itself would be. There is to be a Cabinet meeting this week, it is said, to decide on the matter, and we may then have an end to this intolerable suspense. We ought indeed to know where we stand. We complain that the French lack consistent counsels, that we do not understand their plans, and therefore will not follow them, and at the same time we cry that they are pursuing a separate and impossibly selfish aim. Such an attitude on our part as this simply is not dignified enough—it might have stood in the balmy days of Mr. Lloyd George, but in Mr. Bonar Law's honest breezes it falls feebly down. The Premier will finally decide whether the security of France is consistent with general European peace or not.

One hopes fervently that he will back France. If he deems it wisest to withdraw British troops from Germany, the tragedy of the long years 1914-1918 will appear completer and darker still. Such a sentiment is admittedly of little account to those who treat the reparations question as one of economics alone, but of its prevalence in simpler hearts there is no doubt.

A New Prayer Book?

A very important document was recently issued by the National Assembly of the Church of England in the “Revised Prayer Book (Permissive Use) Measure, 1923.” It appears to be the result of an attempt on the part of certain Anglicans to revise the Prayer Book in accordance with what they consider to be popular opinion. Among the principal changes proposed are: Altered wording of the exhortation in the Marriage Service and of the prayer for the gift of children; shortening, by the omission of various passages, of the Ten Commandments; the prescription of certain vestments for use in Holy Communion, and reservation of consecrated bread and wine for administration to the sick.

Discussion on these proposals are to take place at a meeting of the Assembly this week, but a decision will scarcely be made without prolonged consideration. The High Churchmen, or Ritualists, or Anglo-Catholics, are obviously out to get a large foot in matters, and their scheme to have two licit orders of public prayer has many supporters outside their own body. But heated disputes can be foreseen, for the tendency in England to denounce as “Popish” anything that savours of symbolic ceremonial is still very strong, and it is just conceivable, though not probable, that the proposal will bring about a schism in the Church. How bitter the feeling is is evident from the fact that a public debate took place last week at Blackburn between an Anglo-Catholic and another clergyman. Extremely hard words were thrown at the Anglo-Catholic movement by a vicar of an Essex parish, and, too, were flung back on its opponents, though what the audience, which, we are told, was exceptionally large, thought about it all we do not know. Possibly it resolved, having duly weighed the merits of the two schools, to be really more careful in its putting on the following Sunday.

The “Daily Herald.”

If there is one thing more certain than another which a reporter of the modern time in England is

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

LONDON: Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
CALCUTTA: 1 & 2, Old Court House Corner. H.L. Bell, Gen. Man.
CAIRO: 48, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Loc. Director.
ALEXANDRIA: Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
CYPRUS: Najem Houry & Sons.
JERUSALEM,
JOPPA, HAIFA, } Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.
KHARTOUM,

sure year by year to encounter it is the announcement that the Daily Herald is in financial difficulties. I do not suggest that one looks forward to the statement, because, somehow or other, those difficulties are always for a year or so obscured, only to rise again with even more distressing evidence of their determination not to die. The Herald of last week contained both a report that the circulation was higher than it had ever been before, and vigorous appeals for support from its readers to save it from extinction.

There was a time when one could read the Herald; when, for example, it was manifestly independent, and studied by all open-minded publicists, or when it had the reputation of having the best literary page of all the London dailies; but in these later days, when it has attempted the impossible task of becoming a newspaper, resort has had to be made to other sources for information on the Labour point of view. That there is a warped vitality in it is proved by the letters which the Morning Post is publishing from its editor on the charge of pro-Germanism in his paper; but, apparently, no one is willing to pay the doctors' fees necessary to prolong its life.

A Public School Incident.

Quite undue prominence has been given to the case of a young boy at Christ's Hospital who, consequent on some bad lining at a Rugger match and some kicking by other boys, stabbed himself to death, and quite unnecessary morals have been drawn upon our whole public-school system. There is the type which believes that all is well with our schools, the sort of "Waterloo won on the playing-fields of Eton" man, who thinks that all boys who cannot fit in easily with the hard ways of our athleticism turn out to be undesirable kinds of Englishmen; there is another type, fashionable enough since the publication of Alec Waugh's "Loom of Youth," which believes that the regnant athleticism can be so modified as rather to give scope to than crush the original, individual boy; and there is the last type, which believes apparently that schools should be run in the interest of brainy boys alone. This last type has been very assertive in the last week, commenting bitterly on the barbarian devilry of most young boys at public schools, and the consequent inability of the gentle young angels of genius to make their presence felt.

On the whole, however, it seems that the defenders of the present system have it. That system throws up just enough capable men in religion, politics, art and science for us to keep our national end up; and if the majority are merely successful sportsmen; well, how infinitely preferable are sportsmen to pigs!

Our Missing Winter.

The Winter seems this year to have tucked itself away altogether, possibly as a sign of contrition for the infamous conduct last year of its fellow-con-spirator, the Summer. Anyhow, Spring is with us now in all its mild loveliness. Snowdrops were up a week ago, and crocuses and narcissi are cracking their way through the soil with the cheeriest bluster—in the farther country, indeed, I believe they are already through. The days are full of birds' song; I know a man who swears that he heard even a chaffinch practising last week. But for most of us who by day "in a prison live" the finest glory of this time has come from the moon-laden nights. We have recently had some wonderful nights—and it has been warm enough to stand outside and admire their beauty—with the crescent moon riding through sleepy banks of cloud.

But we are never satisfied. We are being cheated of our Winter, and are consequently full of anxious forebodings for February and March. One cannot help thinking how much more useful and thoughtful it would have been of Mr. Hutchinson if he had written a book called "If Winter Doesn't Come."

Progress at Covent Garden.

The pre-War mind was wont to connect Covent Garden with one of two things, flowers and fruit or opera. Those were halcyon days, when the scent of stale cabbages used to vie with the sound of stale arie. But we have got on since then, and something entirely new holds sway. This is a monstrosity yclept a "jazzaganza," by the author of "Chuckles of 1922." Who this amiable perverter of truth may be (did you ever hear a single chuckle in 1922?) I do not know, but he has engaged some of the highest genius in the land to spread-eagle itself in his revue. What Londoner will not feel the thrill that only great art can bring when he sees Mr. George Robey, all for the sum of £600 a week, parodying Lohengrin, and Lopokova and Massine, in luxurious desertion from the Russian ballet, adorning the great spectacle?

Cultures may come and cultures may go, but civilisation seems to go on for ever. We suffer balls in the Royal Opera House of Covent Garden; we have had cinema-runs there; and we are now jazzaganzing with the place! Why not go the whole hog, and let all boxing championships, say, between the future nigger prize heavyweight of the States and his Jewish vis-à-vis of Great Britain, be held there, so that the old house may once more shine with international splendour brought up to date?

Some Recent Books.

If you have the misfortune to be interested in sociology you cannot very well disregard the work of Mr. and Mrs. Webb, who used to be called (by Mr. Orage, I think) "the Siamese twins of social reform." This egregious pair have now brought out "The Decay of Capitalist Civilisation" (Allen and Unwin). It is certain to be a mass or maze of brilliant statistics, of complacent demonstration, and of flawless inhumanity.

"Camille Saint-Saëns," by Watson Lyle (Kegan Paul), is the story of a versatile musician written for the most part in a tone of frank admiration. It contains a preface by the Persian pianist, M. Leff Pouishnoff, in which tribute is paid to Mr. Lyle's sense of musical appreciation.

Both botanists and geographers will be pleased with Professor A. C. Seward's "A Summer in Greenland" (Cambridge University Press), for, in addition to technical detail, it contains observations upon Greenland's geography and civilisation.

Anthologies of verse have in this age become both a necessity and a habit, but few are so original as W. K. Seymour's "A Miscellany of Poetry, 1920-1922" (J. G. Wilson). Mr. Seymour includes nothing that has before been printed in book form, and, though in casting his net so wide he catches some rather insipid fish, he makes some very notable captures, particularly by Ralph Hodgson, Mrs. Robert Lind, and himself.

ALTER EGO.

FOR HIRE

PRIVATE CARS OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS

10-DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE-W.

Langham
222
Hampstead
8203
Finchley
277

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

GREECE.

Athens, January 18.

Greek Fascismo.

Since my last letter there has been no change in the political situation here. The Revolutionary Committee is still carrying on, and has apparently decided to continue doing so until the elections are held. The date of these has not yet been fixed, but it is believed that a definite decision will be taken when (and if) peace is signed at Lausanne. Meanwhile the creation throughout Greece of the "Unions of National Salvation" is a gentle hint to those who imagined that as soon as elections were proclaimed the Revolution would be disbanded. These unions, the chief aims of which are the abolition of the old political parties and the termination of the internal strife with a view to establishing a new and sound progressive political life, are run on the lines of the now extinct political syllogues, and their members are mostly demobilised officers and men. Notwithstanding the fact that the creation of this new political party weakens considerably the Venizelist ranks, which were greatly relying on the votes of the adherents of the Revolution in the forthcoming elections, many of the irreconcilable Venizelists have not only promised to afford their support to the Unions, but have actually become members.

The Death of the ex-King.

King Constantine's death, which was announced in a brief communiqué issued by the Revolutionary Committee, came as a big surprise. The late King had, of course, been suffering for some time past, but nobody expected such a sudden end. The first to receive the sad news was the King, who received a telegram from his mother, the ex-Queen Sophie, worded as follows: "Father died suddenly, heart failure. All my thoughts with you.—Mother." Shortly afterwards a second telegram arrived, this time addressed to the Government, which was asked to permit the transportation to Greece of the late King's remains for burial. This perfectly natural request was, however, not acceded to by the Council of Ministers, which, moreover, did not even reply to a letter sent to the Premier by General Metaxas, the well-known anti-Venizelist leader, pointing out that as the present King's father, Constantine had the right to be buried by the side of his father, the late King George, and his son, the late King Alexander, in the family vault at Tatoi. The Government's decision surprised not only Constantine's sympathisers, but also many of the moderate Venizelists, who argued that now the late King was dead, not only would the presence of the body here do no harm, but, on the contrary, would strengthen the position and the popularity of the Revolutionaries, who, by refusing this beau geste, would increase, instead of reducing, the bitter party antagonism. The Government, on the other hand, maintain that the conveyance of the remains to Greece, which would be more or less a public occasion owing to the popularity and respect due to the King's father, would give rise to a recrudescence of the bitter partisan feelings on both sides, and would thus undo the work of reconciliation which has now begun between the rival camps.

From the Italian papers we are now informed (the Greek journals not having been permitted to publish any comments or particulars of the death) that the late monarch was buried in the crypt of the Greek Orthodox Church at Naples.

Refugees.

Refugees continue to arrive. Their number now in Greece exceeds a million, and the Greek Government has notified the American relief organisations that there is no room for any more in this country. There are still about 35,000 refugees at Samsoun, Trebizond, and other Pontus ports, while another 25,000 have concentrated on the Syrian coast now under French occupation, and one wonders what is going to become of all these unfortunate, destitute creatures if the Greek Government does not reconsider its decision. In the Pontus they are threatened with deportation to the interior, while in Syria, the French, who have so far afforded every facility and support to the American organisations, have declared that they are unable to allow the refugees to remain there much longer. Fortunately, it was announced yesterday that the Greek Minister of Relief, M. Doxiadis, realising the danger which threatened the Pontus refugees, has ordered a boat to Trebizond. It is thus hoped that about 5,000 will be rescued.

From a hygienic point of view the situation in the refugee camps in Greece is, indeed, alarming.

EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS.

The Cheapest, Quickest and most Comfortable Route through Egypt.
EXPRESS CORRIDOR TRAINS.

Dining and Sleeping Cars.

PORT SAID
to
CAIRO

in 4½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-18-8
(L.E.1.910 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

ALEXANDRIA
to
CAIRO

in 3½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-15-5½
(L.E.1.755 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

CAIRO
to LUXOR

and vice-versa in 13 hrs.
by the TRAINS de LUXE

1st Class fare Lst.4-4-6
(L.E.4.120 m/ms)

Sleeping Car Supplement
Lst. 1-7-2
(L.E.1.350 m/ms).

LUXOR
to ASSOUAN

and vice-versa in 6½ hrs.

1st Class fare Lst.1-15-9½
(L.E.1.770 m/ms)

LUNCHEON CAR.

FOR ALL INFORMATION APPLY TO:—

PUBLICITY SECTION,

EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS
CAIRO STATION.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

In addition to the outbreak of smallpox, hundreds of cases of typhus have been reported in Athens and the Piræus, with an exceptionally heavy death-roll. Typhus, also, is beginning to spread among the civilian population, many doctors and business men being included among the victims.

The Serbian-Salonika Zone.

The question of the Serbian free zone at Salonika is still in abeyance. It is understood that Serbia insists on certain modifications, in her favour, of the 1915 Convention, including an extension of the free zone as far as the railway station—a concession which Greece is not apparently very willing to grant. The Serbian Minister, M. Baloudchitch, who has been spending the Orthodox Christmas and New Year holidays in Belgrade, has now returned to Athens bearing definite instructions from his Government, and it is hoped that an understanding satisfactory to both parties concerned will be arrived at in the course of the next few weeks.

TURKEY.

Constantinople, January 24.

The Rhine and the Maritza.

To judge from the frequent leading articles appearing in the Nationalist Press on the report of a Greek concentration in Western Thrace, this subject continues to cause uneasiness in Turkish Government circles. To-day one of the French Nationalist papers likens the Maritza to the Rhine, and quotes these reports in justification of the claims of Ismet Pasha at Lausanne that the western frontier of Turkey should be so established as to render it impregnable, and that, to this end, Karagatch and both sides of the Maritza river should be in the hands of the Turks.

The comparison of the Maritza with the Rhine infers, presumably, in the opinion of the writers, the possible ultimate necessity for Turkey extending her forces across this river, in order to enforce the fulfilment by Greece of the conditions of the coming peace. However great a travesty in the matter of comparison this may be, the whole question tends to demonstrate the importance of the peace treaty containing a provision for the strict limitation of both Greek and Turkish armies in such a manner as to make offensive action by either party impossible for the time being.

The Khalifat.

The relationship between the Khalifat and the new Republican State of Turkey was touched upon by Kemal Pasha in a speech delivered at Ismid this week. As it would appear to be the first time that the Nationalist leader has made a public announcement on the subject, it may be interesting to quote him. The great National Assembly, he said, is not, and cannot be, an attribute of the Khalifat. "It consists of representatives elected by the people, and belongs only to the people. This Assembly can only submit to the nation's orders. The people cannot entrust the defence of their rights to a single person. At the same time, subject to these reservations, I estimate that the high personality who now fulfils the functions of Khalif is equally conscious of this truth. But it is possible that some interested or ignorant persons, imbued with religious ideas, may wish to exploit the situation, and it is the duty of every citizen to put himself on guard against suggestions which may be made by persons of this kind." It may be presumed that the new Khalif is capable of reading between the lines of this interesting announcement.

The Coldstream Guard Murder.

The murder of a soldier of the Coldstream Guards in the town last week, and the severe wounding of another who accompanied him, created a painful impression when it became known. Nothing was published of the incident in the local Press, and the cabled report which appeared in the London papers, through the misinterpretation of a sentence, wrongly stated that both victims of the outrage had survived. The two soldiers were walking back to barracks, when at about 10.30 in the evening, in the main street, near the British Post Office at Galata, they were attacked from behind, the weapons used being short knives. In the case of the first soldier attacked, so severe was the blow that the knife was deeply embedded in the side of the head, yet the victim survived, unconscious, for twenty-four hours. His companion, in stooping over his friend as he fell, received a wound in the throat, from which he is now recovering. All that is known of the assailants is that two men wearing fezes were seen running away down a side street. No arrests appear to have been made.

Such a barbaric assault, without provocation of any kind, may have been due to political fanaticism. Assuming such to be the case, the insidious anti-British propaganda which has been indulged in here of late is probably responsible for its conception, and it is to be hoped that steps may be taken before it is too late to counteract the mischief that such propaganda is doing in a town in which fanaticism is so rife among the lower classes.

Smallpox.

The epidemic of smallpox in the town, which is said to have been introduced by refugees arriving from the Caucasus and Anatolian ports on the

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 15.

"POOSIE NANSIE'S":—The old historical resort of vagrants; has been described as 'a howl of gangrel bodies.' Here, Burns first recited his poem, 'The Jolly Beggars.'

Johnnie Walker: "Which is your favourite quotation from your works, Robert?"

Shade of Robert Burns: "That which America has discovered the truth of, 'Freedom and Whisky gang thegither'."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

Black Sea, is still acute. Last week 74 new cases were reported and forty deaths. The sanitary and medical authorities are doing all they can to cope with the disease. There have been a few cases amongst the British population, and vaccination is the order of the day. According to official statistics, 21,950 persons were vaccinated during the past week.

IRAK.

Baghdad, January 18.

Sir Percy Cox's Departure.

The High Commissioner, Sir Percy Cox, is leaving for London by this air mail, and, though it has been for some time foreshadowed that he would at an early date be summoned home to advise the Cabinet regarding the important questions relating to this country which still remain to be decided, the suddenness of his departure has given rise to some speculation and in some quarters to apprehension. The vernacular Press, however, welcomes his visit to London as giving him an opportunity of laying before the Government and the people at home the true feelings of the country, and its firm intention not to submit to any trespassing on the territory which lawfully belongs to it, either by Turks or by any other nation. Further, the Press affirms Irak's friendship for Great Britain, but emphasises that Britain can best help Irak, and at the same time best safeguard her own interests, by guaranteeing Irak independence and freedom.

Stagnant Politics.

Internally things are quiet, and politics remain in the background. There is opposition to the present Cabinet, but it is unorganised, and does not often come into prominence, and of the elections little or nothing is ever heard. There is a committee examining the electoral rolls and making the final preparations for holding the elections, but no interest is evinced in them, and the actual date for the elections seems to be as far off as ever.

A Change in the Cabinet.

There has been a change in the Cabinet this week, Naji Bey as-Suwaidi moving over from the Interior to Justice, in order, it is stated, to enable him to devote his whole time to the important legislation which is now in course of preparation, and to the drafting of the subsidiary agreements arising out of the Anglo-Irak Treaty. The Prime Minister, Abdul Muhain Bey as-Saaduni, will himself retain the portfolio of the Interior for the time being at any rate.

A False Economy?

The Irak Military College has been closed on grounds of economy. Though this step is welcomed as an indication that the Government is making a serious effort to reduce expenditure, it is felt in many quarters that there are other ways in which economies might be made with greater advantage. The importance of raising and making efficient a national army as quickly as possible is recognised on all sides, whether by the British taxpayer, who is anxious to be spared the expense of maintaining Imperial troops in this country, or by the Irak Nationalist, who sees in the maintenance of the British troops here an obstacle to the complete independence of the country. In disciplining this army it is of paramount importance that the officers should be well trained and made to understand fully the various duties and responsibilities which their position will entail, and it is feared that without a Military College the training of the officers will not be as good as is desirable.

Railway Improvements.

Efforts are being made by the railways to attract freights and to reduce maintenance costs. The latest improvement in the matter of reducing expenditure is the laying of the line into Khanikin town, and making railhead towards the Persian frontier at that place instead of at Tiaruk, as hitherto. The last twenty miles towards Tiaruk had been through foothill country, which had resulted in difficult gradients and heavy maintenance charges, while at the same time the station had not been easily reached by road. By bringing the station to Khanikin town there will be the advantage that it will be actually on the caravan road from Baghdad to Kermanshah and Teheran, and will be near the Khans, where goods in transit can be easily stored. Many alterations in the railway tariff have also been made with a view to improving the traffic returns, and it is hoped that the railways will soon be placed on a paying basis.

A Violent Robbery.

Train robberies have always been a feature of this country, but they are not, as a rule, accompanied by violence. An exception to the rule occurred, however, a few days ago when a British employee of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company was very roughly handled by a robber, who fractured his skull with a blow with a heavy stick, and then proceeded to clean up the compartment in which he was travelling.

Archæological Research.

A party of archæologists are now engaged in excavations on the site of Ur of the Chaldees, near Nasiriyeh, on behalf of the British Museum and the University of Pennsylvania; and it is reported that some valuable finds have already been made. Some interest is being shown in these excavations locally, and the railway authorities are reported to be affording special facilities for those who wish to visit the excavations.

The Bonham-Carter Polo Cup.

The tournament for the Bonham-Carter Polo Cup was held this week, and, after a close struggle, resulted in a victory for the Royal Air Force A team, captained by Air Vice-Marshal Sir John Salmond, who beat the Royal Artillery in the final.

Sir John Simon, instructed by Messrs. Russell and Co., applied last week to the Privy Council for leave to appeal against the decision of the court at Gibraltar refusing a writ of habeas corpus to Zaghloul Pasha. The hearing was adjourned.

It is stated that at a congregation held last week in the University of Cambridge, the Vice-Chancellor (Dr. Pearce, Master of Corpus Christi) presiding, the offer received from Sir Alfred Yarrow to establish in the University a studentship of £250 a year for three years in order to provide the student selected with a thorough knowledge of Assyriology, was accepted, the studentship to be called "the Eric Yarrow studentship for the encouragement of Assyriology."

DALTON, VASE

— AND COMPANY. —

Importers of General Merchandise

DEPARTMENTS:—Ladies' & Men's Outfitting, Children's Outfitting, Boots & Shoes, Gold, Silver & Electro-Plate, Perfumery, Glassware, China, Enamel & Tin Ware, Household & Camp Furniture & Furnishing Fabrics, Household Linens, Leather & Japanned Goods, Cycles & Motor Cycles, Toys, Haberdashery, Sports Goods, etc.

Communications invited from Manufacturers.

BASRAH, MESOPOTAMIA.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The columns of THE NEAR EAST are always open for the discussion of subjects of general interest to its readers. The publication of such letters must not be taken, however, as indicating that the views expressed by the writers are those of THE NEAR EAST.

Letters intended for publication MUST be accompanied by the writer's full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith. They should be worded as briefly as possible and must be written on one side of the paper.

BRITISH REFUGEES IN SMYRNA.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—Shortly before Christmas you were good enough to draw the attention of your readers to the desperate plight of the British refugees in Smyrna.

The Sub-Committee of the Imperial War Relief Fund, of General Buildings, Aldwych, London, W.C.2, which is dealing specially with the relief of these British refugees, are most grateful to you for your kind interest and to those of your readers who have generously responded to this appeal. The funds resulting from it are, however, already on the verge of exhaustion, and have only sufficed to enable them to provide for the immediate necessities of that section of the refugees, about one hundred in number, who have succeeded in reaching England, leaving no margin for cases of illness or other exceptional requirements, and little or nothing for transmission to the considerably larger number who remain in Malta, Cyprus, Mitylene and elsewhere.

It is true that His Majesty's Government have accepted responsibility for the lodging and bare maintenance of these latter. The British Red Cross Society also, in a letter which was recently published by their Chairman, have notified their intention of devoting special attention to them. They are, however, in urgent need of clothing and other simple comforts, for which I understand that no provision can at present be made.

I venture, therefore, to appeal once more on behalf of these people, and more especially of those in this country, trusting that the generous public will continue to come to the assistance of these fellow-subjects in distress. Donations should be specially earmarked for the Relief of British Smyrna Refugees, whilst gifts of clothing, etc., may be addressed to the Hon. Katherine Thring, 5, Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W.7, who has generously undertaken to arrange for their proper distribution.—I am, etc.,

HARRY H. LAMB,

Late Consul-Gen. at Smyrna.

January 24, 1923.

"THE INS AND OUTS OF MESOPOTAMIA."

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—I have read with much interest your review of Mr. Thomas Lyell's book, "The Ins and Outs of Mesopotamia." I understand from the article that he was a Political Officer in one of the Holy Cities of Irak, and is now a Resident Magistrate in Baghdad. I do not know whether he holds his office under the British or the new Arab Government. In any case, it does seem strange that, with the sentiments he entertains, he finds it consistent with his conscience to continue in such an important and responsible office, in the course of which he must constantly come into contact with Moslems, and be called upon to exercise moral influence over them. The British Government insists upon its officers having a certain degree of understanding of, if not sympathy towards, the customs and creeds of the people over whom they are placed. And I should think the Arab Government would also require from its officials the same consideration. Whether he can reconcile his sentiments with his loyalty to the people over whom he is placed, and his moral obligations towards them, is a matter for his own conscience.

I do not wish to enter into a controversy with Mr. Lyell regarding the merits or demerits of Islam. But as your author's knowledge of Islamic history does not appear to be wide, I might venture to recommend for his study a book by a well-known American writer, viz., "The Intellectual Development of Europe," by Draper. He might also read with advantage, Oelsner's "Des effets de la Religion de Mahomet"; these might give him some idea of the view entertained by philosophic writers of the religion which Mr. Lyell so strongly disapproves.—I am, etc.,

AMEER ALI.

January, 1923.

[It must be supposed that Mr. Thomas Lyell is no longer serving in Irak, and we cannot discover in the review under question any statement which suggests that he is still a Resident Magistrate in Baghdad.—Ed.]

EASTERN DECORATIONS.

The following decorations have been conferred in recognition of valuable services rendered:—

ORDER OF THE NILE (EGYPT).

Second Class.—Mr. M. Fleming, Judge of the High Court, Sudan; Mr. C. G. Hodgson, late Chief Mechanical Engineer, Sudan Government Railways.

Third Class.—Maj. W. F. M. Bagshawe, R.A., late Assist. Director of Ordnance Services and Inspector of Explosives, Egyptian Army; Maj. C. Graham, D.S.O., Northants Regt., late O.C., 11th Sudanese, Egyptian Army; Mr. H. V. Hawkins, Controller of Stores, Sudan Government Railways and Steamers; Mr. H. P. Hewins, Director, Commercial Intelligence Branch, Central Economic Board, Khartoum; Mr. A. Holden; Mr. G. F. Morice; Mr. A. J. C. Huddleston, O.B.E., Governor, Blue Nile Province; Dr. L. Bousfield, Chief Sanitary Officer, Sudan Government; Mr. V. S. Hodson, M.B., Director, Civil General Hospital, Khartoum.

Fourth Class.—Maj. G. A. Campbell, D.S.O., R.A.S.C.; Mr. E. H. Gandy, Inspector, State Buildings Department, Egyptian Ministry of Public Works; Mr. F. Addison, Lecturer, Gordon College, Khartoum; Mr. B. W. Echlin.

Fifth Class.—Mr. W. H. Brown, Inspector of Surveys, Sudan Government; Mr. D. J. Ross, Superintendent of Posts, Posts and Telegraphs Department, Sudan Government; Mr. C. A. Gerrard, Chief Clerk, Governor-General's Office, Khartoum.

The next air mail for Baghdad will be despatched from London on Thursday, February 8.

Under international auspices a fresh attempt is to be made to discover Zion and the City of David. It is proposed to make an excavation of what is described as the "Ophel Hill."

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

& CO., LTD.

London, W.1.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."
'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

Near East Bookshelf.

MEDICAL PRACTICES IN ALGERIA.

"ARAB MEDICINE AND SURGERY." A Study of the Healing Art in Algeria. By H. W. Hilton-Simpson, B.Sc. (Oxford University Press: 10s. 6d. net.)

Whether Mr. Hilton-Simpson was well advised in selecting the title "Arab Medicine and Surgery" for his "study of the healing art in Algeria," may be left to the judgment of his readers, but it is inevitable that many of them will complain that it is misleading, for this is a book about Algeria, dealing with the medical arts as practised by the village doctors of the Aures, a district inhabited by a race which the author tells us is "ethnically distinct from the people of the desert, speaking a dialect of the ancient Berber language, and scarcely contaminated by an infusion of Arab blood." Yet it was there that he was able to see Arab medicine and surgery practised very much as it was in the days of the Caliphate, reminding us that these people obtained from their Arab conquerors not only their religion and their laws, but also what for want of a better term we may call their medical science.

The Arab system of medicine has already been exhaustively studied by many high authorities in its historical aspect, and it is now no longer disputed that the Arabian physicians who flourished under the mediæval Caliphates were merely the exponents of an art originally given by Greece to the ancient world. To these Arabian physicians belongs the credit for the mediæval revival of Greek medicine, which after reaching its highest development in the East was carried westward over North Africa to Spain by the missionary warriors of Islam. Eventually it spread to Christian Europe with many other elements of Arab culture in the period of the Crusades, and it was only with the Renaissance that European medicine was able to regain contact with the original Greek sources from which Arab medicine had been borrowed. On the foundation of Greek thought has since been raised the mighty structure of European civilisation in all its material aspects, and such little scientific knowledge as still survives among the primitive Mohammedan communities of the present day, of which Mr. Hilton-Simpson's Berber friends furnish a very good type, is derived from the same source. It is well that the fact should be emphasised to-day, when there is a tendency greatly to exaggerate the influence of ancient Oriental culture on modern European civilisation; Mr. Hilton-Simpson's book comes as a timely reminder to us that, wherever the blighting influence of Islam still persists, human knowledge is for the most part content to remain stagnant in its early mediæval condition of development. If the culture of the West ever owed any debt to the East it has already been repaid a hundredfold, and one may say without exaggeration, after reading all the details of medical and surgical practice among the Berbers collected by Mr. Hilton-Simpson in the course of his ethnographical survey of the Aures massif, that there is absolutely nothing to be found in them of the slightest practical value to modern medical science. That many major operations could be performed on long-suffering man by native surgeons with primitive instruments, without anæsthetics and under inconceivably filthy conditions, with the frequent survival of the patient, has never been questioned by the practitioners of modern surgery even before Mr. Hilton-Simpson's researches came to remind us forcibly of the fact. What emerges, however, from the study of this book is the evidence it affords of the possession of remarkable skill by many of these primitively trained "Arab surgeons," whose technique it so admirably demonstrates. That the really good surgeon is born, not made, has long been appreciated by all whose lot it is to educate the medical student, and while our racial bias tends to make us doubt whether any Oriental master of surgery will ever arise to rival the achievements of some of the great European exponents of the art, one cannot help feeling that, at any rate among the Berbers of the Aures, there must be many men whose natural aptitude for surgery is such as would enable them to do great things if they had the necessary opportunities for studying the principles and practice of the art in its modern stage of development. A great deal of space in the book is taken up by descriptions of the operation of trepanning, probably the most ancient in the world, as now practised by the surgeons of the Aures, and the instruments employed by them in performing it are described in great detail and illustrated by some excellent drawings and photographs. It has been pointed out by some of the French authorities quoted by the author that "these instruments are more primitive than those employed by Hippocrates to whom the circular trephine was known and they therefore conclude that trepanning had been practised in the Aures before the Romans brought their own civilisation and the healing art of the Greeks to the country round, and they consider that the operation may have been carried out in the Aures from Neolithic times." Among the methods of dressing bullet wounds employed by the Berber surgeons mention is made of one in which melted butter is injected into the wound cavity by means of a European syringe as a substitute for the wooden tube through which the substance was formerly blown by the mouth of the operator. This treatment is said to prove very successful, which suggests that in the melting process the butter is raised to boiling point and so rendered sterile, while the method of its application brings it in contact with the whole surface of the wound. Of the many medical remedies employed the majority appear to be infusions of indigenous herbs, few of which are included in our materia medica. The author, with the thoroughness which characterises all his work, took the trouble to collect specimens of all the herbs in use, and on his return to England succeeded in getting them identified under their botanical names. It is to be hoped that this work will be followed up by their analysis and the isolation of their active principles, for there are few branches of medical science more neglected than is Pharmacology to-day. A generation of doctors has grown up which loudly proclaims its disbelief in the value of drugs in the treatment of disease, but one strongly suspects that this disbelief is no more than an index of the ignorance of the doubters, for the amount of time and attention devoted to the study of materia medica and therapeutics in the modern medical curriculum is almost negligible compared with the long courses of instruction given in physiology and bacteriology. Yet one can recall instances where modern research has demonstrated that certain drugs have a specific action in some diseases, and it is by no means improbable that

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

more might be found if the action of the simple remedies in use among primitive people was more extensively investigated.

Mr. Hilton-Simpson must have succeeded in gaining the confidence of his Berber medical friends to a remarkable degree to have been able to collect the mass of detailed information regarding their practice contained in his book. Possibly the fact of his being a layman may have assisted him not a little in his labours, for where medical men have attempted similar work they have generally found the prejudice of the native doctor against European medicine an insuperable obstacle standing in their way. One feels, however, that only a man possessed of very great sympathy with the people among whom he laboured and gifted with infinite tact could ever have collected the material contained in this book, unique in its way and deserving the very careful attention of all to whom the study of the evolution of modern medicine and surgery is of interest. In the Aures Mr. Hilton-Simpson has been able to show us the mediæval medical practitioner at work—a wounded Crusader in the twelfth century would have had precisely the same treatment in Palestine as a Berber tribesman damaged in a local affray would receive in the Aures to-day at the hands of one of the practitioners whose professional secrets Mr. Hilton-Simpson has now given to the world.

THE ANNEXATION OF MONTENEGRO.

"MONTENEGRO. THE CRIME OF THE PEACE CONFERENCE." By Whitney Warren. (New York: Brentano's.)

When, in January, 1916, Montenegro disappeared from the ranks of the Allies it caused small stir in Europe, and the proclamation of her annexation to the new Yugoslav Kingdom in November, 1918, passed almost unnoticed.

This book of Mr. Warren's is a passionate appeal to the American people for the reinstatement of Montenegro as an independent nation, and a refutation, well documented, of the many stories in circulation to her discredit.

As regards the first of these points, the eventual union of Serbia and Montenegro, with their common past of legend and history, seems almost inevitable and, in all probability, much to the eventual advantage of the dwellers on the Black Mountain, now that the protection and revenue from Russia have disappeared. Indeed, when a letter dated August, 1916, from M. Radovitch to King Nicolas is quoted, raising the question of a Yugoslav Confederation with the latter at its head, Mr. Warren sees no objection to the union, and one is forced to believe that his book is inspired more by loyalty to the house of Petrovitch (and possibly by one or two strong dislikes) than a real belief in an independent Montenegro.

This solution of a confederacy, with a large proportion of local autonomy, is one that might have obviated many difficulties of the new State, not only as regards Montenegro, where revolt is still in some measure uncrushed, but also farther north in Croatia, and it is one that might have proved far more acceptable to the race of mountaineers who have sacrificed so much in their defence of their freedom. As it is, the precipitancy with which the country was occupied by the Serbian troops under General Franchet d'Esperey and the haste with which a "national assembly" voted for the annexation inevitably arouse a feeling of distrust, and the methods employed to ensure the success of the operation, so far as one is able to discover them, are not such as commend themselves to Western Europe.

The stories of treachery Mr. Warren disposes of for all time. From the first telegram on July 24, 1914, when Serbia stood alone:

"In any event, Montenegro will share, to-day as always, good and ill with Servia. Your fate shall be ours."

until, on the advice of their Serbian commander, the Montenegrins surrendered Mount Lovtchen and withdrew to organise guerrilla warfare in the mountains, they were brave and loyal allies and entitled to share with the Serbs the admiration of all who came in contact with them.

The correspondence between King Nicolas and Presidents Wilson and Poincaré on the subject of his return is the most pathetic part of this little book, and the exile must have felt keenly the irony of his position, when he remembered the refuge he had once given to King Peter of Serbia.

J. H. B.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF NIETZSCHE.

"NIETZSCHE AND MODERN CONSCIOUSNESS." By Yanko Lavrin. (London: Collins. 6s. net.)

We have already had occasion to praise the work of M. Yanko Lavrin, the Yugoslav philosophical writer. He has admirably explained Dostoevsky and Ibsen in their relation to the modern time, and now comes his third psycho-critical study, on Nietzsche, which in some ways is even more intimate and illuminating than were his previous studies.

Nietzsche is very much in the air just now, and, in view of the fact that some of his adherents are merely poseurs who use him as a kind of mental dope, some such authentic rediscovery of him as is contained in this book was certainly timely and necessary. M. Lavrin shows clearly that all Nietzsche's philosophy grew out of his experience, and he traces its development through his suffering, morbidity, and final insanity. We cannot here discuss that philosophy and its growing influence upon our time, nor have we space to do more than remark the very skilful exposition of Nietzsche's dual personality—a factor in the lives of men that is probably more prevalent in our day than in any other. But we do very cordially recommend to seriously minded readers M. Lavrin's little book; they will, we are sure, be fascinated and stimulated by its insight and nice judgment.

THE RESPONSIBILITY FOR SMYRNA.

"THE MARTYRDOM OF SMYRNA AND EASTERN CHRISTENDOM." By Dr. Lysimachos Economos. (London: Allen and Unwin. 7s. 6d. net.)

This book, which is being sold on behalf of the refugees, consists of evidence, which is drawn from British and American correspondents, designed to prove the misdeeds of the Turks in Asia Minor, and particularly to ascribe responsibility to them for the horrors of Smyrna. On behalf of both the Anatolian and the Thracian refugees a fervent appeal for generosity is made.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"Comment la France s'est installée en Syrie (1918-1919)." By R. de Gontaut-Biron. With two maps. (Paris: Librairie Plon Nourrit et Cie. 15 francs. Postage abroad, 3d. extra.)

"Memories of Travel." By Viscount Bryce. (London: Macmillan and Co., Ltd. 12s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 7d.)

"La Tchecoslovaquie: Conférences faites à l'Union Française." By MM. Jean Brunhes, Louis Eisenmann, etc., etc. (Paris: Georges Crès et Cie.)

"Siwa: The Oasis of Jupiter Ammon." By C. Dalrymple Belgrave. With an Introduction by Sir Reginald Wingate. Illustrated. (London: John Lane. 15s. net. Postage abroad, 8d.)

"Tales from the Orient: Pen Sketches of Constantinople." By E. J. Dudell. (Constantinople: S. Dirmikis and Son. 1s. net. Postage abroad, 1½d.)

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

February 1 (New Style).

January 19 (Old Style).

Gumada II. 15, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Shebat 15, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir Reginald and Lady Oakes are in residence in Cairo.

Lady Ribblesdale and her daughter, Miss Astor, have left Cairo for Upper Egypt.

Sir Marshall and Lady Reid will return to London early in April from India, where they are spending the winter.

Sir Percy Cox, High Commissioner in Mesopotamia, who has made an almost non-stop journey home in order to confer with the Government, arrived in London on January 28.

Major-General Sir Patrick Hehir, K.C.I.E., M.D., has been appointed medical adviser of the British Red Cross Society in the Near East, and is leaving for Athens immediately.

Mr. S. G. Pezas, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Greece at Rio de Janeiro, is returning to Athens to take up a post in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

It is stated that General Haking will proceed this month (February) to Egypt, there to become General Officer Commanding. At present General Haking holds the position of High Commissioner for the League of Nations at Danzig.

The London Gazette announces that Major-General Sir Henry Hugh Tudor, K.C.B., C.M.G., is granted a temporary commission as an Air Vice-Marshal whilst commanding the Forces in Palestine. He was made Director of Public Safety and G.O.C. Palestine last year.

Mme. Stancioff, wife of the Bulgarian Minister, gave a dinner party on January 23 at the Legation, followed by a small reception. Among the guests were the Hon. Mrs. Fitzroy Stanhope, Sir Edward and Lady Boyle, the Comte de Grenaud, Colonel and Mme. Riggi, and Mr. Petroff.

The engagement is announced between Frederick John Roberts Irwin, of Alexandria, Egypt, son of the late Dr. Hugh Irwin, of Ebbw Vale, Mon., and Mrs. Irwin, and Irene Ethne Mabel, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry D. Carver, of Ramleh, Egypt, formerly of Buenos Aires, and granddaughter of the late Mr. Edmund D. Carver and of Mrs. Carver, of Wimbledon.

Owing to the exceptional demand for tickets for his lecture on January 23, Professor W. M. Flinders Petrie has consented to repeat the lecture on "Royal Burials in Egypt" on Saturday, February 3, at 2.30, at University College. A leaflet containing full particulars as to the prices of the tickets can be obtained by sending a stamped addressed envelope to Dr. Walter Seton, University College, Gower Street, W.C.1.

Mr. Ronald Storrs, who has recently completed his fifth year of office as Governor of Jerusalem,

APARTMENTS.

QUIET SEASIDE RESORT.—Apartments or furnished. BRONAUILLT, Nevin, N. Wales.

was entertained at a banquet in the Allenby Hotel on the eve of his departure from Jerusalem on two months' leave. Sir Herbert Samuel, High Commissioner for Palestine, presided, and during the evening read a letter from Viscount Allenby, who wrote of Mr. Ronald Storrs:—"He took on the duties of a Governor at a very critical time, when all was chaotic, but with little assistance he evolved order out of chaos, and created a good administration where none had existed. Since then he has devoted five years of incessant toil to the good of Jerusalem; and complete success has crowned his endeavours. I shall be glad if you will convey to him as from one under whom his work in Jerusalem was begun, my warm thanks and, as from one who has the honour to be his personal friend, my sincere congratulations."

Lieut.-General Sir Philip W. Chetwode, Bart., K.C.B., D.S.O., Adjutant-General to the Forces since September, has been appointed General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Aldershot Command, in succession to General Sir Thomas L. N. Morland, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., D.S.O., who is relinquishing the post on the ground of ill-health. In the European War Sir Philip first commanded the Fifth Cavalry Brigade, and next the Second Cavalry Division, being promoted major-general for distinguished services. In 1916 he proceeded to Egypt in command of the Desert Corps, and subsequently took charge of the East Force and the 20th Army Corps. He was present at the capture of Jerusalem, and was mentioned in despatches eleven times.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LAENACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TEODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No. : 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1923.

ROUMANIA AND RUSSIA.

It is reported on the authority of the Roumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs that negotiations are in train, or are contemplated, between Roumania and Russia for a Treaty regulating the various points at issue between the two countries. The basis of such an agreement, it is understood, would be the formal recognition by Russia of the incorporation of Bessarabia in Roumania; as a quid pro quo the Bucharest Government would probably waive its claim to the gold sent for safe keeping during the War to Russia by the Roumanians, and subsequently seized by the Soviet Government. If such a Treaty should materialise, it would be an event of first-class significance in the Near East. Without any effort on her part, Soviet Russia has been able to keep Roumania in the throes of anxiety and partial mobilisation by the mere gesture of refusing to recognise the union of Bessarabia with Roumania. That she should now, of her own accord, resign such a useful weapon for her policy of fomenting unrest in foreign countries suggests a compelling motive that need not be looked for in the terms of any actual Treaty. No one will imagine that the Soviets have been moved by an uneasy conscience over the stolen Roumanian funds, or by a prospective admission of liability to return the money. In view, however, of repeated statements of Russian concentrations on the Bessarabian frontier, it would be safe to infer, if the Soviets should commit this act of self-denial, that Russia's military position is not as satisfactory as Bolshevik propaganda would have it believed. If Russia were contemplating operations in the south as an ally of the Turks against Great Britain, it would be sound policy to enter upon an agreement safeguarding her southwestern frontier; but by no stretch of the imagination could the Soviet Government consider itself exposed to Roumanian aggression in that quarter. We must conclude, therefore, that the Russian authorities have a reason for an agreement with Roumania which outweighs any inconvenience they are likely to experience from the reflection passed on their military strength.

From the Allies' point of view, the most interesting reason for Russia's action would be a genuine desire to win Roumania over to her attitude regarding the future of the Straits and the Black Sea. The solution that the Allies have propounded at Lausanne is that, subject to certain Turkish rights and other reservations, the Black Sea should be open to warships of all countries. Both Roumania and Bulgaria, the other coastal nations concerned, accepted this ruling. Russia, however, is strongly opposed to the passage of warships through the Bosphorus and the Straits, and if her view is adopted she has expressed willingness to accept demilitarisation for the Black Sea or any other suitable arrangement that would free that sea from the risk of war. The Soviets complain that they have not been taken seriously at Lausanne. Dispassionate consideration on the subject would convince them that if this were so the fault could lie only with themselves. After five years' experience of Soviet policy and the Soviet outlook on life and things in general, the Allies are hardly to be blamed for not recognising or paying attention to a constructive suggestion wrapped up in the usual aggressive garb affected by Soviet diplomacy. We have previously stated in these pages that it was unfortunate that the Soviet scheme was not examined more thoroughly at the Conference, because finality will be reached in any settlement of the Near East only when all the nations concerned are in agreement. If it should prove to be the case that for once the voice of what is permanent in Russia is speaking in the Soviet suggestion for a Black Sea policy, the Lausanne settlement is only of temporary value. Agreement between Roumania and Russia on the subject of the Straits and Black Sea would seem to raise the whole question of how best to deal with the Russia of to-day. The world's views on Bolshevism are not likely to change; the Soviet's own views of themselves, their capabilities and their doctrines, are certainly undergoing marked changes. There remains the great mass of the Russian people. Nothing would be more unfortunate for the world at large than that it should miss the stage at which the modification of Sovietism found the peasants of Russia so little inconvenienced in their simple mode of life by Soviet doctrines that their patriotism prevented them from accepting the foreign view of a non-Russian Russia. That such a stage is possible anyone acquainted with Russia will admit. The question, therefore, before the Allies is whether they should so shape their policy at once that they may help the Russian people to absorb Sovietism without permanent injury to the national health rather than run the risk of allowing the Soviets to work upon the intense patriotism of an unsophisticated people. We can only hope that this question will receive unprejudiced consideration in Great Britain.

On Roumania's side there are strong reasons for desiring an amicable arrangement with Russia that will free her from anxiety regarding Bessarabia and the armed watchfulness that it imposes. The Allied solution of the problem of the Straits, with its hypothetical safeguards for various contingencies, can offer no adequate substitute for a policy that would at once relieve the Roumanian exchequer of a serious burden. Possibly the desire to hold out an attractive prospect before a disillusioned electorate, and so to improve his Government's position, led the Minister for Foreign Affairs to speak of his Russian conversations at Lausanne in an optimistic vein. The Moscow Government has since warned him not to be overconfident, but is not concerned to deny its willingness to enter upon negotiations. Roumania, it is to be hoped, will in this matter receive nothing but encouragement from the Allies. Reasons for having nothing to do with the mad dogs of the East, whether Soviet or Anatolian, leap to the mind at every turn. What is more valuable is the discovery of any avenue of approach for reaching the saner and more permanent elements in each country. In regard to Roumania's incentive, it may be permissible also to hope that freedom from anxiety on her Eastern frontier will not be followed by a less cautious policy as a member of the Little Entente. No one desire exists to see Hungary saved from the consequences of any provocative action: but both Roumania and Yugoslavia would seem to stand in need of being constantly reminded that their chief interest lies in the avoidance of a policy that is likely to add to their already excessive State expenditure.

FRANCE AND THE NEAR EAST.

Public opinion in France is seriously exercised over the new orientation that is held to have been recently given to French policy in the Near East. It is noticed that the Angora Agreement bore no fruit at Lausanne, and affairs in Syria appear to be assuming a novel and perplexing aspect. As in all transition stages, popular feeling tends to oscillate between contradictory opinions. Thus, in regard to the Turks, it is not clear whether the blame lies in the Angora Agreement or in the supposed departure from it. No fault was found at the time with the Agreement, because the prospects of economic gains to be derived from an understanding with the Turks silenced any misgivings as to whether the step was strictly in keeping with the spirit of the Entente. Only when the pact was seen to involve immediate sacrifices, and no immediate advantages, for France, did the bargain begin to be challenged on moral grounds. In regard to Syria there is an attempt to make the most of the official contention that everything that is happening is a logical development of the Mandate, but there is an uneasy feeling that the picture has another side to it. When an attempt is made to sum up the proceedings at Lausanne from the French point of view confirmation is found for the worst fears, and lamentations are uttered over the sacrifice of French interests and prestige, over the death-knell of French influence in the East. A change has undoubtedly come over French policy in the Near East; but it has been forced upon France by the severe logic of events rather than by the rise to power of any new school of thought. If at Lausanne M. Barrère has abandoned the tactics of M. Franklin-Bouillon, it is because the uselessness of those tactics had already been established; and if the French Colonial methods are being modified for the benefit of Syria, it is because they had been found to be impossible of application in the mandated territory. What is desirable now is that public opinion in France, instead of surrendering itself to vain regrets, should be encouraged to discover the advantages that are likely to be derived from the new policy, after recognising the mistakes of the old.

Most opportunely there has just been published in France a book* which throws full light on French post-War policy in the Near East. The author, Comte de Gontaut-Biron, was attached to the staff of M. Georges Picot in Syria, and he deals from the French point of view with the course of events in that country, from the Palestine campaign until the appointment of General Gouraud as High Commissioner of Syria. A study of the book suggests that France no less than other countries will have reason to be satisfied if the phase of French policy that is here described has been terminated with no chance of being revived. Quite unconsciously the author shows how peevish and petty-minded that policy was, while jealousy of the British and dislike of the Arabs colour his whole outlook. His chief had already earned a reputation for personal hostility to Great Britain before being appointed to the post of High Commissioner, and if the French administration reflected the author's frame of mind, as it clearly did, it is not difficult to understand why French policy was not successful and how the constant pin-pricks administered by French officials made the Entente Cordiale a farce so far as Syria and Palestine were concerned. In the book no opportunity is missed of inserting a bitter remark against the British, who are represented as intriguing in every possible sphere against the French, from a desire to obtain possession of the country. To complete the indictment, there is a footnote to the effect that iron discipline was maintained in the Egyptian Labour Corps by arming the officers with whips, and even Irak has to be dragged in by a reference to the "transformation" of Baghdad "to the great detriment of its former picturesqueness."

Comte de Gontaut-Biron begins his narrative by emphasising French "rights" over Syria. He points out quite correctly that Roman Catholic missions have been established in the country for centuries, and that they have developed an extensive system of monasteries and schools, and have spread the use of the French language. For the sake of his argument he wishes it to be inferred that all these missions and missionaries have been far more intent on political propaganda than on furthering the cause of their religion. In any case, he regards it as an axiom that France's relationships with Syria give her the "right" to claim the territory, or, at least, the mandatory control over it, regardless of the stipulation in Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. The author is at no pains to disguise French contempt for and hostility towards the Arabs. As an illustration of the petty-mindedness which led French officials to imagine that the British authorities had nothing else to do in the Near East than to put spokes in France's wheel, reference may be made to the author's account of the Palestine campaign. A pleasant shock is experienced on reading in the first paragraph an admission that Great Britain accomplished her task in Irak and Palestine in a manner that deserved to be admired. But the reason for this gracious acknowledgment at once becomes apparent; the credit for the success of the operations falls in large measure to the exiguous French detachment that accompanied Lord Allenby. As our author then finds it necessary to devote pages to belittling the assistance rendered by the Arabs, he reveals himself a stranger equally to a sense of proportion and to the spirit of noblesse oblige. His attitude in the case of a national of a small State might be understood; on the part of a citizen of a Great Power it is pathetic, nor is the reader more favourably impressed when the heroism of French troops on real battlefields is depreciated by a

(Continued on page 117.)

* Comment la France s'est installée en Syrie (1918-1919). Par Comte R. de Gontaut-Biron. (Paris: Librairie Plon. Price 15 francs.)

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

LONDON COUNTY WESTMINSTER & PARR'S BANK LTD

Established in 1836

Authorized Capital - £33,000,000

Paid-up Capital - £9,003,718. Reserve - £9,003,718

Current, Deposit and other Accounts (30th June, 1922) £299,512,964

Chairman: WALTER LEAF

Deputy-Chairmen: SIR MONTAGU TURNER, R. HUGH TENNANT

Chief General Manager: JOHN RAE

AFFILIATED ABROAD

London County Westminster and Parr's Foreign Bank Limited
Paris, Bordeaux, Lyons, Marseilles, Nantes, Brussels, Antwerp, Madrid

Affiliated in Ireland: Ulster Bank Limited

THE BANK is represented by Branches or Agents in all the Principal Cities and Towns of the United Kingdom, and has Correspondents throughout the World

Head Office: 41 LOTHBURY, LONDON, E.C.2

PROMINENT INDIAN INDUSTRIES

LALIMLI PURE WOOL

Manufacturers of
"Everything made of Wool"
from Coolie Blankets to Fine
Worsted including Braid
Felt, Hosiery & Knitted Goods
Tweeds and Tartan Rugs.

The CAWNPORE WOOLLEN MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

N.W.T.

FOR HARNESS, SADDLERY,
TRUNKS, SUIT CASES,
FANCY LEATHER GOODS,
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Taxidermists etc.

The NORTH WEST TANNERY &
CAWNPORE.

Kakomi Cawnpore

Manufacturers
of

TENTS,
DURRIES,
TWEEDS, DRILLS, FLANNELETTES,
SHEETINGS, TOWELS ETC.,

The CAWNPORE COTTON MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

Dhariwal

LONG LIFE WOOL WEAR

BLANKETS, TRAVELLING
RUGS, KNITTED GOODS, TWEEDS
SERGES WORSTEDS BRAIDS
HOSIERY ETC.

The NEW EGERTON WOOLLEN MILLS &
DHARIWAL, PUNJAB.

Branches of The British India Corporation, Limited.
CAWNPORE.

FRANCE AND THE NEAR EAST—continued.

description of the eviction of Arab troops from Damascus as "une éclatante victoire."

One point clearly brought out by the book is that "incidents" in Syria were not in their entirety the deliberate policy of the French Government. The charge of ignoring Syria and of lack of sympathy with its administration is continually laid by the author against the French Government. M. Pichon is taken to task for refusing to attribute more than "local importance" to the complaints of French officials against the British. Unfortunately, the consistency with which French officials throughout the Near and Middle East went out of their way to thwart their British Allies, often descending to the meanest devices, gave rise to the suspicion that they were carrying out the orders of the Government, and was the means of introducing an element of weakness in the Entente. In this connection it is not without interest to recall a passage in the King-Crane Report on the Near East, which has recently been published in America. Commenting on the anti-French feeling which "does seem to be deep-rooted in a large proportion of the Syrian population," the report cites, among the reasons given by the Syrians for this feeling, that the French have lost so many men in the War that they are unable to give needful protection and adequate administration, and it adds: "This is illustrated by the few soldiers and the inferior type of French officers and officials now in Syria. (Friends of the French deny that France lacks good officials, and blame the French Foreign Office for choosing badly those who are sent out. Again, while for the English the Eastern service is a career, and draws the best of the young men, for the French it seems a kind of exile, and the best prefer to remain at home.) It was affirmed that bribery and intrigue are worse in the French area now than under the Turks." It is only right to state that the Commissioners made no attempt to estimate the measure of truth in the Syrian statements, but they contented themselves with noting that most of the Syrians believed them.

For the rest, the King-Crane Report offers an interesting commentary on many of Comte de Gontaut-Biron's statements. But the value of "Comment la France s'est installée en Syrie" lies in the internal evidence of the unsuitable spirit in which France, through the officials on the spot, approached her task. There can be little doubt that the main incentive in the Angora Agreement was to "score off" or to steal a march upon Great Britain. It has been proved conclusively that M. Franklin-Bouillon's methods were the wrong way to set about making peace with Nationalist Turkey. At Lausanne, by keeping in line with her Allies, France will gain more concrete advantages in the future than would fall to her lot if she were to rely on ploughing a lonely furrow by means of the Angora Agreement. For the moment Turkish resentment at not being able to play one Ally off against the other may fall most heavily on France, but the latter is surely strong enough to bide her time. Again, in Syria the French have had to learn what Great Britain had previously found out, that there is a new spirit abroad among the smaller nations since the War. A far-sighted people will refrain from cavilling at the necessity for having to adjust pre-War notions to post-War facts, and, conscious in its own strength and in the justice and usefulness of its mission in the world, will seek to continue its civilising efforts under the altered conditions. So far as the East is concerned, France stands to give and to gain more by working in harmony with Great Britain than by posing as a rival where there is ample room for both countries.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

Britain and Irak.

The Yorkshire Post of January 22 contains an article upon "England's Work in Irak," wherein the writer describes our duty to remain there. The condition of Irak, he points out, is not so hopeless as was that of bankrupt Egypt sixty years ago, and he proceeds:—

The laws of economics are inexorable, and if a country is to be worthy of independence it must be self-supporting. Countries, like individuals, must pay their own way. In Irak this is by no means the case to-day, but it is more than questionable if Irak is to blame. It can hardly, for example, be accused of responsibility for a Secretariat which would do credit to a highly developed Western State; yet such is the burden which it has to bear, and more. The present system of government, under the headship of King Feisul, consists of a numerous Cabinet of highly paid Irakies (recently salaries have been halved), holding portfolios on the most approved Western lines. The whole of this is absurd in the case of a country only just relieved from the narrow and reactionary tutelage of the Turks. Worse still, to complete this similitude with Western methods, the lack of knowledge and confidence on the part of the Cabinet is bolstered up by a stiffening of so-called advisers, Europeans with experience, in the ratio of one per member of the Cabinet. As a result, the members of the Cabinet have responsibility without the experience, whilst the advisers have the experience without responsibility. This is an arrangement as absurd as it is costly. What is required is a frank recognition of the fact that Irak must learn to walk before it can run, and this dual system must be scrapped and replaced by one with a Cabinet comprising Europeans, together with such Irakies as are competent and willing to serve, the general idea being that, as time goes on, the Europeans will drop out, and the country eventually govern itself. Overhead costs of administration per se are pure waste in Irak, as well as in Great Britain, and this is the only way of cutting them down. The first aim is independence, but it must begin frankly with acknowledged tutelage, the presence of all Europeans being acknowledged as temporary, de jure and de facto—a point on which the Arab, who is no fool, at present has grave doubts.

Going on to the office of the High Commissioner, he says this man should be "a personal adviser to His Majesty the King, and not a sort of full-fledged opposition or duplicate." He then passes to the ultimate prospects of making the Irakies a nation:—

What are the prospects of welding this heterogeneous mass into a nation? It is a great problem, and the only hope is through the establishment of a strong central government, coupled with a bold decentralisation of administrative responsibility, by which each race or tribe is made directly interested in its own welfare and development. The chief function of the central government should therefore be limited to the control of security, education, and health. Security, at present non-existent outside rifle shot, will breed confidence, and individuals will be encouraged to embark on enterprises which they will not touch at present. Education will increase the efficiency of the people, especially that of the Mohammedans, who are the most enterprising and the most educated, as in Egypt. Attention to health will lessen the present appalling death-rate, especially of infants, and provide the population, without which the development of the country is impossible. The security I have referred to is internal. Irak to-day talks of an army, etc., as if we were still in 1914. This is absurd. Great Britain, as mandatory, must arrange for external security, as it can well do by treaties. Internal security will then only require a gendarmerie, localised as much as possible, and capable at a pinch of being used as a military force, in conjunction with the British forces. The present system of levies paid by the Colonial Office, and of Irak armies and Irak police paid by Irak, is most inefficient and extravagant. To be self-dependent, Irak must pay for its own Services. What are the prospects of its being able to do so?

Having reviewed the possibilities inherent in the better irrigation of Irak and a settlement of oil concessions, he thus concludes:—

External defence should not be a problem of great magnitude if our peacemakers do their job. The British garrison, if chiefly of aeroplanes, can do this work efficiently with the aid of the gendarmerie. To what extent should Irak be liable for the expenses of British troops? Hardly at all, in that it is our bounden duty to put the country on its feet, and we should in any case have to maintain an equivalent number of troops elsewhere. Irak, also, is one of the most magnificent areas in the world for experimental flying, and it lies on the main rail and air routes of the East. It is of great strategic importance. For a time, therefore, the burden is not fairly that of Irak, and a development of the direct rail and air routes with the West will be one of the most powerful factors in the completion of our task. That there is great waste cannot be denied. I hope I have shown that it is not inherent in Irak but in our methods. Given a revision of our methods, I think it desirable on every ground that we should at least give ourselves and Mesopotamia a chance by staying in rather than "getting out."

The Opium Crusade.

From the Manchester Guardian of January 19 we take the following:—

The news that Turkey as a member of the League of Nations has decided to sign the Hague International Opium Convention, and that Persia has withdrawn her reservations, is a triumph for the work of the Committee at Geneva. It is some years now since even the Oriental countries, who are the chief consumers of opium, began to make a determined effort to restrict its use. For it was recognised that this drug could under no circumstances be regarded as a harmless stimulant to be taken in moderation by those who enjoyed it. As a medicine it has its function, and in the East, although this point is not quite clear, it may also be used for semi-medicinal purposes. But it cannot be defended as the milder forms of alcohol can; around it no prohibitionist disputes need rage. The only question that arises is how best can it be rigidly controlled. The first essay in international co-operation was made in 1909, and the Indian Government sacrificed £4,000,000 revenue to suppress opium traffic with China, but when the League of Nations inherited the problem it was still very far from a solution. The framework from which the League began was the Hague Convention of 1912; that convention required to be extended to include the whole world, and to be strengthened by the discovery of specific ways of carrying out control. Both these objectives, although they are by no means reached, have been brought appreciably nearer. The task is a complicated one. It involves the drawing up of statistics of each country's imports and exports, the making of inquiries in hospitals and pharmacies, and the estimating of each country's needs based on the frequency of disease which require the drugs. Clearly, even if every Government acts in all sincerity, a miscalculation of legitimate requirements gives a loophole to disreputable traders. But up to now China, Turkey, and Persia, three great opium-producing countries, have by no means been ready to act in all sincerity. China, unhappily, through her internal disorders and the financial needs of her military governors, is likely to continue to cultivate the poppy extensively; but the action of Turkey and Persia is a step in the right direction. Incidentally it shows that Turkey's intended adhesion to the League is more than formal.

THE KING-CRANE REPORT.

Reference was made in last week's issue of THE NEAR EAST to the King-Crane Report on the Near East. This report has been published in full by the Editor and Publisher of New York.

AN EGYPTIAN CONFERENCE.

The reunion conference held in Egypt on the initiative of Bishop Gwynne, and attended unofficially by representatives of the Coptic Orthodox, Greek Orthodox, Syrian Orthodox, Armenian Orthodox, Presbyterian (Egyptian and American), and Anglican Churches have had their proceedings printed in four languages. The work is being continued by a Committee, whose duty is to arrange meetings and issue a periodical bulletin upon reunion.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Uncertain Outlook.

If the political outlook a week ago could be termed uncertain, it cannot be said to have improved in the interval. In the Ruhr the French have continued to pursue their forceful policy, which may or may not bring them the money they seek, but which is very likely to have other consequences in the future, and in the immediate present cannot fail to retard the general trade recovery. But those who oppose the move have to put themselves in the position of France. If the British proposal had been accepted a trade revival on a great scale would have followed, but whether Reparations would have been forthcoming from a resuscitated Germany must be a matter of opinion. Anyway, the die has been cast, and one can only trust, in the interests of France and this country, that the issue will be a settlement which will allow Europe an opportunity to recover. The position at Lausanne is dealt with in detail elsewhere in this issue, and I only propose therefore to touch on it briefly here. As has been the case all through, the Turks have maintained an attitude of intransigence. Right to the last they were unyielding on the question of Mosul, where, after all, it may prove that oil does not exist in paying quantities, and scarcely more conciliatory in other matters. Now, however, we have arrived at the point when further argument is stilled, and before these notes appear we shall probably have learnt whether the Turks have accepted the draft Treaty or whether the visionaries of Angora have obtained the upper hand, and Turkey is still further to be crippled before being permitted to commence the arduous task of economic recovery.

The Indian Exchange.

After months of depression, it was quite refreshing to find the rupee quite a feature of the exchanges during the past week, rising at one time, indeed, to 1s. 5 3-16d. The reason for the buoyancy is that Indian produce has been moving off well of late, notably to Japan, which has been making heavy cotton purchases. The rupee has since reacted considerably from the high level mentioned, and it would be unwise to draw too hasty deductions from the movement, for the markets on which India can rely to take her produce remain extremely circumscribed, and recent developments on the Continent scarcely encourage any great expectation of their enlargement in the near future. Generally speaking, it may be added, the position in India has much improved of late, as the result of the good monsoon and a satisfactory harvest, and this has been reflected by a considerable increase in the orders from this country, a development which has naturally been furthered by the improvement in the rupee.

Trade Under Difficulties.

The notes from a correspondent at Constantinople in another column and those we published last week serve to bring out very plainly the extreme difficulties under which traders are labouring at Constantinople at the present time. Decrees and counter-decrees and rumours of impending measures and restrictions have made business all but impossible. In some cases goods have arrived at the port and have had to be returned, and then, following the repeal of the prohibitions, have had to be reimported! Of course, it is out of the question to carry on business on that basis. It is to be imagined that the extremely uncertain régime is due as much as anything to the desire on the part of the Angora Government to make a display of its authority. One can only hope that it is learning wisdom in the process, and that it will speedily discover that the best way to promote commerce is to leave it alone.

The Bank Meetings.

This is the period of the year when the meetings of the great banks take place, and we have become accustomed to expect some interesting statements on the situation from the chairmen. As usual, this expectation has been fulfilled, though a note of reserve was strongly in evidence in the addresses, which is not to be surprised at considering recent developments. At the meeting of Barclays Bank Mr. F. C. Goodenough said that though the outlook might have somewhat altered owing to the political complications on the Continent, yet there was a general feeling that the end had been reached of what had undoubtedly been a very bad time. He noted the signs of greater confidence, as a result of which fresh orders had been placed. He expressed himself as apprehensive of the effect of the Fordney Act on our trade with America, but declared that the effect of the measure "must be to compel us to seek new sources of supply of foodstuffs and raw materials, and to develop markets in other parts of the world for our trade." Unfortunately, that is not going to be an easy thing to do, and the outlet Mr. Goodenough laid special stress on—India—was a far from happy illustration. With the Continent practically out of the market as far as India is concerned, it is difficult to see how our market in India is going to be developed at present to any great extent.

Mr. McKenna on Deflation.

At the meeting of the London Joint City and Midland Bank (the temptation to curtail this long name was almost too much) Mr. McKenna made this very point with regard to India in dealing with what may be termed the breakdown in Europe. He does not believe that an inter-Empire trade can be developed to make good losses in the European markets. "A very brief study of the general course of foreign trade," he pointed out, "will show that whatever injures it in one part of the world has its reaction elsewhere, and that any confident hopes, based on the comparatively small proportion of our pre-war exports to stricken Europe,

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

are not well founded. We shall find that the commercial breakdown in Central and Eastern Europe is not only destructive of our markets there, but must hamper our export trade more or less all the world over." Mr. McKenna dealt at length with the question of deflation, and expressed the belief that deflation has only accelerated, and is not responsible for, the improvement in sterling. In his opinion, if there be no deflation here or in America, sterling will reach parity under the influence of the excessive gold supply in America.

The Westminster Bank.

The various amalgamations of the last few years have left some of the banks with very cumbersome titles, and it was evident that sooner or later a move would be made in the direction of simplification. The London County, Westminster, and Parr's Bank is to lead the way, for at a meeting to be held after the general meeting to-day it is to be proposed that the title of the bank shall in future be "Westminster Bank, Ltd." That the shareholders and the public in general will approve the choice is not open to doubt. It may be noted that the proposed title will retain the oldest part of the bank's name. The two other banks whose names would benefit by abbreviation—the London Joint City and Midland Bank and the National Provincial and Union Bank of England—will no doubt soon follow the example of the London County, Westminster, and Parr's Bank. It will be interesting to see the names they select.

The Smyrna Fruit Position.

The present position as regards Smyrna sultanas and figs is the subject of an interesting report by Messrs. C. J. Giraud and Co., which will be found in another column. It is estimated that the shipments of sultanas up to the end of the year amounted to about 14,500 tons, as compared with the total for the previous season of 29,800 tons, and that for the shipments of figs were 6,494 sk./ton cases, 39,835 boxes, and 125,671 bags, or, roughly, about half the exports of the previous season. The remaining supplies of both commodities are small, so that the difference between the trade of the two years will be very appreciable, though, it must be remarked, much less than there was reason to fear at one period. Messrs. Giraud are not encouraging with regard to the prospects of the coming season. As regards sultanas, they point out that the Vourla and Cesme districts, which yield about 7,000 tons, will not be cultivated, while in the Nymphio, Magnesia, and Kassala districts there is an acute scarcity. "The coming autumn," it is stated, "will effectively demonstrate the extent of the loss of production resulting from the wholesale expulsion of the Greek and rayah population."

COMMENTATOR.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - - - Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES - - - - - 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.

Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL - 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY.

TURKEY.

Constantinople, January 24.

Another Shock for Commerce.

No little consternation was caused a few days ago by the announcement in the Press that the Angora Government were contemplating proclaiming a moratorium in Constantinople; and, based on previous experience during the war, the report was freely circulated that from the date to be fixed no one would be able to pay or receive in one year more than 10 per cent. of an amount owing, and that, in consequence, money deposited in the banks could not be drawn upon to a greater extent in the same period. One effect of this report was that many hurried to their bankers and drew out their available balances rather than run the risk of having their money locked up in this indefinite manner. The report would appear to be, however, nothing more than another little shock for the much-tried commercial community of Constantinople, as yesterday the correspondent of the Tanine at Angora announced that the proposed measure had been withdrawn.

Difficulties of Traders.

Some relief has also been experienced in commercial circles by the Government's decision to repeal the new Customs regulations, which have been in operation since December 6 last, prohibiting the importation of a great number of articles on the ground that they were luxuries, or with a view to encourage or create local manufacture. The whole prohibited list has been withdrawn, with the exception of alcoholic liquors. Merchants, however, very reasonably complain of this further instance of the unstable conditions with which all business has to contend. In many cases goods that were ordered prior to the prohibition regulations arrived after December 6, and had to be returned, with loss to the merchants concerned. Now, on their arrival at their port of original despatch, they must be reimported.

GREECE.

Athens, January 18.

Trade with Czecho-Slovakia.

A six months' commercial treaty, with a view to facilitating the mutual exchange of products, has been concluded between the Greek and the Czecho-Slovak Governments. By virtue of this treaty Greece will have the right to export to Czecho-Slovakia yearly the following goods (the figures representing kilos):—Raisins, 2,000,000; dried figs, 6,720,000; olive oil, 500,000; wines, 20,000; pharmaceutical wines, 15,000; liquors and cognacs, 15,000; vermouth, 3,000.

Further, the Czecho-Slovak Tobacco Monopoly undertakes to purchase 700,000 kilos of tobacco produced in Old Greece and 1,300,000 kilos of Macedonian tobacco.

According to the Narodni Listy, it is proposed to restrict the production of woollen goods in Czecho-Slovakia.

A company has recently been formed by the City of Prague to provide the town with the electric power required for its development.

Mr. H. A. F. Lindsay, C.B.E., I.C.S., till recently officiating secretary to the Department of Commerce, Government of India, will take over charge of the office of Indian Trade Commissioner in London to-day.

An extraordinary general meeting of the London County Westminster and Parr's Bank, Ltd., will be held at the head office of the bank, 41, Lothbury, E.C., to-day, when a resolution will be submitted that the name of the company be changed to "Westminster Bank Limited."

Shipping Intelligence.

FIUME OR SALONIKA.

Problem of Yugoslavia's Sea Outlet.

The Zagreber Tageblatt, commenting on a recent statement of the Italian Prime Minister that Yugoslavia should turn her attention to the Aegean Sea, asks, What is that outlet really worth to the country? Is it of sufficient value economically to justify Yugoslavia turning from Fiume? The opinion is emphatically expressed that it is not.

Every evening, it is pointed out, an express train leaves Belgrade for Athens. Along this line the commerce of the country is to flow. To fulfil its purpose adequately the railway must have more than a single line. But in the whole of Yugoslavia there are only a few kilometres of double, and these are not in pre-war Serbia. The express arrives at Nish after many hours. It can only proceed farther than Skoplye when the weather is most favourable, and it is only by the aid of Providence that it reaches the frontier station of Ghevgeli. After this part of the journey is accomplished, it will have taken thirty to thirty-six hours before the express reaches Salonika.

The visitor to Salonika for the first time, aware that the city was the centre of the Allies' operations on that front, must ask in astonishment how this was possible in view of the state of the transport facilities. How anyone can think that the finance necessary for the establishment of the free zone in Salonika and for the construction of the requisite railways will be raised is equally a justifiable cause for surprise. The future of an export trade cannot be stated in the slow, heavy-laden trains that now crawl through the stations. The line from Skoplye to Salonika belongs to a French company, which has outstanding claims at Belgrade and Athens for damage done to it by the commandeering of the line. Uncertainty about the ownership of the line would seem to account to some extent for the failure to improve the conditions since the war. On the Yugoslav side much material is received as reparations; on the Greek side there is, of course, nothing of the kind. Frankly, after a trip from Belgrade to Salonika no one could remain unconvinced that many years would have to pass and many milliards be spent before Salonika could supply to Yugoslavia what is ready for her at Fiume. Business circles in Yugoslavia are unanimous in demanding an outlet to the sea. The diplomatists of the business world suggest that this should be secured at Salonika, but whoever has seen Salonika would strongly urge them to concentrate their wishes on what is possible—that is, upon Fiume.

YUGOSLAVIA'S MERCANTILE MARINE.

According to official statistics, the Yugoslav mercantile marine consists, at the present moment, of 808 ships, representing a total of 139,000 tons gross. These consist of 142 steamers of 128,000 tons and 666 sailing vessels of 11,000 tons. The steamships comprise 112 coasting vessels of 33,000 tons and 28 ocean-going ships of 95,000 tons. The most important of the Yugoslav navigation companies are the Dubrovacka, which has a fleet of 12 steamers of 29,468 tons, the largest unit being the Daksa, of 4,140 tons; the Oceania Company, with 13 steamers of 29,444 tons; and the Racie Company, with seven steamers of 26,347 tons, the largest being the Dan, of 4,383 tons. The more important of the coasting companies are the Jadranska Plovidba (formerly the Ungaro-Croatz), with 42 ships of 15,265 tons, and the Dalmatia, with 31 ships of 10,051.

While Italy, France, Great Britain, and the United States have already established, or are proposing to establish, regular and direct maritime communications with Yugoslavia, a similar policy (says the Liverpool Journal of Commerce) is being pursued by the Yugoslav navigation companies in regard to other countries. Thus the Dubrovacka Paroplovidba Company has put into commission a steamer of 2,400 tons for the transport of merchandise between Marseilles and Dalmatian ports. A Marseilles company has already established a regular service between Marseilles and Gruz. The Ellerman Line sends some of its steamers to Split (Spalato) and Gruz, and the Yugoslavia Express Agency has established a cargo line between England, Malta, and Metkovitch (in Dalmatia), which has given very satisfactory results.

It is announced that the Canadian Pacific intends to run a direct service from Montreal to Split and Dubrovnik. Recently the French Company Affreteurs Réunis started a service of large passenger steamers between Dalmatia, Tunisia, France, Algeria, and Belgium. A special company, with a capital of 10,000,000 dinars, was recently formed in Yugoslavia for dealing with emigrant traffic to America. It is felt that, at the present stage of development of the Yugoslav mercantile marine, the comparatively large number of individual companies is somewhat detrimental to the general interest, and, therefore, the Government is endeavouring to induce them to unite. These efforts have been successful so far as the coasting companies are concerned, nearly all of which have been amalgamated under the name of the "Yugoslav Lloyd."

Internal navigation in the Triune Kingdom is not without importance, but it is capable of considerable development. The navigable waterways have a length of over a thousand miles, but improvement plans are under consideration to increase the length to at least 1,250 miles. The grand artery of the Kingdom is, of course, the Danube, with its affluents, the Save, Theiss, and Morava, and the big canals of the Batchka and the Banat. The Danube is navigable through Yugoslav territory for a distance of 560 kilometres, or about 350 miles. Navigation on the Danube, Theiss, Save, and Drave is fairly constant, and is practicable for an average of 250 days in the year. It is interrupted principally by ice in the case of the Danube and the Theiss and by low water on the Save and the Drave. The Yugoslav river fleet consists of barges representing a total capacity of about 386,547 tons and tugs with a total of 34,404 h.p., as well as 21 passenger-carrying steamers.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Olympia for Bombay (Liverpool, February 14).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mandasor for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 10); s.s. Macharda for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 14); s.s. Holywell for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 28); s.s. Magdapur for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 4).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Kandahar for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, February 10); s.s. Gloucestershire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 14).

British India Line.—S.s. Nevasa for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 2); s.s. Matiana for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 9); s.s. Neuralia for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16); s.s. Mulbera for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 23); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 2).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Cypria for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Maronian for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 24).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Hankow for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Dago for Gibraltar, Piræus, Salonika, Constantinople, and Smyrna (London, February 3); s.s. Venetian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 7); s.s. Egyptian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, February 17); s.s. Eden Hall for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 28).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Incemore, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila. The first steamer of the season for the Danube (Liverpool, February 10); s.s. Peruvian for Galatz and Braila (Liverpool, February 17); a steamer for all ports from Piræus to Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

Moss Line.—S.s. Hatasu for Gibraltar, Oran, Algiers, Malta, and Alexandria (taking cargo through to Moroccan, Algerian, Cyprian, and Syrian Coast Ports (Liverpool, February 7).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Devanha for Bombay (London, February 2); s.s. Nagoya for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 9); s.s. China for Bombay (London, February 9); s.s. Nore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 23); s.s. Mantua for Bombay (London, February 23).

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

THE ABYSSINIAN MARKET.

Signs of Reviving Trade.

After some two years of unprecedented depression, amounting almost to stagnation, the trade of Abyssinia is beginning to show signs of recovery (says H.M. Consul-General at Adis Abeba in a recent report). The universal trade slump has had its inevitable effect on this as on other countries, and this effect has been intensified in the present instance by causes peculiar to Abyssinia. When it is remembered that Abyssinia has only comparatively lately begun to emerge from a condition analogous to mediæval times in Europe, with all that period's limitations, and, further, that she is only just recovering from a period of internal political uncertainty resulting from the Revolution of 1916, it is hardly surprising that the combined result should be an attitude of indifference or even passive resistance on the part of the local government towards outside trading ventures, with the consequence that merchants in Abyssinia have been more heavily handicapped than elsewhere in their efforts to combat existing conditions of the world's trade.

Another fact that must not be lost sight of is that the main export of Abyssinia is hides, the exchange of which for cloth may be said to represent the bulk of the country's trade. With hides a drug on the market, and little or no means at the disposal of the majority of Abyssinians wherewith to purchase imported goods, it is not difficult to explain the recent commercial eclipse of Abyssinia. During the last two months, however, conditions have been steadily, if slowly, improving, and there is now a fair demand for hides at prices which, though low, are still sufficient to induce the native to sell, and several large consignments have already been exported, chiefly to Germany. The Abyssinian hide, never of the highest quality, gained a very bad reputation in Europe during the war, owing to the careless methods adopted by merchants, not only in grading but also in curing them before shipment, and much care will have to be exercised locally before these hides can command good prices in the better-class markets.

There seems no reason to doubt that this movement in hides will continue and grow, and it can be anticipated with some confidence that there will be a corresponding revival in the import of cotton goods. Common grey sheeting is the article in greatest demand in this connection, and during the war Japan succeeded in capturing much of this trade, but now both Belgium and France are entering the field with no little energy, so that determined rivals are ready to contest the introduction of cotton goods from Lancashire and India. The superior quality of the British article is readily and universally acknowledged, but questions of cost have so far compelled the native to buy cheaper and inferior foreign cloth.

Other imports to Abyssinia (with the exception of salt) are of minor importance, but a general recovery of trade will have its effect here, too. During the last twelve months imports of salt have made considerable strides, and steady and growing supplies are coming in both from Djibouti and Zeyla. There has been a marked improvement in the salt industry at the latter place, and most encouraging quantities are being imported both via Djibouti and overland by canal to Dire Dawa. Efforts are also being made in collaboration with British Somaliland to revive the old caravan route between Zeyla and the interior of Abyssinia. This movement is still in its infancy, and has many difficulties to contend against; but, if successful, the general trade of the country should benefit, as this alternative line of communication will serve as a check on the constantly rising rates of the Franco-Ethiopian Railway, and so tend to keep down local prices.

Coffee and beeswax are the only other articles of produce exported in appreciable quantities. The chief areas of production of the former are round Gorei, in Western Abyssinia, and in the Harar province. This trade has managed to hold its own fairly well during the last few years, and much expansion should be possible if only the native grower were not too heavily taxed. The prospects for the current crop in Western Abyssinia are reported to be exceptionally good, and, if so, Egypt and the Sudan should benefit, as they absorb practically the whole amount available for export, whereas the Harar crop finds its way to Europe. As regards beeswax there is little to report. Its chief pre-war market was Russia, and so long as conditions in that country remain as they are there seems little chance of local wax exports resuming their former importance.

Taking everything, however, into consideration, a moderately optimistic view of the trade prospects of Abyssinia would appear to be justified; but the improvement must of necessity be slow.

MONTENEGRO LOAN SERVICE.

Messrs. Boulton Brothers and Co. announce with regard to their negotiations with the Government of Yugoslavia in connection with the Montenegro loan that they hope soon to be able to make a definite statement as to the service of the loan. They will make public any official intimation from the Yugoslav Government with regard to the loan as soon as it is received, but in the meantime consider that they should make the above announcement.

PRAGUE AN IMPORTANT AIR CENTRE.

Sir Samuel Hoare, Secretary of State for Air, speaking at the London Chamber of Commerce on January 24, at a meeting inaugurating a Czecho-Slovak Section of the Chamber, said that already the Air Ministry was entering on preliminary negotiations for the purpose of setting up a civil air line between London and Prague, by which it would be possible to reach Prague seven hours after leaving Croydon. Prague was practically the geographical centre of the Continent, and would, from the point of view of air development, become a most important centre in the direct communications of Europe. He paid a great tribute to the industry and statesmanship of the Czechs, and said that the republic had made great efforts, almost unique in that part of Europe, to make their national expenditure balance with the national income. The success achieved was borne out by the fact that although in all neighbouring countries exchanges were falling, that of Czecho-Slovakia had during the last three years shown a tendency to rise. He strongly urged the necessity for closer commercial relationships between this country and Czecho-Slovakia in the interests of both.

AGRICULTURAL METHODS IN ARABIA.

The implements in use at present in the Abdali district of Arabia are extremely primitive, and require much labour and time to cover a given area (says an American Consular report). Dry-farming methods are used, as there is very little rain. One of the tributaries of the Wadi Kebir River, which runs through this section, comes into flood about twice a year, and it is upon these floods that the farmers are dependent for their water. Two floods a year are considered necessary to produce a good crop, while with only one flood there is no crop at all. With better implements, which would allow a deeper and more continuous cultivation, more water could be held in the ground, and the crops could be greatly increased with the average two floods a year. It is also probable that with modern implements the crops would not be a total loss with only one flood.

A plan is stated to be under consideration for the connection by wireless of Aden, Khokha, Mocha, and Hodeidah.

Mr. W. J. Thomas, Director-General of the American Express Company's organisation in Europe and the Near East, has been elected a vice-president of that company.

It is reported that a provisional contract has been signed by the Greek and Argentine Governments for the purchase by Greece of 300,000 tons of cereals and 10,000 head of cattle.

A Reuter message from Delhi states that the Inchcape report on economies in the Indian Administrative Services is expected to be ready by the time the Budget is presented, but it will not be considered by the Legislative Assembly until the Government has passed the necessary orders in connection therewith.

"QUALITY AND FLAVOUR"

BOURNVILLE
COCOA

MADE UNDER IDEAL CONDITIONS.

SEE THE "Cadbury" ON EVERY PIECE
NAME OF CHOCOLATE.

Specially packed for Export.

Cadbury, Bournville, Eng

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Strong Demand for Figs.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in fair demand. Tate's cubes have come to business at 54s. 9d., at which they are 1s. down; Lyle's granulated at 48s. 9d. is also 1s. lower, while London granulated is 1s. down at 48s. 6d. Foreign descriptions have been fairly steady. West Indian crystallised is unchanged at 45s. 6d., while white Mauritius is 3d. down at 46s. 6d. White Java at 47s. 4½d. is 6d. lower. Futures are:—March, 21s. 7½d.; May, 22s.; August, 22s.

Coffee.—The spot market has been rather quiet. East Indian at 106s. is 2s. down. Costa Rica is unaltered at 100s., but Nairobi has shed 2s. at 90s. Futures are:—March, 60s. 1½d.; May, 59s. 10½d.; July, 58s. 9d.

Desiccated Coconut.—The market has firmed up, and prices are well above last week's levels.

Rice.—The market has been influenced by the exchanges, the rise in the rupee being followed by an increase in prices. The demand has continued good, and may be expected to improve, but whether prices go much higher at present will depend to some extent on the rupee, which has now weakened again.

Green Fruit.—Exceptionally heavy shipments of oranges have been forthcoming during the week, and the market has reacted in consequence. The demand continues good, and no doubt is felt that all the supplies will be readily absorbed. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 12s. 6d. to 35s. box (240's-504's). There is practically no change in the position with regard to lemons, which remain in strong request. Quotations are:—13s. to 20s. box (300's), 30s. to 37s. 6d. case (300's). The better demand for apples noted last week has developed. Onions have been rather a poor market.

Dried Fruit.—Business has fallen off considerably compared with the previous week. Currants have been in moderate request. Supplies available at present are somewhat limited. Sultanas have been in good demand. There are ample supplies of this fruit on the market. The demand for figs continues to develop, and prices are firm, with a tendency to rise. Plums have hardened, and Bosnians have not moved off so well. Dates continue to be taken up readily, but rates are unchanged, although supplies are not large.

Oilseeds.—A steady tone has ruled. Indian linseed is unchanged at 20s. 6d., while La Plata is 1½d. down at 18s. Rapeseed has been fairly firm, with Toria 6d. up at 18s. Cottonseed has been steady. Indian is 1½d. up at 9s. 4½d., Egyptian black is 1½d. down at 12s. 1½d., while Sakellaridis at 9s. 9d. is 1½d. down.

Oils.—The tone has been firm. Linseed oil is 3d. up at 39s. 3d. Rape oil has been steady, with crude unchanged at 42s. 6d., and technical refined the same at 45s. 6d. Cotton oil has been firm. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s., technical remains at 40s., while deodorised is the same at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The position is much the same. Linseed cake remains at 280s., coconut cake is unchanged at 190s., cottonseed cake is the same at 165s., while cottonmeal cake is unaltered at 270s.

ASIA MINOR FRUIT REPORT.

Messrs. C. J. Giraud and Co., of Smyrna, in a report dated December 31, state:—

In view of the chaotic conditions which have prevailed since September and the loss of records resulting from the destruction of many shipping offices, we have had some difficulty in finally obtaining accurate extracts of manifests of steamers which have loaded in our port up to this date for the United Kingdom and the Continent. We are much indebted to the courtesy of the various shipping agents here for the information which at no little trouble they have supplied to us.

The extent of shipments to this date is as follows:—Sultanas: To London, Bristol, Hull, etc., 510,190 boxes; to Liverpool, Glasgow, Belfast, etc., 186,787 boxes—696,977 boxes, or about 9,000 tons; to Holland, Belgium, Sweden, France, etc., 5,500 tons; estimated total about 14,500 tons. Figs: To London, 4,622 sk/ton cases, 28,505 boxes, 99,590 bags; to Liverpool, 1,872 sk/ton cases, 11,330 boxes, 26,081 bags; total, 6,494 sk/ton cases, 39,835 boxes, 125,671 bags.

For the guidance of our clients, we give below the shipments effected last season to the above markets up to March 31.—Sultanas: To London, 583,200 boxes; to Liverpool, 431,740 boxes; to outports, 106,740 boxes—1,121,680 boxes, or 14,380 tons; to the Continent, United States, Australia, etc., 15,420 tons—29,800 tons. Figs: To London, 9,055 sk/ton cases, 35,527 boxes, 161,685 bags; to Liverpool, 5,586 sk/ton cases, 12,404 boxes, 84,731 bags; to outports, 576 sk/ton cases, 2,255 boxes, 39,063 bags; total, 15,217 sk/ton cases, 50,186 boxes, 285,479 bags. It has been impossible to obtain any reliable data about the shipments of figs to the United States and Canada.

Sultanas.—The statistical position to this date is as follows:—Total arrivals to date in Smyrna, 108,205 bags; estimated shipments from Vourla and Cesme to September 9, 16,000 bags—124,205 bags; less estimated stock remaining in Smyrna, 9,000 bags—115,205 bags, or 14,500 tons. It is reckoned that the stock of sultanas of all qualities now existing in Smyrna and in the interior of the country, inclusive of the quantities still held by the Commission of Abandoned Goods, does not exceed 6/6.500 tons, but in view of the poor condition of a proportion of this fruit it is doubtful whether even 5,000 tons will be suitable for export. Fine grades of Yerli descriptions are quite exhausted. Carabournou sultanas have also entirely run out. Remaining stock consists for the most part of G.A.Q. fruit, with a small proportion of better grading. Prospects for the coming season are unfortunately not promising. The Vourla and Cesme districts, good for a production of about 7,000 tons, will remain entirely uncultivated. In the Nymphio, Magnesia, and Kassaba districts the scarcity of labour is being acutely felt, and but a small extent of the vines has so far been pruned and cultivated. The coming autumn will effectively demonstrate the extent of the loss of production resulting from the wholesale expulsion of the Greek and rayah population.

Figs.—There has been little movement in this article during the past month. Arrivals from the Meander Valley have been very restricted, and, owing to absence of supplies,

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	Dr. C. A. ANDRIKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

business latterly has been very limited, shippers working off the small stocks they had still in hand.

The volume of business in all produce exported from our port has been steadily diminishing, as much owing to exhaustion of supplies as to the weakness prevailing on foreign consuming markets. During the uncertainties and anxieties connected with the political situation in the course of October and November last native dealers spared no effort to rush their produce to market and to realise with least possible delay. But with the improving prospects of peace calmer views now prevail, and with increasing confidence farmers show no pressure to sell except for current financial wants. Exchange rates have fluctuated within narrow limits during the past month, sterling having moved between 775-800.

THE BASRAH DATE INDUSTRY.

Scientific Methods Needed.

Interesting statistics of the extent of the Basrah date industry are given in an article in the Times of Mesopotamia. "The most important area of date cultivation in the Irak, and indeed in the world, is that of the Shat al Arab, with Basrah as its centre. Both banks are lined with date gardens from Fao to Qurna, a distance of one hundred and eight miles. The average width of this date belt on either side of the river is perhaps a mile. Thus there would appear to be about 138,000 acres of date palms in this region. The left bank of the river from Mohammerah to Fao, a distance of forty-two miles, is in Persian territory, so that of purely Irak date gardens in this region there are about 111,000 acres. The average number of date palms an acre on the Shat al Arab appears to be about 140. Hence the total number of palms in this area might be estimated at about sixteen millions. The most remarkable thing about this area is the tidal inundation. From Fao to Qurna the date gardens are, in fact, irrigated twice daily with fresh water, owing to the action of the tides in the Persian Gulf, which bank up the fresh water in the Shat al Arab and force it into the countless creeks and channels which intersect the whole date belt. Thus all that is necessary for the effective irrigation of the Basrah date gardens is the initial digging and the periodical clearing of the creeks and channels. The tides do the rest."

It is pointed out that, as regards tillage, pruning, harvesting, etc., the date-growers have little to learn; it is in combating disease that modern science can render assistance. "Last year's crop suffered a good deal from the pest called Ghubar, and though spraying is an effectual treatment the local date-growers are inclined to view this modern method with polite scepticism. Conservatism dies hard in the date belt. . . . Spraying demonstrations were given last year, indeed, and perhaps in time, when the Agricultural Institute at Baghdad gets under way, instructional work will influence the younger generation of cultivators. The date industry, like everything else in Irak, suffers from the uncertainties of the situation. The Agricultural Department, with the best will in the world, cannot for the moment lay down a definite policy and drive ahead. Apart from the combating of date disease, there is another side on which the industry wants expert assistance. The daily tidal inundation of the area is unique in the world and reduces the needful labour to a minimum, but the creeks are ever silting up, and the steam dredger now at work is needful in order to save the situation. The extending of the creeks is another enterprise for the date-growers, because in this way the tidal water will serve an even larger area than at present. What the Department would dearly love to do is to lay down a date garden for research work in order to improve the local product. This, of course, would mean a forward glance of at least fifteen years, and it is to be hoped early settlement of international affairs will conduce to this faith in the future."

A CENTURY OF LOCK AND SAFE MAKING

On Thursday last members of the Press were entertained by Sir George Hayter Chubb, Bart., head of the well-known firm of Messrs. Chubb and Son's Lock and Safe Co., Ltd., at a luncheon held at the Victoria Hotel, Northumberland Avenue, W.C. Sir George, in an all too brief speech, outlined the firm's activities in the guardianship of public property over the past century. It came as a surprise to most of those present to hear that Messrs. Chubb had discovered a metal, from which they were now making their safes, which defied the blowpipe, and at a subsequent most interesting cinematograph display of the evolution of safe-making pictures were shown illustrating the wonderful resisting powers of this new metallurgical discovery. Some interesting booklets containing a mine of information as to the firm's development over the past 100 years, and the various stages of safe and lock production, were available, and intending safe purchasers should certainly not fail to see these. One left this most enjoyable function with the distinct impression that "Chubbs" know their job and with a feeling almost of regret for the Raffles of to-day.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Bulgaria.

Dredger, Tugs, etc.—The Bulgarian Ministry of Railways and Ports is calling for tenders for the following dredging material:—(1) One bucket dredger. (2) Three lighters ("chalands à clapets"). (3) Three tugs, river type. February 26. (D.O.T.)

Egypt.

Transformers.—Tenders are invited by the President of the Municipality of Zagazig for the supply of two mono-phase transformers, 50 periods, 20 k.v.a., 3000/2×115 volts. February 15.

Hides, Pigskins, etc.—The Egyptian War Department invite tenders for hides, pigskins, etc.—February 19.

Cloth.—The Egyptian War Department are calling for tenders for cloth, various. February 23.

Iraq.

Stores.—The Ministry of Defence, Baghdad, invites tenders for the supply of small quantities of stores to fill the annual demand of the Iraq Army Ordnance Department. The articles required include, among others, the following:—Brooms, brushes, spring balances, fire buckets, and stoves (1,000), meat choppers, school desks (100), hurricane and globe lamps (1,460), fire engines, fire alarms, butchers' implement, metal stamps, folding tables. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Morocco.

Bridge Construction.—Tenders are invited by the Director-General of Public Works, Residency General at Rabat, for the construction of a bridge in reinforced concrete, with three arches of about 44½ metres span and superstructure, to carry the road (No. 8) from Casablanca to Mazagan, over the river, "oum er rebia," near Azemmour. The piers, etc., up to the level of the banks (about 5 metres) will not be constructed by the successful tenderer, but by the Government. March 1. (D.O.T.)

Roumania.

Sacks.—A firm in Roumania desire to enter into business arrangements with a British firm dealing in Calcutta jute sacks, or empty wheat sacks from Australia. The firm are understood to have been in pre-war days one of the principal firms dealing in sacks in Roumania, where there are possibilities for the sale of sacks in considerable quantities. (D.O.T.)

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA

... SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE ...

BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA

also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR

GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO

MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI

ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP

AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND

BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES

PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND

DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.

LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.

OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

Stock and Share Markets.

MARKETS INFLUENCED BY POLITICS.

Rise in Montenegro Fives.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

The markets have been adversely affected by the uncertain European position, and yesterday a decidedly heavy tone developed. Compared with a week ago, prices have only eased off slightly, however, and, all things considered, the markets have withstood the effect of the Continental complications remarkably well up to the present. Should events take an adverse turn, however, things would be different, but there is no need at the moment to anticipate any such unpleasant contingency, though unhappily we seem as far off as ever from the real and final settlement for which we are longing, which will alone enable the wheels of trade to revolve smoothly once more. A settlement with Turkey, if that be possible, would be a very substantial consideration to set against the Ruhr problem, but that outcome which seemed so probable a little while ago appears very uncertain now, though those who affect to know the curious mentality of the Oriental are still confident that peace will crown the Lausanne negotiations.

Gilt-Edged Lower.

As a result of the various unfavourable factors—the Ruhr, Lausanne, and last, but not least, the disappointment anent the American debt negotiations—gilt-edged developed dullness during the week, and closed yesterday on a very depressed note. Consols at 56 $\frac{3}{4}$ are 3-16 down, War Loan Fives at 100 $\frac{5}{8}$ have shed 1-16, the Conversion Loan is $\frac{1}{2}$ lower at 76 $\frac{1}{4}$, while Fundings at 87 $\frac{7}{8}$ are $\frac{3}{8}$ down. Indian stocks have fallen away, the 7 per Cent. Loan being $\frac{3}{4}$ down at 115 $\frac{1}{4}$, while the 3 per Cent. Loan is 57 $\frac{1}{4}$.

The fluctuations of the exchanges have reacted on the Foreign group, sections of which have displayed considerable weakness. French stocks have been dull. War Loan Fives at 24 $\frac{1}{4}$ are $\frac{1}{2}$ down, while the 4 per Cents. at 19 $\frac{1}{4}$ are also $\frac{1}{2}$ lower. German 3 per Cents. are nominally $\frac{1}{2}$, at which they are $\frac{1}{8}$ down, while Italian Rentes are unchanged at 20 $\frac{1}{2}$. The feature of the Near Eastern group has been the rise in Montenegro 5 per Cents. to 45 $\frac{1}{2}$ on the announcement, which will be found in another column, regarding the service of the loan. Turkish Unified weakened to 21, a fall of 2 $\frac{1}{2}$, while Greek Monopolies were firm at 27 $\frac{1}{2}$.

Industrials Irregular.

The adverse conditions that obtain have resulted in a very irregular tendency in this group. Prices are generally lower, and in a few cases marked weakness has developed. Coats have been steady at 65s., while Courtaulds are 1s. 9d. down at 61s. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares have weakened. Vickers are unchanged at 16s. 9d., Armstrongs are 3d. down at 19s. 9d., while Guest Keens have shed 3d. at 39s. 6d. In Shipping securities P. and O. deferred are unchanged at 327, while Furness Withy are 3d. up at 36s.

Oils Dull.

General weakness has developed in the Oil group, and prices have tended to fall away. Anglo-Persians are 1-16 down at 4 1-16, but Burmahs at 5 1-16 are $\frac{1}{8}$ up. Mexican Eagles are 2, while Shell Transport are 3 15-16. Roumanians have been steady. Phoenix at 24s. 9d. are 3d. up, Steaua Romanas have gained 3d. at 9s. 3d., Dacia Romanos are 13-16, while Hamilton's Concessions are 2s. 6d. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields are 1 7-16.

Rubbers Receding.

After touching 1s. 6d. the price of the raw commodity has receded, and the opinion is held that it may go back to 1s. 4d., or even 1s. 3d., for the time being. The reason is apparently to be found in the cessation of American buying, immediate requirements having been satisfied. The effect of the adverse movement on the share market has been to bring about a very general decline, which has been helped to some extent by a bout of profit-taking. Shares will probably go a little lower still, and thus give belated buyers another chance to get in. It is unlikely that the raw commodity will long remain at its present level, but much, of course, will depend on Continental developments.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

More Low Records.

The exchanges have displayed considerable weakness as a result of political developments, and several new records were established during the week. The German rate has fluctuated violently, closing round about 157,500, while the French and Belgian rates have also fallen away. Roumania has been a specially weak spot among the Near Eastern exchanges, the leu going out to 1,275.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97 $\frac{1}{2}$	97 $\frac{1}{8}$
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	390-400
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	500-550
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	155-160,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	24.83-24.85
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4 $\frac{1}{2}$ -1.4 $\frac{3}{8}$
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	84.20-84.30
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	1,250-1,300
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	11,750-12,750
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4 $\frac{1}{2}$ -1.4 $\frac{3}{8}$
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	730-770*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.63 $\frac{1}{2}$ -4.63 $\frac{1}{2}$
Paris	Francs to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	75.30-75.40
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	160-160 $\frac{1}{2}$
Rome	Lire to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	97 $\frac{1}{2}$ -98 $\frac{1}{2}$
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22 $\frac{1}{2}$	750-800
Teheran	Krans to £	50	59
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	320-350,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	140,000

* Nominal

ALEXANDRIA EXCHANGE.

Supplied by G. L. Mortera, Alexandria and Cairo.

Prices on January 19 were as follows: Agricultural Bank of Egypt, £5 21-32; Alexandria Water Co., Ltd., £9 $\frac{1}{2}$; Anglo-American Nile Steam, £3 25-64; Associated Cotton Ginners, £31-32; Banque d'Orient, 41 $\frac{1}{4}$ fr.; Behera Ord., £E7 $\frac{1}{2}$; Brasseries d'Egypte, 53 fr.; Building Lands of Egypt, £1 3-32; Cassi di Sconto Priv., 99 $\frac{1}{2}$ fr.; Comptoir Fin et Com. d'Egypte, £1 19-32; Consolidated Lands, PT4 $\frac{1}{2}$; Credit Foncier Fondateur, 1040 fr.; Credit Foncier Act, 735 $\frac{1}{2}$ fr.; Credit Foncier 1886 Oblig., 324 $\frac{1}{2}$ fr.; Eaux du Caire, Capital, 92 fr.; Eaux du Caire Jouissance, 133 fr.; Egypt and Levant, S.S. Ord., 27s.; Egyptian Delta Light Railways, £4 $\frac{1}{2}$; Filature National d'Egypt, £9 $\frac{1}{4}$; Immeubles d'Egypt Soc. an des., £7 1-16; Khedivial Mail S.S. Company Pref., £3 11-16; Kom Ombo Ste an de Wadi, £4 7-32; Kom Ombo Ste An. Fondateur, £33 $\frac{1}{2}$; Land Bank of Egypt, Parts de Fond, £55; Lots Turc., 35 $\frac{1}{2}$ fr.; Menzaleh Canal Navigation, PT314; Grand Hotels d'Egypte, £9 $\frac{1}{2}$; Ramleh Railways, £2 $\frac{3}{8}$; Urbaines et Rurales, £3 15-16; Union Fonciere Fond., £ $\frac{1}{2}$.

Improvements under contemplation at the port of Constantza include the provision of 12 to 18 electric cranes.

The export of natural phosphates from French Morocco from January 1 to September 30 last amounted to 45,908 tons.

To mark the reduction in postage on picture postcards from 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 1d. Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons, Ltd., are holding a postage prize competition, £5,000 being offered in prizes.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Homs, January 6.

The report for December states:—

The sowings of cereals have been made during this month under excellent atmospheric conditions. The abundant and regular rains which have continued to fall since November promise a very satisfactory harvest. According to the opinion of certain farmers, the area sown will be greater than that of last year. The average increase will not be in every case more than 10 per cent., as in certain places the low price of cereals has obliged the nearly ruined owners to leave the land fallow. The mild weather which has lasted during the past four weeks is favourable to the sheep.

The position of the import trade has not changed during the month under review. Colonial produce arrives in sufficient quantities. Petrol, a large stock of which remains on the market, has risen as the outcome of an agreement arrived at between the different oil companies of Syria. Nevertheless, the Homs representatives of these companies declare that during the month under review the sale has greatly decreased. They explain that this lack of sale is due to the competition which exists among the dealers and the small retailers, who are keeping back a stock of about 5,000 to 6,000 cases, bought by them at summer prices, before the agreement between the companies was made, with the resultant rise in prices.

The export of cloth for Palestine remains unchanged. The exports for Egypt, on the other hand, are slightly lower in comparison with those for November. The low price of cotton and the general situation does not promise a considerable development in the export of cloth to this country. The export to Turkey continues restricted.

The export of cereals to Tripoli has varied between 50 and 60 tons daily for the commencement of the month, and 40 tons towards the end of the month. Part of these cereals is consumed by the coast-line region; the remainder is exported to Alexandria and Marseilles. A few small quantities have even been exported to Algeria.

The price of wool has not changed. Silk is very scarce, and maintains a firm price at 880ps. After long reflection the sheep dealers of Homs, like those of Hamah, have decided at last to buy the sheep that they need through their representatives at Mosul. They are going to take delivery and bring them to Syria in small stages. This journey will last several months, during which time the sheep will graze on the extremely luxuriant and forward pasture land that is a result of this year's abundant and regular rains alternating with the fine weather. However, as the present stock is restricted, retail meat has risen about 10 per cent. in price.

Adana, January 15.

During the first half of December there was a heavy rainfall throughout Cilicia, which, with the favourable conditions which followed and lasted to the end of the month, is regarded as very favourable to the sown lands and to agriculture in general. In such conditions, and with an area sown about 50 per cent. above that of the previous year, it can now be said that the forthcoming crop will be greater than that of last year.

Aintab, December 30.

The market has continued under the influence of political conditions. Exports, as well as imports, have come to a temporary standstill as a result of the exodus of the Christian population, which called for the utilisation of all kinds of beasts of burden and conveyances.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
J. UNGAR
E. HODLER

} Sub-Directors.
DJEVIAD BEY.
HAMID BEY.
NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
E. W. H. BARRY.
THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
C.M.G.
THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
O.B.E.
SIR W. GUY GRANET.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
LORD HILLINGDON.
GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
K.P., P.C.
LIEUT.-COL. SIR 'ALBERT STERN,
K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
JEAN BOISSONNAS.
CHARLES DE CERJAT.
HORACE FINALY.
GEORGES HEINE.
ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
RAOUL MALLET.
LE COMTE FREDERIC
PILLET-WILL.
FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
7, Rue Meyerbeer.

MARSEILLES:
41-43, Rue Grignan.

CONSTANTINOPLE.
(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted.
Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Increased Demand.

The Commercial Company of Egypt, in their report for the week ended January 19, state:—Since our last report, the futures market has been rather firmer, the turnover of business passed being much larger than in the preceding weeks. This week's improvement must be attributed to the wonderful strength of the New York market, where quotations have now surpassed 28 cents, and to the fact that spinners' attention was in consequence drawn to our cotton. If allowance is made for the appreciation of the dollar, the present "futures" price of Ashmouni approaches very near the New York quotations. This is certainly an abnormal situation which sooner or later is bound to readjust itself. Another feature worth mentioning is the cheapness of Sakellarides compared to Ashmouni, the difference between the near positions of these two varieties being to-day under $3½. The shortage of American cotton and the reluctance of the consumers in general to use expensive goods owing to financial stringency are responsible for this state of things, and we should not be astonished, in view of these conditions, if this small difference between Sakellarides and Ashmouni continues for some time. Speculation continues to operate very little in the market, and this because of the rather confused state of international politics.

Spot.—Minet-el-Bassal was closed on Saturday last for the Greek New Year. Total sales amount this week to about 23,000 bales, of which we estimate 13,950 bales Sakellarides, 9,000 bales Uppers, and 50 bales White. The turnover of business has been considerably larger, and sellers have taken full advantage of the increased demand.

Sakellarides.—The lower grades continue to be in great demand. Fair and below are now difficult to find, and very full prices have to be paid to obtain any of this cotton. The price of spot against contracts of fully fair to fully good fair has also hardened. The better grades have been more or less neglected and the premiums remain about the same.

Upper Egypt.—There has been a very much better demand for this variety during the week, especially fully good fair to good; although there is a fair amount of this cotton on the market, holders are not too keen to part with it. The inferior grades are still much sought after but are not to be found in abundance, and the prices continue to be very stiff.

Other Varieties.—A very small business has been done in good fair to fully good fair White, but very little remains for sale.

Crop 1923.—Land preparation is progressing. Prospects for an ample supply of water during the summer months, according to Government reports, are not at all encouraging, although the Nile gauges have shown a slight improvement latterly.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

The Indian Market.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended January 27 states:—

This market has maintained the better tone of recent weeks, and more business has been done. In the general opinion, the advance in raw cotton has been the only obstacle to a still larger volume of trade. The improvement is, however, almost entirely due to the better Indian demand, and there have been signs within the last day or two of this becoming satisfied for the time being, possibly due to the fact that producers, having strengthened their position, are showing a firmer attitude as to prices. A satisfactory feature is in the evidence afforded that India's purchasing power is increasing, due to sales of her own produce, as evidenced by the improvement in the value of the rupee. Those spinners and weavers who bought their raw cotton or yarn on the basis of the lower values ruling a short time ago are, of course, in a position to accept prices which would be impracticable were they to purchase on to-day's basis.

Yarn.—Prices are on a higher basis than last week, and although this has operated as a restraining influence on purchasers, turnover has, nevertheless, been bigger in the aggregate. Quite a nice business has been done by those spinners who manufacture yarns for the lighter makes of cloth. A better demand for the Home trade is reported.

Cloth.—An extensive business has been done from India, and some manufacturers are said to be booked up for two or three months. China remains a very disappointing outlet, while the remainder may be described as only moderate, with the Near East buying small lots here and there.

Raw Cotton.—Prices continue to show surprising strength, and have been very steady with a small rise on balance in America. The unsettled state of the Continent appears to be offset by better trade reports both here and in the United States. Closing prices are as follows:—American Fully Middling, 16.42d.; Egyptian Fully Good Fair, 18.25d.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Brisk Enquiry for Low Grade Cotton.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended January 24:—

Quite a large business has been done during the past week, interest having centred chiefly round uppers, fully good fair to good, and Sakellaridis good fair to fully good fair. At the same time, a brisk inquiry has been maintained for low-grade cotton of any description at prices ranging from 9½d. to 12½d. Some of the business reported has been of rather a mysterious character, and we are inclined to the opinion that this week again speculation has played an important part in swelling the sales. A number of firms on the American side of the market recently bought uppers and resold them. Some of them are reported to have done very well on the transaction. Impelled, no doubt, by the inherent strength of their own market, some of these firms are now turning their attention to Sakellaridis, which to-day is looking very reasonable as compared with uppers, the better qualities of which are to-day quoted from Alexandria at 17.50d. per lb., or only 35 points under the contract price of fully good fair Sakellaridis here in Liverpool. At present the demand for uppers is in full blast—it remains to be seen how long present prices will continue to find favour with the trade. At any time the bulk of the demand may veer round on to Sakellaridis cotton, whereupon a marked change may be expected in the situation as far as our market is concerned. The majority of spinners still appear to be short of cotton, in spite of the comparatively large sales which have recently been registered here. Very little buying for forward delivery has taken place; indeed, the amount of c.i.f. business lately transacted has been most disappointing, especially in face of the excellent Manchester reports, which are now becoming a daily feature. A mild sensation was produced on 'Change here a few days ago when it became known that a Russian buyer had made his appearance on our market, and had purchased about 1,000 bales of fine Sakellaridis for export. For the week ending January 19, 10,295 bales of Egyptian cotton were forwarded to spinners. Sales, 7,350 bales (includes 1,800 Sudan). Quotations of Sakellaridis are raised 25 points; those of upper 40 points, whilst in brown, fair to good are raised 40 points; fine and extra fine 25. F.G.F. Sakellaridis to-day 18.25d.

COMPANY NOTES AND REPORTS.

Ionian Bank.

The profit of the Ionian Bank for the eight months ended August 31, 1922, after providing for expenses of management, losses, all bad and doubtful debts, bonus for staff, rates, taxes, income-tax and corporation tax, both in Greece and England, was £37,693, plus £11,780 brought in, making £49,473. An interim dividend of 2s. per share, free of tax, absorbed £9,711, leaving £39,762. The directors propose a final dividend of 2s. per share, free of tax; bonus of 8d. per share, free of tax; transfer to reserve (making that fund £155,000) £5,000, to premises redemption fund £10,000, carrying forward £11,813. The business of the bank has continued to expand, and the directors are pleased to report satisfactory results for the period under review. The directors, having made more satisfactory arrangements for the storage of their customers' cotton, have disposed of the bank's shoonah (store) at Alexandria. They have opened a new account under heading "Premises Redemption Fund," to which they have transferred £10,000, net profit resulting from this sale. Since August 31, 1922, the bank made arrangements for taking over the business carried on in Constantinople by the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and a branch was opened there on October 1. Investments stand on the books at figures considerably below the actual market value.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - - - - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Duzdab Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohammerah, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shuhstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Busreh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd.

LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - - - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - £485,580
RESERVE - - - - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
1, Devonshire Square,
London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
weekly for months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....
Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
RATES 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum; 15s. 6d. for 6 months.
To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NORCOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - - Rs. 5.62.35.500
Reserve - - - - Rs. 4.11.82.805
BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
London Branch: 5, Whitlington Avenue, E.C.8.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	...	...	...	...	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital ...	...	...	...	...	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	...	...	...	...	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund ...	...	...	...	...	£2,600,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.
SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD.
J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.
ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
ROBERT MILLER, Esq.
J. N. STUART, Esq.
J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinja
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon.	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital
12,000,000 Leva
Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS,
ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIATION DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - - L.It. 400 millions.
Reserves - - - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA.

Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk,
— Philippopolis and Sliven —

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 613—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	129	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Turkey's Refusal	140	Notes and News	143
Egypt	133	THE WEEK AT HOME	131	Palestine's Commercial Resources	144
Bulgaria	134	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	136	Stock and Share Markets	146
Persia	135	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	137	Near East Markets	147
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	139	Cyprus Oil Trust	148
Mosul, Irak, and Turkey	141			Shipping Intelligence	149
				Company Meetings	150
				Cotton and Cotton Goods	153

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

France's Lone Hand.

The hopes based on Allied solidarity at Lausanne that France would for the future "run straight" in her dealings with the Near East have been disappointed. When the moment arrived for the new Treaty to be presented in the name of all the Allies to the Turks at Lausanne M. Poincaré elected to send, behind the back of the British Government, a separate communication to Mustapha Kemal Pasha. We have no wish to make too much of the incident; but whether the message prove to be harmless or thoroughly mischievous, the action was wrong. It was essential that the Turks should have no ground for supposing that any one of the Allies had the least desire to weaken the united front that they had presented at the Conference. M. Poincaré's message must have held out such a possibility to Angora. If there was no intention to serve the separate interests of France as distinct from those of the Entente, the British and Italian Governments ought to have been formally consulted before any communication was sent to Mustapha Kemal Pasha. There was some excuse, from the French point of view, for the separate negotiations that ended in the Franklin-Bouillon agreement with Angora; France was piqued, and in disgust with Great Britain deliberately set out to "score off" her ally. No such excuse holds good to-day. Unity of purpose had been restored at Lausanne, and there could be no justification for independent action on the part of any one of the Allies.

Fear or Favour?

It has not been easy to determine the actual steps taken by M. Poincaré. The unwisdom of the démarche was quickly appreciated, at least by the French Government, and undoubtedly a laudable attempt has been made to undo the mischief. There is accordingly no desire in any official quarter to be communicative on the subject. Most possibly M. Poincaré was afflicted with genuine anxiety lest, on the top of his Ruhr troubles, he should find that France was involved in war with Turkey, and forgetting that united action on the part of the Allies was the best, if not the only, guarantee against war, bethought himself of using France's influence with Angora. To the Turks a message calling attention to the favourable terms that Turkey had received as a result of French endeavours, and expressing a hope that the Treaty would be duly signed seemed to be an attempt, not very dignified nor altogether honourable, to curry favour with them. Mustapha Kemal replied somewhat frigidly, and his answer alarmed the French Prime Minister, who thereupon hastened to assure the Angora Government that the Treaty was not an ultimatum, and (in so many words) that France was still most anxious to prove accommodating. Nothing appears to have been said at the time about this correspondence to the British Government; but shortly afterwards a Note was sent to the latter intimating that in the event of the Treaty not being signed by the Turks France reserved to herself complete liberty of action with regard to a separate agreement. M. Poincaré seemed still to be more concerned to make a good impression on the Turks than to consider the Entente. Unfortunately, it is just in small matters like these that France so often fails in her dealings with the East. She has certainly injured her prestige with the Turks, as the fresh outburst against her in the Nationalist Press testifies. The attempt recalls the efforts of individual members of French missions in Sofia after the Armistice to convince the Bulgarians that Great Britain alone was responsible for the harsh terms of the Treaty of Neuilly, and that France had worked very hard to mitigate them. Those efforts failed completely. This time M. Poincaré's action has been followed by the refusal of the Turkish Delegation at Lausanne to sign the Peace Treaty.

Roumania's Difficult Task.

It must be as evident to the Roumanians themselves as it is to others that until Roumania's home politics are placed on a satisfactory footing she cannot hope to pull her full weight either in the councils of Europe or even in even purely Balkan affairs. The present Parliament was elected last spring, but, owing to the methods alleged to have been adopted at the elections by the Liberal Party in power, the Opposition parties withdrew from the sittings, and the most important, the Transylvanian National Party, in order to emphasise its protest, actually refrained from taking part in the Coronation ceremony at Julia Alba. Parliament has now reassembled, and the Opposition have decided to attend in order to prevent the Government from declaring their seats vacant. They state, however, that they will refrain from discussing the Constitution Bill. During the last few months the Democrats, the party of the late M. Take Jonescu, have thrown in their lot with the Transylvanian Nationalists. Their numerical strength is not great; but the fusion, if such has taken place, followed by the return of the Opposition to Parliament, suggests that political tactics are being revised, and that a movement is on foot for the redistribution of political forces which will enable Roumania to benefit from the healthful influence that the Transylvanians can exert on domestic politics. The collapse of the Roumanian exchange is a sure sign that the Liberal Government, which before the War prided itself on its business acumen and administrative efficiency, has lost, in one way or another, its grip on the situation. Perhaps the fatal breach between Liberals and Transylvanians is in part to blame. Roumania's interests call for a united nation at this critical stage.

Events in Greece.

The Revolutionary Committee in Greece is clearly trying to restart the political life of the country on healthy lines, but it is confronted with the dilemma that so long as it remains in existence itself it is building on a foundation of sand. This is necessarily the case with power vested in the hands of a junta responsible neither to the Crown nor to the people. The Committee, no doubt, realises that if it were to dissolve itself the edifice that it has hastily put together would at once come tumbling down. Accordingly, while hedging itself more closely round with bayonets, under the pretence of having to reorganise the army for the protection of Western Thrace, it is making a display of liberal intentions. In principle, the steps taken are sound enough. An amnesty has been decreed for political offences, but is not extended to cases where a judicial decision has already been rendered. Apart from the reservation, which somewhat stultifies the concession, it remains to be seen whether freedom of speech and personal liberty are possible in a country ruled by a body of men above the law.

Political Views to Order.

Again, nothing could be more praiseworthy than an attempt to raise the Greek people out of the rut of personal politics, which have been the bane of the nation throughout its constitutional existence. The value, however, of political views made to order at the behest of an all-powerful Revolutionary Committee must at least be problematical. A political party wishing to place national above personal interests should form itself round a definite constructive programme, so that all those who belong to it are held together by clearly defined principles and do not run the risk of being broken up into antagonistic groups as soon as they are brought up against political realities of the day. It is not apparent whether the political organisation now being established under the aegis of the Revolutionary Committee is being rallied to any but a negative or a perfectly vague programme. The friends of Greece desire nothing better than that she should return as quickly and as peacefully as possible to a path of normal progress, material and political, but this wish does not exempt them from passing judgment in a friendly and constructive spirit on the steps taken to reach the goal in view. The alleged intention to place all the refugees in Greece on the electoral roll for the coming elections appears at first sight as a device to weight the scales in favour of the Committee and to hinder that appeasement of political passions which the Committee claims to have at heart. Clearly the refugees are not in the state of mind that makes for dispassionate judgment on political questions, and their enfranchisement ad hoc could only be effected by an arbitrary act on the part of those now holding the reins of power in Greece.

Albania's Frontiers.

There is, no doubt, an explanation of the delay on the part of the Conference of Ambassadors to finish the delimitation of the Albanian frontier; but it is none the less unfortunate. A stretch of sixty miles awaits demarcation, and, with a view to avoid friction, the zone is regarded as neutral, and neither the Albanian nor the Yugoslav Government attempts to administer it. This strip of territory has now been occupied by so-called Albanian insurgents, who indulge in the time-honoured profession of fairly indiscriminate raiding. At one time, it is to be feared, the Serbian authorities were not averse from encouraging Albanian malcontents to make things unpleasant for the Tirana Government. Wiser counsels, however, are gradually prevailing, and the Yugoslav Government is finding the activities of these gentry almost as much a nuisance as Albania herself. It is now reported that the Conference of Ambassadors and the League of Nations are being asked to expedite the settlement of the Yugoslav-Albanian frontier. When the common boundary is finally settled, it is to be hoped that the two countries will be able to enjoy a long period of friendly relations.

Egypt and the Sudan.

In welcome contrast to the intransigent attitude of the Turks at Lausanne the Egyptian Government has adopted a reasonable attitude in regard to the future status of the Sudan, of which the extremist agitation has been anxious to make an "issue" between Egypt and Great Britain. In view of the fact that the question had been specifically reserved for separate discussion, the British Government refused to allow the draft Constitution for Egypt to contain any reference that implied a modification of the existing status of the Sudan in favour of Egypt. The Egyptian Cabinet finally admitted the force of the British contention, and was reported to be prepared to make the necessary alterations in the draft Constitution now awaiting King Fuad's signature. The statement, however, evoked an outburst in the Egyptian Press, and it is now announced that Nessim Pasha has offered to resign. We had hoped that by standing firm the Cabinet would find that its path had been rendered easier and smoother for the future.

The Future of Indian Cotton.

The Indian Legislature is following distinguished precedents in failing to make the best use of its time, and at the present rate of progress the April slaughter of the innocents is likely to be large. We hope, however, that time will be found for the passage of the Cotton Cess Bill, a small, non-political measure, already several years overdue, which means more for India, and also for her customers abroad, than most of the ambitious projects now under discussion. A long period of study and experiment has shown that the quality of cotton grown in the country can be improved to an extent which will certainly make a material difference in the national income, and perhaps benefit the spinning industry of the whole world. The levy of a cess on the cotton handled commercially is intended to pay for the specialised research which is still needed in order to turn this possibility rapidly into an accomplished fact; the principle is accepted by the great bulk of the people who will have to pay; and it will be a very bad thing for India if political exigencies are suffered to cause further delay in securing the largest addition to the national wealth which is at the moment within reach.

The Extravagance of Poverty.

It is, unfortunately, true that the political and social reformers, who insist so justly on the poverty of India, seem hitherto to have made no impression on the national extravagance to which that poverty is so largely due, and in this connection the experience of 1922 is peculiarly significant. The people, though not the Government, had a substantial sum of money to spend, and if there had been any national determination to combat poverty it would have been spent in such ways as to increase the national income, on engines and machines, on brains and energy, or on libraries and laboratories. Statistics, however, show that over twenty millions sterling were spent during the year on gold and silver, while an enormous but imperfectly known sum went on precious stones, and, after allowing for the requirements of legitimate industry, it is probably correct to say that during the year about fifty millions were devoted in this way to the encouragement of burglary, the only occupation which benefits by such expenditure. This has been going on for at least twenty centuries, possibly for far longer, and it really seems time for the reformers to take the matter up in earnest.

Racial Distinctions.

We question whether the man-in-the-street can have derived much enlightenment from the summary of the report on racial distinctions in India, which was issued in London on Saturday. To say this is not to blame the compiler of the summary, for the existing law on the subject is not a logical system, but an epitome of the history of India's gradual regeneration under British auspices. Little more than a century ago, when India, following an ingrained habit, was cringing at the feet of her latest conqueror, the idea that any Indian could exercise jurisdiction over any Englishman would have been unthinkable. The limited jurisdiction provided for in the existing codes is a measure of the progress achieved during the nineteenth century, and a thorough revision of the detailed provisions was obviously required as a corollary to the new constitution. Without seeing the text of the Bill, it is impossible to say whether the proposals are more logical or rational than the law which is now in force, but we think most Englishmen will accept as decisive the fact that they represent a compromise reached by a committee on which English and Indians had equal representation, and we are not without hopes that the Indian Legislature will take the same view.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The American Debt.

One, at least, of the important decisions to which I referred last week has been taken by Great Britain, for the Cabinet has now agreed to accept the American proposals for funding our debt to the U.S.A. A great chorus of praise and sighs of relief have ascended to the Cabinet from business men generally, who, much more than other men, like to know exactly where they are; and, on the whole, it has been recognised as a wise and, in fact, a necessary decision. The words that have fallen from some lips and pens about Britain's noble action in setting an example to the rest of the world are apparently inevitable, but they do us harm in other countries, for the Chancellor of the Exchequer bluntly cut this legend when he said that the Cabinet were guided in their decision on this occasion by the fact that honesty and expediency were going hand in hand.

This decision to pay is, it appears, going to amount to £34,000,000 a year. Among the less enlightened taxpayers there has, of course, been a good deal of grumbling; they still think that it all ought to come out of Germany, and that America was quite the reverse of generous in her terms. A prominent Liberal Member of Parliament gave expression to this sentiment last week when he said that he always had thought that Palestine was the national home of the Jews, but since Mr. Baldwin had returned from America he knew where it was. Further, it has been threatened by our recalcitrants that America will suffer for so squeezing us, that she will find her trade falling off, and so on; but one can hardly conceive that Wall Street, which presumably was responsible for the actual terms, was so ingenuous as to risk that.

Two well-known hymns have been sung by the Press upon this decision of the Cabinet, the one, poorly harmonised and with very shrill trebles, about our demanding our debts from our (erst-while) Allies, and the other, very sticky and dull, about the essential Anglo-Saxon brotherhood. Most of the journals that are singing in this congregation belong ostensibly to the "love one another" type, and we are not moved as perhaps we might be when the Daily News demands justice from France and Italy or when the Observer gushes on the identity of interests and duties in America and Great Britain. It is true that the American and the Englishman are each a very fine fellow, but that does not make identity, and all this "Anglo-Saxon" saccharine merely obscures the very individual and very valuable taste of each.

The Entente Cordiale.

All eyes have been strained on the Ruhr—and have perceived nothing. The French determination has not weakened; the German resistance is not tottering; and where it will all end no one here seems to be able to guess. There is much discussion upon the dissolution of the Entente, but those who apparently desire nothing so much as this cannot get rid of the "cordiale" part of it. Perhaps at the moment there is no "entente" between Great Britain and France, for there is little understanding in the sense of creative sympathy; but there is still any amount of cordial feeling towards the Ruhr venture.

So far as I can see, British people have no considerable compassion for the Germans, and the efforts in both the occupied and unoccupied parts of Germany to gain sympathy by calling us noble and just are treated here with contempt. If we do eventually break with France, our tendency will not be towards anybody, but away from everybody.

The State of Ireland.

There is no country at the present time whence more melancholy news comes than Ireland. It

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

is not so much the actual bombing, the burning, the shooting, and the general wrecking—though the ruining last week of the home of Sir Horace Plunkett, one of the most generous and honourable of Irishmen, fired our depression with a little of the old indignation,—that shock us, but it is the warping or sapping of character evident almost everywhere in Ireland. Ireland has most disappointed those who loved her most; she has surprised even those who never loved her.

Michael Collins wrote of his country a little while before his death that it was one of the very few in Europe that could hope for a better future than its past had been: but that hope has been sadly dimmed since his day. The week that is just over has been probably the most disastrous since the beginning of the Free State, and people in England are wondering how much longer such a state of things can endure. It is thought in some places that the recent events are the storm before the calm, but nothing particularly warrants such a belief.

The Prospects of Liberalism.

The cause of Liberalism has for some time been on the wane, quite apart from the fact that it seriously endangered itself when the Lloyd George-Asquith split was allowed to fester unattended. But there are now definite signs, not only of reconciliation amongst "Independent" and "Coalition" Liberals, but of general Liberal activity throughout the country.

Lord Grey has been elected to the Liberal leadership in the House of Lords, and certainly no more distinguished man could have been found. It is true that, physically, he, like Mr. Bonar Law—who, by the by, is, on account of his health, given about two years in power—is not strong, but his command and vision are incomparably wider than those of any other Liberal peer. In the House of Commons the position is not so clear, for there the ancient feud is more keenly maintained. But even there a workable fusion between the two sections is entertained.

And in the journalistic world, too, a desire to present the Liberal point of view is striving to express itself. In former days such a view could be found in the Nation, but latterly this paper has tended too much towards Socialism for the liking of the more rigid Liberals, who still believe that there is an angle of vision between the Conservative and Labour angles which is of value to the country. A group of such men has, I believe, already acquired the Nation, though for the present Mr. Massingham, who is both a notable and a notorious editor, is still carrying on. It is said that the Nation in its new form will come under the control of Mr. J. M. Keynes and of Professor Ramsay Muir—a prospect which will scarcely keep us awake at night.

It is further stated that Mr. G. K. Chesterton, who, of course, is a very sound Radical, is to bring out a new weekly paper called G.K.C.'s Weekly. Its aim is to be popular, "definitely and deliberately democratic." Thus it will be replete with real Liberalism, which, perhaps, is only remotely connected with the parliamentary and economic brand that I have foreshadowed above.

General Sport.

The weights and acceptances for the National and the Lincoln are now out, and sporting tongues are agog with possibilities of delightful doubles. It is extraordinary how people who were plunged in the deepest gloom by the back-end of the previous season always come back with fresh hopes to this double. Everyone knows how sound the advice is to wait until near the day of the race, but, all the same, you may even now hear confidently mentioned the remotest of chances, like Monarch and Duettiste or Vivaldi and Arravale.

Rather a lurid sensation has been made of the case of Mr. T. Lawton, the Australian footballer of Oxford University and Blackheath. For having played in "professional" rugby before he came to England he has been temporarily suspended by the English Rugby Union. Some reasons that have not yet been fully disclosed must have existed for the taking of so severe a step, but as I am entirely ignorant of them, no purpose can be served by discussing the matter.

The game on Saturday between Wales and Scotland at Cardiff is said to have been one of the greatest in the history of Rugby football. By scoring in the last few minutes Scotland gained victory by eleven points to eight, and showed themselves a wonderful side. The game between England and Scotland next month at Inverleith will be a tremendous affair.

The Accuracy of Novelists.

An amusing dispute took place recently between Sir Francis Newbolt, K.C., and Sir A. H. Hawkins ("Anthony Hope") on "The Mistakes of Fiction Writers in Law and Procedure." It is a very old tale, this one of novelists' errors. Of course, the lawyer won, and, of course, it was a Pyrrhic victory. Sir Anthony Hawkins did not mind in the least admitting that he himself had once made an only child leave all his money to his nephew; and it was not in depreciation of Ouida that he recalled her 'Varsity hero who was so brilliant an oarsman as to outpace all his crew in the rapidity of his stroke. These things do not really matter. We can all, without flinching, meet in a novel the Oxford man who talks of his "bedder" and the Cambridge man who talks of his "quads." What is important is the spirit of the book. I remember hearing Miss Sheila Kaye-Smith, whose novels are of wider sweep and power than those of any other living woman writer, once say that she did not care a hang for details so long as the impetus of the book was true and real. It is this fussing over details that is perhaps the chief literary curse of our time.

Some Recent Books.

"Our Ruling Class," by Francis Francis (A. L. Humphreys), is very much a product of the War. It is a clean-cut exposure of the modern Western democracies, and it riddles the shams and follies which are perpetrated almost daily in the name of the people.

The fame among artists of Gordon Bottomley has always been considerable; it will be increased by the publication in England (Constable) of his "Vision of Giorgione," which was published in America twelve years ago. It is all very remote, this attempt to reproduce in poetry the atmosphere of Giorgione's painting, but it contains wonderful craftsmanship. Digitized by Google

FOR HIRE

PRIVATE CARS OF THE HIGHEST CLASS

BROCKS

10-DUCHESS ST. PORTLAND PLACE-W1

Langham
1222
Hampstead
6203
Tindal
2777

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, January 25.

The Carnarvon Discoveries.

The time is fast approaching when the mysterious sealed chamber in the Tutankhamen tomb in the Valley of the Kings at Luxor will be opened. Considerable progress has been made by Mr. Carter and his staff with the removal of the objects from the outer chamber, which must be cleared before it is possible to tackle the sepulchral chamber, and the ante-chamber should be empty by the end of the month. Lord Carnarvon arrives at the end of this week, and a decision will then be taken with regard to the opening of the sealed chamber.

Meanwhile there is a considerable hubbub in the vernacular Press with regard to the Carnarvon-Times agreement. Regardless of whatever legal rights Lord Carnarvon may have, or of the fact that in his solicitude for Egypt he has provided that the Egyptian Press shall receive free of charge the information made available to the world's Press, a certain section of Egyptians is clamouring for the intervention of the Government, so as to compel Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter to give whatever information may become available first and directly at the tomb's mouth to the Egyptian Press. While this question has been seized upon as an ideal opportunity for embarrassing the Government, there is reason to believe, from the statement in a leading article in the Egyptian Gazette this week to the effect that some of the London papers have instructed their correspondents in Egypt to approach the Egyptian Government on the matter, that all this hubbub is to a large extent due to other considerations than those of the interests of Egypt.

The British Union in Egypt.

The British Union in Egypt held its annual meeting this last week. As was to be expected, the recent outrages, and particularly the mass meeting on January 2, were discussed. General Blakeney, who is taking a very active part in the organisation of the Self-Defence Committee, the formation of which was decided on at the mass meeting, gave some interesting details of the progress that had been made, and it was unanimously decided that the Chairman of the British Union should suggest to the High Commissioner that, with a view to promoting the interests of the British community, an advisory committee of non-official residents be convened by him to supply information as to the feelings of the community and its interests.

*Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

Apropos of the carrying of arms, a somewhat amusing incident arose the other day. A distinguished member of the Service was out walking with his wife in one of the busy thoroughfares of Cairo when the revolver which he was carrying in his pocket suddenly went off. In the twinkling of an eye every Egyptian in the street had disappeared, and the official's wife, who thought he had been attacked, made after two effendis whom she saw disappearing round the corner, and whom she suspected of being his assailants.

We all take our hats off to the gallant lady concerned, but the incident only shows what a salutary effect the activities of the Vigilance and Arms Committees of the British community will have on the whole population of Egypt, particularly the effendi and student class.

The Murder of Mr. Karam.

The sensational murder in Alexandria of Mr. Gabriel Karam continues to attract much attention. It appears that the crime was committed in particularly brutal circumstances. The murderers seem to have tried to chloroform Mr. Karam while he was sleeping. He evidently woke up during the process, and, to judge by the state of his room, a terrific fight ensued, in the course of which the murderers used a piece of iron with ghastly effect, and finished Mr. Karam off with a couple of revolver shots through the head. The remarkable feature about this crime is that, although the members of the household slept in adjoining rooms, none of them heard the struggle. The police are still occupied with the inquiry, which so far has not led to any definite results.

The Economic Council.

The Economic Council created to advise the Minister of Finance on economic and financial matters held its second meeting last week. At this meeting four sub-committees were nominated, viz., Finance, Agriculture, Commerce and Industry, and Political and Social Economy. Amongst the questions discussed at this meeting and referred to sub-committees were the regulations for the Cotton

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

& CO., LTD.

London, W.1.

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."
Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

Bourses, agricultural co-operation, and grain elevators.

There is certainly room for considerable improvement in the Cotton Bourse regulations, particularly in regard to the Contract Bourse, and the Economic Council would do well to press on with this work, so that new regulations may be available for the next season. As regards agricultural co-operation, a draft law for the control of agricultural syndicates exists. It was passed by the Legislative Assembly, but the outbreak of war prevented its promulgation. Egypt is just the country where the co-operative movement should flourish and should be of great benefit to the fellaheen, and the Council intends to deal with this question very exhaustively.

As regards grain elevators, although the proposal is not new in Egypt, this is the first time that official cognisance has been taken of it by the Government. The primitive manner in which the grain crops are handled and stored leads to very considerable loss, and there is no doubt that the introduction of these elevators, which have proved such a success in America and Canada, would be very beneficial to Egypt.

A Bon Mot.

A bon mot in conclusion. A high Egyptian official, who prides himself on his knowledge of English, was discussing the question of the retirement of the foreign officials with an English friend. The latter was at some pains to explain to him the reasons why service under the Egyptian Government was no longer either attractive to or congenial for foreign officials. At the conclusion of this explanation the high official exclaimed: "Ah, I see! rats leaving the stinking ship"; and he is still wondering why his friend chuckled at his remark.

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

YE OLDE FIGHTING COCKS, ST. ALBANS: Claimed to be the oldest inhabited house in England.

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 1.

Two minds with but a single thought
..... a cheery spirit.

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS, KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

BULGARIA.

Sofia, January 30.

New Agrarian Policy.

Since M. Stambolisky returned from Lausanne there has been a distinct change in the policy of his Government. The new policy is inclined to be anti-Bolshevist, and aims at better relations with the Great Powers.

The first step taken by M. Stambolisky was to dismiss the Sofia Prefect of Police and his assistant. These two officials were regarded as negligent in their duties, and had allowed the police to become demoralised. In addition, the Assistant Prefect was known to have been on very friendly terms with the Communists. Two ex-officers—General Tsenoff and Captain Seclunoff—have taken the place of the dismissed officials. The former is a well-known soldier, and has the reputation of being a strict disciplinarian. He is not an Agrarian, and his appointment is thus somewhat remarkable. By placing the Sofia police under the orders of officers the Government have rendered the position of Russian and Bulgarian Communists distinctly uncomfortable. The Prime Minister has openly declared that he intends to expel all Bolsheviks, with the exception of the members of M. Koreshkoff's Red Cross Mission, from Bulgaria.

Another sign that the Government wishes to enter into more friendly relations with the Great Powers is shown by the change that has recently marked the relations with the Inter-Allied Commission. During 1922 a kind of guarded hostility existed between the Government and the Commission. To-day the situation is much better, and it is understood that the Government will shortly put forward a new scheme concerning payment of reparations.

Lastly and most important, there are indications that the Agrarians are beginning to realise the need for enlisting in the service of the Government brains other than those of their own party. They have discovered that there is not so wide a gulf between themselves and certain members of the Opposition. But before any amalgamation can take place it is absolutely necessary that the question of the arrested Ministers should be dealt with.

The Arrested Ministers.

Five months have elapsed since the members of MM. Guechoff's, Daneff's, and Malinoff's Cabinets were put into prison. The ex-Ministers are at present in Shumen Prison, where, to state it mildly, their treatment is not what is usually meted out to political prisoners. The authorities are very vague as to when the trial of the ex-Ministers will take place, as the law which provides for their arraignment has not yet passed the Sobranje.

If M. Stambolisky and his followers wish to gain a reputation for tolerant dealings, they should first improve the conditions under which the ex-Ministers are living; secondly, they should accord them an early trial; and, thirdly, use all the influence they possess in order to secure as light a sentence as possible. This third proviso is, of course, dependent on the ex-Ministers being found guilty; but even at this stage little doubt exists as to what will be the verdict.

Dedeagatch.

At Lausanne, on January 27, the Allies made the following offer to Bulgaria: Bulgaria to receive a strip of territory three kilometres long and one kilometre broad. This territory to be between Dedeagatch and Makri. The Bulgarian Government will have the right to construct a port on this territory and collect taxes therefrom. An International Commission composed of one representative from Great Britain, France, Italy, Serbia, Roumania, Turkey, Greece, and Bulgaria respectively will assure the free passage of Bulgarian merchandise from Svilengrad to the Ægean Sea. This Commission will be paid out of the taxes received by Bulgaria from the new port. The Greek Government agrees not to hinder the free working of the port.

The Bulgarian Government formally refused the Allies' offer, pointing out that Article 48 of the Treaty of Neuilly remained unexecuted, and that the Allies still seem bent on excluding Bulgaria from the Ægean. The delegation also stated that Bulgaria could not admit Greece's right to Western Thrace. They said that their Government would not spend one lev on the construction of a port under the conditions contained in the Allies' offer.

Future events will in all probability prove that the Allies have been short-sighted in their attitude towards Bulgaria. The latter wish a real outlet, and regard with derision M. Venizelos's proposal that Bulgaria should have an economic outlet at Salonika. As the Yugoslavs have not been able to come to a working arrangement with the Greeks in regard to the latter port, there is not much likelihood that the Bulgarians will succeed.

Frontier Troubles.

A recrudescence of frontier trouble occurred during January. This time it is in Southern Dobruja that Bulgarian bands of komitaji are reported to have crossed the Roumanian frontier and committed excesses. Roumania protested to the Great Powers, and an unofficial démarche was made at Sofia. The Bulgarian reply is to deny absolutely the existence of the komitaji. M. Stambolisky has further declared that he desires to maintain good relations with Roumania. He has proposed that the chiefs of the Roumanian and Bulgarian Frontier Guards should meet together with a view to taking joint action in order finally to stamp out these noisome pests. The Roumanians have not agreed to this proposal, and in the meantime the matter has been forgotten, doubtless to be recalled on the first occasion that befits certain interested parties.

Turkey and Greece.

The refusal of Turkey to recognise the existence of any Bulgarians in Eastern Thrace has provoked a good deal of hostile criticism. In fact, Turkey has not got a good Press in Bulgaria. For the matter of that, however, no more has Greece, and the continued reports regarding the concentration of a large Greek army along the Maritza call forth much criticism. In these circumstances M. Stambolisky's oft-repeated declarations that Bulgaria will continue to preserve a strict neutrality between Turkey and Greece should be accepted as true. No doubt Turks are more popular in Bulgaria than Greeks, but there are many Bulgarians who see that Turkey in her present frame of mind cannot be an ally. The interests of the two countries clash in Western Thrace, and the attitude of the Turkish delegation at Lausanne has been anything but friendly to Bulgaria.

PERSIA.

Teheran, December 24.

The Return of the Shah.

The Shah arrived in Teheran last Sunday, the 17th instant, on his return from his Western trip, and met with a very enthusiastic reception. His Majesty landed at Bushire on November 29, and was met by the Minister of War, Sardar Sipah, who had gone there from Teheran. He then proceeded through Shiraz and Ispahan, at each of which places he stayed a few days to receive the local notables. This was His Majesty's first tour of the Southern cities of his Empire, and his reception by all classes must have been very gratifying. Great preparations had been made in Teheran, and the streets were gay with bunting, and several triumphal arches of welcome had been erected along the route to the palace. Outside the Bagh-i-Shah Gate His Majesty received his Ministers of State and the members of the Diplomatic Corps, among whom by far the most noticeable was the British Minister with his outriders in their red livery and his escort of Indian sowars. Troops lined the route as His Majesty drove to the Palace in an open State carriage, with the Minister of War riding on his right. Behind him drove the Valiahd (Crown Prince), also in an open carriage, and after him came the Prime Minister and other Ministers. In the evening the town was illuminated, and presented a pleasant contrast with its usually sombre aspect. The Shah was fortunate in arriving on a beautifully fine day, for the next day was a cheerless one of rain and sleet, and the streets as muddy and slushy as only Teheran streets can be. This caused the "Salaam" which was to have been held that day to be postponed until the following day.

The Minister of War apparently made the most of his trip through the south on his way to and from Bushire, and seems to have impressed everyone with his striking personality and his business-like methods.

January 3.

General News.

Dr. Millspaugh, the Administrator-General of the Finances, recently presented his report on the Northern Oil Concession to the Government, and strongly advised that it be granted to an American company without further delay. He and his advisers have been working assiduously since their arrival, and, having made themselves familiar with the different departments of the Ministry of Finance, they have taken over these from the former directors. Dr. Millspaugh has guaranteed the monthly Budget of the Ministry of War, amounting to tomans 750,000 (some £150,000) per mensem.

Momtaz ed Dowleh, the special envoy sent last year by the Persian Government to Angora, has left that place on his way back to Persia. Since the two Turkish parties have now been united into one Government, the Persian Ambassador at Constantinople, Mofakham ul Mulk, will represent Persia at the latter place.

During the last few days the Indian Post Offices in the Persian Gulf have been handed back to the Persian Government, after a conference attended by representatives of Great Britain, India, Irak, and Persia.

Two men have been arrested by the Roumanian authorities on a charge of forging Roumanian 500-lei notes (worth rather less than 10s. at present rates). One of the men, a Hungarian, had in his possession a large quantity of the notes, whilst the other is said to have declared that the headquarters of the forgers is in Hungary.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Position of Egypt.

The Manchester Guardian of January 30 contains an article on Egypt which is entitled "An Impossible Position." It begins by stating that when the independence of Egypt was proclaimed, the existence of martial law was forgotten, and it fears that martial law is likely to remain :—

It is said, and perhaps with truth, that feeling in Egypt is less excited to-day than it was a year ago. If that is so, it is a reason, not for further delay, but for prompt action while the calm still prevails. That sort of calm is apt to be delusive, and the fact that attacks on Englishmen are becoming increasingly common is an indication that danger is all the time not far off. Already these murders are cited as a reason against any weakening of our existing authority. We all know the practical effect of that kind of argument in a circle. We saw it in Ireland. We might spare it to Egypt.

It goes on to express the hope that, whatever the result of the Lausanne Conference, the British Government may find time at once to deal with the question of Egypt :—

Our present position in Egypt is obviously too precarious, too risky, and too indefensible to be long continued, and there can be no doubt that as soon as Parliament meets it will be strongly challenged, if not by the regular Liberal Opposition, which has shown none too great an interest in the matter, then by the more advanced and active members of the party, and undoubtedly also by the leaders of Labour. The Prime Minister, with so many other difficult problems on his hands, may naturally desire to throw back responsibility on to our representative in Egypt. But Lord Allenby is not a Cromer; he is a capable and energetic soldier who has been thrust into a diplomatic position. If we owe the declaration of Egyptian independence to his initiative, we also owe to him its almost complete futilisation. The home Government cannot shirk its ultimate responsibility. It would be folly to wait till "something happens" in Egypt. Yet, apart from a determined effort by the leaders of Liberal opinion in England, that seems just what is likely to happen. The longer we wait the more difficult the task may become, and it is not in Egypt alone that "something may happen."

And the possibility of a speedy and satisfactory settlement turns, it thinks, on the personality of Zaghloul Pasha, against whose confinement at Gibraltar it protests :—

But it is not enough to release Zaghlul from confinement; he ought to be allowed to return freely to his own country. Then at last we should have a chance of a real settlement in place of a sham one. A Constitution for Egypt is now under the consideration of the Egyptian Government and the High Commissioner, but, after all, it is the Egyptian people who will have to live under the Constitution and to work it. They ought also to be consulted, and there is no one who can speak for the Egyptian people as Zaghlul can. Alike in the drawing up of the Constitution and in the settlement of the terms of the Treaty between Egypt and Great Britain his help is not only needful; it may well be regarded as essential.

Articles to Note.

"Some New Developments of the Caliphate Question," by Professor D. S. Margoliouth; "The Straits—Before and After," by H. Charles Woods; and "The Women Poets of Greece," by F. A. Wright, in the Fortnightly Review (February).

"J. D. Bouchier: The Champion of Bulgaria," by A. C. Benson; and "An Educational Adventure in Bengal," in the Cornhill (February).

"Indian Thought and Christian Teaching," by Professor W. S. Urquhart, in the Contemporary Review (February).

NEWS IN BRIEF.

A Mohammedan University of Syria has been inaugurated at Damascus.

M. Kalergi, who recently succeeded M. Metaxas as Greek Minister in Rome, died on January 30.

A new Egyptian Order entitled the Order of Ismail, has been instituted in memory of the Khedive Ismail.

Abu Ghuneim, the notorious Palestine brigand, has been captured, and is now lodged in the Jerusalem gaol.

Bulgaria has decided to erect a monument in commemoration of an Unknown Soldier who fell in the Great War.

The Postmaster-General announces that postal packets, but not parcels, are again being accepted for transmission to Smyrna.

Mustaufi ul Mumalik, who has been recommended by the Persian Mejlis and approved by the Shah, is engaged in forming a Cabinet.

M. Cuneff, the Bulgarian Chargé d'Affaires in Athens, has been appointed Secretary to the Cabinet in Sofia. His post in Athens will remain vacant for the time being.

The Anglo-Bulgarian Mixed Arbitral Tribunal will meet at 21, St. James's Square, London, S.W., on Wednesday, February 21, and will sit daily until February 28.

According to the Palestine Weekly steps are being taken among the intellectual leaders of Haifa society to establish an international club there. A temporary committee has been formed of Moslems, Christians, and Jews.

Count Aldrovandi, the Italian Minister in Sofia, has been appointed to Bucharest. He will be succeeded by Commendatore Rinella Sabino, who has been holding an important post at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Rome.

Mr. Kingdon Ward, well known as a traveller and naturalist, has returned to Rangoon after a year of adventurous journeys in Yunnan and Tibet. He has traversed a new direct land route to China and India from Burma.

A Bulgarian named Theodoroff, who has been arrested at Bucharest, has confessed to being one of three komitajis who assassinated the Bulgarian War Minister, M. Dimitroff, while travelling in a motor-car from Sofia to Kustendil.

To relieve the destitution and sickness prevalent among the million and a-half refugees in Greece, who have fled from Asia Minor, the British Red Cross is asking for gifts of money and clothing. Thousands of British subjects are affected.

Official returns show that during December last 614 Jewish immigrants entered Palestine, and that the total number of such immigrants during the year 1922 was 7,844, viz., 3,285 men, 2,446 women, and 2,113 children. Since the ordinance regulating immigration according to the economic needs of the country was promulgated in September, 1920, the Jews who have entered Palestine under the auspices of the Zionist organisation or otherwise have numbered 20,658.

THE NEAR EAST INDEX.

The Index to Volume XXII. of THE NEAR EAST (July 6—December 28, 1922) is now ready, and copies will be sent to subscribers gratis on application to The Manager, THE NEAR EAST, 1, Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2.

Near East Bookshelf.

HIS MAJESTY'S MAILS.

"THE POST OFFICE OF INDIA IN THE GREAT WAR." Edited by Lt.-Col. H. A. Sams, C.I.E., I.C.S., Late Director of Postal Services, Mesopotamia Expeditionary Force. (Bombay: The Times Press. Rs. 8.)

It was a happy idea to compile an account of the activities of the Post Office of India in the Great War while records were still easy to find and memories were fresh. It was specially happy that the task was undertaken by Colonel Sams. He modestly says: "I cannot expect that this book will be read by the public generally." We do not think that "the public" quite deserves the implied slur on its intelligence, and are confident that it will be read with great interest by many outside the department. It is well to have such a vivid series of sketches of the amazing work done in circumstances of the extremest difficulty, and it is entirely delightful to note the modest tone of every one of the writers, who are unanimous in making little of their own achievements and in extolling the work of their subordinates. A truly fraternal and comrade-like spirit breathes through the book, a spirit which doubtless largely explains the excellence of what was done.

No fewer than twenty-one postal officers have contributed to the compilation, much of it being extracts from official diaries and much from official reports, from both of which the ordinary "official" tone is mercifully absent. If we had to select the three best of the joint-authors, we would choose the Editor, Capt. Owens, C.I.E., M.B.E., and Capt. Bickers. The Editor writes of Mesopotamia, as does Capt. Owens, while Capt. Bickers treats of the "hush-hush" expedition, which reached the Caspian and crossed to Baku. From Capt. Owens's chapter we take the following:—

It is surprising how the public, in spite of notifications and advertisements, still persist in addressing letters incompletely. Each mail brings numbers of letters simply addressed to I.E.F. "D," without any mention of the unit to which the addressee belongs. . . . Letters in every kind of vernacular are received for this Force, and, what is still more difficult, numbers of letters addressed in English by illiterate Indians. An example which needs no comment will give an idea of the kind of article one has to deal with: "In Basrah City in Basrah, Sahib Office must receive to Affizullah." Again, officers and men of certain regiments are attached to other units while their own regiments are with the Force, and frequently drafts are attached to different regiments at different times. . . . A mail has just arrived, and is being dealt with. The letters for officers reported to have been wounded and sent to hospital at Amara are picked out and enclosed in a bag for Amara. They have hardly left the base when a wire is received that the officers have been sent to the base hospital. By the time the letters are recalled the officers have gone to India without leaving any instructions. It is worse in the case of the men's letters. They are returned to the field post office serving the unit with the intimation that the addressees are not with the unit, and the post office has then to do what it can to trace the addressee. Considering that the average time taken by a boat to make the round trip is fourteen days, the difficulty in dealing with correspondence for men who are detached from their units may be better imagined than described. . . . The climate of Mesopotamia is not the healthiest in the world, and the conditions under which the work is done are not ideal. Mail steamers generally come in the evening, and after a day of hard work the staff has to begin afresh to sort inward mails, at which they are busy throughout the night, so as to effect a delivery in Basrah the first thing in the morning, and to have the mails ready for despatch up-river by the first boat. The men are tired out, and working sometimes 50 per cent. below normal strength on account of sickness. . . . Hundreds and thousands of letters are dealt with under the most trying circumstances and very often by new drafts from India. Is it surprising that occasionally a letter for an officer who is detached from his unit slips through in the unit bag? In France such a mistake would scarcely be noticed, as the letter would get back to the base in a day or two; but out here it means a delay of fifteen to eighteen days, and, very naturally, the addressee complains of the "disgraceful arrangements at the base."

We hope that the reader appreciates the modesty of the writer and the appreciation of the "very natural" feelings of the unfortunate victim of a more than pardonable slip.

Captain Bickers is very entertaining on many subjects, and not least so on the subject of the gain sought to be made by some out of the wild and erratic "exchange," which forced the Post Office to curtail money order facilities. A certain very senior officer in Baku did, however, get special permission to send £500 in one week, "saying it was intended for his wife in America, who had not received the allotment he had made for her during several months, owing to some communication having failed to reach his bankers. Responsibility for this failure was attributed entirely to the field post office. A week later he was married in Baku! Let the reader speculate, if he cares, as to whether the officer was given to artistic prevarication or merely suffered from super-uxoriousness." *

One of the writers conjures up a realistic picture of a Christmas pudding enclosed in a cardboard box on which some sixty tons had lain, and another lively sketch is of an irate senior officer whose parcel containing a valuable set of artificial teeth had been robbed by brigands on the way. The book is, indeed, full of plums. The authors would lay no claim to being "men of letters," except in their own sense of the term, but their united efforts make a wonderful story, of which not only the Indian Post Office but every Indian and Briton may well be proud.

Alas! the Indian Post Office staff was, no more

THE PEAKS OF SHALA (ALBANIA)

By ROSE WILDER LANE. Demy
8vo. Illustrated. 12/6 net.

"In Mrs. Lane's pages one sees the most picturesque and unsophisticated people now left in Europe, remarkable for a primitive happiness, courtesy, and a sense of honour rare among peoples who call themselves more civilized."—Nation.

"Mrs. Lane entered into the spirit of this sort of adventure and enjoyed it—indeed, the only alternative to enjoying it must have been being frightened to death.... It is because it has been written quickly, under the influence of one mood and with all the impressions still vivid in the mind, that it makes good reading."—The Times.

Prospectus on application.

CHAPMAN AND DODD, LTD.,
66, Great Queen Street - - W.C.2.

than others engaged in the great struggle, exempt from sad thinnings of the ranks, and it often seemed as if the best were being taken. This book is their memorial. C. S.-W.

"THE BALKANS."

"THE BALKANS: ROUMANIA, BULGARIA, SERBIA, AND MONTE-NEGRO." By William Miller, M.A., LL.D. (London: T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd. 7s. 6d.)

Neither Mr. Miller nor a new edition of his history of these four Balkan States will require any introduction to students of the Near East. Since its first publication in 1896, the book has been recognised as a work of authority, and the addition of a supplementary section carrying it on to 1922 will be welcomed by all his readers.

Probably the most interesting point in the new portion of the book is the author's estimate of the possible results of the gains and losses of the four countries (with Albania, five) with which he is concerned.

Roumania has attained to "the union of all the branches of the nation," the kingdom of Michael the Brave in 1600, and she has attained to this with fewer sacrifices than any of the Balkan peoples.

Bulgaria, under the Treaty of Neuilly, has sunk to lowest place in the Balkans except Albania, and a conflict between Greece and Turkey in Thrace would afford her an opportunity of recovering the much-coveted outlet to the Ægean. She is the most formidable obstacle to the resurrection of the Balkan League which the stupidity of the Young Turk party brought into being in 1911.

Montenegro, having fulfilled her destiny as the one centre of freedom in the Balkans for five hundred years, is absorbed in Yugoslavia, whose ties with England have never been closer. Whether or not the present centralised government is preferable to a confederacy, the tendency will be for the Serbs to come under Western influences, rather than for the Croats and Slovenes to become Balkanised.

The independence of Albania, the only Moslem Balkan State, is an "interesting experiment," and doubts are expressed as to its success.

Such is Mr. Miller's summing up of the results of the last twenty-five years of Balkan history. Here, as in all the chapters that lead up from the beginnings of history in the Near East to the date of the first publication of his book, he proves a capable and interesting mentor, though it is to be feared that the Balkan Confederation, of which M. Tricoupis dreamed and Mr. Miller writes, is as far from attainment as ever. J. H. B.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"Musical Competition Festivals." By Ernest Fowles. (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner and Co., Ltd. 4s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 3d.)

"Sylvia Revolts." By Winifred Carter. (London: Winifred Carter. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 4d.)

"The Turkish Empire." From 1288 to 1914. By Lord Eversley. And from 1914 to 1922. By Sir Valentine Chirol. With a Frontispiece and Three Maps. Second Edition. (London: T. Fisher Unwin, Ltd. 21s. net. Postage abroad, 9d.)

EGYPTIAN (ARABIC) SELF-TAUGHT

A most useful book for visitors to Egypt.

Containing:
Travel Talk.	Classified Vocabulary.	Aviation.
Railway.	Conversations.	Photography.
Steamboat.	Simple and Practical Phrases.	Pronunciation.
Motoring.	Naval and Military Terms.	Grammar.
Cycling.	Officials' Ranks and Titles.	Money, etc.
Hotel.	Amusements.	Illustration of Coinage.

Red Cloth, 4s. net; Blue Wrapper, 3s. net. Postage, 3d. extra.
Sold by all BOOKSELLERS. Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.
London: E. MARLBOROUGH & Co., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

IN TUTANKHAMEN'S DAY.

The name of Tutankhamen was sufficient to draw a large crowd to Burlington House, London, on Friday, when Dr. H. R. Hall, Hon. Sec. of the Egypt Exploration Society, delivered a lecture describing the world as it was known to the Egyptians in Tutankhamen's time. The address was copiously illustrated with lantern slides, and dealt with Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Babylonia, Anatolia, Cyprus, Crete, and Greece.

A matter of great interest to Egyptologists, said the lecturer, was the fact that Lord Carnarvon's discovery belonged to the same age as the houses which the Egypt Exploration Society was endeavouring to excavate at El Amarna, the city built by the heretical King Akhenaten. Akhenaten forsook the gods of Egypt to become the monotheistic worshipper of the sun. He was also a pacifist, and abandoned the conquests which his predecessors had made in Western Asia. He was the father-in-law of Tutankhamen. Among other objects discovered in the city he founded were some cuneiform tablets. Cuneiform, apparently, was the ordinary means of diplomatic correspondence at the time, and these tablets were full of reports of generals in Palestine complaining of the king's not sending them reinforcements, and of protests of local princes, saying they had jeopardised their all in the service of Egypt, and were now being abandoned. A good deal of the disturbance in Palestine at the time was probably due to the entry of the Hebrews into that country. Apparently they had left Egypt two centuries earlier.

Little was known, the lecturer said, about Babylonia just at this period, but most interesting facts were being discovered about the Hittites, whose chief city was Carchemish, and who inhabited what is now Anatolia. Contemporary with Akhenaten was Shubuiluliuma, the Hittite Bismarck, who by war and policy contrived to bring most of the Syrian peoples under his rule. Sculptures found in Egypt and others in Anatolia showed us the peculiar type of the Hittite face; and this was still found among the Turks to-day. Then, as now, many languages were spoken in Asia Minor, but the official language of the Hittites was probably closely connected with Latin. If this was the fact, it lent colour to the legend in Herodotus about early connections between the people of Asia Minor and the Etruscans. The Hittite writing was quite different from that of the Egyptians or Minoans.

Of the last-named people the lecturer said the later Greeks regarded them as their heroes, and, as we went on, we found there was always a basis of fact in the legends. There was something in the legend of the Minotaur, and very much in the legend of the Trojan war. Cyprus was colonised about the time of Tutankhamen by a colony from the Ægean. It had a peculiar civilisation of its own, very little influenced by that of Crete. Among the articles found there were some in coloured faience. Exactly similar things had been discovered in Assyria. They might be Assyrian work, but it was more probable that they were Cypriote work exported to Assyria.

A feature to which the lecturer called attention in the slides was the smallness of the waists of the Minoans. Egyptian and Minoan sculptures both showed this, and it was a national characteristic to this day; the Cretan dandy still laced himself in as tightly as he could. There was the greatest possible contrast between Egyptian and Minoan art; for about the latter there was a characteristic freedom and what might be called modernity entirely different from anything in the art of Egypt. The Egyptian artist was always very accurate, and his work full of detail, but the Minoan could sketch. There were scholars who talked about the differences between the early culture of the Greeks and that of the classical period, but to those who knew Egypt and Assyria it was the resemblance of the earlier and later Greek art that was so extraordinarily striking. The Minoans were probably more artistic and certainly more æsthetic than the Egyptians.

The lecturer showed a number of slides illustrating the Minoan art. Of one representing a diving boy, he said that it challenged anything done either in ancient Greece or in modern times.

THE ARAB HORSE SOCIETY.

A Council meeting of the Arab Horse Society was held at the Grosvenor Hotel, London, on January 23, when the following new members were elected:—H.H. Prince Abdul Mejid, Galata, Constantinople; R. Buckley-Jones, Toureen, Toureen Wood, Cahir, Co. Tipperary; James Cullen, 44, Elgin Drive, Wallasey, Cheshire; A. M. Fawcett, M.C., United Service Club, Pall Mall, London; Capt. J. D. Gouldsmith, Ridley House, Kingsweir, S. Devon; Joseph Ellis Hurlley, 34, Rutland Road, Harrogate; Col. T. G. Peacocke, C.I.E., C.V.O., Lumville House, The Curragh, Co. Kildare. The Council co-opted Major C. B. Toms to fill a vacancy on the Council.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

February 8 (New Style).
January 26 (Old Style).
Gumada II. 22, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.
Shebat 22, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir George Rhodes has arrived in Cairo from the Riviera.

The Earl of Ronaldshay has left London for Berkshire.

Lord Claud Hamilton and Lord and Lady Decies arrived at Cairo last week.

Dr. Einstein and his wife are now in Jerusalem as the guests of Sir Herbert Samuel.

Marquis Curzon of Kedleston has returned to 1, Carlton House Terrace from Lausanne.

Lord and Lady Lamington, who have arrived at Malta, will remain abroad until the middle of the month.

Mr. Francis FitzGerald, C.B.E., chairman of the Anglo-Belgian Company of Egypt, Ltd., has left London for Cairo.

General Sir Reginald and Lady Wingate are staying for the next few weeks at Queen Anne's Mansions, St. James's Park.

Rangoon University has conferred an honorary degree on Sir R. Craddock, the former Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, in recognition of his services to education.

Mr. F. E. Peet, Professor of Egyptology in the University of Liverpool, has been elected to the Laycock Studentship in Egyptology at Worcester College, Oxford.

Sir William Geary has presented to the Indian Assembly library between sixty and seventy volumes of Parliamentary Proceedings of Lords and Commons in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Professor A. J. Toynbee, M.A., delivered an address on "Bi-Nationalism in the Near and Middle East" to members of the Anglo-Palestinian Club at Jews' College on February 4. Mr. L. J. Stein presided.

Prince Lotfallah gave a luncheon party at the Ritz Hotel on January 29, at which the guests included General Sir Reginald Wingate and Lady Wingate and Surgeon-General Sir Arthur Sloggett and Lady Sloggett.

Under the auspices of the Central Asian Society, Major A. L. Holt, M.B.E., M.C., R.E., will lecture upon "Some Journeys in the Syrian Desert" on February 22, at 5 p.m., at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, S.W.

APARTMENTS.

QUIET SEASIDE RESORT.—Apartments or furnished. BRONAUULT, Nevin, N. Wales.

Sir Alexander McRobert, K.B.E., LL.D., of Douneside, Tarland, Aberdeen, and of Cawnpore, India, chairman of the British India Corporation, left property in Scotland valued at £91,712 and property in England valued at £172,840.

Professor Flinders Petrie is delivering his lecture on "Royal Burials in Egypt" for the third time on Saturday, February 10, at 3 p.m., at the Kingsway Hall. Part of the proceeds are to be devoted to the British School of Archaeology in Egypt.

Mrs. James Mitchell was "at home" on January 29 at 46, Mount Street, when members of the committee of the dance to be given at Chesham House, on February 13, in aid of Russian refugees in the Near East, and a large number of supporters were present.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Granby left London on February 1 to join the Caledonia at Marseilles for Egypt, and will be away till the end of March. The Hon. Mervyn and Mrs. Herbert were also passengers for Port Said, and Lady Pinhey for Bombay.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN.

HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (CLYMENPOULOU) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October.

Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate

Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.

Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1923.

TURKEY'S REFUSAL.

Judged by their own standards, the Turks have done a very smart thing in refusing to sign the Treaty presented to them by the Allies at Lausanne. On the eve of the presentation of the document to the Turkish delegates the French Prime Minister contrived at one and the same time to urge the Angora Government to sign the Treaty and to let it know that, if it did not, France was ready, apart from her Allies, to sign a separate treaty with Turkey. In the matter of playing one party off against another the Turks have nothing to learn. M. Poincaré's opening seemed too good to be missed. Up to that point their main objections to the Treaty had centred in certain clauses of special interest to Great Britain. These were at once conceded, and France was taken at her Prime Minister's word. If the French were so eager to make peace, let them abate some of the terms on which they were laying special stress. Accordingly the British delegation were given to understand that they could have a separate treaty with the Turks, embodying the points on which they were specially interested; but the Allies as a whole were informed that the Turks refused to accept certain conditions intended to take the place of the Capitulations and certain economic clauses. From the Turkish point of view it was a shrewd move, but the Turks reckoned without their host. On the analogy of M. Poincaré's action in dealing direct with the Angora Government behind Great Britain's back, and in announcing that France reserved to herself the right to make a separate treaty with Turkey in the event of the failure of the Lausanne Conference, it was legitimate for the Turks to expect that the British Government, confronted with the opportunity of doing likewise, would immediately seize it. Both Turkey and France, however, have to learn that Great Britain does not do these things. Lord Curzon ignored the Turkish overture, and left Lausanne, as he had previously announced his intention of doing, the same evening. In justice to the Turks, it may be assumed that they were surprised at the failure of what must have seemed to them an ingenious ruse. As a matter of policy, they have to regard solidarity amongst the Allies, in particular at the present time between Great Britain and France, in the light of an embarrassment, if not of a possible menace. What more natural, therefore, than to avail themselves of the weapon placed in their hands by the French in order to drive a wedge between the Allies?

It would be premature at this moment to write failure over the Treaty negotiations. We do not pretend that they have proceeded as we could have wished, but circumstances may well have prevented their taking any other course. To all who are acquainted with the Turks it was evident that as soon as the Allies presented a claim, or indicated a particular point of view, and allowed the Turks to understand that the subject was one on which a compromise might be made, there would be no limit to the concessions that the Allies would be called upon to make. Turkish powers of bargaining suffered no eclipse at Lausanne. They exhausted British patience, however, and have now a free field with the French alone, who have been jockeyed into a false position by M. Poincaré's ill-advised message to Mustapha Kemal Pasha. Unless Angora is bent on national suicide, it will be content with a mild triumph over France. A slight modification of one or more of the challenged clauses will "save face" all round; an assurance from France, as more particularly interested in the clauses in question, that the modification is immaterial will enable Great Britain to sign the Treaty, and the peace which no one—not even the Turks—wishes to have disturbed will be more firmly established. It is to be hoped, indeed, that such will be the course of events. So far there has been little inclination in England to take the Turkish gesture seriously. Danger may always be lurking behind the incalculable; but until it has disclosed itself, the only sensible attitude to adopt is one of non-committal expectancy.

The chief sufferers from Turkish tactics at Lausanne are the Turks themselves. When the Conference opened they had it in their power to achieve a wonderful triumph for their country by showing that, in keeping with their protestations, new Turkey had indeed cast off the trammels of Orientalism and was anxious to prove herself, by her aptitude to learn, a worthy accession—in contradistinction to old Turkey—to the comity of nations. The Allies had given ample evidence of their desire to accord her the most favourable treatment compatible with her peaceful development. The aim they had in view was to enable Turkey to become a single consolidated State, enjoying the goodwill of the Powers of Europe, and linked with them in friendly intercourse on equal terms. It was useless to expect that these Powers should credit Turkey with the actual possession of more than that of which they had ocular demonstration. Her good intentions they did not challenge; but they asked for time to satisfy themselves of the stability of the new order. Any implication of backwardness in the judicial sphere, or in knowledge of economics, that may have escaped the Allies has been more than confirmed by Mustapha Kemal Pasha himself in elaborating the points on which new Turkey must needs concentrate her attention. But while Turkey, in a sober mood, was admitting her shortcomings to the world, her delegates in the council chamber at Lausanne refused to adopt any other attitude than that everything was perfect and up-to-date in their country. The great opportunity has been missed. When, finally, the Treaty is signed, the Turks, as Lord Curzon promised them, can have, if they wish, the friendship and assistance of Great Britain: but it may take them a long time to live down the unfavourable impressions created by their tactics at Lausanne. The Allies met them openly in a conscientious attempt to explore every avenue for a satisfactory and practical settlement. The only response made by the Turks was to regard Allied candour as an exhibition of weakness, and to oppose to it every device of subterfuge and prevarication known to Oriental diplomacy. The shock over Turkey's folly is greatest for those who have believed and have constantly urged that there was something in new Turkey which differentiated it from the old. If the Nationalist Turks are capable of any improvement upon their predecessors, they were careful to disguise the fact at the Conference.

MOSUL, IRAK AND TURKEY.

It might be thought that after Lord Curzon's exhaustive statement at Lausanne there was nothing more to be said as to the future of Mosul. He summed up the juridical and treaty basis of the British position in regard to Irak, including the Mosul vilayet, and showed that the British Government is bound by its pledges to the Arab people, to King Faisal, and to the League of Nations, to resist the Turkish demand for the separation of Mosul from Irak. In elaborating the nature of these pledges, Lord Curzon referred to the steps that had been taken to gauge the sentiments of the Irakis. Ismet Pasha had said that the people of Irak and of the Mosul vilayet had not had a fair opportunity to express their views. Lord Curzon challenged this statement, and, summarising the results of the sounding of public opinion that had taken place, spoke of the desire that the Mosul vilayet should not be separated from Irak. In the report of his speech that has been published in this country he is not made to say that the inhabitants of the Mosul vilayet were agreed on this point. He gave the general result of the "referendum" to the whole of Irak. A contemporary has made great play of what are termed "Lord Curzon's Inexactitudes." The replies elicited from the Mosul vilayet on the occasion in question are cited, and it is stated that there was not a single reply that union with Baghdad and Basrah was desired. If this was so, it is inconceivable that the British representative at Lausanne should have said the very opposite, and anyone reading the speech as reported will see that even the telegraphic précis shows that Lord Curzon was referring to the people of Irak as a whole, and not to the response of the Mosul vilayet alone. It might also have been thought inconceivable that any responsible British publication, in the face of the serious issues involved, when so much is dependent on Turkey's ready acceptance of the Allies' terms, should have lightly alleged, on the strength of careless reading, that Great Britain was being committed "to support of a case resting on a series of falsehoods." This is not the time for vituperation, for raking up old feuds, or for reviving the controversy over rival methods of administering Irak. The future relations of Great Britain and Irak can come up for discussion at a later period. (The position to-day is that Great Britain has accepted a mandate over the country, has signed a treaty with the Irak Government, and is committed to defend the integrity of Irak's existing boundaries.) In these circumstances there can be but one attitude towards Turkish designs upon Irak on the part of those who set any store on national honour. If it is contended that Great Britain has embarked on an entirely wrong policy, the time has gone by for arguing the case on the old data that did duty when only Great Britain and the Irakis were concerned. If another policy is the right one, and is held to be the only one consonant with the interests of all concerned, the arguments in favour of it will be just as valid and far more potent when peace has been established between Turkey, Great Britain, and Irak.

With the exception of one obvious slip of the tongue, the British case was stated by Lord Curzon, as was to be expected, with studied moderation. In 1919 replies on the subject of an Arab King, he admitted, were divided, and "at the moment nothing could be done on that point." The question of a single Arab ruler, however, was solved in 1921 by the election of the Emir Faisal. Lord Curzon spoke of the election being "unanimous." It was not actually unanimous, although the majority in King Faisal's favour was overwhelming. The mistake was not material, and does not affect the issue, which is that Great Britain cannot consent to the transfer of Mosul to the Turks, because she is pledged to Irak, as well as to the League of Nations, not to surrender any Irakian territory. It is, no doubt, easy to belittle the attempt to gauge Arab public opinion as a "fake." No one in their senses would imagine that a referendum was possible—or would set about taking one—in Irak on the lines that would be required in Great Britain. The Arabs are not quite ready for the millennium. If their country had had to wait until the people were unanimous on any given point, it would have waited for ever; if the then British Administration had sought to perpetuate itself, there would have been a real, not fictitious, demand in Great Britain for evacuation, and Irak would have been given over to internecine strife, which would gradually have embroiled the whole of the Middle East. A rough-and-ready method of providing the country with a tolerable régime was adopted; both method and régime may leave something to be desired, but the latter, at least, offers a foundation for the ultimate erection of a satisfactory edifice. "The greatest good of the greatest number" is a recognised principle of modern statecraft, and the only reason for challenging its application to Irak would seem to be that it invalidates in this particular instance the pet theories of a few individuals.

It is admitted that the whole question of Irak calls for reconsideration at this time. The British Cabinet is committed to such reconsideration, and Sir Percy Cox, the High Commissioner, has been summoned to England for the very purpose. The good sense of the people of Great Britain prompts them to leave the matter confidently for the time being in the hands of the authorities, in order that these may have a chance of solving the problem in the light of new conditions. Opposition to this course is confined to a small section of the community which reckons little of national pledges or of national interests, but imagines that commitments by one country in regard to another can be repudiated with as little concern as a tenement family changes its dwelling on quarter-day. Those who lack a sense of proportion should not meddle with Imperial affairs. Irak has to set its house in order, and for this purpose British and Arab co-operation is essential; there is no room for those who are trying to complicate the situation by gratuitously giving to the Turks a handle for interference.

The main obstacle to a satisfactory reduction of British expenditure in Irak has been the delay in negotiating peace with Turkey. For this the Arabs are in no way to blame. So long as Great Britain and, therefore, Irak are nominally at war with the Turks, with the northern frontier of Irak the most vulnerable point, British military strength in the country has had to be maintained at a certain standard. The contention that there could be in such circumstances a withdrawal from Irak is too contemptible for serious consideration. Even if the question of Mosul had been the only one that prevented the signing of peace at Lausanne, there could be no giving way on this point on Great Britain's part. But there is no ground for supposing that Turkish intransigence was restricted to the question of Mosul. The Allies are confronted with a Turkey frankly hostile to Europe, which will seize upon one point or another, according to the advantage that is offered, for persisting in its unaccommodating spirit until it decides that the moment for yielding has come. Mos-seemed to offer for the time being a tactical vantage ground for the Turkish delegation, as it was a subject in which Great Britain's Allies had little or no interest. In support of the Turks' claim, they strained the National Pact with an interpretation that it cannot bear. The British reply might with effect have laid more stress on this point than on the inaccurate statements with which the Turks tried to support their case. Article I. of the Pact contemplates the separation from Turkey of territory "populated exclusively by an Arab majority, and which, on the conclusion of the Armistice of October 30, 1918, were in the occupation of enemy forces," but stipulates that only such parts as are "inhabited by an Ottoman Moslem majority, united in religion, in race and in aim, imbued with sentiments of mutual respect for each other and of sacrifice, and wholly respectful of each other's racial and social rights and surrounding conditions," should form an undivided and indivisible Turkey. Now Ismet Pasha may have been able to argue to his own satisfaction that the Kurds are Turks, but he would have been forced to smile for the second time during the Conference if he had had to contend that the Kurds are united in aim with the Turks, imbued with sentiments of mutual respect, and wholly respectful of each other's racial and social rights. Even as things are, there would seem to be no reason to despair that Angora will, in the end, sufficiently recover its sense of humour or fatalism to reconcile itself to the retention of Mosul by Irak.

When this stage is reached Irak will be in a position to grapple, with some chance of success, with its economic problem. Financial equilibrium is out of the question this year; there are too many inherited charges to be met. Reductions have been begun, and it is expected that in the 1923-24 Budget revenue and expenditure will balance. In any case, Great Britain will not ask the impossible of the new Arab Government, and will be content, in the place of miracles, with a reasonable spirit and a genuine effort towards political development and material progress.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A BULGARIAN OUTLET.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—The proposals made at Lausanne for providing Bulgaria with the promised outlet on the Ægean are, in our opinion, totally inadequate; and we regret that British support of Greek pretensions has once again closed the door on the prospect of reconciliation in the Balkans. It must be obvious to all who have had personal experience of Balkan conditions that an outlet through Greek territory, under any conditions whatever, would be a thoroughly unsatisfactory solution.

We believe that the establishment of a buffer State in Western Thrace, under the supervision of the League of Nations, would be the most effective means of ensuring peace between the three States concerned. Failing that, a corridor to the Ægean under the sovereignty of Bulgaria is the least which that country can fairly be expected to accept.—We are, etc.,

EDWARD GLEICHEN,
E. N. BENNETT,
AUBREY HERBERT,
J. RAMSAY MACDONALD,
ARTHUR MOORE,
R. W. SETON-WATSON,
LELAND BUXTON.

The Near and Middle East Association,
7, St. James's Terrace, N.W.8,
January 5.

BULGARIA AND LAUSANNE.

The following letter was sent by the Bulgarian Delegation at Lausanne, on January 30, to the Presidents of the British, Italian, and French Delegations:—

The Bulgarian Delegation, learning with deep regret that the proposed Draft Treaty drawn up by the Conference surrenders Western Thrace to Greece, have the painful duty of drawing attention to the following facts:—

1. By this decision, which three years after the signing of the Treaty of Neuilly places this former Bulgarian province under Greek sovereignty, Bulgaria finds her position altered for the worse, though her attitude has given no grounds whatsoever for this new token of resentment.
2. The attribution of Western Thrace to Greece is not justified either from the ethnical point of view, or by geographical and economical considerations.
3. In spite of the principle of self-determination of nations, proclaimed during the War, the Conference has not deemed necessary to take into account the will and the expressed feelings of the oppressed populations of Thrace.
4. In all preceding and similar cases, the solution granted to the difficult situation created by the claims of various States over contested regions has always been different from the one which is being applied to Western Thrace to-day. It is thus that Upper Silesia has been divided according to the principle of nationalities and the region of Teschen in virtue of economic principles.
5. The Treaty of Sèvres, having been admitted both unjust and impossible to fulfil, has been revised, with the exception of the articles closely affecting Bulgaria's interests.
6. As the Bulgarian Delegation have had the honour of stating in their last declaration, the proposed settlement entirely prevents the fulfilment of Art. 48 of the Treaty of Neuilly.

It is with the greatest consternation that the Bulgarian people will learn that once again they are subject to much more severe treatment than any other defeated nation.

Nevertheless, addicted to the noble work of reconstruction, and having substituted the plough-share for the sword, the Bulgarian people will not allow themselves to be discouraged by this fresh disappointment. They will pursue their policy of peace and order. But, at the same time, they will retain the conviction that the generous ideas glorified during and after the Great War were never to be applied to their country, and that its moral, national and economic interests remain disregarded and sacrificed.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

Towards a Settlement?

We in Great Britain, apart from our sympathy for France, have a very special interest in the successful issue of our Ally's adventure in the Ruhr, since it offers possibly the only way out of the terribly hard bargain that we have had to agree to over our American debt. If France succeeds it will mean an appreciable reduction of taxation in this country, since the extraction of reparations from Germany will mean in effect that she has taken over our debt to America. But it would, perhaps, be well not to have any undue confidence on this score. So far, at any rate, there has been nothing to justify the view that France's plan will lead to an easy settlement. More plausible, indeed, is the conclusion that it may result in the temporary annexation of the Ruhr district "faute de mieux," a course which may benefit France for the time being, but will certainly not help us. Nothing may have been further from France's intention, but the course of events may be too strong. The fact that further advances have been found to be necessary suggests beyond question that developments have not been as expected. Meanwhile, industry in this country stands and waits in the devout hope that the ultimate issue will be a settlement which will at length permit trade to follow its accustomed channels. I am not, of course, oblivious of the fact that the occupation of the Ruhr has done much for British industry by bringing orders that would have gone to Germany, but he would be very short-sighted who could find entire satisfaction in that fact. There can be no real trade revival until every country is in a position to play its part, for, regrettable as it may be, we are all dependent one on another, and unemployment here will not be a thing of the past until reconstruction is complete.

The Lausanne Disappointment.

While no speedy outcome of the European impasse could reasonably be looked forward to, there were strong grounds for hope that, despite the seeming intractability of the Turks, Lausanne would result in a settlement. However, as in the case of Reparations, we have been doomed to disappointment, for the time being at any rate. The rock on which the Conference broke up—the question of the Capitulations—has been described in some sections of the Press as a very minor issue from our point of view, but those who take that attitude have evidently not troubled to acquaint themselves with the opinion of the business community—that extensive section of it, that is, which has been concerned in the Turkish trade. If they had they would have learnt that, so far from it being a negligible matter, it is a vital issue for the future of our trade endeavour. On this question, it may be added, the Allies went far in concessions, much farther, indeed, than could reasonably have been expected, but all to no avail, and superficially we are back at the position where we were before the Conference started. Actually, however, there are very substantial grounds for thinking that the attitude of the Turks does an injustice to their desires, and that in reality they are very anxious to sign the peace.

Jaffa Oranges.

The present season has been anything but a good one for the Jaffa orange growers, whose produce has been realising relatively poor prices as a result of competition from other quarters and to some extent, it is stated, to the rather indifferent condition of the fruit. The consequence has been considerable distress in the fruit district. Like so many other similar industries, the Jaffa orange trade has been deprived of remunerative markets by the conditions obtaining in Europe, but, on the other hand, orange growing has been, and is being, developed on an extensive scale elsewhere, and even when Jaffa has full access to its former markets the growers cannot expect to enjoy the conditions of pre-war days. The only way in which a reasonable return can be ensured is to see that the fruit reaches its destinations in the best possible condition, and the growers would be well-advised to concentrate on this aspect.

Prospects in Palestine.

There has been a tendency in some quarters to believe that Palestine is capable of remarkable development within a very short space of time. No one familiar with the country questions its potentialities, but it is sufficiently obvious that Palestine does not present the case of a region where the land only needs to be touched "to laugh with a crop." On the contrary, very hard work will be required if the land is to yield what is in it. The illuminating Consular report of Mr. Southard, formerly American Consul at Jerusalem—lengthy extracts from which are given in another column—is to be welcomed as a corrective of mistaken ideas on the subject. In his very thorough survey of the country he holds out no undue hopes of economic progress; he lays stress on the point that Palestine's position offers no prospects of industrial expansion on European lines, and points out that

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON. E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

agriculture is the country's main resource. As he shows, the scope for development in this direction is both varied and considerable, holding out the prospect of not a few important industries. As we know, much has already been accomplished, and, provided that there is freedom from political anxieties, there is no reason why within a comparatively short period the country should not advance within a measurable distance of a considerable degree of prosperity.

London County Westminster and Parr's.

At the general meeting of this bank Mr. Walter Leaf dealt with the general trade position, and pointed out that the immediate problem of unemployment depended on the prospect of an early improvement in trade and industry. He does not view the position in Europe with any degree of confidence. It was clearly impossible, he declared, to hope for any great revival of trade from any of our old customers in Central Europe, whose recovery was entirely bound up with that of Germany. He touched on the position in Russia, China, and India, and said that, in spite of the adverse conditions, there were definite signs of a strong trade revival, which was already doing something to diminish unemployment here, and seemed likely before long to do a great deal more.

Absorption of Cox's.

The interesting announcement was made yesterday that the business of Messrs. Cox and Co., the famous Army bankers, has been acquired by Lloyds Bank. Cox and Co., which dates from 1758, recently, it will be remembered, acquired the business of Messrs. H. S. King and Company. During the war the expansion of Messrs. Cox and Co.'s business was enormous, and it is generally understood that they have been successful in retaining a very considerable proportion of it. As a result of the amalgamation interesting developments on the part of Lloyds Bank overseas would not come as a surprise.

COMMENTATOR.

The Egyptian Customs receipts from April 1 to January 11 amounted to £E8,389,867.

During the last few weeks of 1922 over 100 motor-cars were imported into Palestine.

Roumanian Consolidated Oilfields.—The transfer books of the ordinary shares are closed until and including February 15.

Spain, France, and Japan were represented at a congress held recently at Marrakesh to consider methods for the improvement of the cultivation of the olive in Morocco.

A company has been established at Beyrout by Messrs. Fathallah Kederchah and Sarkis Hg. Djanian under the title F. Kederchah and S. Hg. Djanian, which will undertake commission business, representation, trade, and insurance.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL	- - - - -	Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES	- - - - -	12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS	- - - - -	273,629,395.47

(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.

Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL - 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI. Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

PALESTINE'S COMMERCIAL RESOURCES.

Importance of Agriculture.

Mr. Addison E. Southard, American Consul at Jerusalem, has followed up his admirable report on Abyssinia with a very comprehensive and valuable survey of the commercial resources of Palestine. In a brochure of 64 pages he covers every aspect of the economic life of the country, and has much of importance to say on such subjects as port development, the utilisation of hydro-electric resources, irrigation, banking, and methods of entering the market. In view of the outstanding importance of the subject at the present time, we propose to quote in extenso from the work. Mr. Southard commences with a warning against an exaggerated view of the country:—

Palestine is a small country without demonstrated natural resources of any particular importance. Its population is small and will not for some years possess any considerable purchasing power. Within its own limits it will produce or consume little as compared with the average world political or commercial unit. Its greatest contribution to international commerce will be as an entrepôt between the important Western and Eastern markets. With improved communication assured, it will command the trade of some millions of people in Northern Arabia; of that wonderful grain district south of Damascus and known as the Hauran; and of other parts of Southern Syria shut off by the Lebanon from the Syrian port of Beyrout, which include Damascus and its rich caravan trade extending even further into the districts of the Euphrates. Haifa, the port of Palestine, has the most favourable harbour possibilities on the long Syrian coast south of Alexandretta, and has access into the interior to the rich Trans-Jordanian hinterland through a fertile pass cutting between the Lebanon Mountains, which obstruct communication from Beyrout to the interior, and the Judean plateau which obstructs favourable inland communication from Jaffa, heretofore the leading port of Palestine.

Many other factors contribute to the potential commercial influence of Palestine over adjoining territories, but these mentioned will give a definite idea of the possible extent of the great market to be controlled from bases in Palestine as soon as communication develops and there is brought about the subsidence of political excitement which has existed in Arab lands since the war. It should be emphasised, however, that the development of this profitable trade must emphatically be pioneering work for a few years to come, and that it cannot at once be carried on as in the older commercial countries.

Jaffa v. Haifa.

Jaffa, once known as Joppa, is at present the centre of Palestine commerce as it probably was in the time of Simon the tanner, whose home was there. It is the principal port of the country for both import and export trade, but it has no harbour. Ships anchor nearly a mile offshore in an open roadstead, and all cargo is handled to and from ships by means of lighters. The construction of a harbour is proposed, but it will be highly expensive, and may be waived in favour of Haifa, which offers a much better harbour site, and will require less money for developing. Jaffa is 155 miles from Port Said and 300 miles from Alexandria. More than a dozen shipping lines call regularly at Jaffa, and there are a number of other lines and tramp steamers calling irregularly. The Khedivial Mail Line offers the most frequent service with five calls per month for passengers and cargo.

Haifa is situated on the Bay of Acre, about fifty miles north of Jaffa. It will probably be the leading port and commercial centre of Palestine, owing to its very favourable location. There is no harbour, but one is planned, and will likely be realised within a few years for commercial purposes, and possibly as a naval base. Haifa is the proposed terminus of an oil pipe line from Mesopotamia, is the Mediterranean port of the Hejaz Railway, and of a railway connecting it with Damascus, and is the headquarters for the Palestine Government railway system over which it has direct broad-gauge connection daily with Egypt. Haifa is also considered as a free port for trans-shipment trade. The port of Haifa is expected to be an exporting centre for wheat, in particular, which can be raised in large quantities in the Hauran and in Trans-Jordan, with both of which districts it has railway connections. Plans are already considered for the possible erection of grain elevators. Most of the shipping lines referred to in the discussion of Jaffa call also at Haifa.

Jerusalem.

Jerusalem is at present the principal inland trading centre of Palestine, but is not particularly important from a commercial standpoint. It is of more economic importance as the capital and seat of government. As the trade of Jerusalem is principally concerned with supplying its own needs, the future commercial progress is comparatively unimportant outside such demands as may be made by increasing numbers of tourists in season. Next in importance to the three towns already discussed comes Nablus (ancient Shechem), which is situated forty miles north of Jerusalem on a first-class motor road. Nablus has also narrow-gauge railway connection with Haifa and Tulkeram. The population is estimated at 20,000. The principal industry is the making of soap from olive oil. There are about thirty small factories, which have a total annual output in favourable years of probably 4,000 tons of olive oil soap. Because of its position in an agricultural district and its good transportation facilities Nablus has a future as a commercial centre.

Agricultural Possibilities.

Mr. Southard emphasises that the economic progress of Palestine depends largely on the development of its agricultural resources, as the raw materials and fuel requisite for industrial development on European lines are lacking:—

The principal industries must therefore depend upon agriculture, upon which may be founded enterprises for making soap from olive oil, drying and preserving fruits, flour milling, the fabrication of the various lines of tobacco products, etc. Even in industries of this sort there must first be found probable or possible markets, or they will fail economically. The Palestine wine industry is an example of a large local enterprise developing an important output without first having an assured market. Excellent wine is made in great quantities, and now, after some years, energetic efforts will be made to establish the required market. Such efforts will doubtless be successful owing to the quality of the product, but there has been a discouraging economic loss in not finding the market earlier.

Approximately one-third of the area of Palestine proper, or roundly 3,000 square miles, is barren land capable of little, if any, agricultural development. Fully an additional fifth of the total area is of questionable agricultural possibilities. The remainder, an area of somewhat more than 3,000,000 acres, has definite agricultural possibilities, but in some large parts of this particular area irrigation and other more or less expensive requirements will considerably prejudice the profits to be obtained from farming. The country is sparsely settled, and much of the land has been left fallow for centuries. At the present time the estimated area under cultivation in all Palestine amounts to less than 1,000,000 acres. Grains are, and must continue to be, the most widely grown crop. Fruits and nuts are next in importance. The plains of Sharon and Phœnicia, in the semi-tropical maritime belt, are at present most extensively cultivated, and the lands which remain to be put to such use are not generally so favourably located. Lack of agricultural credits is a great handicap.

The growing of oranges, which centres on the Plain of Sharon in the vicinity of Jaffa, supplies the leading item of the export trade of Palestine. Oranges are said by some to be indigenous to the country, but their importance in the export trade and as a commercial crop generally has been developed only in the past thirty years, and mainly through the efforts of Jewish agricultural colonies. There are possibly 6,000 acres of orange groves in Palestine. The Jaffa orange is a particularly sweet and luscious fruit, and enjoys a high reputation. More than half the export crop is marketed in Great Britain. Before the war Russia and Turkey were important markets. Egypt continues to take appreciable quantities of the crop. The possibilities for increasing the crop are excellent, and as soon as the Russian market reopens there will be a large increase in exports. The orange-growing industry of Palestine is firmly established, and is one of the most important economic assets of the country.

Grapes have been grown in all parts of Palestine from the most ancient times, but the growing of grapes for a purely commercial wine industry was introduced about thirty-five years ago by Jewish colonists on the Plain of Sharon. They imported leading varieties of wine grapes from Europe and other parts of the world and built wine cellars. Some of the German religious colonies have also engaged in this industry. Wine and its by-products now rank among the leading exports from Palestine, and are exceeded in importance only by oranges, soap, and occasionally by grains. The native grapes, production of which is increasing, constitute a noteworthy item of local commerce. In Trans-Jordan they form the basis of an important raisin industry. At Rishon-le-Zion, a Jewish colony on the Plain of Sharon, the wine cellars have a storage capacity of approximately 1,540,000 gallons, and are said to be one of the largest single installations of the kind in the world. Of the total production of wine, about 80 per cent. is of the dry red wines of a claret type for table use. The industry is not at present particularly prosperous, owing to the set-back suffered during the war, and other conditions which have retarded the proper development of foreign markets. The growing of grapes for wine-making is, however, firmly established in Palestine and will be a substantial aid in the economic progress of the country.

Although oranges and grapes are of first economic importance in Palestine, other fruits worthy of mention are produced. Lemons are grown for local trade, as also is grapefruit from American stock. Citrons, large lemon-like fruits reaching sometimes a length of more than six inches, are not edible but are grown for local use and for export in connection with Jewish religious ceremonies at the annual Feast of the Tabernacle. Citrons are exported to the United States from Palestine. Apricots are widely grown, but are not of importance in the export trade as they are in Syria. The considerable quantities of apricot paste which appear in the Palestine export returns originate mostly in Damascus, and pass through this country merely in transit. Figs and plums are grown in sufficient quantities for local consumption. Watermelons have come to be an appreciable export crop, mainly to the Egyptian market. Palestine in some parts is considered as favourable for fruit growing as is California, and the industry in general may be expected to increase in economic importance.

Wheat, Barley and Other Grains.

Wheat is the leading grain crop (planted December to January), but contributes very little to the export trade, as much of it is used locally. The current production of wheat is estimated at less than 100,000 metric tons per annum. Average production is under 700 lbs. per acre. The barley crop this year is good, and is estimated to exceed 60,000 metric tons, with a production of about 350 lbs. per acre. In good years before the war barley was one of the principal export crops, and as much as 20,000 metric tons went abroad. England is the best market for Palestine barley, where it is especially prized for malting. Exports have been small since the war, owing to local demand, but they are rapidly coming back to normal. The average annual production of dura (Indian millet) equals 40,000 metric tons, of which much is exported. The sesame crop amounts to approximately 4,000 metric tons in a favourable year, and is used for extracting the oil for local use. Several leguminous crops are grown, among the more important of which are beans, peas, lentils, and kersenneh. These contribute importantly to the local food supply both for the people and for their domestic animals. Under normal conditions, and with improved agricultural processes, Palestine would be a regular exporter of appreciable quantities of cereals. Yields now are low compared to the acreage planted, and vary much in that respect.

Almonds are indigenous to Palestine, but as in the matter of oranges, grapes, and similar crops, imported energy and initiative appear to have been needed to place almond growing upon a commercial basis. The Jewish colonists who have come into the country during the past thirty years have done much to establish a commercially profitable almond-growing industry. The crop for the season just closed is estimated at 3,000,000 lbs., most of this amount being from the organised industry of the Jewish colonies. Most of the almond crop is consumed locally or is exported to Egypt and other near-by countries. The acreage and bearing capacity of trees already planted is increasing annually, and new markets are being found in India, Europe, and the United States.

Cigarette Industry.

Tobacco growing received a great impetus in Palestine with the abrogation, early in 1921, of the monopoly enjoyed for many years in all Turkish territory by the Régie-Co-Intéressé des Tabacs de l'Empire Ottoman. . . . The tobacco crop is now receiving marked attention, and is expected to become an important one within the next few years. Palestine climate and soil are said to be capable of producing a so-called Turkish tobacco of superior excellence for cigarettes.

In this connection it may be mentioned that the abolition of the monopoly has also resulted in the establishing of several small cigarette factories in different parts of Palestine. No branch of possible industry has met immediately with so much attention and promise of success. This new and independent industry is scarcely more than a year old, and definite conclusions as to its future cannot be drawn with accuracy. However, there is every indication that it will be one of the substantial, if comparatively small, industries of the new Palestine.

The largest factory estimates its hand-made output at 250,000 cigarettes daily. Pending a locally grown supply, tobacco is imported from Egypt. These cigarettes are generally put up in packages of two grades, one package containing 20 cigarettes and one 30 cigarettes, each retailing for the local equivalent of 10½ American cents at current exchange rates.

(To be concluded.)

Stock and Share Markets.

FAIRLY FIRM TONE.

Indian Stocks Weak.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

While the week has been anything but a good one on the Stock Exchange, the tone yesterday was surprisingly firm, in view of the breakdown of the Lausanne Conference. The fact was that developments had been largely discounted earlier in the week, and the reality, when it came, was largely in the nature of an anti-climax. Markets were affected, of course, to a certain extent, the main result being a rather pronounced restriction of business. That there was nothing more serious was due to the belief that, after all, there will be a settlement with the Turks, a view to which colour is lent by the latest reports from Lausanne.

It is impossible to forecast the course of the markets in present conditions. Everything depends on what happens in the Ruhr and in regard to Turkey. It goes without saying that unless there is a settlement in both cases it will be futile to look for brighter markets.

Gilt-Edged Variable.

Gilt-edged have, of course, been particularly affected by the prevailing conditions, but, considering everything, prices have been maintained remarkably well. Consols at 56½ are the same as last week. War Loan Fives at 100 11-16 are 1-16 up. The Conversion Loan has gained 1-16 at 76 5-16, while Fundings at 87½ are ½ down. Indian stocks have again weakened, the 7 per cent. loan being 1½ down at 114, while the 3 per cent. loan has lost ¾ at 56½.

The market in foreign Government securities has been very uncertain during the week as the result of the fluctuations in the exchanges, while the Lausanne development did not help matters, though it is not without interest to note that there was a distinct recovery towards the close yesterday. French stocks remain about the same: War Loan Fives at 24½ have gained ½, while the 4 per cents. are ½ up at 19½. German 3 per cents. are ¾, at which they show a gain of ½, while Italian Rentes are unchanged at 20½. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified were at one time particularly weak, falling to 20½, but they have recovered to 22½, which leaves them 1½ up on the week. Greek and Bulgarian securities were inclined to display weakness. Greek Monopolies are a point down at 26½, while Bulgarian 4½ per cents. of 1907 are also lower at 24.

Industrials Dull.

There has been very little doing in the Industrial group as a result of the general political situation, which has had the effect of restricting business to the smallest dimensions. While there has been some irregularity, price changes are generally insignificant. Textiles have been variable. Coats have shed 6d. at 64s. 6d., while Courtaulds are 6d. up at 61s. 6d. Iron, steel, and engineering shares have been dull. Vickers are 3d. down at 16s. 6d.. Armstrongs have lost 9d. at 19s., while Guest Keens are unchanged at 39s. 6d. In shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are unchanged at 327. Cunards are 23s. 9d., while Furness Withys are 3d. lower at 35s. 9d.

Oils Variable.

Oils have made a rather variable showing. While the market has been affected by the prevailing political outlook, there have been some specially good features. and with the price of crude higher it is very obvious that once favourable conditions obtain there should be an advance all along the line in this group. Anglo-Persians are 1-16 down at 4, while Burmahs are unchanged at 5 1-16. Mexican Eagles are 1-16 up at 2 1-16. while Shell Transport at 3 29-32 are 1-32 lower. Roumanians have been fairly firm. Phoenix at 24s. 6d. are 3d. lower. Steaua Romanas are 3d. up at 9s. 6d. Dacia Romanos are ½ down at 11-16, while Hamilton's Concessions are unchanged at 2s. 6d. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields are 1½, at which they are 1-16 down.

Rubbers Easier.

Rubbers have been an easier market during the week, and in most cases shares have reacted to lower levels. This has been due to some extent to a rather fluctuating tendency as regards the raw commodity and partly to profit-taking. Rubber again shows signs of firming up, and the tone of the share market yesterday was rather better. It will not be long before this market begins to show activity again.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

Improvement in the Leu.

The exchanges have made a much better showing during the past week, with the exception of the mark, which, after violent fluctuations, is closing below the previous level at 185,000. French francs are better at 73.05, while the Belgian quotation is also better. Near Eastern exchanges have generally improved, Roumania rising to 950 as compared with 1,275.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22½	370½
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	500*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	180-190,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	24.78-24.82
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	82.60-82.70
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	930-970
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	12,000-12,500
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Constantinople	Piastres to £	110	700-750
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.67½-4.67½
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	73-73.10
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	156½-157
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	96¾-9½
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	725-775*
Teheran	Krans to £	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	315-335,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	155,000

* Nominal

ALEXANDRIA EXCHANGE.

Supplied by G. L. Mortera, Alexandria and Cairo.

Prices on January 26 were as follows:—Agricultural Bank of Egypt, £55; Alexandria Water Co., Ltd., £9½; Anglo-American Nile Steam, £3 25-64; Associated Cotton Ginners, £31-32; Banque d'Orient, 40½ fr.; Behera Ord., £E7½; Brasseries d'Egypte, 53 fr.; Building Lands of Egypt, £1½; Cassi di Sconto Priv., 99½ fr.; Comptoir Fin et Com. d'Egypte, £1½; Consolidated Lands, PT5½; Credit Foncier Fondateur, 1040 fr.; Credit Foncier Act., 739½ fr.; Credit Foncier 1886 Oblig., 326 fr.; Eaux du Caire, Capital 91 fr.; Eaux de Caire Jouissance, 136 fr.; Egypt and Levant, S.S. Ord., 27s.; Egyptian Delta Light Railways, £4½; Filature National d'Egypt, £8½; Immeubles d'Egypt Soc. an des., £7½; Khedivial Mail S.S. Company Pref., £3 11-16; Kom Ombo Ste an de Wadi, £4 3-16; Kom Ombo Ste An. Fondateur, £33½; Land Bank of Egypt, Paris de Fond, £55; Lots Turc., 34½ fr.; Menzaleh Canal Navigation, PT314; Grand Hotels d'Egypte, £9 11-16; Ramleh Railways, £2½; Urbaines et Rurales, £3 15-16; Union Fonciere Fond, £½.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Oranges Weaker.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Home refined has been in fair demand at about the same rates. Tate's cubes have been done at 55s. 3d., at which they are 6d. up; Lyle's granulated has also improved 6d. to 49s. 3d.; while London granulated at 49s. is 6d. up. Foreign descriptions have been steady. West Indian crystallised is unchanged at 45s. 6d., while White Mauritius has gained 4d. at 46s. 10½d. White Java is 7½d. up at 48s. Futures are:—March, 22s. 3d.; May, 22s. 9d.; August, 22s. 10½d.

Coffee.—The spot market has been quiet and steady. East Indian is unchanged at 106s., Costa Rica is unaltered at 100s., while Nairobi remains at 90s. Futures are:—March, 61s. 3d.; May, 61s. 6d.; July, 60s.

Desiccated Coconut.—There has not been quite so much business about, but prices have been maintained.

Rice.—The fall in the rupee has somewhat affected the market, as was to be expected. The commodity has continued in good request, and the market may be described as fairly firm. The future course of business would seem somewhat uncertain.

Green Fruit.—Once again exceptionally heavy shipments of oranges are to be recorded, and for the moment there is a plethora of supplies on the market. As a natural consequence prices have weakened. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 13s. to 35s. box (240's—504's). There is nothing of particular interest to report as regards lemons. Arrivals have continued on a fair scale, and there is a very good demand. Quotations are:—13s. to 20s. box (300's), 37s. 6d. to 40s. case (300's). Apples have continued in good request, and prices are firm. Heavy supplies of onions are available or in sight, and the market is weak.

Dried Fruit.—The market has been distinctly steadier than a week ago. Currants have been in rather better request, but rates are a little lower. Sultanas have continued in strong demand, and prices are firm. Plums have been a good market, with Bosnians in special request, and prices are tending to harden. The demand for figs is increasing, and as stocks are not extensive it is extremely probable that there will be a marked advance in rates. There is nothing fresh to record with regard to dates.

Oilseeds.—A firm tone has ruled as regards linseed. Indian is 1½d. up at 20s. 7½d., while La Plata has gained 3d. at 18s. 3d. Rapeseed has been very dull, with Toria 9d. down at 17s. 3d. Cottonseed has been rather variable. Indian has shed 1½d. at 9s. 3d., Egyptian black is 1½d. up at 12s. 3d., while Sakellaridis at 11s. 9d. has gained 2s.

Oils.—Linseed has been very firm, closing at 40s., a gain of 9d. Rape oil has also improved, with crude 1s. up at 43s. 6d. and technical refined 1s. 4d. up at 46s. 10d. Cotton oil has been firm. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s., technical remains at 40s., while deodorised is the same at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The position is unchanged. Linseed cake remains at 280s., coconut cake is unchanged at 190s., cottonseed cake is the same at 165s., while cottonmeal cake is unaltered at 270s.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

The following extracts are taken from a report received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank from Constantinople, covering the early part of last month:—

The possibilities of an early return to peace conditions in the Orient have encouraged the merchants here to place a few orders both for manufactures and for colonial produce.

The trial orders which have just been given, in particular by Greek and Armenian merchants, are still on a small scale and suggest a certain nervousness, for, since the rumours leave us to expect a change in the situation, the majority of the holders of goods are hastening to realise at all costs.

The depression in the leu, even more than the dead season, has compelled Roumania, which usually absorbs the greater part of the arrivals of cabots, to stop her orders. The stock is insignificant.

The prices quoted at the different export centres for colonial produce during these last weeks have shown a tendency to fall. Our merchants, having become more confident as a result of optimistic rumours, have profited by this activity, and have given rather large orders both to Trieste and Holland.

Sugar.—Unfortunately, fearing to see their goods warehoused and liable to high expenses, importers have preferred to sell off their cargoes in proportion to the arrivals, losing, in most cases, a portion of their profits in the fluctuations in exchange. The stock is unchanged—viz., 1,500/2,000 tons. Quotations: In transit, Java sugar, £23 to £23 10s. per ton; American sugar, £24 10s. to £25 per ton. In bond, American sugar £T38/39 per 100 kilos. Transactions in cube sugar have been normal. Quotations: In transit, £29 per ton, and in bond £T43 per 100 kilos. Stock, 100 tons.

During the first half of the month there was a fall in the coffee markets of New York and London. It was only towards the end of the month that there was a sudden change, and prices rose considerably. The merchants here did not know how best to profit by the opportunity offered to them. Before this upward flow in the market they had, however, decided to place several orders. There is a complete lack of stock, and our market maintains its prices. All arrivals are sold afloat at profitable prices. Quotations: In transit, 63s. to 67s. per cwt. In bond, 80 to 87 piastres per oke.

With the exception of a few small purchases effected by the Government, rice has shown no activity. Stock, 100/150 tons. Prices: In transit, Rangoon, £14 per ton; Siam, £17 to £17 10s. per ton. In bond, Rangoon, 30/31 piastres per oke; Siam, 33/34 piastres per oke. About 170,000 to 180,000 sacks of flour arrived during the month. Arrivals were especially abundant during the last week, to such an extent that the glut of goods influenced prices, causing a real panic among the traders, who realised their goods in all haste with serious losses. Since then, however, influenced by the good demand from Russia, the rates have slightly risen, but not sufficient to overtake the level of those of last December. At present, in comparison with the prices for last month, prices remain from 30/40 piastres per sack lower. Stock, 80,000 to 100,000 sacks.

OAKEY'S

WELLINGTON

The Original Preparation
for polishing Cutlery.

Canisters, 1d., 2d., 3d., 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d. and 4s. each.

SILVERSMITH'S SOAP, for Cleaning and Polishing Silver, Electro Plate, etc. Tablets, 6d.

"WELLINGTON BLACK LEAD" in Solid Blocks,
1d., 2d. and 4d. 1s. Boxes.

KNIFE

Polishing Paste, Furniture
Polish, Plate Powder.

POLISH

Glass Paper, Emery Cloth, Black Lead Packers,
WELLINGTON MILLS, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD, LONDON. S.E.1.

DRIED FRUIT REPORT.

Messrs. J. C. Houghton and Co., of Liverpool, report as follows under date February 1:—

Currants.—The improvement experienced in the closing week of last month developed with increased activity in the early days of the period under review, and quite a strong demand set in, prices advancing, 59s. being paid for Pyrgos. A fair business was also transacted on a c.i.f. basis for shipment, considerable progress being made in Pyrgos growth, cleaned and uncleaned realising 50s. to 53s. The closing days show some slight recession from the highest point. Merchants, although not unduly pressing, were anxious to make progress, and willing to make slight concessions to induce business. The only arrival has been s.s. Cypria, with 450 tons, for the market. The next steamer s.s. Gerano, is now due, and it would appear she will have to supply the requirements for February, as s.s. Sea Glory is not expected before the beginning of March. Latest quotations: Pyrgos, 58s.; Zante, 60s. to 65s.; Gulf and Panariti, 60s. to 65s.; Vostizza, 68s. to 75s. The reports from Greece of the Government's scheme for appropriating 15,000 to 20,000 tons of the remainder of the stock in Greece for industrial purposes should strengthen the position.

Raisins.—Valencias practically without movement, the stocks held in first hand consisting of 4,600 half-boxes and 8,700 quarter-boxes.

Cape Raisins.—A good export inquiry having reduced stocks, the quantity remaining is now getting into a small compass. Sales were at 25s. to .28s. for grades one and two.

Sultanas.—The market has remained steady; buyers are operating with extreme caution, only supplying their immediate requirements. The little business passing is in Smyrna qualities at 82s. 6d. to 90s. Greeks sell slowly at 82s. 6d. to 90s. Afghans most difficult to move, and only best coloured yellow varieties at 95s. are of any interest to buyers.

Figs.—A few Spanish changed hands at 20s. to 28s., stocks are light, and with any demand from the country should quickly be cleared.

BULGARIAN DEBT SERVICE.

The Bulgarian Government is prepared to pay to British bondholders the coupon No. 32 of the Bulgarian Four and a-Half per Cent. Loan of 1907, maturing on February 1, 1923, at francs (French) 11.25 each, and the bonds drawn for redemption on that date at francs (French) 500 each.

Holders of bonds which have been in British ownership since August 1, 1914, who are desirous of availing themselves of the offer thus made by the Bulgarian Government, should present the coupons and drawn bonds (to which all coupons due after the date of redemption must remain attached) for payment at the counting-house of Messrs. Stern Brothers, 6, Angel Court, E.C.2, between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. (Saturdays excepted).

The amount due in French francs will be paid in sterling at the sight rate of exchange in Paris on the day of presentation, less income-tax. All bonds and coupons, together with such verification of ownership as may be required, must be left seven clear days for examination.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
::: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE :::
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

CYPRUS OIL TRUST.

Consulting Engineer's Report.

A report by Mr. A. W. Ibbett, B.E., M.A., I.M.E., M.I.P.T., which has been circulated to the shareholders of the Cyprus Oil Trust, Ltd., states as follows:—

Properties.—I am thoroughly acquainted with the property over which you have acquired drilling rights, the area has been thoroughly examined by geologists of high standing, and, on my recommendations, drilling was carried out with eminently satisfactory results.

Geology.—The property has excellent structural conditions, there are no fault zones, and the sands from which the Apex (Trinidad) Oilfields, Ltd., and General Petroleum Co., Ltd., obtain their production are proved to underlie the property. The tectonic conditions are right and the structure is excellent, and the fact that a fine producing well has been already drilled on part of the property not only proves the area, but establishes it as an important extension of the Fyzerbad-Oropouche oil zone.

Oil Sands.—I anticipate that the big oil sand known locally as the "G" sand, will be reached at about 1,500 ft., in addition to which a series of sands have been proved out between 300 ft. and 1,300 ft., and will yield steady payable production.

Quality of Oil.—Wells drilled on the property can, in my opinion, be relied upon to yield steady production over a long period, and the quality of oil being materially better than that of the old Fyzerbad district further west will make for better revenue. The contents of light fractions in the Fyzerbad area vary around 12 per cent., while the contents of the oil from the finished well at Fyzerbad-San Francique runs about 16 per cent.

Transport.—Arrangements have been made whereby oil can now be immediately transported and sold, the pipe line serving the area passes through the property, and arrangements are being made for the immediate provision of the necessary pumping plant and steel tank storage.

Prospects.—In general, looked at from every point of view, and having particular regard for the following facts: A proved property; a well already drilled to production alongside; drilling conditions easy and inexpensive; transportation provided for and marketing arrangements complete; there is no reason to doubt that your company should be among the producing and selling organisations of Trinidad within six months.

In issuing the report the secretary of the company states: "Mr. Ibbett's remarks are given added weight by the substantial advance in the price of crude oil recorded last week. Arrangements for the commencement of drilling operations are being pressed forward."

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Bulgaria.

Dredger, Tugs, etc.—The Bulgarian Ministry of Railways and Ports is calling for tenders for the following dredging material:—(1) One bucket dredger. (2) Three lighters ("chalands à clapets"). (3) Three tugs, river type. February 26. (D.O.T.)

Egypt.

Transformers.—Tenders are invited by the President of the Municipality of Zagazig for the supply of two mono-phase transformers, 50 periods, 20 k.v.a., 3000/2×115 volts. February 15.

Hides, Pigskins, etc.—The Egyptian War Department invite tenders for hides, pigskins, etc. February 19.

Cloth.—The Egyptian War Department are calling for tenders for cloth, various. February 23.

Spare Parts for Arms, Saddlery, etc.—Tenders are invited by the Director, Personnel and Equipment Department, Ministry of the Interior, Cairo, for the supply of spare parts for arms, saddlery, furniture, tentage, paints, oils, etc. March 3.

Iron Weights.—Tenders are invited by the Physical Department, P.W.M., Cairo, for the supply of cast-iron weights. March 15.

Malta.

Coal.—Sealed tenders will be received at the Treasury, Valetta, Malta, up to 10.30 a.m., on February 15, for the supply of coal to the Government of Malta. Printed forms of tender and of the conditions may be obtained on application at the Treasury, Malta, or to the Crown Agents for the Colonies, 4, Millbank, London, S.W.

Shipping Intelligence.

SUEZ CANAL IMPROVEMENT.

A correspondent of L'Agence Latine states that one of the first developments following the decision to expend 100 million francs over the next ten years upon improvements to the Suez Canal is to be to deepen the canal. It will then have a depth of 32 instead of 31 ft., and as soon as possible it will be increased to 35 ft. The banks are to be 60 metres instead of 45 metres apart. The sea channel at the Port Said end will be correspondingly deepened, the work being rendered more permanent by the extension of the new breakwater so as to prevent sand falling in from the north-east. Progress may not be so quick at the Suez end, between Port Tewfik and the Red Sea, on account of difficulties with the Egyptian Government. The company's contract has not a sufficiently wide scope, and negotiations will be necessary to permit it to undertake the work that is needed to make the entrance to the Red Sea as deep as other parts of the canal system.

NEW B.I. SHIP'S DIESEL ENGINE.

The largest Stephen-Sulzer Diesel engine has just been completed at the Marine Engineering Works of Messrs. Alexander Stephen and Sons, Ltd., Linthouse, Glasgow. This engine, which has been constructed for the British India Co.'s motor ship Dalgoma, has undergone a five-days' non-stop test, developing 2,000 h.p. at 100 r.p.m. The engine is of the single-acting, two-cycle, cross-head type, with air injection and forced lubrication. Scavenging air is supplied by a single-stage turbo blower direct-coupled to a d.c. motor running at 2,700 r.p.m. The motor is a variable speed one, and the pressure of the scavenge air can be regulated according to the load. Electric current for driving the turbo blower is supplied from an auxiliary Diesel generator of 400 h.p.

The scavenging air enters the cylinder through two rows of scavenging ports in the bottom of the cylinder liner situated one above the other. The opening and closing of the bottom row of ports and of the exhaust ports are controlled by the piston, but the opening of the top row of scavenge ports is controlled by a rotary valve situated inside the scavenge main and driven off the vertical shaft which operates the camshaft. The bars between the ports in the cylinder liner are water-cooled. The cylinder cover has only one hole in it, situated at the centre, in which is fixed a casing containing the fuel valve, the starting valves, and an escape valve. The fuel valve is operated by a tension spindle, and the fuel valve casing has a separate water circulation for cooling. The starting valves are so arranged that the compression on the upward stroke of the piston is released, the air being discharged into the scavenge main. Compressed air at 600 lbs. per sq. in. is used for starting. This is the third engine of the Diesel type Messrs. Stephen have completed at Linthouse, and in each case (says the Shipping World) the severe test-bed trials have been most successful, the engines running very smoothly with practically no vibration, and the consumption of fuel and lubricating oils being quite up to expectation.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Olympia for Bombay (Liverpool, February 14).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mandasor for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 10); s.s. Macharda for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 12); s.s. Holywell for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 28); s.s. Magdapur for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 4); s.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 14).

Bibby Line.—S.s. City of Oran for Rangoon (Middlebrough, February 10); s.s. Gloucestershire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 14), s.s. Oxfordshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 28).

British India Line.—S.s. Neuralia for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16); s.s. Mulbera for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 23); s.s. Mantola for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 2); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 9); s.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Cypria for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Maronian for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 24).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Marseilles for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 21); s.s. City of Canterbury for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 6).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Hankow for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, February 10).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Egyptian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, February 17); s.s. Eden Hall for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 28).

Ellerman Bucknall and Strick Line.—S.s. Frankenfels for the Persian Gulf (London, March 6).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Incemore, for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila. The first steamer of the season for the Danube (Liverpool, February 10); s.s. Peruvian for Galatz and Braila (Liverpool, February 17); a steamer for all ports from Piræus to Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

Papayanni Line.—S.s. Malatian for Malta and Alexandria (Liverpool, February 14).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Nagoya for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 9); s.s. Mantua for Bombay (London, February 23); s.s. Nore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 23); s.s. Malwa for Bombay (London, March 2); s.s. Kaisar-i-Hind for Bombay (London, March 9).

NEW COMPANIES.

Algiers Bunkering Co., Ltd.

The Algiers Bunkering Co., Ltd., has been registered as a private company, with a nominal capital of £500 in £1 shares. The objects are:—To carry on at Algiers or elsewhere the business of bunkering steamers, steamship agents, coal, coke, oil, and other fuel merchants, contractors and agents, coal dischargers and stevedores, etc. The first directors are:—F. C. Strick, 3, Whitehall Court, S.W.1; F. G. Chacou, 19, Rue St. Pierre, Neuilly-sur-Seine (Administrateur Délégué de la Société Commerciale d'Affrètements et de Commission); F. T. L. Prinsep, 47, Curzon Street, W.; each of whom may retain office so long as Frank C. Strick and Co., Ltd., or its successors, the Société Commerciale d'Affrètements et de Commission or its successors, and Sir John Reeves Ellerman, Bt., C.H., or his executors, respectively hold £100 shares. Frank C. Strick and Co., Ltd., are the first managers. Registered office, Baltic House, 27, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

United Caucasian Oil Co., Ltd.

The United Caucasian Oil Co., Ltd., has been registered with a capital of £50,000 in 45,000 ordinary shares of £1 each and 100,000 deferred shares of 1s. each. The objects are to acquire, work, and turn to account any lands or interests therein in any part of the world, or mines, minerals, natural gas, oil shale, petroleum, and other oils, bitumens, naphtha, asphalt, or ozokerite, or other substances, and to carry on the business of prospectors, explorers, exporters, importers, distillers, and distributors of mineral oils, ship-owners, carriers, etc. Registered office, 138, High Holborn, W.C.1.

The Trieste Lloyd Line (Lloyd Triestino) and the "Sitar" Line have reduced their passage rates to Egypt.

The S.té Anne Co-operative de Navigation, of Marseilles, is arranging bi-monthly sailings for Beyrou, Alexandria, and Port Said.

The ports of call of the service which the Messageries Contractuelles are inaugurating on February 15 between Marseilles and Haiphong will include Port Said, Suez, Jibuti, and Colombo.

The surcharge levied in Yugoslavia, when Customs duties are paid in paper or silver, has been increased from 600 to 800 per cent. as from January 15. Duties when paid in silver or paper currency are now, therefore, payable at the rate of nine silver or paper dinars to each gold dinar of the Tariff. There is no change in the rate of surcharge on the luxury tax.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Company Meetings.

LONDON COUNTY WESTMINSTER & PARR'S BANK.

Signs of Strong Trade Revival.

Name Altered to "Westminster Bank Ltd."

The annual ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the above bank was held at the head office, 41, Lothbury, E.C., on February 1. Mr. Walter Leaf (the chairman) presided.

The Chairman said it was with somewhat mixed feelings that they must all look back upon the year through which they had just passed. The world had still been suffering from the throes of unrest and from the deferment of that peace for which they had long been yearning, and at the moment it was hard to see much hope, on the Continent at least, of any better times. But in England at least we have been endeavouring to do our duty, and not without some measure of success from the banker's point of view. The year had been for this country one of stabilisation. Fiscally we have been engaged in stabilising the £. This had been effected by just balancing the Budget and leaving nothing over for the payment of debt. We have thus avoided adding to the suffering involved in deflation, and had escaped the far greater evils which accompanied inflation, ills of which Germany was at present giving us a terrible example. The result of this policy was that prices during 1922 had been remarkably steady and the purchasing power of the £ had been stabilised. They had seen the $ decreasing in purchasing power in the United States, and the outcome was that the £ and $ had come close together, and to all appearances it would not be long before they met at the gold parity. The recovery of the £ in terms of the $, reckoned from the lowest point, meant a diminution of our debt to the United States of over £432½ millions. This in itself was a justification of the policy pursued by our Government and an emphatic warning against any siren voices which might lure us to depart from the strict road of fiscal honesty in order to gain a momentary stimulus to trade at the expense of a subsequent deadly reaction. The approach of the £ to the par of exchange meant in the last resort that our excess of imports over exports must have been more than balanced by invisible exports, and that we must have had during the year at least the amount of about £25,000,000, which we had provided towards the repayment of our debt to the United States—a repayment which did not, he took it, represent an actual diminution in our total indebtedness, but had been rather a conversion of external into internal debt. Having detailed factors which went to show that we were on the way to recover through reduced prices the position we held in international trade before the war, the Chairman went on to speak of the dark cloud of unemployment, which he showed was essentially a world phenomenon.

Burden of Taxation.

Of course, we felt the burden of taxation which honesty involved, and so far as the urgent cry for relief took the form of an insistence on reduced expenditure—the one means by which taxation could be legitimately reduced—it must have all our sympathy. But when one saw suggestions that we should not attempt to pay our way, that we should accept a deficit in the Budget and borrow the money in order to relieve the burden of the moment by throwing it vaguely somewhere on the future, then it was time to raise the voice of protest. That was the start of the fatal slope of inflation. Naturally there was everywhere a tendency to shift the burden on to one's neighbour if it could possibly be done. In Germany, by the device of inflation, the burden had been thrown upon the middle classes and the thrifty, who had seen their savings taken from them and handed over to industrial profiteers who had passed on to their workmen just a living wage. Unemployment had been avoided for a time out of the pockets of the steady-going citizens, but a larger sum by far had been passed on to men of the class of Herr Stinnes, and, as one is inclined to believe, removed for investment outside Germany. Here at home we have at least avoided any camouflage in the matter, and we have taken the ground that we must all stand or fall together.

The Continental Outlook.

The immediate problem of unemployment depended on the prospect of such an early improvement in trade and industry as would afford the natural, and therefore most efficient, remedy for the present troubles. The Continental outlook at least was not encouraging. The recent action of France on the Ruhr could only be viewed with the gravest anxiety, the more so as it served to complete the economic collapse which Germany had already been to all appearances rapidly approaching. It was clearly impossible to hope for any great revival of trade from any of our old customers in Central Europe, whose recovery was entirely bound up with that of Germany. We must draw what little consolation we could from the fact that so important an industrial rival as Germany had practically withdrawn from competition, except for certain classes of goods where she practically held the monopoly—notably dye-stuffs. That, no doubt, counted for something; but it was only a short-sighted view which could see in this an equivalent for the general prosperity which was interrupted by the war. Having commented on the position further East—in Russia, China, and India—the Chairman went on to say that, in spite of the adverse conditions, there were definite signs of a strong trade revival which was already doing something to diminish unemployment here, and seemed likely before long to do a great deal more. Perhaps the trade which was suffering most was cotton manufacture in its various stages, but in the iron trade and in its various great branches we heard on every hand of renewed activity. The coal trade was very active and exports were growing.

Agriculture.

Alluding to the position of agriculture and detailing the many burdens from which the farmers were suffering just now, he said that he had noticed with some surprise a tendency on the part of persons claiming to represent the farmers to blame the banks for calling in the loans incurred by farmers for the purchase of their farms. A committee had been appointed to inquire into the grievances of agriculture, including the supposed grievances against the banks. He (the Chairman) would be surprised if the committee found there was any justification in the grumbles against the attitude of the banks. The general conclusion which he drew from the information before him was that the farmers were having a bad time, but that conditions were not in any way ruinous. The good hard-working farmer with up-to-date methods was able to make a living under present conditions, though he had to see a capital shrinkage which was more or less wiping out what he had accumulated in the times of the war. The crisis was a serious one, but it was not worse than many which have been successfully surmounted in the past.

Finally, the Chairman referred to the internal affairs of the bank, and dealing with the bank's balance-sheet, he said, like all other institutions, they showed a diminution in the amount lodged with them. This he did not regard as evidence of continuing deflation, though it was the result of deflation in the past. The fact that prices had remained steady, with a slight tendency to rise, was in itself a proof that there had been no deflation during the past year. Their total profits showed a shrinkage, but this again was an experience the bank shares with its competitors; but on the whole the shareholders would, he hoped, feel that the results were not unsatisfactory. The year had, for pure banking profits, been rather a lean one, but, on the other hand, the appreciation in the value of investments had made up behind the scenes for a good deal that they had missed in other ways. With a general management such as they had, backed by the hearty devotion of a loyal and capable staff, they were prepared to approach with confidence the anxieties and the successes which the future might have in store for them.

The report was unanimously adopted, and other formal business transacted.

Change of Name.

At a special meeting which followed a resolution was submitted to change the name of the bank to "Westminster Bank, Ltd." The Chairman said that the desirability of shortening the name of the bank was a question on which he could hardly imagine that there would be any serious difference of opinion. It was a matter which had been constantly pressed upon them by their customers and shareholders alike, and there was not one of them who had not, whether in his individual or his official capacity, felt the inconvenience of a title which, whatever its merits as a historical document, was beyond all question cumbersome in daily use. The board had long had before them the advisability of bringing forward such a resolution as that which was now before them. But they had been delayed by hesitation as to the form which the new name should take. They had had many conflicting interests and sentiments to consider and to reconcile; and the sentiments had been, perhaps, even more difficult to deal with than the practical interests. They had had under discussion from time to time he did not know how many possible alternatives, each with much to be said for it. There was no part of their name to which a certain amount of good will did not attach, and there was not a word in their long name which they could surrender without a certain amount of regret. It was only because they strongly felt that the advantage of shortness outweighed the value of any part which they gave up that they put the resolution before the shareholders. The change would not involve any alteration of the familiar names by which they were known in various districts. In Somerset they were still "Stuckeys," in Derbyshire "Cromptons," in Yorkshire "Becketts," and they would be content, and even anxious, to remain the "County" round London, and "Parr's" in Lancashire. In the City of London and in the various Dominions of the Empire they would still be, what they had always been, "the old Westminster."

Mr. John Rae, in seconding the resolution, said that, sentiment apart, their customers and the public generally had found the length of their name cumbersome in correspondence and costly for telegraphic purposes; moreover, when they resorted to the alternative of initials—not always the correct initials—correspondence tended to find a wrong destination. Thus it was that the change which they had contemplated had become increasingly pressing, and to meet all the objections attaching to their present designation, the selection of a title comprised of three words seemed essential.

The resolution embodying acceptance of the change of name to "Westminster Bank, Ltd." was agreed to.

A cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman closed the proceedings.

EGYPTIAN DELTA LIGHT RAILWAYS.

The annual ordinary general meeting of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways, Ltd., was held on February 2 at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, E.C., Sir Montagu Sharpe, K.C. (the chairman) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. F. J. Horne) having read the notice convening the meeting and the report of the auditors,

The Chairman said he presumed they would, as usual, take the report as read. He went on to deal in detail with the new arrangement with the Egyptian Government, and said that the Government of Egypt, as heretofore, had sympathetically considered the position which unforeseen and unpreventable circumstances have placed them in, and had been pleased to decide to make them further concessions, which he would explain to them as concisely as possible. Under the terms of the modified concession of 1914 the Government participated in this company's receipts from all sources, including interest on investments. The Government had now agreed:—(a) To abstain from participation in receipts from interest on investments, deposits, etc., and (b) to refund to this company in three annual instalments its participation in such receipts earned by the company and paid over to the Government during the four years ended March 21, 1921, provided that the position of the company called for such refund. In other words, if the net revenue for any year was short of an amount equal to 5 per cent. on the company's share capital, subject to full examination by the Government authorities, an instalment of this refund would be paid.

These allowances were subject to the company constructing certain specified new lines required by the Ministry, against the construction of which the Government would release in instalments, as the work progressed, the sum of £92,300 from the sale of the Helouan Railways, and held as a guarantee against the construction of new lines under the terms of the modified concession of 1914.

So far as the construction of the new lines was concerned, this would mean that their system would be increased by some forty-nine kilometres (= 30.44 miles), at an estimated cost of £127,000, namely:—Sah-el-Hazar to Foua, 39 kilometres (= 24.23 miles), say £107,000. Dessouk to Kafr Abou Mandour, 10 kilometres (= 6.21 miles), say £20,000.

The cost of the construction of these would be met by the £92,300 released by the Government and from materials already in stores, all of which would become revenue-earning.

The assistance accorded them by the Government would materially help them during the next two to three years, but, while gratefully received, they thought that assistance might well have been extended in other directions, and on broader lines, to the mutual benefit of the Government, the agricultural districts which they served, and of the company.

It was unfortunate that the year under review, which had been a most difficult and anxious period for them, and during which their earnings had shown such large decreases from every source, should have been preceded by two exceptionally good years as regarded earnings. The fact was that their earnings, whether from passengers or goods, were dependent upon the crops and prices of cotton, and the scarcity of money throughout the country resulting from unfavourable prices during the year under review was principally responsible for the falling off in their traffic returns. Their traffic returns had, he regretted to say, continued to decrease during the current year up to date.

Every effort had been made to curtail their expenditure to a minimum, consistent with safe and efficient working and the maintenance of the standard required by the Government. They hoped that the cost of fuel would in the ordinary course of events further decline. The system which they had adopted of purchasing their fuel supplies locally to meet their requirements as they arose was working most economically and satisfactorily.

They had as a direct result of the war been placed in a very unfortunate position. They had to the best of their ability, and, if he might say so, with a considerable measure of success, steered through a most trying period. Their difficulties, however, were not yet over, for the traffic returns for the nine months of the year ending March 31, 1923, which had already been published, were—to take the best view—not sufficiently encouraging to lead them to hope for anything but another lean year. With this in view, and also in the knowledge that all of their remaining resources were earmarked for capital expenditure and that there were no present prospects of their being in a position to raise further capital, it was considered by their directors it would be advisable to recommend the payment of a 4 per cent. dividend only, which would absorb £41,631 4s., and to carry forward the balance with the object of equalising future dividends and meeting any unforeseen expenditure which might arise. He hoped time might prove that they were adopting too conservative a policy, but they felt that under existing conditions any other course would at the moment be in direct opposition to the company's interests.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF THE NEAR EAST.

The first annual general meeting of the Commercial Bank of the Near East, Ltd., was held on February 1 at the offices, 1, Broad Street Place, E.C.

Mr. C. H. D. Moberly (managing director), who presided, said in the course of his remarks:—The report and balance-sheet only cover the period of under two months during which the bank has been working. The directors' policy is to confine ourselves to general banking on conservative lines, so as to build up a sound business, and to expand cautiously and only as we find profitable and reasonably safe business.

The balance-sheet shows a very liquid position. We have been appointed agents of the Commercial Bank of Greece, and they are our agents in Greece. The present understanding is that any branches we establish will be outside of the kingdom of Greece, and that we will be appointed agents of the Commercial Bank of Greece for those places.

We have recently acquired, on favourable terms, a branch at Constantinople from the Commercial Bank of Greece, and as it is a profit-earning branch, it will doubtless be a source of satisfactory profit to us, provided, of course, that the coming settlement of the troubles there does not force us to close it. We understand that the Capitulations, which have existed for centuries, are likely to be abrogated in the new Treaty, although I believe that both British and foreign residents there are unanimous against this abrogation. It seems there is a feeling that, before abrogation, the Turks should prove their capability for fair dealing and justice, which it is said they have never done hitherto. The Commercial Bank of Greece, head office and branches, are doing a good deal of business with us, and this connection is undoubtedly a valuable one.

We have issued no appeal to the public for our capital, as times have not been propitious. We are receiving, from time to time, applications for shares, and are allotting them. It is possible, I might almost say probable, that we shall make a public issue later on, and in that case ask for your consent to an increase of capital.

The report and balance-sheet were adopted.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS.

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank :—

Beyrout, December 30.

Mulberry trees have been planted on a large scale. The number of trees has risen by 20 to 25 per cent. Some landowners who before the war had their mulberry trees pulled up to plant fruit trees find themselves this year under the imperative necessity of replacing their plantations by mulberry trees. This change is due to a great extent to the result of two years' education with regard to silk and to the parasite which has attacked the fruit trees. The spinners as well as the owners of the lands are assisting the tenants, and are helping them in regard to the cost of taking up the fruit trees and replacing them by mulberry trees. Silk cultivation being the only important industry of the Lebanon, no effort should be spared to further its development.

The arrivals of manufactures during this month have been small. The market has been very quiet, as the merchants of the interior have not visited this centre, occupying themselves with the sale of their previous purchases. December has always been a period of transition from one season to another as regards buying, and consequently is a quiet period. The sales are estimated at a third of those of November. It is probable that business will expand in February.

Stocks of English and Italian cotton goods are small. Orders are not renewed because of the rise of the Italian exchange and the increase in cotton at Manchester. Retail business has been very satisfactory, and retailers have no reason to complain. Business has been general; the approach of the holidays has greatly contributed to this activity.

Hamadan, December 23.

Importers find increasing difficulty in disposing of their merchandise. Prices are falling, and money is scarce. Wheat is selling at 230-260 krs. per khalivar of 100 kilos, and barley at 130-170 krs. There is a steady demand.

Carpets are in increasing demand. The carpet companies in Hamadan are buying in Sultanabad owing to the inability of the Hamadan market to meet the demand.

Basrah, December 23.

The export of cereals continues. Arrivals are expected towards the end of the month of the crop of "Gharraf," which is estimated at about 30,000 tons.

Alexandretta, January 18.

The rainfall during December has been very satisfactory. A marked loss has taken place over barley as a result of the relatively small consumption and the considerable arrivals from Aleppo.

Commercial activity has remained on a very small scale, the market feeling the repercussion of the general crisis that prevails. Transit business has been much reduced, Tripoli continuing to take away the greater part of this traffic. However, as a result of the lack of commodities to send to Aleppo, the prices of transport have fallen in a very pronounced manner so as to make the Alexandretta route again more favourable for the merchants of Aleppo than that of Tripoli.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.

A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

} Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLETT.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
 Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
 Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.
CONSTANTINOPLE.
 (Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Business Fairly Active.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt, in their report for the week ended January 26, state:—

Since our last report the futures market has been fairly active, but values continued to move within a narrow range, and closed slightly lower than a week ago. The New York market has scored a fresh advance on the publication of the last American ginner's report giving the figure of 9,653,000 bales, and although this advance so far has been well maintained it had only a temporary effect on our market, which closed lower than before the rise of the New York market. The lack of an active demand from spinners and the continual flow of fresh arrivals from up-country are the factors which depress our market. The difference between Americans and Egyptians has again narrowed this week, while that between Sakellaridis and Ashmouni has remained about the same. We do not think that these differences will decrease; they have reached the minimum. Speculation has again taken but little interest in the market, the uncertain political situation both in Europe and locally being the main reason for this abstention. Persistent rumours that the Government may decide to come to the relief of the market by purchases of spot cotton have so far not materialised, and we do not think that any such steps will be taken by the Government if values keep at about their present levels. Arrivals from up-country have decreased slightly, but the total since September 1 has now exceeded 5,000,000 kantars. Export figures, although not as heavy as those of December, continue fairly satisfactory, and the total quantity of cotton shipped since the beginning of the season is about 4,000,000 kantars, against 3,000,000 kantars during the same period last year.

Spot.—Total sales amount this week to about 20,900 bales, of which we estimate 12,300 bales Sakellaridis, 8,000 bales Uppers, 600 bales Assili. In this total are included 929 bales of the Daira Domains cotton (358 bales Sakellaridis and 571 bales Assili), which were sold by auction on Thursday last, the prices ranging from $29½ to $36½ for Sakellaridis and $27 to $34 for the Assili.

Sakellaridis.—The demand still concentrates on the medium and low grades, and only a comparatively small business has been done in cotton above fully good fair. Middling to fair continues to be much sought after, and, as mentioned in our last report, the stock for sale is very small, and consequently sellers become daily more difficult to deal with.

Upper Egypt.—All grades have been dealt in during the week, but the larger proportion of the business has been done in fully good fair to good and good at slightly higher premiums than last week.

Other Varieties.—No sales have been registered with the exception of the Daira Domains Assili cotton mentioned above.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

An Unsettled Market.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended January 31:—

During the first few days of the week the tone remained good, and sales continued to be of more than ordinary dimensions, but the break in the American markets last Monday took all the kick out of the inquiry, and since then the tone has been unsettled, and buying has been half-hearted. Following the break in futures, prices have eased considerably, even more than is actually indicated by the official quotations; in fact, the market has not had time yet to readjust itself. In spite of the drop, the inquiry has continued on a fairly large scale, and, should prices remain steady or show any tendency to advance again, there is little doubt that a considerable weight of business might still result. Unfortunately, there are, at the present time, outside influences at work which are bound to react on all markets for some time to come, with the result that a state of tranquillity appears highly improbable, apart from any "fireworks" which may emanate from New York, based on the actual position of cotton as a whole. The eager buying of Uppers, which has been such a feature here for the past few weeks, has practically ceased, although a good deal of price-testing still goes on. Bids cabled to Egypt are bringing unusually favourable replies for this cotton, although offers from that side still maintain a surface hardness.

Sakellaridis, good fair to fully good fair, has been in fair request, and prices are irregular, whilst the better grades continue to be neglected. In brown cotton, only a very small inquiry has been witnessed, but the price of cotton below good has resisted the decline and held its own. Low cotton still claims a large proportion of the sales, but recently we have noticed a fair amount of re-selling of this style of cotton by spinners, who have found the working of it unsatisfactory. Sudan has been much quieter. In the actual stock list, published on the 26th ult., the Sudan figures stand at only 5,063 bales, of which a large proportion is undoubtedly White Sudan. The new crop of Sudan cotton is not far away from us now, and the early arrivals this season will probably attract a considerable amount of attention, as this type of cotton has found many new friends during the past twelve months. However, with the large stocks of Sakellaridis which are known to exist, and with which the better qualities will have to compete, there will have to be of necessity a good deal of price trimming if it is to remain in favour. C.i.f. business has been decidedly slow, and, with the quieter tone now prevalent in Manchester, we fear that little improvement is to be expected in this quarter for the time being. The stock of Egyptian cotton (less Sudan) held in Liverpool on the 26th ult. has been returned at 113,564 bales. Forwardings to spinners for the week ending on the same date consisted of 6,042 bales—a considerable falling off. Total sales, 3,500 bales (includes 500 Sudan). Quotations of Sakel are reduced 60 points; those of brown are irregular:—Fine and extra fine are 60 points lower; good is 35 points lower, whilst F.G.F. and below are unchanged. Upper is 35 points lower on the week. F.G.F. Sakel to-day 17.65d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

Decreased Indian Demand.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended February 3 states:—

A much quieter state of affairs has been experienced during the past week than in the two or three immediately preceding it. As was pointed out at the time, the busier state of the market was due only to the increased demand from India, other outlets not participating, and this has fallen off to a surprising extent. Amongst the various causes to which this is attributed may be mentioned the following:—(1) The decline in the exchange value of the rupee by nearly 1d. in the last ten days; (2) the fall in raw cotton by over 1d. per lb. in the same period; (3) the problematical political situation on the Continent caused by French action in the Ruhr, and the stiff attitude of the Turks at Lausanne, which has led to doubts whether any Peace Treaty will be signed. Quite possibly, however, the true reason is simply that Indian merchants were trying to fill up stocks, and, having done so to the extent which they consider safe at the present level of prices, are again content to do nothing for a period.

Yarn.—The principal news of interest with regard to this section is that the organised short time in the mills spinning American cotton, which has now been in force for a few months, is to be discontinued. Statistics have been issued with regard to a considerable number of mills showing that the total stocks held by them are roughly equivalent to three weeks' production. Whether this is a fair average for the whole of the mills cannot, of course, be ascertained, and there appears to be considerable doubt whether the discontinuance of organised short time is warranted by the state of trade. Quotations generally are lower, following the fall in the raw material, but spinners are able to maintain a firmer attitude by reason of the improvement in their position during the last month.

Cloth.—As already mentioned, a much smaller business has been negotiated, owing to the reduction in the demand from India. Other markets are scarcely worthy of any special mention, and remain in much the same state of quiescence so often reported recently.

Raw Cotton.—There has been a marked change in the tone of this market in comparison with recent weeks, the price for American spot having fallen every day. Closing prices are as follows:—American Fully Middling, 15.38d.; Egyptian Fully Good Fair, 17.65d.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended January 10 amounted to £E10,425, making the total for the year £E268,206.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - - - - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Duzdab, H. madan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohammerah, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shubstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Busreh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd.

LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - - - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - £485,580
RESERVE - - - - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
 1, Devonshire Square,
 London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
 weekly for months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
RATES 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum; 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
 Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NORCOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000

Paid-up Capital - - - Rs. 5.62.35.500

Reserve - - - - Rs. 4.11.82.805

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
 London Branch: 5, Whittington Avenue, E.C.3.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
 Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	£2,800,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.

SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.

SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD.

J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.

ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

ROBERT MILLER, Esq.

J. N. STUART, Esq.

J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinja
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital

12,000,000 Leva

Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS,
 ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.

Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIAZIONE DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - - L.It. 400 millions.

Reserves - - - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA,

Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk,
 — Philippopolis and Sliven —

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 614—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	... 15	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		On Making and Selling	... 166	Notes and News	... 169
Egypt	... 159	THE WEEK AT HOME	... 157	Palestine's Commercial Resources	170
The Sudan	... 160	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	161	Stock and Share Markets	... 172
Turkey	... 161	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	... 163	Near East Markets	... 173
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	... 164	Shipping Intelligence	... 175
Greece and an Ill Wind	... 167	CORRESPONDENCE	... 168	Cotton and Cotton Goods	... 177
				Company Meetings	... 178

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Marking Time.

While Ismet Pasha is on his way from Lausanne to Angora the question of peace in the Near East has to remain in a state of suspended animation. On the side of the Allies the interval is being put to good purpose by the clearing up of a number of points. First and foremost there has been the establishment of what bids fair to be, at least for a time, complete unity of purpose in the Near East between France and Great Britain. Loyal co-operation in the Council Chamber was a noticeable feature of the Lausanne Conference; but its value was restricted so long as there was a possibility of the French Government's taking the step which M. Poincaré actually took in addressing a separate communication to Angora behind the back of the British Government. Public opinion in France has strongly deprecated the Prime Minister's action, and, appreciating at last the false position into which France has been forced by a Near Eastern policy based on selfishness and petty jealousy, has called for genuine co-operation between the Allies in the East. In Great Britain this happy result has tended to confirm the good opinion held in most quarters of Lord Curzon's attitude at Lausanne. For a time some people were inclined to believe that a happier phrase here, a milder attitude there, or, possibly, a larger measure of patience at the very last, might have resulted in the Peace Treaty now being an accomplished fact; but it is clear, from Lord Curzon's own public statement, from French admissions and from the whole subsequent course of events that Ismet Pasha had been instructed to allow no limit to be placed to Turkish evasion of the issue.

A Firm Stand.

That Turkey as a whole, including Ismet Pasha and Mustapha Kemal Pasha, wants peace there would still seem to be no doubt; but, at the moment, the Angora extremists hold the stage. The wisest course to be pursued, therefore, in the circumstances is for the Allies to restrain their very natural feelings towards the Turkish leaders for not being men enough to stand up to the wilder Asiatics among their followers. The Angora Cabinet must be left to cope with its own troubles. It would not seem to have made a particularly successful start in allowing a peremptory communication to be sent to the Allied Governments ordering them to withdraw from Smyrna Harbour all men-of-war of more than a thousand tons. The Allies have refused to comply with such a demand; Great Britain has strengthened her naval forces at Smyrna and in the Ægean, and Turkey's foolish gesture has completed the disillusionment of the French. The episode would have added to the gaiety of the nations at this trying time, if it were not for the fact that it shows how easily a conflict may be provoked merely by the Turks' abysmal ignorance of the ways of the world. In this connection, however, it may be well for our pessimists at home to remember that there is a great difference between a war of defence and a war of conquest. If Turkey deliberately embarks on war, Great Britain has no need of allies in order to defend her present position in the Near East, and the maintenance of that defence on Turkish soil and in Turkish waters will prove as effective a rebuff to the Angora extremists as the successful advance of an invading army.

Pin-pricks and Precautions.

If there is to be any long delay in the signing of the Treaty, the Allies must be prepared for a variety of pin-pricks of the nature of the order to withdraw warships from Turkish waters. So long as they are administered only by word of mouth or by correspondence no great harm will be done. It will be a different matter if lawlessness becomes rife in Constantinople. The position in that city from the Allied point of view could hardly be more difficult. Everything possible—and, in the opinion of the foreign residents much more than was advisable—has been done to meet the Turks and to pave the way for an early transfer of authority, in the expectation that peace would have been signed long ago. A state of divided control that may work for a few weeks can quite well become intolerable, if prolonged indefinitely. As it would be undesirable at this stage to cancel the concessions made to the Turks in the matter of administrative control, it is to be hoped that the British military command will set itself to minimise the opportunities for mishaps. The few outrages that have occurred point to the unwisdom of allowing the troops to come and go in the town as though they were among a friendly population, and to enjoy without restriction all the social amenities of a garrison in a foreign town in peace time. The mere fact that there had been a sudden alteration in the conditions of life of the British Army in Constantinople would not fail to impress a large body of potential mischief-makers that the Allies meant business.

Turkey and the Arabs.

If the Turkish attitude at Lausanne has restored Anglo-French unity of purpose, it has probably also opened the eyes of some of the too ardent spirits in Irak on the advantages of Great Britain's mandatory rôle. In any case, there has been a satisfactory rally in support of King Faisal's action for the defence of the Mosul vilayet against Turkish designs. Although Ismet Pasha, before leaving Lausanne, made a specific declaration to King Hussein's special envoy for transmission to Mecca that Turkey had no inimical intentions against the Arabs, but, on the contrary, recognised the full independence of the Arab countries, including Mesopotamia, the statement can hardly have been intended as an abandonment of Turkish claims on Mosul. We may expect to find that Ismet Pasha made a mental reservation in regard to Mosul vilayet, which, in his view, or, rather, according to his contention, is Turkish and not Arab. Nothing, however, in this connection need surprise us. From the outset, the Nationalists accepted, and were at no pains to disguise the fact that they accepted, the permanent secession of the Arab States. It was only as a debating point, or for purposes of bargaining, that such a stand was made at Lausanne in regard to Mosul.

Parliament and Irak.

Parliament opens this week, and, in view of the fact that Sir Percy Cox, High Commissioner for Irak, has been in consultation with the Cabinet Committee which is inquiring into British commitments in the Middle East, an early statement regarding the new Government's policy towards Irak is anticipated. There are said to be forty-five members of the House of Commons "solemnly pledged to demand the immediate evacuation of Irak." It is to be hoped that on investigation it will be found that no one, let alone a Member of Parliament, binds himself on imperfect knowledge by such a pledge. The Prime Minister has given expression to the wish that Britain had never gone to Irak, but he realises that there can be no decision with regard to future policy until the question of our commitments and the whole problem in its various ramifications have been carefully considered. That any other attitude should be adopted by a Member of Parliament ought to be inconceivable, and it will be interesting to see whether the forty-five Members pilloried in the Daily Mail accept their foreign policy ready-made from that organ or whether they are capable of bringing their own intelligence to bear on the question when they have heard and considered the Government's statement.

Misrepresentations.

Great play is made of the expense of Irak to the British Exchequer; but it is not stated that the greater part of the expenditure is on the military establishment in Irak as a result of Great Britain's being nominally still in a state of war with Turkey. Nor is it pointed out that there is every probability of the Irak revenue and expenditure balancing in 1924, when the only charge to this country will be that of a much reduced military force. "Outrageous expenditure" is inveighed against, but in the same breath the economy which made use of empty whisky-cases for an open-air platform is decried. It is as inaccurate to call a platform a "throne" as it is to say that the Arabs of Irak want the British "to go." They want the greater measure of administrative freedom that is being accorded them by the new Treaty; but they recognise with Great Britain their dependence on British protection until they are strong enough to stand alone, as the recent Mosul incident has shown. It is a weak case that has to rely upon misrepresentations.

Reparations in the Balkans.

It is difficult to believe that France's experience in the Ruhr can serve as an encouragement to the Little Entente to imitate her in regard to Hungarian and Bulgarian reparations. On the ground, however, that the industries of these two countries do not play the same part in Balkan economics as German industry does in the world scheme, there is a danger that the view may prevail that the drawbacks inseparable from an invasion of the Ruhr can be avoided in the case of the Pecs and Kustendil regions. The Little Entente, we may hope, will be speedily and firmly undeceived on this point by the Allied Powers. By all means let the Reparation Conference investigate the situation in regard to the reparations due from Hungary and Bulgaria, but there must be no countenancing of action that is bound in the long run to defeat the end it has in view. If it could be shown that there is a legitimate case for the occupation of Pecs and Kustendil—and there must be far more conclusive evidence than has been produced as yet—there will be an overwhelming case for entrusting the "sanctions" to a Great Power and not to a neighbouring State. Even if Hungary and Bulgaria are not able to put up the fight that Nationalist Turkey, galvanised into life and goaded to desperation by Allied stupidity, has put up, Europe does not want two festering sores to be created in the South-East.

Jews in Roumania.

When, in the course of the War, the Roumanians of their own accord undertook to remove the disabilities that had formerly weighed upon the Jews, it seemed reasonable to hope that an end had been reached of the Jewish question in the country. To make doubly sure, the Allied Powers called upon Roumania to sign the so-called Minorities Treaty, in common with all the Balkan States, and, under this pact, the Jews, as well as every other minority group, have not only full citizen rights, but are guaranteed the free cultivation of their language, religion, and customs. The new Constitution, which embodies the protection of Jewish rights, is about to be submitted to Parliament, and, simultaneously, the Jewish question has come to the fore again. The trouble originated in the University of Cluj last November with the refusal of the Jews to provide Jewish bodies for dissection, and it has developed into a general anti-Semitic movement in all the Roumanian universities, based on the allegation that these are being swamped by Jewish students. In consequence of the rioting that has taken place, all Jewish shopkeepers in Bucharest have closed their shops, and their number is sufficiently formidable to affect the appearance of the capital. It is well to remember that the Jewish problem in Roumania is a peculiarly difficult one, and does not—certainly it did not formerly—lend itself to any sweeping judgment. In regard to the Universities, however, the old argument that the Jews constituted a menace owing to the stranglehold that they established over the peasants will not hold good. The Roumanians will do well to remove all possibility of suspicion that they are trying to prevent the provisions of the Minority Treaty which they have undertaken to enforce from becoming the law of the land.

Cabinet Changes in Bulgaria.

The significance of the Ministerial changes in Bulgaria is that M. Stambolisky has won this round in a trial of strength with his opponents in his own party. For some time there has been little or no real co-operation between the retiring Ministers and the Prime Minister, and it would seem as if the latter's action in dismissing the Sofia Prefect of Police—an appointment in the patronage of the Ministry of the Interior—had brought matters to a head. M. Daskaloff, the retiring Minister of the Interior, and head of the dissident Agrarians, has been associated with the more extreme section of the party. His withdrawal from the Cabinet confirms the anticipation to which our Sofia correspondent referred last week that the Bulgarian Government contemplated a more decided attitude towards Communism and Bolshevik intrigue. It will also be to the good, if occasions for friction with the foreign representatives in Bulgaria, for which M. Daskaloff displayed a weakness, are now eliminated. The most interesting development that could now take place would be the strengthening of M. Stambolisky's Government by non-Agrarians; but a preliminary to this step, it may be found, would have to be a satisfactory settlement of the fate of the arrested ex-Ministers who have been in prison for five months and have not yet been brought to trial.

A Further Outrage in Cairo.

Another outrage is reported from Cairo, this time, happily, unattended by a fatal result. A British employee of the State Railways had two shots fired at him on his way to the workshops; both missed him, but one bullet glanced off a wall and slightly wounded a native. His assailant escaped, and no arrests have been made. Immediate action was taken by the authorities after this incident. Colonel Cooke Collis, of the Royal Ulster Rifles, has been appointed Military Governor of Cairo; a military cordon has been drawn round the district where the outrage occurred, and a fine of £E600 is to be levied on the inhabitants. The difficulty in matters of this nature is to bring home to the Egyptians their responsibility for the recurrence of these outrages. So little chance exists of running the culprits to earth that the only effective protection that can be offered to the foreign community is to convince the native population that the habit of trying to murder Britons is an expensive luxury.

The Egyptian Cabinet Crisis.

King Fuad has accepted the resignation of the Nessim Cabinet, but so far has found no one willing to take the post of Prime Minister. It is difficult to believe that the question of the future status of the Sudan is alone responsible for the Ministerial crisis. A controversy which goes much nearer to the heart of Egyptian politics is connected with the composition of the Upper House of the new Parliament. King Fuad is understood to desire to have the right to nominate the majority of this body; throughout the negotiations over the Constitution the King's anxiety regarding his own position in the future State has been a not unimportant factor. On the other hand, Egyptian politicians are displaying a keen interest in keeping as much power as possible in their own hands under the new Constitution. In these circumstances, however prominently the question of the status of the Sudan may figure in public discussions, it may safely be inferred that a much graver matter is holding up the political life of Egypt.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The King's Grandson.

The fact that a son was born to Princess Mary at Chesterfield House last week has created very manifest interest and goodwill among the people. London and Yorkshire, as the home of Viscount Lascelles, were particularly pleased at the event, but the rejoicing has been general, and has had nothing official about it. Devotion to, and intimate curiosity concerning, Royalty seem to increase as Englishmen grow more democratic, and our dual nature is still the despair of political theorists.

One unusual "feature" in connection with this happy birth must be noted, and that is its being "stunted" by the popular Press. All sorts of ridiculous details about the parents have been circulated in the penny, and especially in the evening, papers, which, as usual, have deliberately confused the whetting of curiosity with the satisfaction of it. But it is a definite part now of such journals, instead of informing us on particular points, to leave us guessing—until the next issue. In other words, they merely apply to news what is the most tantalising characteristic of serials: "To be continued."

A New Source of Revenue?

The officials of the Treasury are at the moment all eyes on any possible source of revenue to the State; the poor staring men have to pay the American Debt somehow, and they fix their greedy gaze first on this and then on that. The Channel Islands heard with much discomfort that they were the cynosure of neighbouring eyes; nor was the Isle of Man any more flattered when the searchlight turned round its compelling beam on her. But what really is going to raise fiery laughter, denunciation, and resignation is the proposal to tax bets. Betting is probably the most indulged of all forms of financial activity in this country, and yet it is not taxed. Why? It is said that the Nonconformist conscience stands in the way. The Dissenter argues that betting is morally wrong, and that if the State levies a tax on it it thereby countenances it. It was a pretty argument for our prosperous nineteenth century, but I can scarcely think that it carries such weight now. In one way, indeed, it would fit the Free Church programme, because if you tax fools for their folly, surely you inevitably de-

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

LONDON : Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
CALCUTTA : 1 & 2, Old Court House Corner. H.L. Bell, Gen. Man.
CAIRO : 48, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Loc. Director.
ALEXANDRIA : Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
CYPRUS : Najem Houry & Sons.
JERUSALEM,
JOPPA, HAIFA, } Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.
KHARTOUM,

crease their number. It is, I admit, a very back-door way of getting to Heaven, but any additional traffic on this road must be welcomed. As matters are now, betting in the more vicious forms is increasing its grip on all classes of the people, and not to allow this regrettable decadence to be taken advantage of would seem to be a folly equal to that of the original step.

Cruft's Dog Show.

We had last week the biggest dog show ever held in this country, at Cruft's Dog Show in the Islington Hall, over two thousand dogs having come in search of prizes. Many dogs were entered in more than one class, and the entries actually amounted to nearly six thousand; it was obviously impossible to see them all. The big and middle-sized dogs were in the large hall; the Alsations, who are all the rage now, and undoubtedly are very fine animals, were in the galleries; and all those of the terrier type were in the Gilbey Hall adjoining. It was in all almost too vast, and certainly it was a fatiguing enough business getting about. I, personally, was disappointed that a certain Newfoundland friend of mine did not, through having had eczema recently, get a first prize, but there were many things over which to delight. Some of the dogs were quite laden with awards; there were, for instance, three magnificent Borzois, each with three first prizes; there was one of the King's Labrador retrievers with a first and a second; and a Scotch terrier, priced at £200, had five first-prize cards! The name of a special prize-winner, for the non-sporting international challenge bowl, I cannot forbear to mention; it belonged to a bull-dog, Hefty Master Grumpy, a most pleasing misnomer for one of the most affectionate of all breeds.

Incidentally, there has recently been started a fund, which is operating through the columns of the Field, for an inquiry into the causes and cure of distemper in dogs. It is regarded by a committee of eminent dog-lovers as certain that it will eventually be possible to isolate the distemper virus and discover a vaccine. There are, of course, owners who claim, as it is claimed in America in connection with influenza, already to have done this; but to the general public distemper still remains a mystery. The Medical Research Council a little time ago stated their belief in the analogy between distemper and human diseases, but it is scarcely a respectable thought in view of the widely held belief that distemper is caused by other dogs' fleas.

The Distraction of Ireland.

There are signs that a little sanity has slipped into the barrels of madness from which the Irish people have been taking so long a swig. The Government there have offered an amnesty to the Irregulars, of whom one, Mr. Liam Deasy, who was under sentence of death, and several others, yet free, surrendered their arms and proposed to help the Government. It is thought by optimistic Englishmen that such an attitude as these men have openly adopted is the real attitude of the majority of the rank-and-file Irregulars, but, to counter such faith, their Chief of Staff has officially rejected the idea of surrender. But the position generally of the Irregulars must, for such a step as even partial surrender to be possible, be weakening; what we do not know is whether the position of the Government may not also be weakening, for such a paradox would be typical of Ireland. There are those in this country who regard the whole Deasy affair as a mere diversion; others see in it only a distraction, the empty act of stricken lunatics; but I prefer, with all the stubborn unwisdom of the Sassenach, to build a little hope on it.

The Chelsea Arts Club Ball.

Youth had its own and staggering way last week at the Chelsea Arts Club Ball in the Albert Hall. Over 3,000 dancers and hundreds of spectators in the top gallery were doing things on rather a giddy scale, and one's wondering bedazzlement was not tempered by the Antarctic setting. Every hour processions surged, each elaborately designed by art students of the different institutions. We had, inevitably, King Tutankhamen and his queen and Lord Carnarvon, and, more naturally, a sledge complete with Esquimaux dogs and penguins (one did not think until the sober morrow of Anatole France's penguins). The glow of the Antarctic Pole and its repeated changes in colour were, perhaps, the most fanciful of all things in this fancy dress affair. The costumes—and particularly the Egyptian costumes, which were easily the most popular—were far beyond the power of a mere man's description; suffice it for me to repeat the partly true observation that those sprites the lightest clad behaved with the most decorum. But the idea of decorum at the Chelsea Arts is a quite outside imposition: there it is décor, not decorum, that matters. This year, as possibly always—it depends upon the hour when one judges it—it was the best of all possible shows. From 10 to 5 it ran its merry course, the pace for the first time declining in the subsequent walk home.

The Honours List.

Mr. Bonar Law's belated list of political honours has excited no indignation, and, consequently perhaps, little interest. There has indeed been an attempt to arouse enthusiasm over the fact that this time honours have gone, not to the men who contributed to the party funds, but to those who collected them; but the gibe hardly gets home, and the list may be dismissed as "unexceptionable"—a quality which the Press of these later days looks upon as rarest and worthiest. Sir George Younger has become a Viscount: it was inconceivable that any man could labour for his party as he has laboured without some such bestowal. And there are only two other peerages in the list—for Mr. Pike Pease, and for Sir Owen Philipps.

No one's cynicism is fundamentally disturbed by the brevity of the Premier's list; such control and disrespect for convention as are here displayed are not, for long, possible in our political democracy. One can be fairly certain that this temporary severance of pockets from coronets must be accounted for later on.

Some Recent Books.

Arnold Bennett's "Things That Have Interested Me" (Chatto and Windus) is a quite amusing hotch-potch of impressions on many things—travel, criticism, and such eternal subjects as "Ill-Health," "Dancing," and "Marriage." There was a time, when he wrote "The Old Wives' Tale," during which Mr. Bennett was a very considerable novelist. But now! However, this book is a welcome substitute for one of his later novels.

A more delightful memorial of a delightful man one could not wish to have than Sir Walter Raleigh's "Laughter from a Cloud" (Constable). In this book the very lovable scholar breaks, into both prose and verse, through the heavy clouds of professorialism. His humour and tenderness are quite remarkable.

The word "charming" is possibly one of the most abused in the English language, but it can fitly be applied to "Shepherd's Crowns," by Pamela Grey (Basil Blackwell). Lady Grey, the sister of a very noble figure, George Wyndham, has taken as the background of this series of papers Wiltshire, and particularly Salisbury Plain.

ALTER EGO.

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, January 31.

The Crisis on the Sudan.

We appear to be in for one of the most serious political crises we have had in Egypt for many years now. The cause is the persistence of the Egyptian Government in embodying in the new Constitution clauses dealing with the Sudan, and particularly conferring on the Sovereign the title of King of Egypt and the Sudan. It had been known ever since the early part of last summer that the Constitution Commission had included something to this effect in its recommendations, but it was hoped that by the time the new Constitution was presented to the King for signature the Government would have made an amendment in these particular clauses so as to comply with the international agreements by which Egypt is bound.

The inclusion of these clauses in the recommendations made by the Constitution Commission has been entirely due to the outcry made by the extremists. For some time previously, and particularly in connection with the "irrigation controversy," there had been considerable talk in the more irresponsible Press of the rights which Egypt had, not only over the Sudan, but also over the countries through which the source of her water supply—the Nile—flows, but it was not until last spring that a real agitation arose.

At that time Lord Allenby, as High Commissioner of Egypt and the Sudan, was making his annual tour of inspection of the latter country, and, finding that Egyptian agitators had been busy spreading pro-Egyptian propaganda in the Sudan, and that the Sudanese were very much excited at the distasteful prospect of a change in régime, he made a speech at Khartoum in which he repeated the assurances given in the House by Mr. Lloyd George—that no change was contemplated, and so forth. This speech, which, it may be noted, was entirely due to Egyptian extremist activities in the Sudan, called forth an outburst in the Egyptian Press, which declared that we had violated the declaration of February 28, 1922, which reserved the Sudan for future discussion, and demanded that Egypt's rights should be put on record in the draft Constitution. The fundamental motive of that agitation was the desire to embarrass the Cabinet in power; indeed, it may be taken as a foregone conclusion that every political agitation in Egypt nowadays has that object in view.

Instructed Egyptians realise that we have done nothing to violate the declaration of February 28, 1922, and that the question of the Sudan remains to-day as it was prior to the Khartoum speech—unchanged and a matter for future discussion. But, unfortunately, no Government has so far felt itself strong enough to resist what are indeed absurd demands made by the Extremists, and to adopt the only course consistent with the dignity of a nation which aspires to the esteem of its fellow-nations in the world, and as a result the new Constitution, as presented to the King, contains the original proposal for the title of the Sovereign to be King of Egypt and the Sudan. The British Government, quite rightly, has made strong representations, but neither the King nor his Ministers, although willing to vary the formula, have seen their way to make an alteration entirely meeting our views, and a deadlock has ensued.

Great Britain and the Sudan.

It is, of course, quite impossible for us to acquiesce in this new title. Egyptian sovereignty over the Sudan has always been admitted, although Egypt definitely abandoned that country, and it was only thanks to British brains, men, and money that it was reconquered in 1898. Hitherto it has been considered quite sufficient for the Sovereign of Egypt to be entitled Khedive, Sultan, or King of Egypt; nothing has happened latterly to warrant any change.

Apart from the fact that this new title violates the 1899 agreement and the declaration of February 28, 1922, we have, after all, to consider the people of the Sudan, whose objection to closer Egyptian control is notorious, to whom we gave our word that no change in régime was contemplated, and who would be fully justified in regarding the proposed alteration in the title of the Sovereign of Egypt as an indication that a change in régime is actually contemplated. And, in fact, we have every right to assume that this alteration connotes in Egyptian minds a change in the situation. Otherwise, there is no object in altering the King's title. To-day, no more than a year, ten years, forty years ago, there is no dispute as to the sovereignty of Egypt over the Sudan.

At the beginning of things, when Egypt first began to include the Sudan, the Sovereign was called King of Egypt, and what was sufficient then should be sufficient to-day, when Egyptian sove-

*Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

reignty is still recognised. The only reasonable assumption is that the Egyptian Government is trying to prejudice the issue of the negotiations which, by general agreement, are to take place when Egypt is in a position to nominate her representatives.

Apart from susceptibility to so-called Egyptian public opinion, there are, however, other political considerations which prompt the King and his Ministers to adopt this uncompromising attitude. But beyond saying that these considerations have to do with the democratic nature of the constitutional reforms recommended, I do not at present propose to enter into this side of the question. The situation is exceedingly grave. Definite and final instructions are momentarily awaited from London, and before these lines are in print we may have in Egypt the most serious political crisis that we have known since the famous Assouan frontier incident.

The Luxor Discoveries.

Interest in the Valley of the Kings discoveries has been accentuated by the arrival of Lord Carnarvon, who is now at Luxor supervising the final arrangements before the sealed wall is broken through and the mystery of what lies behind.

The controversy in the Egyptian Press on the question of publicity continues, but it has now abated on an arrangement having been made whereby Press representatives will be permitted to view the tomb once a week, and the Press Bureau will receive at Luxor information with regard to the progress made for distribution to the Egyptian Press. There is no doubt whatsoever that English opponents of the arrangement made by Lord Carnarvon with The Times made use of the anti-British element in Egypt in order to further their own interests. It was an undignified and unpatriotic proceeding, which, fortunately, has now been seen in its true light by the Egyptians.

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 2.

YE OLDE CHESHIRE CHEESE:
Famous Old Fleet Street Inn, frequented by Dr. Johnson.

Shade of Dr. Johnson: "As Boswell has recorded, I told Ogilvie that 'the noblest prospect which a Scotchman ever sees is the high road that leads him' out of Scotland! You, Johnnie Walker, have made it equally pleasant to the rest of the world."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
GLASGOW, SCOTLAND.

SUDAN.

Khartoum, January 20.

The New Era.

Although actual trade conditions are not particularly bright at the moment, the general outlook is distinctly improved, and it really looks as though the Sudan, after various vicissitudes and misfortunes, is about to enter upon an era of prosperity. The fact that Messrs. S. Pearson and Sons have been successful in their tender for the Blue Nile Dam and Ghezireh Canalisation Scheme, and are already hard at work on this colossal project, has silenced a good deal of adverse criticism, and it is hoped that the White Nile dam at Gebel Aulia will also be taken in hand in the near future. The Kássala Railway extension seems too good to be true, and will open up large tracts in the Eastern Sudan hitherto very insufficiently served by camel transport. The one thing now requisite to make the future of the country assured is the discovery of an oilfield, and there seems to be no reason to suppose that this is impossible. The Red Sea coast is long and comparatively unexplored, and it is quite on the cards that the valuable deposits at Gernah may be duplicated in Sudan territory. Gold has already been discovered in paying quantities, and there is a strong possibility of the presence of copper in certain areas which have not hitherto been exploited. Coal is known to exist just across the Abyssinian border, but the transport difficulties in the Eastern Sudan have precluded any serious attempt at development. It is to be hoped that the Imperial Government will divert some of the funds being expended in mandated territories to opening up a country of such vast area and great possibilities which has cost them less to acquire than any other portion of the Empire.

Sir Edgar Bernard.

Much regret is evidenced by the members of the various communities at the departure of Colonel Sir Edgar and Lady Bernard. Sir Edgar has retired after many years of very arduous service as Financial Secretary; he was one of the few original members of the 1896 Expeditionary Force still serving in the country. He has nursed the finances of the Sudan from the time when the gross revenue was some £E160,000 until it reached the figure of over £E4,500,000, and for a considerable number of years has been able to show a balance of revenue over expenditure—no small achievement in a country as young as this. All the communities vied with one another to give him a hearty send-off, and to wish him the best of luck and prosperity. He has been succeeded by Colonel George Schuster, who comes of a well-known banking family which has rendered the Empire invaluable service in the Treasury.

The Toll of Life.

The death of El Lewa Pearson Pasha, Director of Surveys, in Southern Darfur is yet another very sad instance of a devoted official staying just too long in a savage climate, and recalls the tragic end of Major Stigand. Pearson Pasha had just completed a strenuous and hazardous task on a boundary delimitation, and was on his way to a well-earned pension and period of rest when he fell a victim to blackwater fever. His death came as a very great shock to all who had the great privilege of his acquaintance.

Khartoum Municipal Council.

The institution of the Khartoum Municipal Council, or, rather, revival of that Dodoesque body, marks a chapter in the history of the metropolis. It is true that the Council have no executive powers and exist in a merely advisory capacity, but, nevertheless, they can be of very great assistance to the Province authorities, and certain members have already achieved some excellent work in compiling exhaustive and detailed reports on the various municipal services. One of the most interesting reports submitted was that of the Committee on Sanitation. The present system is by no means perfect, and is unsightly and obsolete, to say the least of it. It would appear that Khartoum City will be unable to float any municipal loans until the status of the country is decided, and that until then existing conditions must obtain. The Council debates are reported in full in the local Press and are followed with interest. Notwithstanding the fact that the Council have an advisory capacity only, it is a source of gratification to the residents of the three towns that representatives of the community are in periodic touch with the Province authorities, and can, at stated times, make known grievances, fancied or otherwise. It is a moot point whether the presence of a minority of non-official members on the Governor-General's Council would not tend to allay most of the existing dissatisfaction and in many cases unfounded criticism of present methods of administration. It is only when the non-official element is in close contact with the administrative authorities that the difficulty of running the country under adverse conditions is thoroughly appreciated.

Constantinople, February 7.

Lausanne and After.

The fact that the news announcing the dispersal of the Lausanne Conference without an agreement being arrived at has caused so little concern in Constantinople, may, perhaps, create surprise in the outside world in view of the tension that has existed in this city at various periods since the débâcle of the Greek Army in Anatolia some five months ago. It is difficult, even, for one on the spot to analyse the present comparative indifference. It is not because it is the expected that has happened; on the contrary, during the week-end, the most reassuring messages were being received from private semi-official and journalistic sources—Turkish as well as Allied—all tending to indicate a rapprochement at the eleventh hour on the remaining points at issue, and pointing to the signing of the Treaty at latest by Saturday evening. The Exchange—that much relied on political barometer—was similarly influenced, and the Turkish lira rose steadily during the week-end from 750 to 716 piastres to the £ sterling. Yet on Monday morning, when the news arrived (and it was only after the opening of the Bourse that the wireless message was circulated), it left the cosmopolitan population of Constantinople—to use a colloquialism—stone cold.

If the truth were only known, the present stoicism on the part of the population is due, perhaps, to nothing more nor less than its inability to believe that the alternative to peace on this occasion can be war. As it is generally recognised that neither side wants war, the population is seeking solace in the thought that, after all, only one side is really in a position to wage it, and that, whereas it requires two to make a war as to contract for a peace, it will need greater provocation than the mere failure of the Lausanne Conference to induce that side to restart hostilities. Based on this assumption, there is an unmistakable feeling in the city at the time of writing—amongst all sections—that the attainment of a settlement is but a matter of days.

Fixing the Blame.

Attacks are now being made in the local Turkish Press against the French, as being the party responsible for the rupture, and even one of our French papers, Le Journal d'Orient, publishes, in bold type and double column, a despatch from its special correspondent at Lausanne announcing that the conference has broken up on account of "the insistence of the French in the matter of Capitulations and Reparations."

It is refreshing to note that even with the Turks, in the final summing up at any rate, Great Britain no longer holds the position of scapegoat for all the world's troubles. May we not hope for, at some later date, even more definite recognition by the Turkish nation of the spirit of conciliation shown by our delegates at Lausanne, and of the many concessions they have made in the cause of peace?

In the meantime, General Pellé, the French High Commissioner, in a statement to the Aksham, expresses surprise at the attacks of the Turkish Press on France, and assures his interviewer that the rupture is not due to any financial differences between the French and Turkish delegations. The Press attacks, he adds, are based upon false reports. Thus it can only be by the method of elimination that the man in the street can decide who really was responsible for the break-up of the conference, but he may remember the adage Qui s'excuse s'accuse.

The Latest from Smyrna.

Events move quickly. To-night's news from Smyrna may appear to disprove some of the remarks contained in the foregoing paragraphs. One hears that the port of Smyrna has been closed by the Nationalists, and that foreign ships of over 1,000 tons have been requested to leave; that H.M.S. Calypso and a big French warship have been given until midnight to-night to leave Smyrna under the threat of being fired upon from the land forts should they fail to do so. The exact meaning of it all and the motives actuating the Angora Government in such an extraordinary proceeding while the question of peace still hangs in the balance is difficult to fathom, at least, in the absence of further information. One is given to understand that two important decisions have been taken in regard to this preposterous demand—namely, that the battleships in question will not leave Smyrna to-night; and that if they should be fired upon retaliation will follow.

Once more, then, Constantinople may wake up to another day, full of expectancy and doubt, and listening for the distant rumbling of the guns; and again that political barometer, the rate of exchange, may be expected to dance its jazz to the tune supplied by the Angora orchestra. But not even this, do I consider, will affect the present stoic indifference, into which the population of this town has relapsed.

The United Armenian Delegations have addressed a Note to the Allied Powers protesting against their abandonment of the proposal to create an Armenian National Home, and suggesting that, in view of the present impasse between Turkey and the Allies, an Inter-Allied Standing Commission should be appointed to watch events and make further proposals with regard to Armenia.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Question of Mosul.

The New Statesman of February 3 has some pointed remarks on the question of Irak generally and of Mosul particularly:—

We made a mistake in settling down to the occupation of Mesopotamia in 1919. Later, while still there was nothing but a question of expediency involved, we again made a mistake in not withdrawing to the Persian Gulf. But now more than expediency has become involved. "No doubt," the cynic will say, "there is the oil." Our withers are unwrung by this suggestion. There may be some people in this country who think we should stay in Irak at any cost for the sake of the oil, but they are not very intelligent people, and we do not believe they are many. We have not now, and we are not likely ever to have, a monopoly of the oil of Mosul. The oil trusts will settle the business for themselves whoever may control the country. We see no reason to doubt that the Prime Minister was speaking honestly the other day when he said that he wished we had never gone into Mesopotamia, and that he hoped to find a way of getting out. Nor do we see any reason to doubt Lord Curzon's protest that he was not an oil agent. What keeps us in Mosul is that we are solemnly bound to the protection of Irak by our mandate from the League of Nations as well as by our treaty with Feisul. The mandate system may be a doubtful experiment, and the League itself is certainly a feeble thing. But the League is not in essence a fraud: it represents the one serious effort that has been made to establish the rule of moral force, and, since moral force is not produced by spontaneous generation, we have got to support the League, imperfect as it is.

But, it will be asked, what does all this mean? That we are to hold on for twenty years to Mosul (that is the period for which we have bound ourselves by the Irak treaty), and to gird up our loins immediately for a just fight on behalf of our ideals and our white elephant? By no means. We do not read the action taken by Lord Curzon in that way. The importance of referring this dispute to the League of Nations is, in our opinion, that it offers us a way out of an intolerable situation. The situation is intolerable, not merely because we do not desire war at all, but because, if we did go to war, we should be fighting for no genuine interest of our own, and, moreover, we should be fighting, according to all present indications, single-handed. Nobody supposes that the French or the Italians have any intention, if they can possibly help it, of coming to blows with Turkey. The Greeks, no doubt, would be ready enough to join in, but theirs is an alliance that we are hardly anxious for. What we have to demand of the League, therefore, is not simply that it shall give us its blessing for the defence of Mosul. To defend Mosul is a comparatively easy task; and we doubt, as a matter of fact, whether the Turks would think of striking there. But what we want to avoid is being involved in a general war with Turkey, begun, say, at Chanak or Constantinople, and carried, as it inevitably would be, far and wide. That is a responsibility for which we have not bargained, and, if there is to be any risk of it, the risk must be the League's and not ours. In other words, if the mandate for Irak is to stand, and if Mosul is to remain part of Irak, it must be upheld by all the member-States of the League against the Turks. Let Angora be assured of that, and we do not imagine that Angora will press its claims any further. Otherwise, the League may as well adjudge Mosul to Turkey; for the British people do not want to go to war for it, do not intend to go to war for it, and will rightly refuse to go to war for it.

Middle East Commitments.

The Morning Post of February 12 contained an article entitled "We Must Cut Our Coat . . .," in which Great Britain's position in the mandated territories is examined. It says of these:—

These territories are at present rather a liability than an asset. If we had the resources, it might be profitable in the long run to develop Mesopotamia as we have developed India; but as things stand we have not the capital nor are we in the position to justify such large commitments. We must, in the homely old proverb, cut our coat according to our cloth, and it must be confessed that we have not enough left to cover what Sir Walter Scott calls the hurdies of Palestine and Mesopotamia. Some weeks before his death Sir Henry Wilson gave this country some rather sound advice—to stick to its own and clear out of what does not belong to it, and we think the time is arriving when the British Government will be wise to consider its commitments. There are one or two leading facts which may, at least, be stated in considering this problem. As for Mesopotamia, we have created an Arab State, and if the policy is sound, that State should, with support when necessary, be able both to govern and defend itself. The less we intervene in the affairs of the Valley the better. If we maintain ourselves securely at Basra the Arabs may be trusted with the rest.

From Irak, where it deplures our commitments "in the upper reaches of a dangerous river," it goes to Palestine:—

As for Palestine, there again our best policy would be to leave things in the hands of the native population. The present policy of governing Palestine in the interest of a small alien population being unjust, is bound to be expensive. If the Jewish people were sufficiently in earnest on the subject to maintain and defend themselves in Palestine, the policy would still have insufficient moral sanction. But even with the Jews, reality does not support sentiment. . . . There are now, after all the expense, trouble, and bad blood caused by the experiment, only 85,000 Jews in Palestine, and their brethren in the rest of the world seem unwilling (for they cannot be unable) to support more. As there are 600,000 Arabs in Palestine, and rather more Christians than there are Jews, the folly of continuing to govern the country in the interest of an imported minority becomes too fantastic for defence in theory, even if it were economically profitable. As it continues to be expensive, and may at any time become ruinous, owing to an uprising of the exasperated population, the best solution would appear to be the most democratic—to entrust the government of the country to the majority of its people. We cannot afford the luxury of maintaining a State to fulfil a prophecy. If these things are to come about, it will be in God's good time, and not by the intervention of the British Empire.

Near East Bookshelf.

PALESTINE.

"THE HANDBOOK OF PALESTINE." Edited by Harry Charles Luke, B.Litt., M.A., and Edward Keith-Roach, with an introduction by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Samuel, P.C., G.B.E. (London: Macmillan and Co. 12s. net.)

The difference between a handbook and a guide-book, we infer from our authors, is that the reader must not expect to find in a handbook what it does not happen to contain. The distinction is a useful one, and enables us at once to fit this valuable and essentially readable book into its own proper niche. It is not meant to be carried in the hand by the omnivorous tourist on rounds of "do-ing"; but it may, with advantage, be studied before and after, and is certainly to be commended to those who can only hope to gratify their interest in the Holy Land from a distance.

After an Introduction, in which the High Commissioner strikes a happy note in calling attention to the diversity that is to be found in Palestine, the Handbook opens with a useful summary of the history of the country. In the second chapter, or Part II., we have an indication of diversity in the matter of religions: Moslems, the Orthodox, Latin, Uniate, and Armenian Churches, Jacobites, Copts and Abyssinians, Anglicans, Jews, Samaritans, Druses, Metawileh, and Bahais. The total population is 757,182, and there is at least one Christian Scientist living in Jerusalem not accounted for in the Handbook who is responsible for a useful broad-sheet, New Jerusalem, which certainly deserves notice in the next edition of the Handbook. From this point on the authors seem to have had some difficulty in determining whether they should cater primarily for the resident or for the visitor. They have, therefore, tried to compromise. There is an abbreviated guide-book—very well summarised—for the tourist, and the resident is provided with a lot of information that will be necessary in the event of his wishing to become a hawker, get married, buy a house or postage stamp, die, or drive his own car. In the part devoted to geology, mining, and natural history, the authors have compiled an invaluable section, the data in which it might be difficult to find anywhere else in accessible form. It is, however, a little unfair to the Palestine flora that it should be dismissed in half a page, while thirteen pages are devoted to a list of birds. The weather of Palestine can be very bad, as all residents and most visitors know to their cost; but it seems distinctly unkind to attribute it entirely to the Government, and future editions of the Handbook may see fit to take the climate, rainfall, and winds, to say nothing of the Kham-sin, out of the section devoted to "Government and Government Activities." Further, the authority for the first letter in R.S.P.C.A. and in Kalendar is not clear. The difficulty in compiling a handbook (as distinct from a guide-book) always turns on the "ins" and the "outs." The authors will doubtless be the first to recognise that some modification of the balance that they have struck between the two will be necessary in the future. The truth is that what is in the Handbook is so well done that the reader misses all the more what is left out. Finally, it must be recorded that the Index is wholly inadequate to the standard of the rest of the book. We miss in it any reference to the English Cathedral (p. 47), or to the British School of Archaeology (p. 74), or Excavations (p. 75), to take a few items at random; while neither in the index nor in the text have we found any mention of the Palestine Oriental Society or of Ophel Hill.

A PROPHET OF WOE.

"THE DECADENCE OF EUROPE: THE PATHS OF RECONSTRUCTION." By Francesco Nitti. Translated from the Italian by F. Brittain. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. 6d.)

It is neither a customary nor a desirable thing to quarrel with dedications, but when we find a book written by an economist, we will not say so reputable, but so eminent, as Francesco Nitti, dedicated in part to those Italians who gave their lives "in the belief that they were fighting and dying for the liberty of the peoples and for equal justice for conquerors and conquered," we really must protest. That more than one per cent. who took part in the Great War entered it with any such motives is such a travesty of facts as to be worthy only of pacifists and politicians.

We are not surprised, therefore, to find consequent demonstration of the fact that the author of this book thinks along the usual pacifist lines, as he acted, when in power in Italy, with all the timid tinkering of the politician. We do not deny the truth of many of the facts which he adduces in support of his main thesis, that "the whole of Europe is in a state of decadence," but we do deny his main inference, that "the cause of the defeated nations is the cause of Europe." Much of what he says about the absurd measures, such as the constitution of various Reparations Commissions, taken since the War by the different Allies, is abundantly justified, but to argue from this that not only their policies but their aims are wrong is unwarrantable. In his abuse of France, and in his misrepresentation of England as the England of Mr. Lloyd George, whom he immensely admires, and, incidentally, in many ways resembles, Nitti shows himself a "good European," a phrase which in these later days has come to mean either a good German, or a good Russian, or a good Hungarian, or even a good Turk.

This book is the dreariest mixture of facts, recapitulated inaccuracies, and mal-ascription of motives. Of his facts there is little to be said, except that they lead nowhere, unless an appeal to America to "save us all or we perish" can be said to indicate a direction. Of his history the most illuminating thing that can be said is that his method of using it approaches that indulged by Mr. Lloyd George—where it cannot be bent to fit an argument it can be ignored. Part of Nitti's charge against our later statesmen rests on the fact that, whereas Europe is at the moment still without peace, peace was secured after the Paris Treaty of 1815, but since the simplicity of the one problem is nowhere contrasted with the complexity of our own modern problem, his comparison is of little value. But worse, far worse, than his bad history is Nitti's ascription of sinister motives to all those who do not act in accordance with his own schemes of economic solidarity; this habit is not only vulgar, irritating, but destructive of any sympathy one on the Commerce or Industries of the East, the Study of Oriental Languages, Oriental Literature, Sport, Tropical Medicine, etc., etc.

That book you want

FOYLES have it, or will quickly obtain it

SECOND-HAND OR NEW.

Over 1,000,000 volumes in stock on every conceivable subject. Write for Catalogue 165 (free), mentioning requirements or interests. Books sent on approval. Books Purchased—Best Prices paid.

FOYLES, 121, Charing Cross Rd., London, Eng.

might have with him. For instance, one was not previously aware that anyone but the most vacuous of Socialist ranters could write in such a strain as this:—"On the same principle by which the negroes of the Ivory Coast are being brought to the Rhine to outrage German women and to humiliate the German people, all the vultures of international capitalism are being brought to the robbery of the vanquished race." This particular sentence contains not only a disgusting assumption, but also the reverse of the truth, for it is well accepted that international finance is opposed to the single-minded policy of the French.

It will have been inferred that Nitti places as chief of the motives which instigate human actions the economic motive, and he alleges that peace in Europe, when it does return, will come because it is an economic necessity. This belief is the prime error of his school, though every day Mr. Norman Angell and Mr. J. M. Keynes may din it into our tired ears; and one can well understand how easily it was overthrown in Italy when a man, Mussolini, who did not accept the bread alone theory, arose. Economists are more than most men ignorant of human nature, and the appeal that Nitti makes to Wall Street to save us will not, unless it is a paying proposition, be heard. It may be possible to touch America's soul, and to bring her to the aid of Europe, but if the appeal, however successful, be made to her pocket, our salvation will be a very superficial affair.

We must remark that in the English translation of this work the vigour and vividness of Nitti's errors are admirably preserved.

TURKISH FABLES.

"TALES FROM THE ORIENT AND PEN SKETCHES OF CONSTANTINOPLE." By E. J. Dudell. (Constantinople: S. Dirmikis and Son. Is.)

In this amusing little book are the Nasreddin Hodja stories, translated from the Turkish, and also some pen sketches of Constantinople which appeared originally in the Orient News and Juliana. They make a pleasing little volume which will certainly be appreciated, at least by those who have served in either the British Navy or Army at Constantinople. The Turkish stories especially are entertaining, and we cannot forbear quoting the most delightful of them—it is called "Clair de Lune":—

On a lovely night in Bebek, Hodja strolled down the path of his old Turkish garden and, stopping before the well, saw the moonlight on the water.

Said he, "How's possible the Moon has fallen into my well?"

So he procured a bucket and some rope and proceeded to bale out the moonlight. For hours he worked hand over hand, when all of a sudden the rope broke and threw Hodja on his back, and in this position he saw the full Moon.

Ah! Good! At last I have got you back in your proper position.

The reprinted sketches of Constantinople do not so well bear publication in collected form; they are for the most part impressions, the setting down of which undoubtedly lightened the heart of their author and of many of his fellows, but they have little permanent value. However, a book so unpretentious and light-hearted as this has no need to be judged by severe standards.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"The New Zealanders in Sinai and Palestine." By Lieut.-Colonel C. Guy Fowles, C.M.G., D.S.O. From material compiled by Major A. Wilkie, W.M.R. (London: New Zealand Government Office.)

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

February 15 (New Style).

February 2 (Old Style).

Gumada II. 28, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Shebat 29. 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

The Marquis of Anglesey left London yesterday for Egypt.

The Hon. Cecil and Mrs. Brownlow left London last week for Egypt.

Sir George C. Buchanan has returned to London from South Africa and India.

Sir Charles and Lady Ellis, who left for Egypt last week, will return to England on March 23.

Sir Philip Sassoon, Bart., M.P., has arrived at Luxor, and is staying at the Winter Palace Hotel.

Prince Habib Lotfallah left London last Friday for Cannes and will be away for several weeks.

Sir George and Lady Rhodes, who are staying in Egypt, will remain abroad until the end of March.

Lord Reading gave a garden party at Delhi on February 7 in honour of the Ruling Princes and Chiefs.

The Afghan Minister, who has been indisposed for some days, has been confined to his room, and was unable to fulfil any engagements last week.

Mrs. Margaret Cousins, a public worker and journalist, has been appointed Special Magistrate in the city of Madras. She is the first woman magistrate appointed in India.

Major-General Sir Percy Cox (High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief, Iraq) had the honour of being received by the King at Buckingham Palace on February 7.

Lord Henry Cavendish Bentinck is returning this week from Underley Hall, Kirkby Lonsdale, to 16, Queen Anne's Gate, where Lady Henry Cavendish Bentinck has arrived.

The Hon. Mrs. Edwin Montagu, wife of the former Secretary of State for India, gave birth to their first child, a daughter, on February 6, the golden wedding day of her parents, Lord and Lady Sheffield, and the forty-fourth birthday of Mr. Montagu.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

Lord and Lady Swaythling, who are finishing the winter in Egypt with their son, the Hon. Stuart Montagu, will return to Kensington Court in March.

Colonel T. E. Lawrence, otherwise "Aircraftsman A. C. Ross," whose romantic career is so well known, has secured his discharge from the Royal Air Force. Colonel Lawrence enlisted six months ago.

Professor Einstein, who recently arrived in Jerusalem on a visit, lectured in French on the theory of relativity in the Hebrew University. There was a crowded audience, which included Sir Herbert Samuel. This was the first lecture given in the Hebrew University.

The Bulgarian Minister returned on February 9 to the Legation at 51, Queen's Gate, S.W.7, and has resumed his duties after his absence at the Lausanne Conference. Mlle. Nadejda Stancioff, who has been abroad attending the Conference, accompanied her father.

The Roumanian Minister and Mme. Titulesco gave a dinner party last Friday evening at 50, Grosvenor Street, at which the guests included the Serbian Minister and Mme. Gavrilovitch, the Afghan Minister, the Dowager Lady Boyle, Sir Edward and Lady Boyle, and Mr. Djuvara.

Lieut.-Colonel H. F. Jacob, C.S.I., will deliver a lecture to the London Moslem League at 74, Grosvenor Street, W.1, on "Yemen and its People" on Thursday next, February 22, at 4.30 p.m. The Rt. Hon. Syed Ameer Ali will be in the chair. The lecture will be illustrated with lantern slides.

The Right Hon. Sir Horace Rumbold, Bt. (His Majesty's High Commissioner at Constantinople), was received in audience by the King at Buckingham Palace on February 9, when His Majesty invested him with the Insignia of a Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Sir Edward A. Gait, member of the Council of India, will preside at a meeting of the Royal Society of Arts (Indian Section) to-morrow, February 16, when a paper by Mr. J. T. Marten, I.C.S., Census Commissioner for India, on "The Indian Census of 1921," will be read by Mr. L. Middleton, I.C.S., Provincial Census Superintendent, Punjab. The chair will be taken at 4.30 p.m.

APPOINTMENTS, PROMOTIONS, Etc.

Colonel d'Amazit, Chief of the Inter-Allied Military Commission of Liquidation in Bulgaria, has been succeeded by Major Rinck.

Mr. May Oung, Barrister-at-Law, has been appointed a Puisne Judge of the Burma High Court in succession to Mr. H. L. Saunders, who has retired from the Bench.

Mr. Horace Owen Compton Beasley has been appointed a Puisne Judge of the Burma High Court in succession to Mr. Justice Maung Kin, on the latter's appointment to be a member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Burma.

Lieut.-Colonel W. J. Cooke Collis has been appointed Military Governor of Cairo, with power to take the measures necessary to ensure public order in the Cairo and Giza areas, where the attacks against British subjects have been committed.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

It is reported from Athens that the first batch of Turkish prisoners who are to be exchanged for Greek prisoners have left for Turkey.

The Sofia Municipality has decided to call the Rue Alexander, one of the finest streets in Sofia, situated in the centre of the town, after the late J. D. Bouchier.

In the course of a performance at the National Theatre last week, at which the Premier was present, a bomb was thrown at M. Stambolisky. The bomb exploded, but no one was injured.

Before leaving Lausanne, Ismet Pasha officially informed the representative of King Hussein that Turkey recognised the full independence of the Arab countries, including not only the Hejaz, but also Syria, Palestine, and Mesopotamia.

Sir Arthur Stanley, chairman of the Executive Committee of the British Red Cross Society, has received a letter from the Greek Chargé d'Affaires conveying the warm thanks of the Greek Government for the work which the society is now doing in Greece.

The King and Queen of Roumania celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of their marriage on February 6. A gala performance took place in the National Theatre in the evening, the play chosen being Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream." It was finely staged and well played by the Roumanian Dramatic Company. This was the first play which the King and Queen had attended at the National Theatre in Bucharest since their marriage in 1893.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL, At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA. First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON. A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.
LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.
FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.
LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.
FOR SUMMER SEASON.
TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.
6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October.
Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.
For Tickets and further Particulars, apply
NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.
Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."
Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.
Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.
All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No. : 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1923.

ON MAKING AND SELLING.

The realisation of India's great industrial capacities is progressing slowly, and not too surely. The income drawn by the country from its mines, its factories, and its workshops is undoubtedly much larger than it was; but, as recurring financial difficulties show, it is still quite insufficient to meet the demand for national expenditure which may justly be classed as necessary. In Indian political circles it is the fashion of the moment to say that everything will come right as soon as a high protective tariff is in operation, but that easy confidence does not prevail either among students of economics or among the men actually engaged in production. The real causes of India's poverty lie too deep to be removed by merely fiscal measures; their roots go far back into the history of the country; and what is needed is not a change of schedules, but a change of heart. Much has been written in recent years of such obstacles to success as the shyness of capital, the inefficiency of labour, and the scarcity of productive energy and ability; to-day we wish to direct the attention of our readers to another obstacle, of which less has been heard—the tendency in Indian business circles to subordinate making to selling, to regard commodities solely from the standpoint of the market, and to ignore the interests of investors, workers, and consumers. No one familiar with the history of the country can be surprised at the persistence of this most injurious tendency. For an indefinite number of centuries the maker was in effect the slave of the seller, a drudge working in the shadow of starvation and the lash, while the brains and energy of the people were devoted to passing the product from hand to hand, and realising the maximum of profit on each transfer. These results followed necessarily from the political and administrative conditions of the period, but those conditions have now passed away; investors, workers, and consumers are finding their voices, and the industrial future of the country depends very largely on the extent to which their legitimate claims are met. Yet many Indian men of business act as if the Great Mogul was still enthroned at Delhi. Raw material interests them mainly as offering scope for a profitable corner; shares are but gambling counters; workers are mere nuisances; factory-managers are valued largely for their readiness to support, or to attack, the market at the word of command; the consumer counts for nothing at all. These facts are notorious; but if anyone doubts them he will find ample evidence in the files of journals published in Bombay during the orgy of last autumn. He can read there how the great cotton industry, by which the city lives, was treated as the toy of contending interests, and how its primary object—the clothing of the Indian masses—was subordinated to the attempts of a few individuals to make fortunes by the disorganisation of the markets. We refer to Bombay in particular, because its attitude has long been conspicuous, but the evil is unhappily widespread, and perhaps there is scarcely an industrial centre in the country where promising industries have not been ruined by unscrupulous manipulation, and productive energy paralysed by predatory finance. India cannot hope to become rich while such things are possible, and it is for Indians to ensure that this obstacle to prosperity shall be removed.

If the question is asked why the evil has been tolerated so long, the answer must be that Indian public opinion has not yet realised the true relation of selling to making, but has carried over to modern times the old tradition that money was to be made by the former process only. It is pertinent to recall that the opposite mistake was made in England in the course of the last century. There the art of selling was for long neglected; effort was concentrated on the technique of production; good wares were expected to sell themselves, and when competition in distant markets had become intense the mistake was demonstrated by the stagnation of the 'nineties, when it became the fashion to say that British industrial leadership had passed away. Then England added salesmanship to factory technique, and resumed the position she had temporarily lost. To-day it may be said with truth that in this country a reasonable synthesis has been effected. Salesmanship is more efficient than ever before, but it is directed to its legitimate purpose of securing profit for producers by providing increased advantages for consumers. Any attempt to introduce the methods of predatory finance would provoke not merely an outcry in the Press, but the solid resistance of the business machinery of the country.

Our Indian readers may, perhaps, object that in this matter any comparison with England is unfair. In that case we ask them to consider the recent history of the United States, where, not very long ago, the methods of predatory finance were as rampant as in Bombay itself. Public opinion, however, called a halt. It is too soon to say whether the novel administrative machinery which is now working with such vigour will suffice to eradicate the evil, but it has already imposed drastic and salutary limitations, and there is a steady approximation to the conditions which have been established in England; markets are as active as ever, but they are no longer manipulated solely in the interests of the middleman; and producers are learning that the advantage of the consumer is the legitimate source of profit. This American precedent is one which India can follow without loss of national self-respect; the evil was condemned by public opinion, and the Administration carried out its masters' orders. There are, happily, signs that opinion in India is beginning to move, and a recent discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council has shown that actual measures of restriction would already receive a substantial amount of support; but the need is national, and it cannot be dealt with effectively in a single city or province. A gamble in Indian clothes is a question for India, and not merely for Bombay, and what is wanted now is such an expression of national opinion that the central Legislature shall be induced to act. American experience has shown that the public is not necessarily helpless in the face of a small number of capitalists, and it may well be that American precedents will be found capable of adaptation to the needs of India. That question, however, is one for the experts in legislation and in administrative methods. What is certain is, first, that the predatory methods which have done such harm in the past may be still more injurious in the future, and, secondly, that their effective control must depend in the long run on a definite act of the national will. There is ample scope for the very large mass of talent now concentrated in Indian markets, but the nation must insist that it shall be employed in future in ways which are not inconsistent with the public interest.

GREECE AND AN ILL WIND.

The Refugee Problem.

All the world knows the bare facts of Greece's refugee problem; how that a country of five million inhabitants has been called upon suddenly to accommodate and provide for nearly a million refugees from Asia Minor and Thrace. Messages telling of outbreaks of smallpox and typhus convey some idea of the actual conditions associated with the disaster that has overtaken the country; but those who have not seen fugitive masses in the East can never realise to the full the horror of it all. Unfortunately, the appeals for contributions to the British funds for the relief of these refugees come at a time when the nation's purse-strings are temporarily tightened. Even national grants made through the League of Nations can meet the situation only for a few weeks. Greece, officially and unofficially, is doing her best to deal with what immediately confronts her; but never in her history has she been more unprepared for an emergency of this or of any other kind. There is a Government in office, but without power, leading the existence of the "ghastly" Arician, "the priest who slew the slayer and shall himself be slain"; all authority rests with the Revolutionary Committee, which cannot bring itself to lay aside its revolutionary character and assume the responsibilities of administrative routine. It is not in such circumstances that the nation can look for far-sighted policies. For the people, individually and collectively, it is a case of "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof"; the national life is benumbed. Unless, therefore, help is forthcoming from without, Greece can hardly fail to sink deeper and deeper into the slough of despair.

For the political paralysis from which she is suffering Greece must evolve her own cure. It is for her refugee problem that she is entitled to look abroad for assistance. Given funds and organisation, the disaster that overtook her Asia Minor ambitions can yet be turned to her lasting benefit. The country is handicapped by a plethora of traders; far too little attention is given to production, the potentialities of which have been materially increased since 1912. For the refugees there is nothing to trade with, and the Government's first thought should be to make use of them as producers. Greece as a whole does not rank as a fertile land; but there are districts in Macedonia awaiting settlement, and others could be reclaimed and placed under cultivation. The only steps taken to reclaim marshland in Greece on any scale, as far as we are aware, are due to foreign enterprise. The work of the Lake Copais Company in Boeotia is a standing example of what might be done in other parts, and particularly in Macedonia. Some Greeks are already contemplating the possibility of the sudden addition to the country's population being turned to advantage, but it is doubtful whether the bridge between this stage and definite action can be built by Greeks themselves. In a Salonika paper M. Alexander Pallis elaborates a scheme for using the refugees in the reclamation of land in Macedonia, but he considers it a sine qua non that the project should be carried into effect by foreign enterprise. M. Pallis belongs to the younger generation of Greek politicians, on whom Greece must rely for ultimate release from the curse of its old-time politics. In the political troubles of recent years these younger men, even when they have been fortunate enough to preserve their lives and personal liberty, have had no adequate initiation in administrative duties to inspire them with the confidence and provide them with the experience required for the management of big enterprises. It is well that their voices should be raised in favour of outside advice and assistance; but the terms on which foreign help is invited should always provide, as in the case of naval and military missions operating in Greece, for the training of Greeks with a view to their taking over ultimately the work themselves.

M. Pallis points out that although there is no lack of uncultivated land in Macedonia, the effect of handing it all over to refugees would be to rob the pastoral population of feeding grounds for their animals. Moreover, the placing of people on the land can only be carried out gradually, as provision can be made to enable them to live until they support themselves on the land. Something in the nature of public works is required to cope adequately with the hundreds of thousands of refugees on Greece's hands, and the scope for such works exists in the marshy ground of Macedonia, the reclamation of which is also urgently called for in the interests of the national health. Since 1914, when the first refugees were drafted into this region the settlers have been decimated by malaria, and the survivors have had their energy and vitality so sapped that their value in the national scheme of things has been reduced to the minimum. The proposal put forward by M. Pallis is to deal first with reclamation on the Vardar plain. Earthworks would be necessary to prevent further inundations of the Vardar, Kara Aşmak, Bistritza, and Moglenitza; the draining of the marshland, including the greater part of Lake Yenije, would restore to cultivation 110,000 acres of land at present submerged, while an additional 350,000 acres subject to floods, stretching to the foot of Mount Vermion, would be permanently improved. The cost of these works is estimated at 1,100 drachmæ per acre, at current rates for wages and material, or a total cost, at the present rate of exchange, of 390 drachmæ to the £, of £1,270,000.

The scene of the second project would be the Struma valley and the Drama plain, where already detailed surveys for a reclamation scheme have been carried out by Sir John Jackson, Limited. Here it is proposed to introduce draining works in the channel of the Struma, and to drain an extent of marshland together with two-thirds of Lake Trahinos. Under this scheme an area of 45,000 acres now under water would be recovered and permanent improvement effected in an additional area of 150,000 acres, at an estimated cost to the Greek Government of 300,000,000 drachmæ—a figure that would, no doubt, have to be revised in the light of the depreciated exchange. Inclusive of a third project for reclaiming a further 20,000 acres and improving 25,000 more in the Drama district, there should be a total gain to Greece of 175,000 acres of land now under water, while production on half a million acres more would be materially stimulated. For an initial outlay of some three million pounds, employment could be given to a large proportion of the refugees, a substantial number of Greeks would be permanently drafted on to the land, and considerable impetus would be given to production.

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

It is clear that this big undertaking cannot be carried out by Greece herself. Even if she could raise the money at this moment, an essential condition would be some measure of supervision over its expenditure. In the circumstances it is better that the work should be taken in hand from the outset by foreigners. M. Pallis points to the concessions given to land companies in Egypt, as well as to the Lake Copais Company, as precedents which Greece could follow with advantage at the present moment. No doubt, he points out, the companies would enrich themselves, but they would also be benefiting Greece and contributing materially to her return to prosperity. Unfortunately the uncertainty of the political situation in Greece is preventing those who ought to be moving in the matter there from taking up a question of this kind; but it would be thought that there are a sufficient number of public-spirited Greeks outside Greece who could place themselves above home politics for the purpose of carrying through a humanitarian work which is of such importance to the future well-being of the country. It is for them to interest foreigners in such a scheme as has been outlined above. The political entanglement may in the meantime solve itself. But the Allies, and, in particular, Great Britain, who, in the person of her late Prime Minister, is so closely associated with the course of events leading up to the Greek disaster, ought to realise that there is in the circumstances no justification for allowing political complications to stand in the way of a solution of Greece's refugee problem.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Letters intended for publication MUST be accompanied by the writer's full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith. They should be worded as briefly as possible and must be written on one side of the paper.

AN ÆGEAN OUTLET FOR BULGARIA.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—What is the object of Bulgaria's demand for access to the Ægean? Is it not tantamount to a belief that the Straits (whoever holds them) are, and always will be, liable to be closed against traffic to and from the Black Sea ports? And that Bulgaria, without an outlet on the south, would then be at the mercy of Turkey?

If this is true of Bulgaria, how much more of Roumania? No corridor is possible in the latter case. If Turkey closed the Straits, Roumania would to all intents and purposes be blockaded by sea. Bulgaria, in such circumstances, might free the Straits for herself by a successful campaign against Turkey. But the Turks could hold up Roumanian shipping with impunity, for Roumania cannot get at Turkey without passing through Bulgaria. In such case, Roumania's position would be pretty serious, with Russia on one side urging claims to Bessarabia, Magyar irredentists on the other with greedy eyes on Transylvania, and, to the south, a probably hostile and vengeful Bulgaria.

It is a pity that the question of a Bulgarian outlet to the Ægean was ever allowed to be revived. With her maritime interests confined to the Black Sea, Bulgaria would have had the same concern in the freedom of the Straits as Roumania. The two nations combined, with access for both their armies to Turkish territory, could overawe Turkey, and it might be that with such strong interests in common, Bulgaria and Roumania might forget old grudges and animosities. They would be the most interested and the most effective force in Europe to compel the Turk to observe his guarantees or treaties concerning the Straits. But with a port on the Ægean for Bulgaria, the latter's interest vanishes, and she becomes an obstacle instead of a help.—I am, etc.,

JENKIN JENKINS.

Gelly, Cymmer (via Port Talbot), Glamorgan,
February 9.

[Bulgaria's purpose in seeking an outlet on the Ægean is mainly the commercial one of saving considerable freight and transhipment charges.—ED.]

THE "QUARTERLY REVIEW."

The January number of the Quarterly Review contains at least four articles which will be of intimate interest to readers of THE NEAR EAST, viz., "The Old and the New Diplomacy," by Sir Rennell Rodd; "The Policy of the Fascisti," by William Miller; "Turkey and the Powers," and "Bolshevism and the Turks," by Gregor Alexinsky. The first is a very convincing demonstration of the fact that diplomacy demands far more careful training than was the possession of those recently responsible for its conduct in Great Britain; the second is useful, not only from the broad standpoint of European politics, but also from the point of view of Anglo-Italian relations in the East; the third is mainly historical, but concludes with a warning that Turkey is now what it never was before—a nation; and the fourth is an interesting account of the gradual fusion of Moscow with Angora, with a final hint upon the possibilities of a Bolshevik-Bulgarian-Kemalist alliance.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO

THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Budget.

With the opening of Parliament this week the approaching Budget becomes a question of very practical concern. The Government owes its election principally to the imperative need for economy, and this, its first Budget, will be the crucial test as to its ability to carry out its election pledges. At first sight the outlook would appear none too promising. If anything, the change in the political situation in the last few weeks has been for the worse, while hopes with regard to a favourable settlement of the American debt have not been fulfilled. Hence the reports that a reduction of the tax on beer would probably constitute the limit of this year's concessions. How industry, which has incessantly been clamouring for another 1s. at least off the income-tax, would receive such a boon as cheaper beer instead can well be imagined. Needless to say, this eventuality is most improbable, and the latest reports encourage the hope that there will be the same reduction in the income-tax as last year. That, it must be emphasised, will satisfy neither industry nor the individual taxpayer, but it will be accepted gratefully as the maximum concession that can be expected for the moment. But there will be little peace for this or any other Government until the tax is in the neighbourhood of 2s.

The Problem of Irak.

The controversy over Irak might be welcomed as conducive to stimulating interest in that country, if only the methods of the "scuttlists" were fairer. British expenditure in Irak is linked up with unemployment in Great Britain, and we are asked to believe that the charge of £4,000,000 or even £11,000,000 on an eight or nine hundred million Budget is conclusive evidence of the wickedness of a policy that incurs it. There is a complete lack of a sense of proportion in this line of argument. Quite apart from the fact that much of the money that the British troops cost would have to be spent in maintaining them elsewhere for the time being, is it reasonable to suppose that, after having made ourselves responsible for the Arab State of Irak, we could withdraw before peace with Turkey has been signed? Last year a programme for reducing British commitments in the country was agreed upon at the Cairo Conference held by Mr. Churchill; but it was based on the supposition that peace with Turkey was in sight. That peace has not yet been signed, and, as far as Irak is concerned, there is the further complication that Lord Curzon's agreement with Ismet Pasha at Lausanne holds out the possibility of the Mosul question being left unsettled for another year. If it should be, there can be little reduction in military expenditure in Irak. But that is no argument against the country, nor any reason why, with a little patience and hardly any additional cost, we should not see Irak on its feet and a valuable asset to the British position in the Middle East.

Britain's Cotton Needs.

In connection with the subject of Irak, I should like to refer to the remarks of the President of the Board of Trade at a dinner at Liverpool last week. Sir Philip Lloyd-Graeme emphasised the necessity that the primary industry of Lancashire should be sure of plentiful supplies of raw material at a reasonable price, and added that it was utterly unsafe for Great Britain to rely indefinitely upon its existing supplies of raw cotton. Certainly one country of considerable potentialities in regard to cotton is Irak; but its brief experience in cotton-growing has already shown that the industry will need very careful nursing and scientific supervision before it can be established on a satisfactory scale. Those who would bid us have nothing more to do with Irak would not only deprive the world of a promising cotton field, but would also deny to the new Arab State perhaps its most valuable means of making good in the economic sphere.

Some Balkan Methods.

A common complaint in the Balkan countries—or, rather, some of them—is that great difficulty is not infrequently experienced in marketing their produce. The exporters of one country, X, shall we say, learn that the exporters of another country, Y, have obtained 25s. per ton more for certain produce than they have, and they cannot understand it. The explanation is, however, perfectly simple. In some of the countries the greatest care is taken in placing the produce on the consuming markets in the best possible condition. Hence the produce of these countries obtains a sound reputation, and all offerings are readily absorbed. But in other countries quite the reverse is the case. The produce reaches the markets in a poor condition, realises poor prices, and difficulty is subsequently experienced in finding outlets.

How Not to Trade.

As an instance of this I cannot do better than quote the experience of a correspondent only last week. He had occasion to make inquiries in the City as to the prospects of a market here for prunes and other fruit from one of the Balkan countries. The result of his inquiries was very far from encouraging. "We have at the present time," said the representative of one well-known firm, "many tons of prunes from the country, and you may be interested to see them. A personal inspection will answer your question." Several boxes were placed before the correspondent, and by way of comparison a box of Bosnian prunes. "There was the widest difference," says the correspondent.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

"between the two samples. While the Yugoslavian prunes were clean, good to look at, and inviting to the palate, the others were in an uncleaned condition, and, though good, sound fruit, would make a very poor show in a shop window." It is much to be regretted that there should be this carelessness in marketing the fruit, and I ventilate the question in the hope that publicity will help to remedy this state of affairs.

Next Week's Fair.

Another four days will see the commencement of this year's British Industries Fair, which is being held concurrently at London and Birmingham from February 19 to March 2. Last spring the fair was held in most depressing circumstances, and its fairly satisfactory results were, in the circumstances, somewhat surprising. Since then conditions have steadily been improving, and as late as six weeks ago it was possible to view the prospects of the coming fair with something akin to optimism. Recent political developments have, however, altered the position to a certain extent, and, in view of the European situation and the failure to arrive at a settlement with Turkey, it is obvious that outstanding results cannot be expected. But, given that qualification, there is sound reason for anticipating a substantial improvement on the business done in previous years, for the world's markets need replenishing, and all but those immediately concerned in the political situation or debarred from trade by fluctuating exchanges are in a position to buy on an extensive scale, and the demand from these quarters should be of a very considerable character.

Wireless Insurance.

The rapid development of the wireless habit since the commencement of broadcasting leaves no room for doubt that before many years have passed the houses without their wireless apparatus will be few and far between. At the moment conditions favour the utilisation of wireless in countries like Great Britain and America, but already in the Near East and elsewhere the demand for installations is springing up. It goes without saying that the establishment of a wireless installation carries with it a certain element of risk—not great, it is true, but nevertheless quite sufficient to justify insurance against. The first insurance company to recognise this new line of business was the Liverpool Marine and General Insurance Company, which for a very trifling sum gives a policy covering internal and external risks. The company has received inquiries from centres as far apart as Egypt and America and from all parts of Europe.

COMMENTATOR.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - - - Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES - - - - - 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.
Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja),
Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST.
Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.
Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

PALESTINE'S COMMERCIAL RESOURCES.

We give below further extracts from the report of Mr. A. E. Southard, formerly American Consul at Jerusalem, on the commercial resources of Palestine.

Cotton Growing.

The possibilities for cotton growing in Palestine are viewed somewhat optimistically. The cotton plant grows well in certain areas of Palestine, and a small amount is produced each year. At the time of the world shortage of cotton during the American Civil War an attempt was made to develop cotton growing on a commercial scale on the plain of Phœnicia, in the Haifa-Acre district, and appreciable quantities were produced. As soon, however, as American competition again developed, the Palestine crop was found too expensive, and production on a commercial scale ceased about 1870. In more recent years, about 1909, an area of approximately 25 acres was planted in the Jewish colony of Petach Tikvah near Jaffa, and approximately 90 acres were planted by Jewish colonists in Galilee. The results from both plantings were about the same, and the following record has been made of the experiment in Galilee. Seed of the mitaffi variety was obtained from Egypt. Planting was made in February, and the land was irrigated from May until the end of October. The plants bloomed at the end of June, and picking lasted from September through December. The quality was declared by experts to be good, but as no subsequent crops were planted the opportunity was not afforded for observing the probable deterioration in staple with subsequent crops, as results in India from American seed. These experimental crops of the Jewish colony yielded about 282 lb. per acre.

The German colonists at Saron and Wilhelmina on the coastal plain in Palestine made experimental plantings in 1910, and the two following years, endeavouring to cultivate without irrigation. These crops promised well at first, but were much damaged later by insects, and were found not to yield a profitable return even after experimenting with three annual crops. These experiments would indicate that cotton is not a profitable crop for the coastal plain of Palestine.

Egyptian experts are said to have pronounced soil and climatic conditions in the Jordan Valley as ideal for the growing of cotton. This has not been proved, and experiments cannot be made upon a commercially extensive scale until irrigation becomes possible. Schemes for utilising the Jordan for irrigation purposes already definitely exist on paper, but owing to the difficulty and expense of raising this water from the deep river valley, the successful results of the plan are not yet assured. From all the sound data now available there is not very favourable indication that Palestine will produce cotton on a commercial scale.

Silk Industry.

The starting of a silk industry in Palestine was cut short by the war. New experiments in producing raw silk are now being made under Zionist direction. The worm which feeds on the Ricinus (castor-oil plant) is favoured in these new experiments, as it grows in Palestine much better than does the mulberry, and the silk produced is believed to be of greater service for local uses. This industry has not yet gone beyond the experimental stage, but the chances for its commercial establishment on at least a small scale are believed to be good.

Olives and Olive Oil.

Before the war the olive tree supplied one of the substantial crops of Palestine. This tree grows well even on the thin and rocky soil of the Judean plateau and yields a fruit and oil of esteemed quality. Olive culture here received a great setback during the war, as owing to the lack of coal the Turkish Government ordered the cutting down of 30 per cent. of all the trees within a 10-mile radius of the railway lines to provide steaming fuel. There was also a great deal of unauthorised destruction of olive trees during this period, and it is estimated that probably one-half of all the bearing olive trees in Palestine were cut down during the war, with little, if any, new planting. Estimates indicate that there were more than 2,000,000 olive trees in Palestine before the war. Based upon the probable destruction there should remain few more than 1,000,000 trees in bearing. The present Government is taking energetic steps to protect and increase the olive crop, which does particularly well in this country, and has prohibited the cutting of any olive tree without an official permit. The planting of new trees is directly encouraged.

Much of the olive fruit produced in Palestine is made into oil by the use of local presses of old mechanical style and of small capacity, of which type there are several hundred in the country. Oil of excellent quality could be produced, but because of inferior equipment and methods used in extraction the Palestine product does not average high in quality. It is said that none of the Palestine oil equals in quality the best European oil, owing mainly to defective extraction and storage methods. There is not enough oil produced in the country to meet local needs and very little is exported.

A revival of honey production in Palestine along commercial lines is now receiving definite attention. In general the honey-making season is restricted to four months of the year. The first flowers of the year are the orange blossoms in April. If portable hives are used they may be moved to the foothills of Judea, where sage, lavender, mint, and similar plants bloom during May. The hives are then moved back to the plains for the month of June, where the bees collect honey from the acacia and cactus flowers. In July wild thyme blooms in the hills, and with this the honey-making season is finished. This short season is a probable obstacle to the fullest commercial development of the industry. It is estimated that the present annual production of honey in Palestine averages 50,000 lb., with a tendency to increase each year. The honey produced is particularly good.

Negligible Forest Resources.

Palestine has no real forests. There are a few thickets of scrub oak, which are being thinned out and pruned by trained foresters, and which may in time result in a fair growth of trees. Tree seedlings are also being planted in large areas under Government supervision. Groves of eucalyptus planted in recent years are flourishing around some of the Jewish colonies and supply a certain amount of firewood and timber. The many groves of olive trees also supply a limited amount of firewood and wood used by furniture and curio makers.

This deforested condition has existed in Palestine for many centuries, and has resulted in the denudation of practically all soil from upland districts which might otherwise add much to the agricultural resources of the country, and has incidentally affected climatic conditions. Reforesting of the country is receiving energetic attention from Governmental and other sources, and in another generation Palestine may have a fair supply of young forests. Forest products are not, therefore, important at present in the economic resources of the country.

Minerals.

A plentiful supply of building stone is the most important of the established mineral resources of Palestine. Limestone prevails in the central part of the country, and basalt is found in the north. Stone is the building material most generally used, but none is exported. Quarrying of stone for local building purposes is an industry of some promise. Lime is a by-product of the stone resources of the country, and is an important item in local commerce.

The existence of mineral oil is suspected, and exhaustive investigations are shortly to be made to prove or disprove the existence of oil deposits. There is no particular promise that it will be found in commercial quantities. Oil shale and bitumen are found in the Dead Sea and vicinity, but have apparently never been found of sufficient promise to merit serious and continued commercial exploitation.

Common salt, the working and sale of which is a Government monopoly, is found in great quantities, particularly in the Dead Sea district. The Dead Sea is impregnated with 26 per cent. of mineral salts, among which have been found traces of bromine, potassium, and magnesium. The commercial possibilities of extracting these salts have not been demonstrated.

There is an important phosphate deposit in Trans-Jordan near the town of Es Salt. A concession to exploit this deposit was obtained shortly before the war by a Turkish-Italian company, and with the settlement of the mandate for that country, operations under the concession may be started. The mineral is reported to be quite close to the surface and capable of being easily mined in considerable quantities. The exploitation of this phosphate bed is favoured by its proximity to the Hejaz Railway, from which a short branch could be built and the product sent out through the port of Haifa.

Potter's clay of ordinary quality is obtainable at some places in Palestine, and supplies a small home industry engaged in the production of pottery and fancy tiles. Coal and iron have not been discovered, and it is doubtful whether these two minerals exist at all. The exploitation of existing concessions and the granting of new concessions for minerals have been definitely delayed by official order of the British Government, pending the actual establishing and functioning of the mandate for Palestine.

It may be optimistically said that the mineral wealth of Palestine is unexplored, but bearing always in mind that there are no assured indications that exploration would be successful. The commercial status of Palestine as an important mineral-producing country appears dependent largely upon the possible existence of mineral oil, which matter is about to receive serious attention.

Hydro-electric and Irrigation Schemes.

Hydro-electric development is by far the most important project which exists for the economic rehabilitation of Palestine. If the large capital required for this enterprise can be obtained there should be made available at one stroke, so to speak, a plentiful supply of cheap energy which will furnish power for the most favourable industrial development permitted by other circumstances, for cheap and extensive transportation, including the possible electrification of existing railways, and for the convenience and comfort of all who live in Palestine.

As promising as would be the results of hydro-electric development, however, the raising of the large amount of capital required will undoubtedly be a serious obstacle to its full realisation. Because of the present lack of economic development of the country and its small population there is not likely to be an immediate market for even the proposed initial amount of electric power created, and presumably there can be no material returns on the great investment involved until there is a market for the power to be sold. Some dependence is placed by the promoters in this respect upon electrification of the Government railways (Jaffa-Jerusalem section estimated to require 4,000,000 and the Haifa-Semakh section to require 6,000,000 kilowatt hours), but there appears to be overlooked the exceedingly doubtful possibility that the Palestine Government will be in any position for some years to meet the financial outlay involved in electrifying even short sections of a steam railway. From other sources a portion of the required capital may be obtained without promise of any more immediate return than a sentimental satisfaction. It is quite uncertain, however, how the remainder of the capital is to be obtained, and therein lies, for the time being, the main flaw in an otherwise reasonably feasible scheme for hydro-electric development in Palestine.

(There are two general projects for hydro-electric development in Palestine. The first and immediately more promising contemplates the harnessing of the waters of the Auja River near Jaffa on the Plain of Sharon, and the capital for this smaller project is reported to be available in large part. The estimated cost is generally given at £200,000. Negotiations are now proceeding for the purchase of the site upon which the plant is to be constructed. The power from this installation can, with careful and efficient management, be profitably distributed in Jaffa and to the neighbouring Jewish colonies. According to those interested in its construction, the Auja River plant is expected to give 600 horse-power. The promoters are considering German or Italian machinery for this installation because it can be had cheaper on account of favourable exchange rates. As insufficient power will be developed by the small volume of water available, a Diesel engine will be installed to supplement it.)

(A project for the supplying of all Palestine with electric power depends upon the utilisation of the waters of the Sea of Galilee and Jordan River. The main scheme, as advertised, contemplates the generation of 100,000,000 kilowatt hours yearly. Plans for this work have already been drawn up under the direction of a prominent Jewish engineer, and an initial expenditure of about £2,000,000 is involved. The actual beginning of this project is indefinite, but, as it is seriously considered and would be of inestimable value in the economic upbuilding of Palestine, there is a possibility that actual construction will be under way within the next two or three years. There is still much preliminary work to be done in the raising of the capital and the acquisition of the land sites required. The concession for this project has already been tentatively given by the Government to a Jewish engineer.)

In this scheme it is proposed to build a barrage at the southern end of the Sea of Galilee which will supply a reservoir for a main power house to be built a few miles down the Jordan at a place called Jisr-el-Mejami, near where the Yarmuk River from the east joins the Jordan. Other power houses are to be constructed eventually at intervals down the Jordan Valley.

(For irrigation purposes the same project contemplates the construction of a canal at the foot of the hills along the Jordan Valley for irrigation of the slopes between the foothills and the river. This is a scheme of possibly invaluable results to the agricultural development of the country, but there appears to be sound difference of opinion as to its engineering feasibility.)

(To be concluded.)

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

Stock and Share Markets.

GILT-EDGED FIRM.

Strength in Oils.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

If one has to gauge the outcome of the troublesome political problems of the moment by the course of the Stock Exchange one can only conclude that everything is going on for the best in the best of worlds. At any rate, the markets during the past week have made a remarkably firm showing, and in a number of cases quite an appreciable advance has taken place in prices. The Lausanne failure has had no effect worth speaking of, while, as for the Ruhr, the French advances seem only to have served to strengthen the firmness of Government securities. The fact is that everyone believes there will be a settlement both with Germany and with the Turks, and at no far distant date. The view is justly taken that any other outcome is unthinkable. Once there is clear evidence of how matters are going to develop, things should go ahead in the markets, though, as I have pointed out before, while gilt-edged securities are buoyant now, there will be a very different tale to tell once conditions are really favourable for industrial endeavour and commerce is in need of finance.

Gilt-edged Strong.

The strength of gilt-edged securities has been the feature of the week. Almost all along the line a considerable advance is to be recorded. Consols at 56½ have gained ½, War Loan Fives at 100¾ are 3-16 up, the Conversion Loan at 76 9-16 shows a gain of ¼, while Fundings are ¾ up at 88½. Indian Stocks remain about the same, the 7 per cent. Loan being unchanged at 114, while the 3 per cent. Loan is ¼ up at 56¾.

The market in foreign Government securities has continued to be rather unstable under the influence of the exchanges, though yesterday a rather firmer tendency was in evidence. This was particularly the case as regards French securities, War Loan Fives at 24½, showing a gain of ¼, while the 4 per cents. are unchanged at 19½. German 3 per cents. have firmed up, and at 13-16 are 3-16 better than the previous week. Italian Rentes, however, are ½ down at 20. In Near Eastern securities a feature has been the strength of Turkish Unified, which at 22¾ are 2 up. Greek Monopolies have been a very firm spot, and at 28½ are 2 up.

Industrials Quiet.

A rather quiet tone has ruled in the Industrial group during the week. Generally speaking, business has been on a most restricted scale. The market has, however, been quite firm, and there would be an immediate response to any improvement in the political conditions. Textiles have been rather variable. Coats at 64s. 3d. are 3d. down, while Courtaulds are 6d. lower at 61s. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares have been quiet. Vickers are unchanged at 16s. 6d., Armstrongs are 3d. down at 10s. 9d., while Guest Keens remain at 39s. 6d. In Shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are 5 lower at 322, Cunards are unchanged at 23s. 9d., while Furness Withys are 3d. up at 36s.

Oils Harden.

Oils have made a fairly good showing during the greater part of the week, and the tendency has been for prices to improve to a slight extent. Anglo-Persian Ord. have been a firm spot, and at 4½ x.d. show an appreciable advance on the week, while Burmahs at 55-32 have gained 3-32. Mexican Eagles at 25-32 are 3-32 up, while Shell Transport at 41-16 have gained 5-32. Roumanians have been firm: Phoenix, at 25s. 9d., are 1s. 3d. up; Steaua Romanas, at 11s. 9d., have gained 2s. 3d.; Dacia Romanos are unchanged at 11-16; while Hamilton's Concessions are unchanged at 2s. 6d. In the Egyptian group, Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields are ½ up at 1½.

Rubbers Steady.

There has been very little doing in the Rubber market. The tone of the raw commodity has been quiet, and business in the shares has been on a restricted scale, with price movements not of much significance. The market has, however, been quite steady, and it is obvious that it would take very little to bring about another upward movement.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

French Francs Lower.

On the whole, the exchanges have been steady during the week. The principal movement has been in the German mark, which from 185,000 has improved to 132,500. French francs have depreciated a little, and the Belgian quotation is also worse. Near Eastern exchanges have generally moved in our favour, Bucharest falling to 997½, while Constantinople is 750, as against 725.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½-97⅞
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22½	385
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	500*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	130-135,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	24.94
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.43½-1.4½
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	85.95
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	975-1,020
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	12,250
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.43½-1.4½
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	730-770
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.68½-4.68¾
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	75.65-75.70
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	158-158½
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	97
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	725-775*
Teheran	Krans to £	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	320-340
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	160-175,000

Nominal

ALEXANDRIA EXCHANGE.

Supplied by G. L. Mortera, Alexandria and Cairo.

Prices on February 2 were as follows:—Agricultural Bank of Egypt, £5½; Alexandria Water Co., Ltd., £9 9-16; Anglo-American Nile Steam, £3 25-64; Associated Cotton Ginners, £1 3-32; Banque d'Orient, 39½ fr.; Beheira Ord., £E6½; Brasseries d'Egypte, 50 fr.; Building Lands of Egypt, £1½; Cassi di Sconto Priv., 99½ fr.; Comptoir Fin et Com. d'Egypte, £1 11-16; Consolidated Lands, PT5½; Credit Foncier Fondateur, 1035 fr.; Credit Foncier Act, 701 fr.; Credit Foncier 1886 Oblig., 332 fr.; Eaux du Caire, Capital 92 fr.; Eaux de Caire Jouissance, 133 fr.; Egypt and Levant, S.S. Ord., 27s. 10½d.; Egyptian Delta Light Railways, £4½; Filature National d'Egypt, £8½; Immeubles d'Egypt Soc. an des., £7 5-16; Khedivial Mail S.S. Company Pref., £3 11-16; Kom Ombo Ste an de Wadi, £4½; Kom Ombo Ste An. Fondateur, £33½; Land Bank of Egypt, Parts de Fond, £55; Lots Turc., 33½ fr.; Menzaleh Canal Navigation, PT324; Grand Hotels d'Egypt, £10 5-16; Ramleh Railways, £2½; Urbaines et Rurales, £3 15-16; Union Fonciere Fond, £2.

The exportation of bran from Yugoslavia is now permitted on payment of an export duty of 25 dinars per 100 kilogrammes.

It is semi-officially stated that the Greek Ministry of National Economy is considering the introduction of the decimal system.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended January 20 amounted to £E8,580, making the total for the year £E276,786.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Sugar Rising : Oranges Harder.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Prices have been advanced all round. Tate's cubes have been done at 58s., a rise of 2s. 9d. Lyle's granulated has risen to 53s. 1½d., an advance of 2s. 10½d., while London granulated at 52s. 10½d. is 3s. 10½d. up. Foreign descriptions have been harder. West Indian crystallised is 1s. up at 46s. 6d., while white Mauritius has gained 1s. 4½d. at 48s. 3d. White Java at 49s. 10½d. is 1s. 10½d. up. Futures are:—March, 23s. 10½d.; May, 23s. 4½d.; August, 23s. 7½d.

Coffee.—The spot market has been quiet and steady. East Indian remains at 106s., Costa Rica is unchanged at 100s., while Nairobi is unaltered at 90s. Futures are:—March, 61s. 3d.; May, 60s. 10½d.; July, 59s. 3d.

Desiccated Coconut.—There has been an improved demand for this commodity and prices have hardened.

Rice.—There has not been much change in the position. The demand continues on a moderate scale, and rates are about the same. Any development of the demand should speedily lead to a rise in prices.

Green Fruit.—There have been only small arrivals of oranges during the week, which has strengthened the market position. Prices have firmed up, and it is probable that there will be a further advance in the near future. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 13s. to 35s. box (240's to 504's). There have been considerable arrivals of lemons, but the effect on prices has been very slight. Quotations are:—13s. to 20s. box (300's); 37s. to 40s. case (300's). Apples have been in fair demand at about the same rates. The heavy arrivals of onions referred to last week have continued, and the market has developed a weak tendency.

Dried Fruit.—The position remains much the same. Currants have continued in good request, and the market is rather firmer than a week ago. Sultanias have only been in moderate demand, and rates have tended to weaken. Plums have continued to move off freely, Bosnians being in strong request. Figs are one of the best spots in the dried fruit section, and it is clear that the market for this commodity has considerably developed. There is nothing new to record with regard to dates.

Oilseeds.—Linseed has been rather variable. Indian has been done at 20s. 6d., a decline of 1½d., while La Plata is 3d. up at 18s. 6d. Rape-seed has been fairly firm, with Toria 1½d. up at 17s. 4½d. Cottonseed has been a shade harder. Indian has gained 1½d. at 9s. 4½d. Egyptian black is 1½d. up at 12s. 4½d., while Sakellaridis is unchanged at 11s. 9d.

Oils.—Linseed has been a firm spot, closing 2s. 3d. up at 42s. 3d. Rape oil is harder, with crude 6d. up at 44s., and technical refined 2d. up at 47s. Cotton oil is about the same. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s.; technical remains at 40s., while deodorised is the same at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The position remains the same. Linseed cake remains at 280s., coconut cake is unchanged at 190s., cottonseed cake is the same at 165s., while cottonmeal cake is unaltered at 270s.

AGRICULTURE IN IRAK.

Condition of Crops.

The following extracts are taken from the "Agricultural Bulletin" of Irak for the month ended December 15:—

Until the third week in November the weather remained unusually warm. This had the effect of continuing plant growth to the advantage of all summer crops, especially cotton. Towards the end of the month, however, it cooled down considerably, and has since remained seasonably cold. In Lower Irak the want of rain is seriously felt, and unless sufficient rain falls within the year there will be considerable shortage in the flood-canal areas. The daim sown areas of Northern Irak are said to have had plenty of rain for their requirements so far.

Harvesting of rice crops has been completed. Yields have been exceptionally good this year, particularly in the Shamiyah area. Early sown wheat and barley has germinated well, and good growth is reported. The cotton crop has benefited by the prolonged hot weather, and picking continued much later than usual. The harvesting of citrus fruits in the Ba'qubah area has commenced.

Condition of Stock.

There is but little grazing to be had in the meantime owing to lack of early and sufficient rainfall. Small quantities of green fodder are now available from early sown barley, but otherwise it is very scarce. Fortunately the supply of "Tibbn" continues plentiful. Draught animals are in good condition, but sheep are beginning to fall off owing to scarcity of grazing.

The Director of Civil Veterinary Department reports that an outbreak of cattle disease occurred at Samarra. After systematic investigation it was found that rinderpest re-appeared amongst the cattle of Albu-Issa and Albu-Abbas tribes of Samarra. Five hundred and thirty head of cattle were protected with anti-rinderpest serum, and twenty-four cattle were treated for the disease. Ten deaths occurred before veterinary aid could be rendered. The existence of rinderpest was also discovered in Benet-al Hassan and Sawiyah of the same district and amongst the cattle of Jumma tribes of Balad. Five hundred and sixty-five head of cattle were inoculated against rinderpest, and 68 were treated for the disease. Two hundred and ninety-five cattle died before inoculation. Outbreak of rinderpest was also reported from Sherqat, and the Veterinary Officer of the Mosul Liwa is dealing with the situation.

Rustamiyah Experimental Farm.

Wheat and barley selections which have been propagated in the last two years have been classified by the plant breeder, and arranged for further propagation and single line varietal tests. Sowings have been completed of fifteen varieties of wheat undergoing plot varietal tests, and twenty varieties of wheat of which there is not sufficient to sow more than one plot. Cotton pickings on experimental plots have been very heavy. Seven out of sixteen varieties have yielded over 2,000 lbs. seed cotton per acre. Bulk cotton grown on a commercial scale is averaging out at a little over 600 lbs. per acre. "Dent" and "Flint" varieties of maize have failed to ripen so far, but the former variety appears to have formed good cobs. The wheat and barley sown by the share system cultivators appears to be doing well.

THE ADRIATIC BANK

(Jadranska Banka).

Head Office - - - BELGRADE, JUGOSLAVIA.

Cable Address: "Jadranska."

Capital - - - Dinars 60,000,000

Surplus - - - " 30,000,000

BRANCHES:

Beograd, Bled, Cavtat, Celje, Dubrovnik, Ercegnovi, Jelsa, Jesenice, Korcula, Kotor, Kranj, Ljubljana, Maribor, Metkovic, Prevalje, Sarajevo, Split, Sibenik, Trzic and Zagreb.

Foreign Department.

Affiliated Banks:

BANCO YUGOSLAVO DE CHILE: Valparaiso, Antofagasta, Punta Arenas, Porvenir and Puerto Natales, Chile.
BANCA ADRIATICA: Abbazia, Trieste and Zara.
ADRIATISCHE BANK, Vienna.
FRANK SAKSER STATE BANK, New York City.

Banking business of every description transacted at all Branches, Affiliated Banks and through Correspondents. Bills collected and negotiated. Letters of Credit and Drafts issued. Commercial Credits established at all Branches and Agencies of the Bank in Yugoslavia and abroad.

Miscellaneous.

Results are to hand of date-manurial trials carried out in Basrah this year. These are not conclusive, and continued experiments over a period of years will be necessary before reliable figures can be obtained.

A new tractor of German design has been imported into the country. As far as can be ascertained, it has not been sold, and a demonstration is necessary before comment can be made on the likelihood of its suitability or otherwise.

Seed of Sesbania aegyptica is being brought out by the Department of Agriculture this winter. Plants have attained a growth of 14 ft. at Alwiyah. These have been grown from seed sown last April, and it is hoped that by sowing along water channels a quick effective growth may frequently be obtained. The disadvantage of Sesbania is that it does not withstand hard frost, but it comes well away in the spring. Applications for seed may be sent to the Director of Agriculture.

The export of barley still continues, but prices show signs of stiffening on account of delayed rains this winter, combined with the quantities which have already been exported. The following exports are also of interest:—Dates (cases, baskets, etc.): Between September 1 and October 31, 64,609 tons. Millet: Between May and October, 800 tons. Arab horses: For the three months of September, October, and November, 450.

Crossley Gas Producer Plant.—This, it is believed, is the first of its kind to be introduced into Irak. Plans are in progress for its erection at Rustam, and it is hoped that suitable fuel can be found in the country which will make it a more economical proposition than using kerosene oil as at present.

Sericulture.—Training in reeling and grading of silk has been in progress at Ba'qubah. The Silk Inspector has toured the Diyala area and secured orders for more silk-worm eggs than it will be possible to supply in the coming spring. Past experience, however, goes to show that as the season approaches and cultivators are asked to pay for the eggs which they have ordered, there is a considerable falling off in the demand. The varieties which have given the best results so far are the Italian and Bulgarian. Thanks to the assistance rendered by the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, it has been possible to secure a limited quantity of eggs of these varieties; they are now en route, and should arrive by January, 1923.

SUDAN PRODUCE.

The following extracts are taken from the report of the Central Economic Board of the Sudan Government for December.—

Gum.

The exports of gum during December were:—Via Port Sudan, 2,035 kilos of bleached of the value of £E121, 314,609 kilos of the value of £E15,703, 237,857 kilos of talh of the value of £E4,444, and 19,123 kilos of gum dust of the value of £E312, and via frontier posts 567 kilos of hashab of the value of £E8.

Kordofan Province.—The amount of gum sold in Obeid Market during December was 4,403 kantars, as against 7,135 kantars during the same month last year. The average price was £E1.649 per kantar of 100 rottles (45 kilos). The arrivals at El Obeid from Nahud were 3,014 kantars, as against 3,315 kantars last year. 6,639 kantars were sold at Nahud at an average price of £E1.330 per kantar. 1,960 kantars were sold at Um-Ruaba at £E1.612, as against 3,311 kantars last year. 7,111 kantars were sold at Rahad at prices ranging from £E1.750 to £E1.400 per kantar, as against 2,883 kantars last year.

Cotton.

Dongola Province.—Gurier: Cotton is ripening well and is now coming in in good quantities. Nuri: The cotton is being picked, and up to date 110 kantars of 315 rottles (unginned) have been brought in.

Berber Province.—Gendettu: Some of the earlier sown cotton has given 2½ kantars of 315 rottles (unginned) per feddan to date. Bouga: The American cotton has yielded 466 kantars of 315 rottles (unginned) to date. The Sakel cotton is backward. Most of the later sown is still flowering, and very little has been picked so far.

Blue Nile Province.—November: On the whole, cotton crops are promising. American cotton grown on rain lands looks particularly well, especially strips in the depressions near the railway line caused by borrow pits between El Hag Abdulla and Sennar.

Kassala Province.—November: Cotton is looking well and healthy, and cultivators are busy weeding it. This weeding is somewhat costly, owing to the heavy flood.

Dura and Dukhn.

White Nile Province.—The total crop of the province has been assessed at about 222,000 ardebs of 300 rottles (135 kilos). The price of feterita was 315 m/ms. and of safra dura 545 m/ms. per ardeb of 300 rottles at Dueim.

White Nile Province.—The total crop of dukhn of the province, as shown by the assessment, is about 25,000 ardebs of 300 rottles (135 kilos).

Kordofan Province.—171 ardebs of 420 rottles of (189 kilos) of dukhn were sold in El Obeid market at an average price of P.T.91 per ardeb.

Sesame.

White Nile Province.—The total crop of simsim of the province, as shown by the assessment, is about 25,000 ardebs of 300 rottles (135 kilos). The price at Dueim was P.T. 130 per ardeb of 330 rottles (148 kilos). 593 tons of simsim were exported from Tendelti and 331 tons from Kosti.

Kordofan Province.—498 ardebs of sesame were sold in El Obeid market at an average price of £E1.100 per ardeb of 330 rottles (148 kilos).

Ground Nuts.

White Nile Province.—The total crop of ful Sudani of the province has been assessed at about 6,000 ardebs of 200 rottles (90 kilos). The price in Dueim varied between £E1 to P.T. 90 per ardeb of 200 rottles during the month.

Kordofan Province.—2,405 ardebs of 210 rottles (94 kilos) of ful Sudani were sold in El Obeid market at an average price of 825 m/ms. per ardeb.

Rainfall and Cultivation.

Nuba Mountains Province.—November: Crops may be considered good throughout the province. Any failure there has been is due to too much rain and not to a lack of it. Certain parts of the Kawahla Hills suffered much in this respect, and the crops at Gadir and Garada are reported to be poor. The rains, though late in starting, have been exceptionally heavy throughout the province. It is reported from Rashad that the rains this year are the heaviest known for forty years. Much damage was done to the roads in many places, but they have now all been repaired.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	Dr. C. A. ANDRIKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

FOOTWEAR IN PERSIA.

By far the greater part of the population in Persia still utilises the cheap, poorly finished native product for winter use, and the native givch or cloth foot covering during the rest of the year (says the American Consul at Teheran, Mr. Bernard Gotlieb, in a recent report). The uppers of the givch are made from special hand-woven, mercerised cotton cloth which is quite durable. The bottoms are composed of old rags pressed together and sewn with cord.

On the whole, the givch is a most practicable and slightly foot covering, although, of course, quite useless in rainy weather. Many Europeans wear them through the spring, summer, and fall seasons; they are in special favour as house slippers and tennis shoes, the compressed sole being non-burning and of surprising resiliency. They are much more practicable for this latter purpose than the customary rubber-soled tennis shoe, which deteriorates rapidly in the dry Persian climate. The ordinary givchs retail at from 8 to 40 krans per pair, according to quality.

Shipping Intelligence.

TRADE OF BUNDER ABBAS IN 1921-22.

Conditions at the Port.

Only a very small proportion of the goods landed at Bunder Abbas is consumed in the place itself; the bulk is forwarded to Kerman, Yezd, and other distributing centres in the interior (says H.M. Consul-General at Bushire in a recent report). The roadstead is an open one and very shallow. Port, in the European acceptation of the word, there is none; there are neither wharves nor lights, and owing to the shallowness of the water ships are compelled to anchor about one and a half to two miles out. A buoy in about 5 fathoms at low tide placed and maintained by the Royal Indian Marine Authorities marks the best anchorage at a point $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the shore at the nearest point slightly east of the British Consulate and about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Customs pier. Some ships, however, anchor opposite the town, as it is more convenient for discharging cargo. The various shipping agents maintain about a dozen lighters into which goods are transferred from steamers. The goods are landed on a short masonry pier, which, however, possesses no cranes, and is high and dry at low water. Lighters can therefore only come alongside for about four hours at high water, and frequently have to wait a long time before they can discharge their cargo. This delay affords ample opportunity, especially at night, for tampering with the cargo in the lighters, and pilferage has been reduced to a fine art in Bunder Abbas. Trustworthy police are difficult to obtain, and the only solution of the question seems to lie in the extension and adequate lighting of the Customs pier, at present apparently impracticable on financial grounds.

Imports and Exports.

According to the Report on the Trade and Commerce of Bunder Abbas for the Persian official year (March 21, 1921, to March 20, 1922), the value of the import trade for that period was £1,048,408, as compared with £1,673,344 in the previous year. The principal countries of origin of these imports were: India (£827,968), United Kingdom (£84,077), Oman (£58,527), Belgium (£29,849), and Java (£20,232). The principal commodities imported included cotton and cotton piece-goods (£486,484), sugar (£285,196), rice (£74,688), tea (£42,912), wheat and barley (£13,346), dyes, colours and paints (£12,747), and flour (£10,987).

The value of the export trade of Bunder Abbas during the year under review was £342,950, as compared with £570,907 in the previous year. The principal recipient countries were India (£183,859), Oman (£56,983), United States (£45,915), and the United Kingdom (£9,441), whilst the principal commodities exported included carpets (£77,523), dates (£42,910), almonds and pistachios (£36,864), assafoetida (£24,475), raw cotton (£16,934), raisins (£16,902), and gum tragacanth (£15,290).

Local Industries.

The main occupations of the poorer inhabitants are fishing and date cultivation, in certain parts of the district (particularly Qishm Island), the weaving of native garments, and the making of a kind of cement, while many find permanent or periodical employment on seagoing vessels and shipping companies' harbour lighters. A few boats are built on Qishm Island.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Castalia for Bombay (Liverpool, March 2).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Masirah for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 26); s.s. Holywell for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 28); s.s. Magdapur for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 8); s.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 14); s.s. Maidan for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 17); s.s. Imani for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 28).

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Bibby Line.—S.s. Oxfordshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 28).

British India Line.—S.s. Neuralia for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 16); s.s. Mulbera for Bombay and Karachi (London, February 23); s.s. Mantola for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 2); s.s. Mandala for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 9); s.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Tyria for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Glasgow, March 19).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Griqua for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 24).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Marseilles for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 21); s.s. City of Canterbury for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 7).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Cairo for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, February 27).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Egyptian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, February 17); s.s. Eden Hall for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 28); s.s. Mardinian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, March 3).

Ellerman Bucknall and Strick Line.—S.s. Frankenfels for the Persian Gulf (London, March 6).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Peruviana for Galatz and Braila (Liverpool, February 21); s.s. Kenmore for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Mantua for Bombay (London, February 23); s.s. Nore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 23); s.s. Malwa for Bombay (London, March 2); s.s. Kaiser-i-Hind for Bombay (London, March 9); s.s. Plassy for Bombay (London, March 20); s.s. Mirzapore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 24).

Rishon-le-Zion has been approved by the Palestine Government as a municipality.

The production of crude oil by the British Burmah Petroleum Co., Ltd., and the Rangoon Oil Co., Ltd., for January amounted to 65,675 barrels.

The Government of India have decided as a temporary measure for one year to exempt from the payment of export duty jute rags used for paper making, i.e., old bags, pieces of cloth or rope torn or worn out and useless for the purpose to which cloth or rope are ordinarily put. The decision took effect from January 2.

Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co. notify that they are now prepared to receive provisional scrip certificates of the London issue of the Czecho-Slovak State Loan of 1922 to be exchanged for definitive bonds. Scrip certificates should be lodged either personally or through a London banker or other London agent. Listing forms may be obtained on application at 8, Bishopsgate, E.C.2.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO

GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS

PIRÆUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA

SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE

BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA

also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR

GENOA LECHORN NAPLES PALERMO

MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI

ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP

AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND

BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES

PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND

DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.

LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.

OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Kermanshah, December 30.

At the beginning of the winter the Kermanshah Customs statistics showed decreased activity compared with the previous months. For the month of Aghrab (October 21 to November 21) the Customs receipts were—Imports, 1,804,098.50 krans; exports, 66,828.40 krans; total, 1,870,926.90 krans; while for the month of Gause (November 21 to December 21) the receipts were:—Imports, 1,624,578 krans; exports, 27,822.40 krans; total, 1,652,400.40 krans. This marked decrease, especially in exports, is clearly caused by the transport difficulties on the roads, which are nearly impassable during this period.

Jaffa, January 20.

The latest reports received from the United Kingdom for oranges are quite promising. Prices ranged from 12s. 6d. to 15s. per case. About 1,000 tons of barley from Syria were sold in the market this week.

Jerusalem, January 20.

Trade is very slack, and will only improve on the arrival of tourists.

Zahlé, January 29.

Commercial activity here has relaxed in comparison with the preceding month, on account of the inclement weather, which has prevented the villagers of the Plain of Béka from coming to Zahlé to make purchases. Business in cereals has been restricted, and the changes in prices have been without interest. There has been little demand for leather from Zahlé and Mashgara (Béka). Some shipments of wine from Chtaura and arrack from Zahlé have been made to Beyrout and the interior.

The following is a list of the shipments (in kilos) made by rail from Malaka during the month under review:—Beyrout, 49,000, cereals, onions, grapes, wines, etc.; Damascus, 9,000, grapes, arrack, wines, and leather; Aleppo, 44,000, arrack, wines, and various goods; Homs, 3,900, arrack, wines, leather, and assorted; Hamah, 1,500, arrack and wines; to various ports, 6,000, different products.

On the other hand, the weight of the goods which have arrived has risen to 79,300 kilos, made up as follows:—Beyrout, 21,000, flour, iron, planks, agricultural machinery, and miscellaneous; Damascus, 23,000, cereals, flour, fruit, etc.; Aleppo, 2,300, butter, etc.; Homs, 2,700; vegetables, skins, etc.; Hamah, 1,300, butter, onions, etc.; from various ports, 29,000, made up of coal, carpets, olive oil, and oranges.

The decrease in the purchasing power of the Syrian pound has tended to cause an increase of from 3 to 4 per cent. in the cost of living. The macadamisation of a portion of the railway route Zahlé-Beyrout is being actively pursued on the narrow part of the line at Dahr-el-Baidar.

Beneficial rains have fallen here, and have been followed by a temperature favourable to the growth of the crops.

Aleppo, December 31.

The sowings have been rapidly completed. The rains were abundant and continuous during the month, which indicates a good harvest. In view of the good prospects prices of cereals have fallen by 15 per cent. in comparison with last month. On the other hand, the winter clemency having favoured, up to the present, the rearing of cattle, prices of butter have fallen from 20 to 25 per cent. in comparison with last month. A further fall is expected in view of the demand from abroad having diminished. The price of meat has, on the other hand, risen from 10 to 12 per cent. This rise is due to the strong demand from Egypt, Palestine, and the coast, and to the decrease in arrivals from Anatolia.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

The Imperial Ottoman Bank, its Branches and Associations in the Near East.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
J. UNGAR
E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
HAMID BEY.
NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
E. W. H. BARRY.
THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
C.M.G.
THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
O.B.E.
SIR W. GUY GRANET.
SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
LORD HILLINGDON.
GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
K.P., P.C.
LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
JEAN BOISSONNAS.
CHARLES DE CERJAT.
HORACE FINALY.
GEORGES HEINE.
ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
RAOUL MALLET.
LE COMTE FREDERIC
PILLET-WILL
FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager : E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary : C. E. L. CORTHORN.
Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary : R. S. C. PEARCE.
Assistant Manager : W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
7, Rue Meyerbeer.
CONSTANTINOPLE.
(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Weak Tendency.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt, in their report for the week ended February 2, state:—Since our last report the futures market has shown again a very weak tendency, and values close considerably lower than a week ago. The recent setback in prices in America, and this week's bad political news, both local and international, have affected the market very unfavourably, and speculation, which had for some time taken hardly any interest, thought the opportunity advantageous for going "short"; in one session it is estimated that over 50,000 kantars were sold for account of Cairo speculators, and these sales caused a drop in prices of $\frac{3}{4}$ dol. The demand from abroad has been moderate, and being, as heretofore, mainly for uppers and low grades of Sakellaridis, left the market bare of trade support. A feature of the week is the renewed steadiness of the near positions of Ashmouni contracts, the discount of February Ashmouni to March Sakellaridis having now reached $3\frac{3}{4}$ dols., as against $4\frac{1}{4}$ dols. last week. The cheapness of their values compared to Americans, and the restricted quantities offered for sale on the spot market, explain this steadiness. The unsettled condition on the Ruhr, and the less hopeful prospects for an early solution of the Near East question, have had a demoralising effect on the Continental exchanges, resulting in a further reduction of the purchasing powers of these countries; on the other hand, the arrangement concluded between England and America covering the refundment of the war debts has been welcome.

Exports continue to be heavy. The total since September 1 has now reached 4,200,000 kantars, against 3,100,000 kantars last year. The Alexandria stocks show a decrease, and stand at 2,300,000 kantars, against about 2,500,000 kantars last year. We foresee a steady decline of stocks as the season progresses, as undoubtedly present prices of Egyptian cotton are very cheap compared to competing growths, and one may expect that a fair proportion of any trade demand arising will come our way. One of the reasons given for the unexpectedly heavy arrivals from the interior this season is the large quantities of Scarto and Afrita received, about 300,000 to 400,000 kantars, which come not only from this year's crop but also from the crops of the last two years, as they were held in the interior, because the Government tax of $1\frac{1}{2}$ dols. per kantar on cotton sent to Alexandria would have been ruinous on these low-priced cottons. This tax has now been removed. This cotton had been practically entirely neglected during the previous two years, but this year there has been a good demand for it, and large quantities have been shipped. In view of the above we think that the Government estimate of the amount of cotton remaining in the interior at August 31 last is wide of the mark, and we consider that it should be put at about 500,000 kantars. As a consequence, we expect that the arrivals at Alexandria up to August 31 next will total about 6,000,000 kantars.

Spot.—Total sales this week amount to about 13,300 bales, of which we estimate 9,100 bales Sakellaridis, 4,100 bales uppers, and 100 bales Nubari. In general the spot market is distinctly firmer than the futures market, and shows little inclination to follow any drop in price in the latter.

Sakellaridis.—Practically no business has been done in grades above fully good fair. There continues to be a good demand for the medium grades, but only a moderate turnover has been effected owing to sellers' reluctance to follow the drop in contracts.

Upper Egypt.—The demand for fully good fair to good continues. After being more or less neglected the lower grades are again sought after, but, as previously mentioned, these cottons are not too plentiful.

Nubari.—A small business has been done in this variety, but owing to the scarcity of this cotton very full prices have to be paid.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Market Quiet and Steady.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended February 7:—

During the past week the market has remained quietly steady, with a slight upward tendency applying particularly to Upper cotton. A very fair inquiry has been witnessed, running on much the same lines as heretofore, but the amount of business reported shows a further falling off, and spinners appear to be waiting for a recrudescence of the demand from abroad, or for some more or less definite indication as to the immediate trend of affairs in the political world, before entering into further commitments. Sakellaridis, 16d.—18d., has figured largely in the inquiry, and the bulk of the business this week has been transacted in this quality. The majority of the lots sold at anything under 17d. appear to contain a fairly large proportion of machined, or so-called "re-cleaned," cotton. Uppers, 15 $\frac{3}{4}$ d.—16 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., have enjoyed a species of mild revival. Practically nothing remains now in this nature at anything under 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., but at that figure, and above it, plenty of cotton to meet present requirements comes into sight. The basis, both here and in Alexandria, has stiffened again, and indications point to a still further hardening in the near future. Sudan cotton has received little support, but both brown and white cotton have been in improved request, though but little business has resulted.

Manchester reports have been quiet and featureless, but the tone there has improved slightly during the last two days. C.i.f. business has been hard to find, and bids wired out have mostly been of the "forlorn hope" variety. Forwardings to spinners for the week ending the 2nd instant were placed at 10,549 bales, a distinct improvement on the previous week. Total sales, 2,900 (includes 70 Sudan). Quotations are all advanced 25 points. Fully Good Fair Sakellaridis 17.90d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

A Dull Week.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended February 10 states:—

Traders have experienced a dull week, the demand from all quarters being small. The only market which can be said to have shown some improvement as compared with recent weeks is China, from which centre more business, though of a very modest character, has been forthcoming. Many offers have had to be refused owing to inadequate prices. Manufacturers have not yet worked off the orders they received during the better trading of last month, and are disposed to take a fairly independent attitude unless the prices offered suit them.

Yarn.—Trading has been quieter in common with general conditions. There is nothing of special importance to report with regard to any individual outlet. It is interesting to note that statistics now available for the week ending January 20 in respect of approximately one-third of the spindles using American cotton show a considerable reduction in stocks at that date as compared with previous weeks. Trading has been quieter, however, since that time, and it is probable that during the last fortnight, at any rate, stocks have again increased. Quotations for standard qualities of yarn show practically no change during the past week.

Cloth.—Inquiry has been on a fair scale, but much of it has not resulted in definite orders, and as a consequence turnover has been considerably less than production. As already mentioned, a few orders have come to hand from China, but, although this is an improvement, that market still remains in a very bad way. The Near East generally may still be considered as out of the picture. Regarding the minor markets there is nothing of interest to report, and home trade remains for the present very dull.

Raw Cotton.—Prices are higher on the week, but the market has been very unsettled, presumably owing to the temporary breakdown of the Lausanne Conference. The weaker state of the Manchester market has resulted in a lessened demand in Liverpool, where sales have been slow. Closing prices are as follows: American fully middling, 15.84d.; Egyptian fully good fair, 17.65d.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Egypt.

Cast Iron Weights.—The Physical Department of the Egyptian Ministry of Public Works invites tenders covering delivery to the Central Stores of the Department in Egypt for the supply of 51,650 cast-iron weights of various denominations in accordance with drawings. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Photographic Materials.—Tenders are invited by the Egyptian Ministry of the Interior for various photographic materials required during 1923. The goods required include photographic apparatus and accessories, plates, paper, cinematograph film stock and apparatus, and small quantities of miscellaneous photographic chemicals, etc. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Company Meetings.

CREDIT FONCIER EGYPTIEN.

The following is a translation of the report of the Crédit Foncier Egyptien, which was presented to the shareholders at the annual general meeting, held at Cairo on January 19:—

The year 1922 has marked an important epoch from the political point of view; Egypt has been recognised and her independence proclaimed. Her ruler has taken the title of King of Egypt. We tender to Fouad I. our humble and devoted homage, and we trust that the new régime, which ought soon to receive its constitutional form, will be able to carry out a programme inspired by the obvious interests of the country.

The cotton crop of 1921 yielded 5,358,284 kantars. The stock at August 31, 1921, was 1,835,000 kantars. There was thus an amount of 7,193,284 kantars at the disposal of commerce from September 1, 1921, to August 31, 1922. The exports have risen to 5,861,284 kantars. It has not been possible to give a precise estimate of the new crop. It is known, however, that the arrivals at Alexandria up to December 29, 1922, were 4,362,548 kantars, as compared with 3,053,109 kantars at December 29, 1921. The exports have followed a similar course, rising from 2,436,189 to 3,120,003 kantars at the corresponding dates. The price of cotton, which in October, 1921, sharply rose to 61 talaris, to fall back to 40, has subsequently fluctuated between 30 and 40 talaris, with a tendency to stabilisation round about 35. That rate is nearly double the pre-war quotation. It is interesting to note that the cost of agricultural labour does not differ greatly from that of 1914. Some difficulties have naturally arisen between buyers and sellers of lands, and between owners and tenants in regard to contracts entered into when cotton had reached an extremely high price. These disputes are now nearly ended. The economic situation, thanks especially to a sound currency and public finance free from all new debts, tends rapidly to approach the normal.

That is the conclusion which is to be drawn from the balance-sheet that we closed on October 31 last. Our mortgages show for the first time since 1914 a surplus of realisations of £E102,477, the realisations standing at £E1,838,335, and the redemptions at £E1,735,858. The redemptions before that date only amounted to £E172,369. The sales by auction have been of small importance.

The balance of the account for annual and six-monthly payments and interest due amounted at October 31, 1921, to £E1,315,757. Adding the maturities of the year, £E1,985,557, we have a total of £E3,301,314. At October 31, 1922, we had collected £E1,862,177. The amount of our arrears stands thus at £E1,439,137, and this year again affects little more than last year or the previous year the position with regard to payments due. The account of "Tiers Adjudicataires" has fallen during the year from £E221,193 to £E133,379. The account of real estate acquired by expropriation has remained unchanged at £E24,869. In regard to all these heads which refer to our mortgage business, the situation can be regarded as satisfactory.

During the year the total of our collections amounted to £E3,505,158. New mortgage loans have absorbed £E1,042,585, and the total of our disbursements is £E3,772,505, leaving an excess of expenditure of £E267,347. That sum will be found in the balance-sheet in the difference between the total of the assets at October 31, 1921, of £E13,885,596, and the corresponding total at October 31, 1922, of £E13,618,249. That is the explanation of the decrease in the total of our English securities, which from £E5,432,871 at October 31, 1921, have been reduced to £E5,025,260 at October 31, 1922. The realisation of a part of these securities has enabled us to continue our purchases of bonds. The purchases carried out during the year totalled 33,934 shares. On October 31, 1922, we had in our bill case 88,388 bonds, representing an investment at mean rates of 6.17 per cent. These bonds have been acquired at a total cost of £E870,002, at which they appear in the balance-sheet. That figure is £E540,693 below the cost price of these bonds in our books. During the year we deemed it desirable to realise our War Bonds 1922-1923, and to replace them by War Bonds 1927-1928-1929, which have the double advantage of safeguarding our revenue for a longer period and of substituting for a premium of 2 per cent. a premium of 5 per cent. We have proceeded likewise as regards our investments in France.

The profit and loss account, which has benefited by a marked increase in the interest on our mortgage loans, has, on the other hand, been affected by a decrease in the yield of our securities. Repayments in advance and the account "Tiers Adjudicataires" are shown respectively by the lower totals of £E9,313 and £E10,381. The total of our receipts is lower by £E14,980 than that of last year. Our expenses have decreased by £E3,074. The burden of French taxes has decreased by £E2,291. We have obtained recently from the Commission des Valeurs Mobilières the reduction of our taxable quota to 50 per cent, of our operations. That reduction can only take a progressive effect in proportion to the expiration of the triennial contract for our various series of bonds. We remain, on the other hand, exposed to an increase of the tax on consecutive transfer by the rise in the quotations for our shares.

The gross proceeds of the year amounted to £E2,034,314. The corresponding expenditure was £E1,356,124. The amount of distributable profits stands thus at £E678,190, enabling the allocation of P.T.136 to the shares and £E33,500 to the Founders' shares, subject to deduction of French taxes; or, under the present régime, P.T.23 for the shares which circulate in France, or on which the coupon No. 48 has been paid in France, and 12 per cent. for the Founders' shares liable to French taxes. If you agree to these proposals, the position of the various reserve and provision accounts will stand as follows at November 1, 1922:—Statutory reserve, £E747,686.410, or 19,382,667.79 frs.; extraordinary reserve, £E970,773.067, or 25,165,860.45 frs.; provision for the reduction of the premium on bonds, £E574,416.580, or 14,890,902.92 frs.; provision and reserve for sundry contingencies, £E1,337,460.449, or 34,671,690.19 frs.; provision for dividend on shares, £E226,426.470, or 5,869,772.39 frs.; total, £E3,856,762.976, or 99,980,893.74 frs.; loan account for drawings of the 1911 issue, £E141,885.340, or 3,678,168.24 frs.; total £E3,998,648.316, or 103,659,061.98 frs. For the account, "Provision for the amortisation of bonds," £E994,841.671, or 25,789,803.52 frs. Our staff has continued to give us devoted assistance, and we take this opportunity of thanking them.

The general meeting (1) approved the accounts for the year ended October 31, 1922; (2) adopted the division of profits proposed by the board of directors, and decided in consequence on (a) the distribution for the year on the 400,000 shares of a dividend of P.T.136 per share, £E544,000 or 14,102,397.92 frs.; on the 2,000 Founders' shares of P.T.3,350 per share, £E67,000, or 1,736,876.21 frs.; (b) the allocation to the statutory reserve of £E44,673.952, or 1,158,106.34 frs.; to the board of directors £E22,336.976, or 579,053.17 frs.; (c) to carry forward from the account of the ordinary shares £E14,691.361, or 380,851.87 frs.; from the account of the Founders' shares £E75.867, or 1,966.74 frs.; total, £E692,778.156, or 17,959,252.25 frs., representing the amount of the profits of the year and the sums brought forward from the previous year; (3) decided that the dividend on the ordinary shares and on the Founders' shares should be payable in Cairo in piastres, and in Paris and London at the rates of exchange fixed by the board of directors, less French taxes, or P.T.23 for the shares which circulate in France, or on which coupon No. 48 has been paid in France and 12 per cent. for the Founders' shares liable to French taxes; (4) re-elected in accordance with Articles 15 and 36 of the statutes as directors for five years, MM. R. Rolo, P. Boyer, and G. Griolet; (5) confirmed, in accordance with Article 77 of the statutes, the appointment as director, provisionally made by the board, of S. E. Adly Pacha Yeghen; (6) re-elected as auditors for one year, MM. R. Finzi and E. Berthy. These decisions were carried unanimously.

IONIAN BANK.

The annual general meeting of the Ionian Bank, Ltd., was held at the company's offices, Basildon House, Moorgate, E.C.2, on February 13, the chairman, Sir John Stavridi, presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. W. A. Shaw), having read the notice convening the meeting and the report of the auditors,

The Chairman said that the past year, if perhaps a little less trying than the previous one, had not been without its serious difficulties. During the whole period covered by the accounts they presented to them Greece was at war. As they would have seen from the returns of the various British banks, in nearly all cases had the profits been materially reduced, and if in their case he was able, in presenting their accounts to them, to congratulate them once more on the continued prosperity of the bank, he must warn them frankly at the outset that, in the past eight months, their profits have benefited largely by the high rate of interest at which it had been possible to employ money in Greece, and equally by the unhealthy stimulus to trade arising from the depreciated state of her currency.

No banker, no economist, whether Greek or English, wished for the continuance of such conditions. They were abnormal and intrinsically unsound. They must look forward to the return of healthier conditions in the matter of the value of the drachma and, provided the recovery was gradual, the sooner it came the better. But when it did come there was, he thought, sure to be a drop in the gross profit earnings of all banks in Greece.

Speaking for themselves, he would reassure them; for in uttering this warning he was looking only at the figure of the gross earnings. Being a British institution carrying on business in Greece, the net product of their earnings would not be affected. At present they had to turn their drachma profits into sterling in order to bring them to London, and with a depreciated drachma the loss of profit caused thereby was serious. As the Greek exchange improved the probably smaller drachma earnings would rise in their sterling value.

On the subject of the possible course of exchange, Sir John Stavridi referred to the condition of Greek finances, and stated that he looked upon the figures quoted as proof that, with a return to peace and normal conditions, the country would rapidly rehabilitate itself. When once Greece had solved the heartrending problem of resettling the refugees from Smyrna, Thrace and Anatolia, and when she had absorbed the newcomers into her population as a wealth-producing element, her prospects were bound to be still brighter.

Turning to the question of currency depreciation, he said that it was common knowledge that, during the Great War, the Allied Powers, Great Britain, France, and the United States, guaranteed a joint loan to Greece. That loan was intended for the advantage not of Greece only, but of the Allied Powers themselves. For their convenience Greece undertook to issue paper currency in Salonika for the benefit of the Allied troops, and the Great Powers granted credits against the issue of currency. Greece made the issue accordingly, and it was not too much to say that in doing so she made possible the whole of the operations of the Allies on the Salonika Front. Then came the Armistice and the return of King Constantine to Greece, after which America, France, and Great Britain suspended these credits. What was Greece to do? She was forced to shoulder the burden herself, and to this day she was carrying nearly 1,000 millions of watered currency for the retirement of which the Great Powers were responsible. As soon as the three Great Powers, the United States, Great Britain, and France, authorised the use of the credits granted in the years 1917-1918, the fiduciary circulation of the drachma would be reduced by 829 millions. His own opinion was that when such a reduction took place it would automatically bring the drachma to a much more reasonable figure.

Passing to Egypt, he said that it was satisfactory to find that the balance of trade showed a great improvement, and that during the eight months under review the exports and imports were practically equal at £E27,500,000, whilst for the same months in 1921 the imports totalled £E37,455,000 and the exports only £E17,449,000.

As there had lately been rumours of the possibility of a change in the system under which note currency was now issued, he would like to emphasise the remarks he made in his previous speech, that any change in the system would hamper trade, and consequently would be very detrimental to the financial position of Egypt.

As regards their own business, they had again been the means of financing a very good proportion of the total cotton crop, the amount passing through their hands from September 1, 1921, to August 31, 1922, totalling 687,130 kantars, which was equivalent to 12.8 per cent. of the total crop. He thought they would agree that, when taking into consideration the number of banks and export firms who were dealing in this produce, the percentage handled by them was very satisfactory.

PROMINENT INDIAN INDUSTRIES

LALIMLI

PURE WOOL

Manufacturers of
"Everything made of Wool"
from Coolie Blankets to Fine
Worsts including Braid
Felt, Hosiery & Knitted Goods,
Tweeds and Tartan Rugs.

The CAWNPORE WOOLLEN MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

N.W.T.

FOR HARNESS, SADDLERY,
TRUNKS, SUIT CASES,
FANCY LEATHER GOODS,
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Taxidermists etc.

The NORTH WEST TANNERY &
CAWNPORE.

Kakomi

Cawnpore

Manufacturers of

TENTS,
DURRIES,
TWEEDS, DRILLS, FLANNELS,
SHEETINGS, TOWELS ETC.,

The CAWNPORE COTTON MILLS &
CAWNPORE.

Dhariwal

LONG LIFE WOOL WEAR

BLANKETS, TRAVELLING
RUGS, KNITTED GOODS, TWEEDS
SERGES WORSTEDS BRAIDS
HOSIERY ETC.

The NEW EGERTON WOOLLEN MILLS &
DHARIWAL, PUNJAB.

Branches of The British India Corporation, Limited.
CAWNPORE.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - - - - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Duzdab, Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohammerah, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shubstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Busreh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd. LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL . . . £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL . . . £485,580
RESERVE . . . £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
 1, Devonshire Square,
 London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
 weekly for _____ months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION RATES U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum;
 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
 Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NOROOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - - Rs. 5.62.35.500
Reserve - - - - Rs. 4.11.82.805

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
 London Branch: 5, Whitlington Avenue, E.C.8.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
 Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	...	...	...	...	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	...	...	...	...	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	£2,800,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.

SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.

SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD. J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.

ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

J. N. STUART, Esq. ROBERT MILLER, Esq. J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinja
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital
12,000,000 Leva

Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS, ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIATION DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - - L.It. 400 millions.
Reserves - - - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA.

Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk, Philippopolis and Sliven —

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 615—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	181	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		The Solution for Egypt	194	Notes and News	201
Egypt	185	THE WEEK AT HOME	183	Commerce and Industry	202
Yugoslavia	186	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	190	The British Industries Fair	203
Albania	187	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	192	Shipping Intelligence	205
Persia	187	PERSONAL AND GENERAL	193	Morocco's Phosphate Resources	206
Iraq	188			Cotton and Cotton Goods	207
SPECIAL ARTICLE—				Stock and Share Markets	209
Railways and Steamers in the
Sudan	195

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Still Marking Time.

Ismet Pasha's leisurely journey towards Angora is nearing its end, and Europe will shortly know the intentions of the Turkish Government towards the Treaty offered to it by the Allied Powers. The few weeks' interval since Ismet Pasha's refusal to sign at Lausanne may prove not to have been without its use in enabling a number of people to adjust their views on the subject of the Near East. In the first place, peace has not been disturbed. The Smyrna authorities jumped to certain conclusions on hearing that the Lausanne Conference had broken up, but their unauthorised attempt at sabre-rattling was reprimanded by Mustapha Kemal Pasha. Ismet Pasha himself will have had opportunity both in Bucharest and during his brief stay at Constantinople to appreciate more fully what Turkey stands to gain by endeavouring to do in Europe as Europe does. The Angora Government, however, and still more the Assembly which tries to dominate it, are still Asiatically minded, and are inclined to interpret independence as the privilege of acting as no one else would in the same circumstances. They may, therefore, resolve to spring further surprises on a tolerant Europe, but not even these, if they come, we imagine, will shake the Powers out of their benevolent and good-humoured tolerance.

Adriatic Peace.

The ratification by the Italian Chamber of the Treaty of Santa Margherita is, we should like to think, an event of first-class importance in Near Eastern affairs. In November, 1920, under the terms of the Treaty of Rapallo, Italy abandoned her extreme demands regarding the Adriatic coastline, and undertook to leave the Dalmatian coast, with the exception of the city of Zara and a limited hinterland, as well as certain islands which she had previously claimed, to Yugoslavia. Fiume, moreover, was to become a free port. It was mainly owing to the attitude of the Fascisti that further negotiations between Italy and Yugoslavia were necessary before the latter was satisfied as to Italian intentions in regard to the carrying into effect of the provisions of the Rapallo Treaty. The agreement of Santa Margherita last year may be said to have been reached in the face of Fascist opposition, and with the arrival of the Fascisti in power it appeared to be an open question whether the supplementary treaty would be ratified by Italy. Signor Mussolini, however, has quickly settled the matter by proving himself an uncompromising supporter of "treaties, whether good or bad, once signed and ratified," and the Italian Chamber has followed his lead. At the last moment the Italian Prime Minister was able to announce that he had come to an agreement on certain important details of the interpretation of the parent Treaty of Rapallo, and the concessions in question, without doubt, make the two Treaties more palatable to the Italians. Signor Mussolini did not regard the arrangements now made as necessarily final, but for the time being Italy stands pledged to carry them out.

Yugoslavia's Opportunity.

From the point of view of the Yugoslavs, the main consideration is that they have at last attained peace with their western neighbour. Throughout the protracted negotiations they have acted with commendable self-restraint, and their attitude has its reward to-day. It would have been more satisfactory if Italy had refrained from emphasising the provisional nature of the present arrangement. But Yugoslavia is forewarned, and she will have to decide upon the best policy to be adopted towards the possibility of Italian irredentism. If she is going to apply Balkan methods of suppression and forcible elimination, she can count with certainty upon an early denunciation of the Treaty of Rapallo, with the consequent menace to the stability of the kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. If, on the other hand, she makes sure that the Italians in Dalmatia have no just cause for complaint in comparing their lot with that of the Italians in Italy, she will know that she can bespeak the sympathy of Europe in the event of unjustifiable aggression on the part of Italy. It is far more probable that the fair and proper treatment of the Italian "minority" will not only obviate dissatisfaction in Italy with the present arrangement, but will also be the means of encouraging a close economic relationship between the two States that is so essential to the welfare of both.

A Balkan Glass House.

A country ringed round by seven neighbours would, it might be thought, tread warily in regard to foreign affairs. Perhaps it is the contemplation of her embarrassing geographical position that makes Yugoslavia, as she glances over her frontiers in turn towards Italy, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Greece, and Albania, seemingly so nervous in the early years of her independence as a single State. No other people has more reason than the Yugoslavs to be grateful for the existence of the League of Nations, for in it they have a guarantee of their territorial integrity practically without any action on their own part in self-defence. Nevertheless, they allow themselves to be continually flustered by wholly false accounts of their neighbours' aggressiveness, and, in spite of the need of drastic economy in State expenditure with a view to the application of any surplus funds to reproductive works, Yugoslavia is spending money that she can ill afford on strengthening her army. In the years to come, when the peaceful intentions of her neighbours—or at least the effectiveness of the moral strength of the League of Nations—have been demonstrated it is to be feared that one result of Yugoslavia's misplaced expenditure will be to handicap her seriously in the race for material prosperity. The value of the present agreement with Italy will be enhanced if it leads the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes to appreciate the wisdom of making a similar settlement with all their other neighbour States. If in the meantime a greater measure of domestic peace could be secured within her borders by the elimination or absorption of most of the eighteen political parties or groups into which the people are divided, more attention could be paid by the Government to the work of reconstruction, which is of equal importance with a peaceful foreign policy.

Western Thrace.

Disturbances are reported to have broken out in Western Thrace, and they will, no doubt, be generally attributed to Bulgarian intrigue, and be used to record another black mark against the Bulgarians. No one living a thousand miles from the scene of trouble can pass immediate judgment on the origin of an outbreak in the Balkans, but it is permissible to call attention to certain factors in that part of the world which are being overlooked by the Allied Governments. One of these factors is that neither in Macedonia nor in Western Thrace is there any need to-day of outside stimulus for disturbances. If Bulgaria is implicated in the present instance, she is acting not only wrongly, but also foolishly, and her action is in complete variance with her policy hitherto. On the other hand, it is not difficult to imagine that the inroad of thousands of Greek refugees has pressed hardly on those of the settled population who are not Greeks. When this happens, the next step, as far as the outside world is concerned, is komitaji movements. In Macedonia, so little encouragement has there been from Bulgaria, where the Stambolisky Government has severely discounted these bands, that the komitajis turned their attention to a Bulgarian town, Kustendil. The course of events may be a little obscure, but the Allied Powers have abundant evidence, if they will take the trouble to investigate it, to satisfy themselves that there will be no peace in this part of the world until autonomy has been granted to Macedonia, and if new settlers are to dispossess the old inhabitants in Western Thrace, the unrest will spread to this province as well. Nothing but misery for all concerned is being laid up for this unhappy territory, because the Allies have refused to grapple with the question in a common-sense way.

Persia.

In Persia Cabinets continue to succeed one another with bewildering rapidity, but so long as the Sardar Sipah (Riza Khan) remains Minister of War, the changes entail little change in the conduct of Persian affairs. Gavam es-Saltaneh, the late Prime Minister, has been accused of being too successful in following the Persian custom of turning office to his own personal benefit; but possibly his offence has been that in this matter he showed too much independence of the Soviet Legation. He has been succeeded by Mustaufi ul-Mumalik, who is said to have been the Soviet nominee. Of more practical importance for Persia, it is to be hoped, is the fact that Dr. Millspaugh, the American Financial Adviser, has had time to put his organisation in working order. In the letter which appears on another page from our Teheran correspondent a summary of Dr. Millspaugh's report is given. If he can receive cordial and intelligent backing from the Government, there will be no need yet to despair of Persia. The country is buying its experience. It suffered much from Russia's interference in the past, and there was some justification for the belief that Great Britain was little better in this respect than her ally, as she took no steps to restrain the latter. Accordingly, the movement headed by Riza Khan was frankly anti-foreign at the outset. It was not proof, however, against Soviet methods of diplomacy, and so long as tangible benefits reach the Persian Government and members of the Mejliss from Russia, we may expect Persian policy to be merely anti-British. If any good can come out of Persia or be put into it—for ourselves we refuse to be pessimistic even in the case of the Persians—hopes must be centred for the present on Dr. Millspaugh and his fellow-workers. He starts with the cordial goodwill of the British, in virtue both of his mission and of his own personality.

Arab Unity.

The separatist tendencies of the Arab peoples have passed into a byword. Accordingly, the statement of the Minister Plenipotentiary of King Hussein of the Hejaz that the Arabs are now actuated by a desire for unity may be received at first with some scepticism. But there can be little doubt that emancipation from the Ottoman Empire must sooner or later convince the different Arab States that they have more to gain by standing together in the face of a possible menace from outside than by perpetuating internecine feuds. An important factor in the situation is the anxiety of Ibn Saud to be at peace with his neighbours. To achieve this end he wishes to have his remaining frontiers fixed, as have been those with Irak and Koweit. The Wahabi leader considers that the wisest course for him to pursue now is to consolidate the large realm that he has acquired with a view to handing down an orderly kingdom to his successor. Ibn Saud has no doubt discovered that military conquests entailing a standing army on a raid footing are apt to play havoc with even a subsidised exchequer. An agreement regularising British relations with the Hejaz should be followed by a definite step on the part of Great Britain to bring representatives of all the Arab peoples together for a settlement of common boundaries and an understanding that will at least eliminate the danger of frontier incidents.

Parties at Delhi.

The report of the formation of a third party among the Indian politicians who legislate at Delhi is happily tempered by the prognostication that it will absorb the two parties, or, rather, groups, which already exist. Such an arrangement would, in our judgment, mark a definite political advance. The present parties, dubbed by their founders Democratic and National, are, in fact, too much alike to do real good. There is no definite cleavage of principle, and, as frequently happens in such cases, they are hard put to it to find a programme, and inclined to outbid each other in an unedifying struggle for support. There is room, on the other hand, for a party which, while it demands fresh constitutional changes, shall organise the constituencies against the non-co-operators, as the new Liberal programme proposes to do, and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru is a leader of altogether different calibre from those who would be superseded by such an amalgamation. As the Viceroy said of him at a complimentary dinner last month, he has hitherto displayed a set purpose, regardless of self, to serve his country's cause, while his calm judgment and the experience he has gained as a Member of Council are qualities which will at any rate make for effective leadership.

The Viceroy's Council.

If the forecast given by The Times may be accepted, the changes in the constitution of the Viceroy's Council recommended by Lord Inchcape and his colleagues are much less drastic than some of our contemporaries anticipated. No alteration is proposed in the number of seats, and, apart from some minor rearrangements of departments, the only new features are the creation of a portfolio of Communications, and the disappearance of the Member for Revenue and Agriculture. The last change is probably inevitable, in view of the extended powers now wielded by provincial Governments, but we must confess to a feeling of regret that a Council which is increasingly representative of sectional interests should no longer include anyone charged with the representation of the predominant interest in the country. So far as we can see, it is quite possible that a Council formed on the new lines may be almost entirely ignorant of the real thoughts and feelings of the peasants, who constitute about three-quarters of the population, and a body of that kind would be very ill-qualified to handle the situation which will arise when the country turns on the towns.

The Country and the Town.

Illustrations of the clash between urban and rural interests are not difficult to find. There is, for instance, the question of education, on which General Booth, of the Salvation Army, spoke so bitterly the other day, complaining that the peasants were governed by city men, and their children trained only to despise the land. Again, there is the tariff. The Indian Legislature is almost solid for Protection; the Government is just now striving for a sort of safeguarded Protection as a compromise; and the chief official speaker has pointed out that, if the agricultural classes knew what was at stake, a policy of Protection could not even be proposed. India, in fact, is still a long way from the goal of democratic self-government. Rural interests are mainly in the hands of town-bred legislators, who are engaged in stuffing the nostrils of the cities down the peasants' throats. There are likely to be some startling surprises when these medicines take effect, and that is one reason why we should like to see a peasants' representative in the Central Government—someone who can be relied on to warn his colleagues before the danger-point is actually reached.

THE WEEK AT HOME.*London, Monday Evening.The New Parliamentary Session.

Parliament reopened last Tuesday, since when it has been made evident that we are in for a diverting and possibly an interesting session. Already the sparks have begun to fly—the Labour Party of themselves can put up a pretty good display of fireworks, and, in addition, there are many other critics of the Government who either let idealistic rockets soar to the ceiling of the House, or, keeping closer to facts and the ground, busy themselves in lighting squibs under the Premier's feet. Speeches in the Upper House have been on a high level, and though in the Lower House certain distracting features, such as the called-off fight between an extreme Labour member and the one Communist, were introduced, sincerity was more than previously sensible in the overcharged atmosphere.

The King's Speech ran along expected lines. Mr. Borar Law is going to enact none but the most necessary laws, or modifications of laws. He hopes to relieve unemployment by the development of inter-Imperial trade—which means, I suppose, emigration to the colonies. Public expenditure is to be reduced, but in regard to the details of this discretion is preferred to description. Agriculturists are to be granted facilities, though this benevolent attitude would appear to have been adopted generally to all the Government's supporters. What plans have been outlined by the Government have, therefore, been well received by the ordinary man in the street (with whom, by the bye, I do not, as is customary when this phrase is used, identify myself), and the Opposition, though they will certainly make some good scores, will find the Government very hard to beat.

Discussion on the Ruhr question, which still dominates the public mind, though the Press appears to think Tutankhamen more important, did not take any original turns. The most notable point in the speeches, apart from those by the Labour members, was sympathy extended to France. Nearly everyone seemed alive to the danger of the present occupation, but of compassion with Germany there was no hint. It was left to the incurable sentimentalists of the Labour Party to bleat on behalf of the enemy. They are a silly flock of sheep, this Labour Party, and it is fortunate for their opponents that they have so many shepherds, who not infrequently are at loggerheads with one another. It should not be supposed that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, who is a pure, though by no means a simple, politician, is their unquestioned leader: for the potential cleavages in his party are probably more numerous than those in any other.

Shadows and Ghosts.

It might be thought by those who read the Parliamentary debates that the sun of oratory was shining so fiercely as to exclude the possibility of shadows. But there are various features in the political landscape which have escaped the sun, and are throwing doubtful and inconstant shadows over the Government. There is, for instance, the ex-Premier, who has not so far spoken in this House; nobody seems to know quite whither he is going. There is, again, Lord Birkenhead in the other House; his venturesome personality must cause anxiety. The ghost of Liberal reunion, rudely disturbed by the recent resignation of Mr. J. M. Hogge as Chief Whip of the party, perhaps is not so alarming; but somewhere behind all this mist watches and waits Mr. Winston Churchill, who, it is not a rash vaticination to make, will one day be Prime Minister of England. Incidentally, the publication in The Times of extracts from his forthcoming book has strengthened his position. Altogether, then, if Mr. Bonar Law and his colleagues do succeed in attaining any tranquillity, one would not give much for the quality of their dreams.

Rent Restriction and Housing.

The dispute between landlord and tenant to which I referred a week or two ago was mollified last week, when the text of the Government Bill to legalise rent increases was issued. This Bill gives power to landlords to increase their rents as from last December. A hurricane of protest was raised in the Press by this proposal, and in deference to what it calls "public opinion," the Government has decided that rent restriction is to continue. From the point of view of the middle classes, who stood to lose most by decontrol of rents, either restriction must continue or more houses must be built. With admirable fairness the Government has considered their position, and has faced the problem squarely. It is regarding the next two and a-half years as a transitional period to the normal, during which rent restriction and State assistance in housing are to continue. It proposes a limited subsidy per (working man's) house for a period of years, which should amount to half the loss, the local authority to pay the other half. This scheme is excellent as far as it goes, but too much must not be hoped from it. We have had excellent housing schemes before now which have proved unworkable in practice. It rather seems that the housing question will work itself out, and will scarcely precede other elements of our national life in their approach to the normal.

St. Valentine's Day.

It was quite surprising this year to note how many people remembered that February 14 was St. Valentine's Day. I, at any rate, who knew the last century but thinly, do not recall so much fuss being made of it before, and the welcome given to it is, I think, significant and representative of that good-natured return, not to the practice, indeed, but to the tolerance of Victorian conventions. It seems incredible that St. Valentine's Day once was more to Englishmen in the present-giving sense than Christmas, but I am assured that it was so. Of course, it is the women who rake up these affairs, from which the poor man stands to gain nothing; but this is the age of woman, and I suppose that if she commands certain things to be done on St. Valentine's Day they will be done. The post-war generation of women is thoroughly blasée with unconventional doings, but it is still possible to thrill it with the démodé.

Shepherds and their Flocks.

The unexpected happened the other day in the Church Assembly, when the Parochial Church Councils (Additional Powers) Measure was rejected on the motion for general approval. In this measure vent was given to the feeling that the laity should, through Church Councils, have a say in the choice of incumbents, and also the power of protest against the appointment of a clergyman unsuitable for a particular parish. Now this feeling is very widely entertained. It would seem that in this century Anglicans have more nearly approached the position of Nonconformists in the precedence they now give to the sermon over the other parts of the church service. Time was when Anglicans—and still is with the High Church Party—went to church to worship only, and consequently the sermon was considered the least important thing of all. But times have changed; doubts have increased, and people now want to have their minds stimulated. It is possible to regard this as an immoral preferring to exercise the intellect, which in this matter is, of course, sterile, to an indulgence of the religious instinct; but that is beside the point. The flock now has few of its former illusions about its shepherd, and wants to control him. I believe that in the Wesleyan denomination something of the sort is already done, and it is more than possible, in view of the trend of modern religious thought and of the economic conditions prevailing in the ecclesiastical world, that some features of the Nonconformist comity will be copied by the Church of England.

On this question of the lay selection of priests, the Bishops tied in voting, and that fact is a fair indication of the dilemma in which the Anglican world is placed: either the Church must maintain its present authority, ignoring what Lord Wolmer calls "the continuance of the present detestable scandals," or it must loosen that authority, and openly recognise the extreme diversity of religious practice and even of doctrine within itself.

The Trials of Oxford.

From this heading it might be imagined that I was about to refer to the efforts of the Oxford crew. But I am not thinking of anything so hopeful—hopeful, because the Oxford eight really seems this year to have a chance against Cambridge, being on the average per man a pound and a half heavier. What I grieve about, together with the better part of Oxford University, is the appeal, recently made there by certain loose-thinking spirits, for funds for twelve German students, who, it is proposed, shall visit the city of dreaming spires in May. It is not clear yet how wide this desire to entertain Germans is, and one can but provisionally sympathise with Oxford men who have thus had their University brought into dis-repute. I had always thought that the pacifist view was to be found in largest quantities in Cambridge, but it is possible that certain salutary measures taken there during the War have driven the poison of international pacifism, as women have been driven, into the crannies of her sister University. At Cambridge they dealt with the "love my enemy" blight and blighters in admirable fashion, and one cannot imagine that the Teuton lovers will receive any kinder treatment at the other place.

ALTER EGO.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
:: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE ::
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOVA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, February 7.

The Anglo-Egyptian Crisis.

The crisis about which I wrote you last week came to a head on Saturday. On Friday evening the High Commissioner, on the instructions from the Foreign Office, had an audience of King Fuad, when he communicated to him a Note on the subject of the Sudan, which he subsequently addressed to the Egyptian Government. In this Note he stated that the British Government could not agree to the promulgation of the Constitution containing two clauses with regard to the Sudan, the inclusion of which was inconsistent with the 1899 Agreement and the British declaration of February 28, 1922. The British Government asked that the clauses be temporarily removed from the Constitution pending the negotiations on the subject between the two countries, and declared that the deletion of these clauses would in no way prejudice Egypt's rights over the Sudan or in regard to the allocation of water. The Note added that, unless the Egyptian Government accepted the British point of view within twenty-four hours, a serious political situation would arise, and the British Government would reserve to itself liberty to act in any way it might think fit.

No sooner was this Note received than a Cabinet Council was summoned. In fact, it sat at Abdin Palace practically the whole of Saturday. At eleven o'clock in the evening, however, His Excellency Said Pasha Zulfikar, the Grand Chamberlain, visited the Residency, and informed the High Commissioner that the British demands had been accepted. So far the matter may be regarded as satisfactory, but another development has since arisen, viz., the Cabinet has resigned. This is, after all, not altogether unexpected, since under the present-day condition of public opinion in Egypt one could understand that the Cabinet might feel itself unable to carry on in the face of such a drastic change in policy as in the eyes of the average Egyptian the deletion of the Sudan clauses may be regarded as representing.

The Cabinet's Resignation.

What, however, makes this resignation somewhat difficult to understand, and, consequently, complicates the situation, is the fact that Nessim Pasha is notoriously the Palace man, that he is a most loyal—probably the most loyal—servant the King has in the country, and that he has all along been prepared to carry out the King's wishes. It is true that the acceptance of the British demands has been followed by an outcry in the vernacular Press, moderate as well as extremist, and that ordinarily as things go nowadays in Egypt, this would have sufficed to cause the resignation of the Cabinet. But it is believed that there is something more behind the action of Nessim Pasha, which, in the circumstances, assumes the character of a desertion of his Sovereign at one of the most critical moments in Egypt's history, and is, therefore, quite inconsistent with his character or his close relations with the Palace. It is, indeed, believed that Nessim Pasha would never have forsaken office unless it had been with the cordial approval of his Sovereign, and for this reason a certain amount of uneasiness is felt in European circles, the serious nature of the political crisis being regarded as by no means at an end.

It is impossible at the present moment to write more on this subject, since everything depends on the manner in which the situation develops, but considerable anxiety exists on all sides, and political observers frankly do not like the turn affairs have taken. The events of the next few days will certainly be watched with the greatest interest. In British and European circles the hope is expressed that the British Government, having at last made up its mind to be firm, and having seen the good and speedy results achieved by such firmness, will not now stultify these good results by subsequent weakening, as it has so often done in the past, but that it will take advantage of the successful issue of its very just demands, and, by adopting an attitude which is the only one understood and appreciated by the Egyptians, will re-establish British prestige—a condition of things which in reality is as vital for the welfare of the Egyptians as it is for the interests of the British Empire and the world in general.

The Murder of a Canadian.

The brilliance of the season at Luxor was somewhat damped last week by the news of the murder of a Canadian visitor, Mr. Travers Allen. He had come up to Luxor as he had in several previous seasons on a sailing "dahabeyah," accompanied by his cousin, Mr. James B. Allen. On the evening of January 30, according to his wont, he had left his "dahabeyah" at about eight o'clock for a stroll before turning into bed. His cousin remained on the "dahabeyah," and when, next morning, he found that Mr. Allen had not returned, he caused inquiries immediately to be made by the authorities. Late that evening word was brought that the body of an Englishman had been found outside Luxor, and subsequently it was identified as that of Mr. T. Allen. The spot where the body was found was situated about three miles outside Luxor in the middle of a field in a most unfrequented part. All the circumstances make it perfectly clear that he was killed where his body was found and that the motive was solely that of robbery.

No doubt advantage will be taken of this incident to make out that this murder was the outcome of anti-British feeling, and that Egypt is consequently unsafe for tourists. Such, however, is not the case. Indeed, this is a murder which might quite easily have occurred in any European

APPOINTMENT WANTED.

FLUENT Arabic, good French, fair Italian, Shorthand, Type-writing and Bookkeeping. An Englishman, 29, with above qualifications, loyal and trustworthy, requires Situation in Near East.—Address V., Box 14, THE NEAR EAST.

*Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

country where a man, known usually to carry a certain amount of money on his person, might be attacked and murdered by bad characters. If people are imprudent enough to go to unfrequented parts where bad characters roam, they have themselves alone to thank for what happens to them, and their fate can in no way be regarded as symptomatic of the general state of affairs in the country.

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubliana, February 13.

The Treaty of Santa Margherita.

The Italian Parliament has sanctioned the ratification of the Treaty of Santa Margherita. Hereby the Italo-Yugoslav question is solved at last, and the possibility provided for the establishment of good neighbourly relations between Italy and Yugoslavia. As everybody knows, the basis for a peaceful solution of the difference between the two countries was furnished by the Treaty of Rapallo, which was ratified as far back as 1921. But the way in which this Treaty was to be carried out was defined by the Treaty of Santa Margherita, and hence it is the ratification of this later Treaty which signifies the real end of the long contest.

Upon the Italian side the ratification was obstructed mainly by the Fascist leaders, who all but demanded war with Yugoslavia. They were opposed by Signor Mussolini, who pointed out that old obligations had to be honoured, and that the Treaty of S. Margherita was an old obligation. It is quite certain, however, that in advocating the ratification Signor Mussolini was actuated by other motives also.

Soon after resuming office Signor Mussolini declared that Italy had always been on the best of terms with the Serbs, and that she would also, in the future, maintain good relations with them. Now it is a Serbian Government which is at the moment in power in Yugoslavia and in the throes of an electoral campaign into the bargain. And this Government is in a position almost as difficult as that of Mussolini himself. A Treaty calls for ratification, which the Yugoslav nationalists consider detrimental and would like to see cancelled—a Treaty which burdens both parties to it with obligations without giving them that to which they think themselves entitled. All the same, the ratification was urgent; because there was no alternative to ratification and peace, but non-ratification and war. The world-situation categorically demands peace, and so it is not to be wondered at that Signor Mussolini bows to the inevitable, more especially as he was the stronger of the two at odds. This is also the reason that the ratification was effected in such a way that the Treaty itself was corrected to Italy's advantage.

Some Details.

The Delta and Barosh port remain incorporated with Fiume, and in Fiume itself the Italian gendarmerie is to be retained; Zadar (Zara) is given a customs-free zone and other privileges. Fresh economic concessions are secured for Fiume, and substantial rights guaranteed the Italians in Yugoslavia, whereas no similar rights are extended to the Yugoslavs in Italy. So Mussolini has virtually scored in all directions for Italy. Yugoslavia's gains are: Evacuation of the third zone in Dalmatia, the port of Sushak, and—peace.

But whether this peace will in truth prove sincere and durable is unfortunately another question. It cannot be denied that on the Italian side everything was done to prevent its being concluded at all. The Yugoslavs of the Adriatic littoral are subjected to all manner of pressure and persecution, although they have proved themselves loyal and law-abiding citizens, paying their taxes and fulfilling their military duties with perfect correctness. In spite of this, Yugoslav schools are closed down (in Istria alone to the number of 112); the Provincial Council in Gorizia has been dissolved and Yugoslav officials are being dismissed. All this makes bad blood in Yugoslavia, and constitutes a menace to peace.

Relations with Bulgaria.

Relations between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria are steadily improving. It is clear that M. Stambolisky's intentions are perfectly honest, and that he sincerely desires to see Bulgaria on friendly terms with Yugoslavia. Unfortunately, his efforts in this direction are sadly hampered by the activities of the so-called Makedonstvjusci, whose repeated raids into Yugoslav territory are constantly reopening old wounds and keeping the old enmity smouldering. Not long ago Bulgarian bands invaded the district of Shtip, and on this occasion they are said to have massacred an entire colony of settlers. These unfortunate people were refugees from the Slovene districts in Italy. Their old home they had lost. In the new they found two years of hard pioneer work on their farms, and at the end a violent death. When M. Stambolisky took energetic steps against the Makedonstvjusci the latter retaliated by seeking to intimidate the leaders of the Peasant Party by a series of murderous attempts. In this way several Ministers fell victims to the Macedonian Committee, and M. Stambolisky himself was twice attacked within a very short time.

The Electoral Campaign.

The electoral campaign is surging all around us, and feeling is running very high. Some sharp encounters between Nationalists and Raditch

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 8.

DICK TURPIN:
The "Spaniards," Hampstead Heath. Built in 1630—a favourite haunt of the picturesque highwayman, Dick Turpin.

Shade of Dick Turpin: "Ah, 'JOHNNIE WALKER'—if only I had been alive to rob you of a bottle or two."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS, KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

followers even ended in bloodshed. Apart from such regrettable excesses, however, the prevailing excitement and interest are both comprehensible and excusable in view of the great interests at stake. The Radicals are making great efforts to maintain their position, but it seems improbable that they will prove successful. The Democrats, too, are likely to lose ground. The Zemljoradniki (peasants or farmers), on the other hand, are almost sure to gain; they are specially strong in Serbia and Bosnia. It is too much to expect that this General Election will bring that clearing-up of the internal situation which is a consummation devoutly to be wished for this country; but it will take us a good step towards it.

ALBANIA.

Tirana, February 12.

On the Frontier.

In my last letter I spoke of the incident at Krouma, on the Serbo-Albanian frontier, whither Bairam Tsur and Hassan Prishtina had gone to find supporters from among the refugees of Kossovo. These people have succeeded in disturbing the peace, but they have also suffered a heavy defeat.

On January 25 a second encounter took place, between Junik and Batousha, in which shots were exchanged between the Albanian gendarmerie and the "rebels." Neither side had any killed or wounded, from which fact one can deduce that the "rebels" had no intention of offering real resistance—indeed, they quickly took to flight. It cannot be said, however, that order is definitely established. Bairam Tsur and Hassan Prishtina are still at liberty, and the folk who have left the Serbian territory cannot return to their homes, fearing the severity of the Serbian authorities. Your readers will doubtless hear again of this region.

Albania and the League.

Ten months have passed since the Government asked the League of Nations to choose a financial expert to organise the finances of Albania. For this purpose the League chose—quite recently—a competent Englishman. But you may judge our surprise at Tirana when we learned, last week, that the League of Nations had also chosen an Italian to come to Albania in order to organise the Department of Justice. Evidently here is an instance of the influence of the Great Powers, and of their endeavour to maintain a kind of equilibrium—it is necessary at the moment that trust is placed in one of these Powers, that a concession be made to the other. Now Albania desires to escape from this game of rivalry and to maintain her independence of action vis-à-vis the Powers. She therefore thanked the League of Nations for their excess of solicitude, at the same time declining their offer, affirming that she has need of but one organiser—for her finances. It is hoped here that the League will understand the reasons which prompt Albania to mistrust this proposal, which might be very dangerous for her, and to spare herself the complication of competition and rivalry.

An Hygienic Measure.

Those who have visited Albania know well the defective state of the population's health; malaria, malnutrition, tuberculosis, and the miseries generally of the last ten years of war, are making sad ravages. If, therefore, the people in several regions show indifference to work, and the country looks neglected, the cause is rather physiological than psychological.

Everywhere the necessity is evident for taking measures to improve sanitary conditions. A decree has recently been issued obliging all Albanians between the ages of twelve and eighteen, of whatever class, to be prepared to enrol themselves in a group of Boy Scouts, and consequently to take exercise twice a week, on Friday and on Sunday. This measure will not only usefully affect the health of the men, but will also serve, by bringing together the different classes, to develop the social sense and a feeling of solidarity among all Albanians.

PERSIA.

Teheran, January 17.

Dr. Millspaugh's Report.

Dr. Millspaugh, the Administrator-General of the Finances, has presented his report to the Government with regard to the finances of the country. The first part deals with the different positions allotted to the various members of his staff. He goes on to state his intention to do his utmost to suppress the abuses and corruption which have hitherto prevailed, especially with regard to nominations and promotions in the various departments of the Ministry of Finance. He intends to be most careful in the choice of officials under him. He states that there are plenty of capable men, but they must be chosen solely for their qualifications and capabilities, without regard to influence, and only after full investigation into their past careers and character. No bribery for securing posts will be tolerated, and any attempt at bribery on the part of an employee will be cause for instant dismissal. He will shortly submit to Parliament a project for the reorganisation of the Treasury General, in charge of which his senior assistant, Mr. McCaskey, who was also here under Morgan Shuster in 1911-12, has been placed, and has been recommended for the post of Treasurer-General. He points out that under the existing system orders on the Treasury for pensions, and so on, are issued but cannot be paid, as no funds exist to meet them. This had led in the past to much corruption and the sale and barter of Treasury bills. In future this system will be done away with, and no orders on the Treasury will be issued unless there is money to meet them. He has, therefore, had to suspend, for the time being, all payment of pensions allotted to European ex-servants of the State, but he hopes soon to be in a position to find money to continue these payments. In this connection Dr. Millspaugh lays stress on the importance of balancing the Budget and not incurring more expenditure than the revenues of the country can yield. He has instructed all the Ministries to give him a statement of their estimated expenses for the coming financial year, as well as all Government departments in the provinces, so as to enable him to draw up a Budget to be submitted to the Mejliss. He hopes to be able to finish the present financial year (ending at Norooz, March 20) with the resources actually in hand, or to come from estimated revenues, on condition that Parliament votes no further credits. In view of the uncer-

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

tainty of the granting of the Northern Oil Concession, about which much discussion is still taking place in the Mejliss, but which, nevertheless, seems as far off as ever, he recommends that the Government should not count on any help from this quarter in the shape of a loan, which would almost inevitably follow the granting of the Concession, but rely solely on the revenues of the country itself for the Budget of the coming year. He urges, however, the necessity of deciding this all-important question with the least possible delay. He concludes with the opinion that the indirect taxation of the country should be placed on a different and more satisfactory basis, and states that he is studying the employment of Belgian officials for the Customs, and the sale and lease of Government landed properties.

Dr. Millspaugh is a serious and hard worker, and it is sincerely to be hoped that his efforts to grapple with the oft-attempted task of putting Persia's finances on a sound footing will meet with the success they deserve.

Dr. Bogart, the expert allotted to the former Russian Banque d'Escompte de Perse (now about to be run as a national bank), has taken up his residence at the bank and commenced his labours.

The Position of the Cabinet.

The position of Gavam es-Saltaneh's Cabinet has been shaky for some time, but in spite of many attacks on him by the Minority Party in the Mejliss, headed by the Democrat leader Soleyman Mirza, he still retains his majority, and a day or two ago informed the deputies that he had no intention of relinquishing office for the present. Moshir ed Dowleh and Mustaufi ul Mumalek, both ex-Premiers, have, however, had audiences of the Shah during the last few days, and this has led to the expectation that the Cabinet will fall.

The Indian Post Offices.

During the past few days the Indian post offices in the Persian Gulf, which have long been a thorn in the side of the Persian Government, have been handed back to the latter after a conference attended by representatives of Great Britain, Persia, India, and Mesopotamia.

Persia as a World Power.

The progress of the Lausanne Conference has been anxiously followed by all parties here, as on the result may hang important developments for this country in view of the Bolshevik menace always at hand in the Caucasus and the activities of Bolshevik agents in Ghilan. The Persian Government have always regretted the fact that they were not allowed to send a representative to the Conference, but, as pointed out to them at the time the invitations were issued, Persia was neither a belligerent in the recent Near Eastern war, nor did her country border on the Black Sea, and therefore she had no real interests in the discussions. During the past week, however, the Government addressed a joint Note to the British, French, and Italian Legations here, representing the inviting Powers, protesting against her exclusion, in view of the fact that a Chaldean representative was allowed to speak, and the question of Kurdistan, in which Persia is directly interested, was discussed. The Press has taken the Government's part and attacked the Allies' decision as being directly hostile to Persia's independence.

The strained relations between the Russian and Persian Governments, owing to the alleged unfriendly attitude of the present Cabinet, which was recently the subject of a Note handed personally to the Crown Prince by Shumyatski, the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, still continue, though no open rupture exists.

Foggy Nights.

The last three days have been remarkable for the continued presence of a thick Scotch mist, which increased in density each night, when it was really difficult to see very far before one. Such a vagary of the weather is practically unprecedented here, and no one seemed to have witnessed such a mist before.

IRAK.

Baghdad, February 1.

Baghdad Calm.

The bazaars of Baghdad are full of the wildest stories: the invasion of Irak by the Turks, battles within sight of the walls of Mosul, trainloads of wounded British soldiers arriving in Baghdad, and hordes of Turkish prisoners en route to Basrah; and on the other side of the picture streams of reinforcements arriving at Basrah and being hurried up north in the hope of saving Mosul city from the Turks. On the whole, however, but little attention is paid to these stories; they are heard and passed on—with embellishments, no doubt—but not really heeded, and in spite of it all the ordinary life of Baghdad goes on quite undisturbed and quite unchanged. Baghdad is sick and tired of politics, and not even the threat to Mosul can rouse any real interest in any but a small number of the more active politicians.

The Threat to Mosul.

It has had to be recognised in high places, however, that there is a genuine threat to Mosul, and steps have had to be taken to render it as innocuous as possible. With the increasing stubbornness of the Turks in maintaining their claim to the Mosul vilayet, they have moved troops towards the Irak frontier and concentrated them around Jazirah Ibn Umr and the other Turkish garrison towns within striking distance of Irak territory, and it is reported that they have even threatened to wrest the Mosul vilayet from the British and Arab hands by force of arms if they cannot obtain possession of it by peaceful negotiation. It is not thought probable, however, that they will make any move themselves against Irak as long as the negotiations at Lausanne continue, but their methods during recent years in this part of the world give ground for the belief that they may try to make the position of the Irak Government in Mosul difficult, if not impossible, by encouraging the Kurdish tribes to raid extensively, and by urging their supporters in the Mosul vilayet to organise demonstrations in their favour. That being so, the weak garrison of Mosul has been strongly reinforced by the dispatch from Baghdad of British infantry, artillery, armoured cars, and

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

Digitized by Google

aeroplanes, as well as a detachment of the Irak army, and it is considered that the forces in Mosul now are sufficient to make it extremely improbable either that the tribes will be willing to engage in any very serious raiding or that Turkish sympathisers will be anxious to organise demonstrations from within.

The Diwaniyah Incident.

A serious incident occurred near Diwaniyah on January 19. Major Jeffreys, the Divisional Adviser, while out shooting met a small party of Arabs carrying rifles, a thing which is strictly forbidden. On his going up to inquire why they were carrying arms one of them fired at him, but missed, and while he was making off towards his car, which was close at hand, the others opened fire and wounded him in his foot and leg. He got away, and so did the aggressors, who have not yet been caught, though their village has been bombed. The reason for this attack is not known. In spite of the considerable amount of political unrest which has existed in this country during the past year or two, there have not hitherto occurred any attacks on British officers, and it is to be hoped that Irak will not follow Egypt's bad example in this matter.

Simko in Sulaimaniyah.

Simko, who, since his defeat at the hands of the Persians has been a fugitive from both the Persians and the Turks, has now gone to Sulaimaniyah, where he has joined Sheikh Mahmud.

THE NORTH ARABIAN DESERT: ITS FUTURE.

On February 12, at the Æolian Hall, Bond Street, W., speaking before the Royal Geographical Society, Major Holt described a journey made last summer by himself and Mr. Philby across the North Arabian desert. The lecturer said he had made previous journeys in the desert with the view to laying out a railway and the airway to Baghdad. On this occasion Mr. Philby was visiting the Joaf oasis, and he (Major Holt) accompanied him with a view to studying an alternative alignment for the proposed railway. The part of the desert they crossed was a plain rising gently to a height of over three thousand feet at the highest point. They only touched the edge of the Nefood, the great sandy desert, the minimum distance across which is as far as from London to Birmingham. The country they traversed was chiefly rocky and barren, strewn with lava blocks, and diversified by volcanic cones, and in one place extinct geysers.

Of the inhabitants, the lecturer said there was a settled population of less than two thousand in the oases and about 150,000 nomads, who wandered about the desert in winter and spring, feeding their flocks on the scanty grass. During the summer, when the desert was bare of all sustenance, these nomads moved to the Euphrates area on the east or the Jordan area on the west. Every stranger was a potential enemy. If one group saw another, and that second group larger than itself, it fled; if the second group was smaller, it raided it. An exception to this rule was furnished by the Salubi, who did not raid and were not raided. These also were the only people who remained in the desert the year round. Their origin was wrapped in mystery. They claimed to be related to the English, and it was interesting to note that their name was derived from the Arab word for a cross; hence some traditions said they were descendants of the Crusaders. They worked as tin-smiths, blacksmiths, doctors, and so on, and went about the desert earning some sort of a living in this way. They were also the breeders of a remarkable kind of donkey, which was said to be able to go four or five days without water.

As to the future of the desert, the lecturer said it did not produce food enough to support its inhabitants; the oases did not grow wheat and rice enough to meet the needs of even the settled inhabitants. Its only exports of interest were wool, camels' hair and skins, camel and goat hair tents, butter in limited quantities, and large numbers of cattle and sheep. Its future was as a line of communication. Previously to Vasco da Gama it had been the trade route between East and West; it had been disused for this purpose for four centuries, but would again be brought into prominence for certain reasons. These were, first, that with the disappearance of the Turkish Empire the importance of Mesopotamia would be renewed and its agricultural and mineral resources developed. The collapse of the Russian railways would have the effect that when trade revived in Persia it would seek the desert route. Added to these considerations was the modern desire to speed up communications in every way, and the impetus given to air services during the war. A railway was needed, and had been proved to be feasible.

Interesting lantern slides illustrated the lecture. Amongst other things shown were the remarkable ruins of some forts built by Zobeida to protect the trade route and the wells.

THE BUSHIRE-SHIRAZ ROAD.

At the Royal United Service Institution, on February 8, Major-General J. A. Douglas, C.M.G., C.I.E., lectured to the Central Asian Society on "The Operations on the Bushire-Shiraz Road, 1918-1919." Sir Edmund Barrow was in the chair. General Douglas very vividly described, both by words and with lantern slides of some excellent photographs, the extreme difficulties encountered in the making of this road of 180 miles in length. Not only was the health of the troops under his command open to serious danger owing to such diseases as influenza, but the nature of the ground, in both low and high regions, rendered the undertaking most laborious. The lecturer described in detail the various stages of the road as they were built, and was particularly impressive in explaining the difficulties encountered in the "Pass of the Old Woman." He referred to the attacks from hostile tribes to which his troops were liable, and claimed that, taking everything into consideration, the construction of this road by his officers and men was a very creditable performance. In conclusion, he regretted the fact that since he had left Persia the fruits of his troops' labours had not been reaped; the railway from Bushire, which had so laboriously been laid down, had been taken up, and there was the prospect of the relapse of Persia into the same stagnation from which the efforts of British troops had rescued it.

In the subsequent discussion Sir Arthur Hardinge paid eloquent tribute to General Douglas's knowledge of Persia and to his fine achievement in overcoming natural difficulties in the construction of the Bushire-Shiraz road. Lieut.-General Sir George Kirkpatrick also deprecated the modesty of the lecturer's account of his labours, and spoke of the good fortune of the India Office in having so capable and well-informed an officer for the purpose of maintaining order and establishing communications in South Persia. Another speaker lamented the folly of the home authorities in throwing away the benefits which might accrue from the labours, in setting down roads and railway tracks, of our soldiers during and just after the War.

THE PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.

The Quarterly Statement (January) of the Palestine Exploration Fund contains an interesting account, written by Dr. E. W. G. Masterman, of the Ophel Hill, and in the Editorial Notes a strong appeal is made that a guaranteed sum be raised for the purpose of its excavation. It is stated that a sum of £5,000 is needed before investigation can take place, and, in view of the immense importance of the site, we can only endorse the Statement's hope that British archaeological societies will rise to the occasion. Among other articles in the Statement are some "Reports on Soundings at Gaza," by W. J. Phythian-Adams, and a "Memoir of the late Dr. George Buchanan Gray."

NEW PERSIAN CABINET.

MUSTAUFU-UL-MUMALIK.....	Prime Minister and Minister of the Interior
ZUKA-UL-MULK	Foreign Affairs
MUHTASHIM-ES-SALTANEH...	Education
NASR-UL-MULK	Finance
MUMTAZ-UL-MULK	Justice

The Sardar Sipah retains the Portfolio of War, and the appointments to the offices of Posts and Telegraphs and Public Works are still undecided.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Position in Egypt.

In a general review of the position in Egypt a writer in the Manchester Guardian of February 14 shows the difficulties which are certain to confront any kind of Cabinet :—

The truth is that the dual control in Egypt has got to be faced, and, on the one hand, the reality of the Declaration of Independence in February, 1922, has to be confirmed, while, on the other hand, it is impossible to lose sight of the British position in the Egypt of the future, which will depend entirely upon the agreement which must be reached on the reserved points—that is, the Sudan, the Suez Canal, the protection of foreign interests, and the Army of Occupation. An absolutely independent and sovereign State of Egypt is not yet to be. Egyptian independence will be sui generis, and the arrangements for the Suez Canal and the Army of Occupation and foreign interests will make impracticable absolute sovereignty by an independent National Government over the whole of Egypt.

The British Government has already gone very far in proclaiming the independence of Egypt and in abolishing the Protectorate without any guarantees on these reserved points, which fundamentally affect British interests. The only hold that Great Britain has over Egypt is martial law, and it is a great pity that we should be found at this moment with that weapon in our hands, because there are the gravest possible doubts as to the legality of the control of a friendly country like Egypt by martial law; but the Residency is unwilling to remove the most visible and potent evidence of the British share in the dual government of Egypt unless things are at least in a fair way of progress towards a definite understanding between the two countries.

He concludes by discussing the vanishing in Egypt of moderate opinion :—

The possibility of moderate views prevailing in Egypt on these questions becomes daily more remote, although there can be no doubt that the moderate views must ultimately prevail. The time has come and the opportunity is offered to constitute a really representative Egyptian Ministry which shall proclaim the Constitution which has been hanging fire now for some time, and to set to work seriously to reach an agreement on the reserved points. We tried the experiment of excluding Zaghlul from a Cabinet which had our confidence—I refer to the Sarwat Ministry. The experiment has been tried of setting up a Ministry with Zaghlulist support, but which could give no satisfaction to immediate Zaghlulist demands. This was the Nessim Ministry. Both experiments have failed, and it is really difficult to see how any step forward can be made unless a Cabinet be set up which has the confidence of the Residency, the support of the Zaghlulists, and the possibility of giving satisfaction to their pressing demands, which are the return of Zaghlul Pasha and his friends, the release of the political prisoners, and the abolition of martial law. If an attempt is not made to-day to secure a Cabinet on these lines, it will have to be made some day, and the prospect of an entente between all the interests involved will become more and more remote.

I do not see how a Cabinet formed on any other lines in Egypt to-day can survive.

We have still some cards to play in Egypt. We have Zaghlul's exile and martial law. The promise to bring back Zaghlul and to abolish martial law would probably pave the way for the acceptance of office by a really representative group in Egypt, but, unless some preliminary agreement is reached with them on the reserved points, there is certainly trouble ahead. It would be, in my opinion, safer to face the whole position now and to reach an agreement with the Cabinet to be formed rather than lay up a store of future trouble. This certainly means a long period of negotiation, and there are great difficulties in the way, but they should not be insurmountable.

The Future of Greece.

The Pall Mall and Globe of February 14 had an interesting article by M. G. Papandreou, Minister of the Interior at Athens, upon the new era in Greece. His attitude in general is extremely optimistic, and he details some of the improvements that have taken place in the state of Greece :

The aspect of affairs in Greece has been much improved by the introduction of administrative reforms. A better calculated scheme of taxation, the work of my colleague, the new Finance Minister, promises soon to balance the Budget and to leave a margin over to secure foreign loans. The national outlook has already ceased to cause anxiety to the Government. The productivity of the country has been placed on a firmer basis altogether. We have studied every method by which Greece could be rendered less dependent upon outside assistance. It is our intention to rely upon our own resources.

For the purposes of administrative reform we are establishing a new "Local Government" system, which will give great power to Prefects, of whom there will be thirty in all. The Prefects will deal with all local questions except those coming within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Justice and the War Office. I decided to raise the pay of these officials in order to attract men of a higher standard to the Civil Service. I am, as far as possible, organising the police on a British model. We have had a police mission, under the direction of a British officer, for the last three years. Many officers and men have undergone a strenuous course of training at Corfu, where a police school has been established. The island is policed by the newly trained, who are also drafted into the various town forces of the mainland. Patras has been trying these men with highly satisfactory results. They form the smartest and most efficient body of police in the Near East.

The Finance Minister has placed the country in a stronger position by the introduction of new taxes and by more effective methods adopted to insure the collection of all existing revenues. The maintenance of vast numbers of refugees at a critical moment in the history of the country, has, in spite of generous foreign help, been a complicated matter for the Government. The problem is not beyond solution. Indeed, the refugees are gradually being fitted into the national life. In various directions plans have been worked out for their welfare, but a foreign loan is necessary if they are to be transformed from a burden on the State into a productive force.

With regard to the political conditions which apply to-day, there is a feeling throughout Greece that the country is entering a new phase, from which the bitter party strife of recent years must be absent. Men are to be chosen for their actual capabilities, and not for their political associations. The old terms, Venizelist and Constantinist, will die out, to be replaced by others with new meanings. The basis of our policy, the policy of the present régime, is, and will be, "la carrière ouverte aux talents." The past good service of a man will not be the only recommendation needed to secure for him public office or consideration. The decisive factor will be his usefulness to-day and to-morrow.

He concludes with an appeal to bury the past coupled with a justification of the November executions, saying that "if the Court-Martial had failed the Army in the trial crisis, would not the Army have failed Greece, instead of forming the basis of her salvation?"

Britain and War.

The Times of February 15 deals thus, in an article entitled "Parliament and the Turkish Treaty," with the suggestion that on no grounds will Great Britain make war with Turkey:—

Nothing is more likely to tempt the Turks or to tempt others to press her too far than suggestions, from whatever quarter and with whatever object they may be made, that our patience is inexhaustible, and that we may be flouted and wronged with impunity. Illusions on this point have led others to force us into war before now. Germany did not believe that we would fight in August, 1914. The sooner they are extinguished the better for peace. Some, at least, of the Turks know our strength and the strength of the Allied block which they tried, and failed, to break. They know, too, despite Mustapha Kemal's boasts, their own weakness, and they know that the Bolsheviks are fatal and feeble confederates. There will be no war if these truths are kept before the eyes of the real rulers of Turkey. They must be convinced that we have gone to the utmost limits of concession, and that nothing—not even threats of war—will induce us to go beyond these limits. When once they have understood that we are fixed in our resolve to uphold unchanged the settlement presented to them by Lord Curzon, we believe that they will behave as reasonably as the Government expect them to do and retract the "terrible mistake" they have committed. Division among the Allies and the semblance of weakness or of indecision among ourselves are almost the only factors which would make war inevitable. The unity and the firmness of the Allies have just been proved afresh by their resistance to Turkish insistence at Smyrna. The attitude of the British people is adequately reflected in the speeches of Ministers.

Egypt and the Sudan.

The claim of Egypt to control the Sudan finds little echo in the Press of this country; we have, for example, even so "advanced" a journal as the Manchester Guardian saying, in its issue of February 10, concerning the recent resignation of the Egyptian Cabinet:—

The resignation is in the nature of a protest against the British refusal to admit in the new Constitution the sovereignty of Egypt over the Sudan. The original claim that the King of Egypt should also assume the style and title of King of the Sudan had already been abandoned. The modified articles for which the Nessim Cabinet hoped to obtain British approval, merely referred the question of the King's title to the Sudan to settlement by the Egyptian Parliament after negotiations. Pending a possible though unlikely acceptance of this modified claim by the British Government, Tewfik Nessim Pasha has consented to remain in office at the urgent instance of the King. But it was fairly evident from the first that the British could not entertain any such proposal. Egypt has indeed the strongest interest and concern in the Sudan, for her whole water supply, and so her vital industry, is dependent upon the Nile waters which flow for hundreds of miles through Sudanese territory. She has the clearest right to protest against any arrangement which might endanger that supply. But this does not detract from the essential fact that Egypt and the Sudan are two countries racially and historically distinct, and that there is no strong demand on the part of the Sudanese for incorporation in an alien State. Racially the Sudan is distinct, for it contains a large negroid population speaking non-Semitic dialects. Historically it is distinct, because repeated Egyptian conquests have failed to subdue, let alone to assimilate it. The Egyptian rule of the Sudan which terminated in the early 'eighties was notoriously incompetent: it died from sheer inability to maintain itself. The British rule, politely termed Anglo-Egyptian Condominium, has been on the whole successful, just, and even popular. It would be impossible to substitute Egyptian rule and foolish to attempt it. But Egypt's deep interest in the country must be recognised, and, as far as possible, her feelings should be respected. The existing compromise has worked on the whole very well. Why disturb it?

Anglo-French Solidarity.

Commenting upon the recent abuse by the Turkish Press of France, the New Statesman of February 3 writes as follows:—

Probably the best that we can hope for is that negotiations will be renewed on certain of the clauses to which the Turks take the strongest objection, and on which the Allies can fairly be asked to give way further. We are not sorry to see that a great deal of the bitter criticism is directed against France. We are tired of being billed as the villain of the piece (and that chiefly on the comparatively trivial ground of our possession of Mosul); the British people—and we would add, now that Mr. Lloyd George is gone, the British Government—are every whit as anxious for friendship with Turkey as are the French. But the more practical importance of this anti-French outburst is that it marks the recognition in Turkey of the solidarity of the two chief Western Powers. That apparent solidarity may not be very positive or very real, and, in one sense, certainly it is undesirable that it should be; we do not want a European Entente for the coercion and exploitation of Turkey. But we do want a truce to Anglo-French quarrels and intrigues and stabbings in the back in the Near East. The policy, so popular in certain quarters in Paris, of embroiling us with the Turks might in quieter times produce some petty gains for some Frenchmen. But in these critical days it is too dangerous a game to play; war between Turkey and Great Britain would inevitably involve France, and would bring down all her Eastern interests with a crash.

Near East Bookshelf.

A GREAT TRAVELLER

"MEMORIES OF TRAVEL." By Viscount Bryce. (London: Macmillan and Co. 12s. 6d. net.)

We all knew that with the passing of the late Viscount Bryce we had lost a remarkable man, who had accomplished much in many fields of life, but we did not realise, until we read this book, quite how varied and wide had been his experiences. There were, indeed, few parts of the world of which Viscount Bryce had not some knowledge. Not that he was an inquisitive roamer—he was, on the contrary, strictly a traveller, journeying for the most part with definite purpose and generally with definite result. But look where he had been! Apart from Transcaucasia, South Africa, and South America, on all of which countries he had written books now well known, he had visited Egypt, India, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, Japan, Korea, China, the Balearic Islands and the Canaries, the Hawaiian Islands, Mexico, Cuba, Jamaica, Sicily, Corsica, Constantinople, the Greek Islands, and North Africa. On all these places he had jotted down notes and reflections, which, however, were never expanded into articles, and are not, therefore, contained in this book.

But this book does contain evidence of the extraordinary extent of his receptive powers and of his universal sympathy. Here are the names of its chapters: Impressions of Iceland, The Tatra (Mountains of Poland and of Hungary), Suvaroff's Alpine Campaign, Impressions of Palestine, The Isles of the Southern Pacific, The Scenery of North America, and The Altai Mountains. Personally we found most interesting the articles upon Iceland and the Altai Mountains, but they do not properly fall within the scope of THE NEAR EAST, and we must concentrate on the chapter devoted to Palestine. Palestine Viscount Bryce visited just before the outbreak of the War, and his remarks on this country are representative of his general style of writing. Bryce's passion for knowledge was immense and intense, and his incessant wish to add fuel to this fire sometimes prevented his own personality from glowing through. This defect, at any rate, we find in the "Impressions of Palestine," which are at once the perfection of soundness and of rather deliberate sterility. Palestine is a country whose future can scarcely be so important as was its past, and Bryce recognises this fact: he feels the grip of the past upon the land, sees, indeed, evidence of it everywhere, but he does not allow his imagination rein, so that the reader, too, may be depressed and uplifted by the numbing and kindling sense of history. His comments are just and accurate rather than shrewd and stimulating. It was the smallness and the poverty of Palestine that most struck him; the external rather than the internal aspect; its spiritual and religious content he, of course, recognised, but rather as a witness than as a participant. His general summing up of Palestine is, indeed, that of the observer, not of the realist: "Stones, caves, tombs, ruins, battlefields, sites hallowed by traditions—all bathed in an atmosphere of legend and marvel." Bryce was a wonderful man, far wiser than most of those of his creed and tendencies; but it is possible that he saw too much actuality to develop the habit of looking behind it for reality.

The chief value of this book is, we think, its informative value. Its author was an inquisitor of inexhaustible fertility and an historian with very retentive memory. In these "Memories" are a hundred and one little known facts which those minds which delight in the possession of knowledge for its own sake will joy in receiving. But Bryce had not the incandescence of imagination to make this a great book, and, though it will undoubtedly occupy an honourable enough place among books of travel, it will probably be more often referred to than read.

A GUIDE-BOOK TO SLOVENIA.

"VISIONS DE SLOVENIE." (Liubiana: Federation Yougoslave de Tourisme en Slovenie.)

Under the title "Visions de Slovénie," the Fédération Yougoslave de Tourisme en Slovénie has just brought out a very welcome publication in the shape of a guidebook—written in French—containing all the necessary information for touring in Slovenia. It is already generally known that the greater part of Yugoslavia offers plenty of attractions to the tourist, but that most of the country's possibilities in this respect are still unexploited—that is to say, one type of tourist would call it "unspoilt" and the other would complain of the lack of "civilisation." But at the Slovene summer resorts and towns all except the most fastidious may hope to be satisfied, as well as delighted with the country thrown open to them. The booklet is well and amply illustrated, and gives, besides the ordinary tourist information, particulars about the industry of Slovenia and a brief outline of the history and establishment of Yugoslavia, the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes.

SCIENCE AND MYSTERY.

"No. 87." By Harrington Hext. (London: Thornton Butterworth. 6s. net.)

"No. 87" is a quite good scientific mystery story. In it "Harrington Hext" deals with the interesting problem of the way in which a conscientious man would be likely to face the responsibility of his discovery of a new energy—radio-activity with unlimited destructive powers. The excitement caused by the series of mysterious deaths of prominent men in different countries is well worked up, although the conversations between the members of "The Club of Friends," speculating on the possible solutions, are rather tedious.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"Desolate Splendour." By Michael Sadleir. (London: Constable and Co. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 4d.)

"Dismiss!" By Hilton Brown. (London: Methuen and Co., Ltd. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 5d.)

"Duality: A Study in Psycho-Analysis of Race." By R. N. Bradley. (London: George Routledge and Sons, Ltd. 6s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 4d.)

"The Wisdom of the Aryas." By Allan Bennett. (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner and Co., Ltd. 2s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 2½d.)

"The Hebrew Tragedy." By the late Colonel C. R. Conder, R.E. (Galashiels: John Grant. 2s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 3d.)

GREEK (MODERN) SELF-TAUGHT

(In Greek and Roman Characters.)

By NICOLAOS ANASTASSIOU.

Bachelier Diplôme du Collège Grec de Halki.

Containing:—The Alphabet.
Phonetic Pronunciation.
Classified Vocabularies.
Conversational Phrases, etc.
Travelling.

Railway.
Steamboat.
Hotel, etc.
Elementary Grammar.
Money, etc.

Red Cloth. 4s. net; Blue Wrapper, 3s. net. Postage. 3d. extra.

Sold by all BOOKSELLERS. Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.

London: E. MARLBOROUGH & CO., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

February 22 (New Style).

February 9 (Old Style).

Ragab 6, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Adar 6, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir Horace Rumbold left London last Friday for Constantinople.

The Earl and Countess of Ronaldshay have arrived at 38, Grosvenor Street, W.

Viscount and Viscountess Goschen and the Hon. Cicely Goschen have left England for Tunis.

General Sir John and Lady Maxwell are visiting Lieut.-General Sir Walter Congreve, V.C., and Lady Congreve in Cairo.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Granby, who are travelling in Egypt, will return to London about the middle of March.

Queen Olga of Greece and Prince Nicolas of Roumania were among those who visited the King and Queen on Saturday and remained to luncheon.

According to The Times Belgrade correspondent, Prince Paul has left there for Paris, and intends later to visit London to congratulate the Duke of York in person on his betrothal.

The Marquess Curzon of Kedleston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the Marchioness Curzon of Kedleston had the honour of being invited to luncheon with their Majesties at Buckingham Palace last Thursday.

Prince Nicolas of Roumania arrived in London on February 16. He has come to England to enter the Royal Navy as a midshipman. For the present he will be the guest of the Roumanian Minister and Mme. Titulesco.

Mr. Ronald Storrs, Governor of Jerusalem, arrived in New York on January 27. He will lecture in the principal towns of the U.S.A. and of Canada on behalf of the Pro-Jerusalem Society, of which he is the founder and president.

M. Abel Chevalley, High Commissioner for France in the Caucasus, is now on a visit to London. M. Chevalley, who is an eminent literary critic, lectured last week to the members of the Royal Society of Literature and the Anglo-French Society.

Lady Muriel Paget has recently been on a visit to the Queen of Roumania, with the object of arranging for the continuance by the Society of Friends of Roumania of the work hitherto carried on by the League of Red Cross Societies. This includes a model child welfare centre to be organised on the same lines as those recently established in Czechoslovakia and the Baltic States, and a scheme for the training of nurses in Roumania.

A lecture on "Royal Burials in Egypt" will be given by Professor Flinders Petrie for the benefit of the London Society for Women's Service on Thursday, March 1, at 5.30 p.m., at 54, Mount Street, W.1, by kind permission of the Hon. Mrs. Harold Pearson. Tickets, price £1 1s. (including tea), and a few at 10s. 6d. admitting to the lecture only, are obtainable from Mrs. Kinnell, 38, Upper Grosvenor Street, W.1 (chairman), and from Miss P. Strachey, 58, Victoria Street, S.W.1.

APPOINTMENTS, PROMOTIONS, Etc.

Mr. Law, of the Governorate at Jerusalem, has been appointed Sub-District Governor of Ramallah, and will be leaving Jerusalem shortly.

Dr. George Adamkowitz, the principal Secretary of the Polish Legation in London, has been appointed Diplomatic Agent and Consul-General of the Polish Republic in Jerusalem.

His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State has approved of the following honorary appointments in the Palestine Administration:--

John Strathearn, O.B.E., M.D., F.R.C.S., the British Ophthalmic Hospital, Jerusalem, as Hon. Consulting Ophthalmic Surgeon.

Israel Biskind, M.D., as Hon. Consulting Surgeon.

Hugh J. Orr-Ewing, M.C., M.D., M.R.C.P., the English Hospital, Jerusalem, as Hon. Consulting Physician.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round.

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.

Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1923.

THE SOLUTION FOR EGYPT.

Events in Egypt continue to move in a vicious circle. Once more the country is back, with certain modifications, where it was at the beginning of 1922, and, previously, in 1919. As after the fall of the Rushdi Cabinet four years ago, and after the resignation of Adly Pasha last year, so now it is proving difficult or impossible to find any responsible Egyptian who will undertake to form a Ministry except on conditions that the British Government does not see its way to sanction. In 1919 a way out of the crisis, which was accompanied by widespread manifestations of violence and disorder, was found by the appointment of Lord Milner's Mission. After prolonged negotiations the outline of a treaty between Egypt and Great Britain was agreed upon by Egyptian representatives and the Mission, and a workable settlement of the Egyptian question seemed in sight. When, however, Adly Pasha came to England to elaborate the Treaty of Alliance, he found that the British Government contemplated an agreement that departed in a marked degree from Lord Milner's recommendations. He rejected the draft Treaty, returned to Egypt, and resigned. A second time there followed a long interval without any Egyptian Cabinet in office. The solution of the 1922 crisis was due to Lord Allenby's action; he was able to convince the British Government that it was impossible for him to carry on in Egypt without the co-operation of a friendly Egyptian Ministry, and something in the nature of a complete reversal of the policy set forth in the Explanatory Note sent to the Sultan on December 3, 1921, after the rupture of the London negotiations, was announced. The Protectorate was terminated, Egypt was recognised as an independent sovereign State, free to evolve her own national institutions, and certain matters which the negotiators in London had failed to settle were reserved for subsequent adjustment. On the strength of this declaration the Sarwat Ministry took office under seemingly favourable auspices, and the work of drafting a Constitution was begun by the Egyptian Government. Less than a year later, however, the country is back again in the old impasse. The Sarwat Cabinet resigned, and was followed by a Ministry under Nessim Pasha, who, after two months' tenure, has also laid down his office.

The ostensible reason for the present deadlock is that no Egyptian Cabinet is prepared to accept the onus of seeming to give way on the subject of Egypt's claim to the Sudan. Although the reservation of this matter for subsequent discussion was specifically agreed to by both Zaghoul Pasha and Adly Pasha, the draft Constitution as it left the Committee responsible for drawing it up prejudged the future status of the Sudan as Egyptian territory. The Committee paid no attention to British protests on this point, and Lord Allenby has been obliged to insist that the offending words shall be eliminated before the draft Constitution is submitted to King Fuad. A further obstacle is supposed to exist in a difference of opinion between the King and the politicians regarding the constitution of the Upper House. In all probability, however, the real stumbling block is the absence of Zaghoul Pasha, who has been exiled from the country under martial law. It will be remembered that the Milner Mission failed to reach any practical settlement until Zaghoul Pasha took part in the negotiations. There was subsequently a breach between Zaghoul Pasha and Adly Pasha, and the former, by the encouragement that he gave to extremist excesses, became as much a source of annoyance to the moderate section of Egyptian opinion as he was to the British authorities. Lord Allenby accepted responsibility for his deportation, but there was no room for doubt at the time that Zaghoul Pasha's absence was particularly welcome to the Egyptian moderates. The terms that Sarwat Pasha obtained from the British Government as his condition for accepting office were far more favourable to Egypt than the Nationalist leader had secured from Lord Milner and accepted, and this fact, it was supposed, would enable the Egyptian Government to fulfil its part of the contract by carrying through a satisfactory settlement of all outstanding matters between Great Britain and Egypt. Sarwat Pasha, however, had to admit defeat. His successor was chosen as being in closer touch with Zaghoul Pasha; but he, too, has failed to make Egypt keep faith with Great Britain.

In these circumstances Great Britain's best course of action would seem to be clear. She has to deal with Egypt as it is, not with an Egypt as she might like it to be. If no Egyptian Cabinet can be found with sufficient personal courage to steer the course that it knows to be right, so long as it is unable to count upon the support of Zaghoul Pasha, then let the Nationalist leader return to his own country in order that Egypt may have at least one man with the courage of his convictions. Zaghoul Pasha was at one time prepared to accept less favourable terms than Egypt has now been given. It was the failure of the British Government to act up to the spirit and letter of the Milner recommendations that threw the Egyptian question into the melting-pot again. Lord Milner contemplated a reciprocal treaty between Great Britain and Egypt; in the end the British Government went further by means of a unilateral declaration, leaving certain matters to be settled by subsequent agreement. The effect of reopening negotiations with Zaghoul Pasha would be to revert to the scheme of a reciprocal treaty. The Nationalist leader would be required to accept the solution considered necessary by Great Britain in regard to the four reserved questions—the Suez Canal, the Army of Occupation, the protection of foreign interests and minorities, and the Sudan—and he would be free to return to Egypt to take up the position to which his hold on public opinion may entitle him. The actual procedure would be that, after the return of Zaghoul Pasha, a treaty embodying the understanding between him and the British Government would have to be submitted to the Egyptian Parliament for ratification. If Zaghoul Pasha failed to carry the people with him in this matter, Great Britain would not be worse off than she is at the present moment; if he refused to be recalled on such an understanding no harm would have been done. The British position is plain to all. We want to arrive at a settlement with an Egyptian who can speak and act for Egypt. If Zaghoul Pasha alone answers that description the misfortune is Egypt's. Great Britain's personal account with Zaghoul Pasha was settled when he came to London to negotiate with Lord Milner. His quarrel with his political colleagues led to his deportation through British instrumentality under martial law; but if Egypt cannot look after her own interests without him, then Great Britain, who is specially concerned to promote those very interests, will be serving both her own ends and Egypt's in facilitating Zaghoul Pasha's return.

THE SUDAN—III.

RAILWAYS AND STEAMERS IN THE SUDAN

(Contributed.)

During the last fifty years the course of events in the Sudan has been mainly determined by the success or the failure of the attempts made from time to time to establish an adequate system of communications throughout that vast territory. The first project for the building of a railway in the Sudan was launched in the 'seventies of the last century, under the auspices of the Khedive Ismail, whose intention it was to construct a line from Halfa, at the foot of the Second Cataract, southward to Khartoum, and ultimately to El Fasher, the capital of the Darfur Province. This scheme was abandoned owing to its expense, after some thirty miles of line had been laid, and the only routes by land from Egypt to the Sudan remained, as in the past, the old caravan road from Korosko to Abu Hamed, and the rough track through the valleys of the cataract country south of Halfa. The success of the Mahdist revolt was directly due to the absence of any proper system of communications throughout the country, and the failure of the Khartoum Relief Expedition in 1885 was brought about by the difficulties and delays which resulted inevitably from the absence of any means of transport other than camels and boats. The subsequent withdrawal of the troops to the frontier at Halfa and the abandonment of the scheme for the construction of the Suakin-Berber railway were followed by thirteen years of anarchy and chaos under the rule of the Khalifa.

The reoccupation of the Sudan, which was carried out during the years from 1896 to 1898, was rendered possible, first, by the extension of Ismail's old railway line along the Nile from Halfa to Kerma, in the Dongola Province, and, secondly, by the construction of the desert railway from Halfa to Abu Hamed, with its subsequent prolongation to the Atbara, and finally to Khartoum itself. The completion of the Nile-Red Sea railway in 1905, which placed Khartoum in direct touch with the sea, marked the first great step in the country's economic development, which received a further impulse by the extension of the railway a few years later southward into the Gezira and westward into Kordofan.

In order to obtain a clear idea of the present system of communications in the Sudan it is necessary to bear in mind the fact that the railway serves the northern half of the country, while in the southern half communications are maintained by the steamers on the White Nile and its tributaries; in fact, the most southerly part of the railway system—namely the railway line westward from Sennar to the White Nile and Kordofan—follows very closely the central parallel of the country. Whether and to what extent it may ultimately be possible or profitable to carry the railway into the Southern Sudan need not be discussed here; it is sufficient to say that the present railway system will, when the Kassala line is complete, provide for the full development of the vast area to be irrigated from the Blue Nile dam, and for the opening up of the great tract of cotton-growing land which lies round the delta of the River Gash—tasks which

GELLATLY, HANKEY & CO.

LLOYD'S AGENTS FOR THE RED SEA.

KHARTOUM, PORT SUDAN, SUAKIN, MASSOWAH AND JEDDAH (Arabia).

Branches at:—GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, ANTWERP, MARSEILLES, HAMBURG, COLOGNE.

Head Office:—Dock House, Billiter Street, LONDON, E.C.3 West End Office:—62, Pall Mall, LONDON, S.W.1

Agents for:—

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.
THE MARINE INSURANCE CO., LTD.

THE UNION-CASTLE MAIL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.
THE PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD.

ELLERMAN AND BUCKNALL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.
THE ARMY & NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

ELLERMAN'S WILSON LINE, LTD.
COX'S SHIPPING AGENCY, &c.

Regular Service of First-Class Passenger and Cargo Steamers between Port Sudan and the Continent, United Kingdom, New York and East African Ports.

COAL, PATENT FUEL, CEMENT, PETROLEUM, SHELL MOTOR SPIRIT, EXPLOSIVES AND GENERAL MERCHANTS

Telegrams

"GELLATLY."

will engage the full energies of the country for many years to come.

The River Service.

The standard gauge line of the Egyptian State Railways ends at Luxor, and the railway continues southward to Assuan, and thence on to Shellal, at the head of the cataract, on a 3 ft. 6 in. gauge. The voyage from Shellal to Halfa takes about forty hours, and is, perhaps, the most attractive part of the journey between Cairo and Khartoum. The Sudan Railway Administration maintain on this reach of the Nile two mail steamers and two intermediate services weekly. The journey is impressive by reason of its striking scenery and its great historic interest. The rugged gorge of Kalabsha; Korosko, where the old caravan road to Abu Hamed leaves the river and where Gordon disembarked on his last journey to Khartoum; the rock fortress of Ibrim; Toski, where the tribesmen of the Khalifa were routed in their attempt to invade Egypt, and the great temple of Abu Simbel, the most wonderful of all the temples of Egypt, are passed in succession by the steamer on its way southward from Shellal to Halfa.

The Desert Railway.

The story of the building of the first section from Halfa to Abu Hamed has been told by many writers; by none, perhaps, more graphically than by the late G. W. Stevens, who gives a vivid picture of the difficulties and anxieties which beset the railway builders of twenty-five years ago. Absolutely devoid of vegetation, and often without rain for years in succession, the Halfa desert is one of the most barren tracts of country in the world. The discovery of water at two places on this section of the line was of untold assistance; without it only a costly system of pumps and pipe-lines would have made it possible to operate satisfactorily so long a waterless stretch of railway.

The greater part of the line is laid on a low embankment rarely exceeding 2 ft. in height. The hard sand forms an excellent bed for the track, and the bank suffers neither from erosion by the wind nor from drifting sand. In the few places where cuttings are unavoidable special precautions have to be taken to keep the line clear of sand drifts; a low embankment will remain clear in the heaviest storm, whereas even a shallow cutting fills up at once with the driven sand.

At Station No. 10, twenty miles north of Abu Hamed, the line to Kareima, in the Dongola Province, branches off from the main line, and Abu Hamed itself is reached some ten hours after leaving Halfa.

Up till the end of the year 1905 the Sudan railway system consisted of two lines, with a common terminus at Halfa. One was the Halfa-Khartoum line as it exists to-day, the other was the Halfa-Kerma line. The latter railway formed part of the original project of Ismail Pasha fifty years ago, but the track had been laid only as far as the village of Sarra, some thirty miles from Halfa, where the scheme was abandoned. During the expedition of 1896 and 1897 this line was extended to Kerma, which lies 200 miles from Halfa at the foot of the clear reach of navigable water extending throughout the whole length of the Dongola Province. Designed and built as cheaply and expeditiously as possible for use by an army in the field, it served its original purpose admirably; but the rugged and broken nature of the country it had to traverse made the employment of steep gradients and sharp curves unavoidable, and in the years that followed it became increasingly apparent that, without very heavy capital expenditure, the Kerma line could never be worked profitably as a commercial undertaking. A new route was, therefore, sought which would avoid these disadvantages and give easier access to the Dongola reach of the Nile.

During 1905 and 1906, while the building of the Red Sea line was in progress, the old track of the Kerma line was, therefore, pulled up, and the material was utilised to lay a new line, with easy gradients and curves, from No. 10 junction on the desert railway to the village of Kareima, which lies at the head of the open water.

Abu Hamed to Khartoum.

Southwards from Abu Hamed the line follows the valley of the Nile to Khartoum, skirting at a distance of 131 miles the old town of Berber, once a place of considerable importance in the days when a great part of the trade between the Sudan and the outer world passed over the ancient caravan road that led across 240 miles of inhospitable desert to the port of Suakin, on the Red Sea coast. In another twenty miles the line reaches Atbara, where the main line to Port Sudan diverges from the Halfa-Khartoum railway. During the operations of 1898, which culminated in the battle of Omdurman, Atbara was railhead and the military base from which the expeditionary forces proceeded south. After the reoccupation of Khartoum the fort and depot at Atbara were evacuated, and for the next five years the site was marked by a few crumbling walls and a single railway siding.

Map of the Sudan Government Railways.

With the opening of the Nile-Red Sea railway in 1906, and the consequent transfer of the railway headquarters from Halfa to Atbara, offices, workshops, and stores were established there; houses were built for the staff and employees, and a native town began to spring up. Atbara to-day is the centre of the railway administration and the headquarters of the mechanical traffic, and the engineering departments; the large locomotive and carriage and wagon workshops are fully equipped with modern plant, and the work which is carried out there bears comparison with that of any first-class railway workshop in the world.

The bridge across the Atbara River is the first important engineering work encountered on the way to Khartoum. For nine months of the year the river shrinks to a series of pools in a wide, sandy bed, but in the flood season it rises very rapidly, and during the summer months is a deep and swiftly flowing river hundreds of yards wide.

Railway Bridge over the Atbara.

The bridge, which consists of seven 150 ft. spans, was not actually opened for traffic till August, 1899; but during its construction in the dry season a temporary bridge had been built, across which the railway was laid, so that railhead could be carried forward towards Khartoum while the permanent bridge was still in course of erection. When the rising flood of that year swept away the temporary structure, a large quantity of railway material and equipment had been collected on the south bank of the river, so that the work of extending the railway was carried on uninterruptedly throughout the summer.

At Wad Ben Naga, 495 miles from Halfa, the railway leaves the river valley to avoid the rugged gorge of the Shabluka cataract, and for the next fifty miles its course lies across the open scrub-covered desert lying to the eastward of the Gebel Gerri hills, through which the river makes its way. It rejoins the river at Geili, some twenty-five miles from Khartoum, and runs almost in a straight line through the broad alluvial tract bordering on the river to Khartoum North, on the right bank of the Blue Nile. Crossing the great bridge, the line skirts the ground of the Gordon College, and, curving to the right, reaches Khartoum Central station.

The railway from Halfa reached Khartoum North (then known as Halfaya) on the last day of December, 1899, and communication between the town of Khartoum and the railway terminus was established by a chain-ferry service, which remained in use until the Blue Nile bridge was completed in 1909.

The Red Sea Line.

The reader who has thus far followed the description of the route from Egypt to the Sudan will have observed that three separate transshipments have to be effected on the course of the journey. The first is at Luxor, where the gauge changes from the standard, or 4 ft. 8½ in., gauge to the narrow gauge of 3 ft. 6 in. The second is the transshipment from rail to river at Shellal; the third, the transshipment from river to rail at Halfa. It is obvious that the delay, inconvenience, and expense attendant on such a route were bound to hamper seriously the growth of trade with the interior of the country; moreover, even if through railway communication of uniform gauge existed, the mere distance from Khartoum to a Mediterranean port would itself impose on the traffic a tax so heavy as to render the development of the country almost impossible. From Khartoum to Alexandria is 1,470 miles; from Khartoum to Port Sudan the distance is little more than one-third of this. It was, therefore, natural and inevitable that soon after the reoccupation of the country and the establishment of an ordered Government, steps should be taken to ascertain the best route for a direct line to connect Khartoum with a port on the Red Sea. With this purpose in view preliminary surveys were begun in the autumn of 1901 to ascertain the best route for a railway across the hill country which borders the Red Sea coast from the Gulf of Suez to the Abyssinian plateau. The difficulty in the way of securing an easily graded line lay in the fact that the water-shed of the range lies only some thirty or forty miles from the coast, and the lowest passes are 3,000 ft. or more above the sea level. On the western side the ground falls gently from the watershed towards the open desert, but on the seaward side the hills descend abruptly on to the maritime plain. A direct route across the range—either following or parallel to the old Suakin-Berber caravan road—was, therefore, obviously impracticable, and the alignment finally selected lay through a valley parallel with the coast, which admitted of the construction of a railway through it with no gradient steeper than 1 in 100.

In August, 1904, the actual work of construction was begun at Suakin, and soon after track-laying was also started from the Atbara end. On October 15, 1905, the two railheads met, and through railway communication between the Nile and the Red Sea was established. On the western side of the hills the gradients are easy except when approaching the actual summit, where a short section of the line lies on a gradient of 1 in 125. On the eastern side, however, the gradients are far more severe, as the line has to rise to a point 3,000 ft. above the sea in a distance of less than ninety miles, and from the point where it leaves the coastal plain has to climb for over fifty miles on an almost unbroken gradient of 1 in 100. The principal difficulty during the construction of the line was to provide adequate bridging and flood protection works to guard the line from damage by the torrential floods which pour down the steep rocky valleys during the rainy season and turn them into deep and rapid rivers hundreds of yards wide. The steepest part of the gradient ends at Gebeit, where a locomotive depot has been established, and an excellent water supply is available from the deep wells. The remaining fifteen miles from Gebeit to the Summit station lie on easier gradients, and once the summit is passed the line enters a wide plateau sloping gently to the south and west, where the construction of the railway encountered no serious difficulty.

The town and harbour of Suakin were selected as the base for the construction of the line, as certain facilities already existed there, but its narrow and tortuous entrance and the very restricted area of its anchorage made it unfitted to become the principal seaport of the Sudan. Thirty-five miles to the north lay the harbour of Port Sudan, formerly known as Mersa Sheikh Barghut. This inlet of the Red Sea forms an admirable natural harbour; it is sheltered from the prevailing winds, easy of access from the open sea, and provides a splendid anchorage for large vessels. Port Sudan was, therefore, chosen to become the principal seaport of the country, and was connected by rail with the Suakin-Atbara line immediately the latter was completed, the formal opening of the railway

(Continued on p. 199.)

TRADE WITH THE SUDAN

THE SUDAN TRADING COMPANY.

Head Office : Khartoum.

Branches :

Port Sudan, El Obeid, Nahud, and principal stations in the Sudan, Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said (Egypt).

General Wholesale Import Merchants and Exporters of Sudan Produce.

London Agency :

35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3.

ECONOMICAL EXCAVATIONS

We specialise in Dragline Excavators, suitable for drainage, irrigation, trenching and general work.

Full range of standard models available with bucket capacities from 3/4 to 9 cubic yards.

If you have any excavations to carry out, ask us for particulars of Ruston Draglines and Shovels.

RUSTON & HORNSBY LTD.

LINCOLN

ENGLAND

SUDAN IVORY.

In the Sudan Government Gazette of December 15, 1922, a new Ordinance has appeared prohibiting trade in tusks of ivory weighing less than 14 kilos (31 rattles).

There is much to be said in favour of protecting the female and small elephants against being slaughtered, remarks the Sudan Chamber of Commerce Journal, and we understand that in Uganda and East Africa trade in tusks under 30 lbs. in weight has been prohibited for some time past.

It is to be hoped the Government will see its way to postpone the enforcement of the Ordinance for, say, six months, to enable merchants to liquidate their stock of ivory in hand. The enforcement of this new Ordinance will mean a considerable loss to Government and to merchants in the ivory trade, and it is to be hoped that the French and Belgian Congo authorities will adopt and carry out the new arrangements. Otherwise tusks of less than 14 kilos will be taken into French and Belgian territory, and thus defeat the object of the Ordinance, meaning a loss to the Sudan without anything being gained in return.

CONTOMICHALOS, DARKE & CO., LTD.

Registered Office : 35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3

Sudan Branches :

Port Sudan, Khartoum, Suakim, Tokar, Kassala. STEAMSHIP, INSURANCE, FORWARDING AND BUNKERING AGENTS, COTTON AND COTTONSEED EXPORTERS.

General Agents in the Sudan for :

The Clan Line of Steamers; Ellerman's City & Hall Lines; The Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.; The Harrison Line; The Sun Line; The Bank Line (Andrew Weir & Co.); The Hansa Line; The London Assurance; etc., etc.

Through freights quoted from Sudan to all U.K., Continental and U.S.A. ports, and from Port Sudan to the principal stations in the Sudan.

Bunker Coals always in stock at Port Sudan, and steamers supplied at short notice.

For full particulars apply to London and/or Khartoum Offices.

SUDAN MERCANTILE CO., LTD.

IMPORT & EXPORT.

Representing:—

DUNLOP RUBBER CO., LTD.,
BRITISH FIBROCEMENT WORKS, [Ltd.,
BURRELL'S PAINTS,
MAJOR & CO.'s SOLIGNUM, [Sc., &c.

Telegrams: SUDANILE.

P.O. Box 97
KHARTOUM.

P.O. Box 22
PORT SUDAN.

SUDAN DURA.

With the impetus given to the export of dura (millet) from the Sudan by a demand from Egypt for the grain about fourteen years ago, the need for scientific cleaning arose. On September 10, 1914, a grain cleaning plant was opened at the Mogren, Khartoum, for experimental purposes, but its use has now become an established feature of the grain trade. The small machines installed are capable of handling up to 18 tons of dura per hour. When used for sesame, an oily seed, their capacity is less; the cleaning of the seed takes longer, and from 4 to 5 tons only per hour can be treated. Fully employed, the machines clean a train load (400 to 500 tons) of dura a day, to an average of 1.5 per cent. of dirt. A guarantee is given that grain cleaned by the machines does not contain more than 3 per cent. of dirt. The dura brought in for cleaning contains on an average 13 per cent. of dirt.

During the year ending December 31, 1922, the quantity of grain cleaned at Khartoum amounted to 43,080 tons of dura and 7,078 tons of sesame. Practically the whole of this grain was for export.

The cleaning plant, it is stated in the December Report of the Sudan Central Economic Board, enabled grain to be put on the English and Continental markets in that clean condition which is essential to the maintenance of a steady trade.

(Continued from p. 197.)

by Lord Cromer taking place there in January, 1906. Port Sudan is to-day a well-equipped harbour, with ample mooring space in the outer anchorage and deep-water quays over 2,000 ft. in length, where vessels drawing 30 ft. of water can be berthed. The railway sidings run along the quays, which are lighted by electricity and provided with electric cranes for dealing with cargo. A large condensing plant is also installed there, and the town is provided with a good water supply from deep wells some miles from the town.

The new Kassala line, preparations for the construction of which are already well advanced, will start from Thamiam, a point on the western side of the hills some 118 miles from Port Sudan, and will run thence due south for 215 miles to the town of Kassala. The surveys already made show that this line will be easy to build, and its construction will not only open up a vast cotton-growing area, but will also foster the trade in cattle and grain, which hitherto has remained undeveloped owing to lack of communications with the outside world. The Kassala line, it is safe to say, will become an important factor in the development of trade and in the growth of prosperity in the northern part of the Sudan.

The Blue Nile Bridge, Khartoum.

Khartoum to Sennar.

From all time the Gezira, which is the name given to the country lying between the Blue and the White Nile, has been the granary of the Sudan. The soil is fertile, and the rainfall in most years is sufficient to grow immense crops of dura, a species of millet, which is the staple food of the native population. As the result of a long and careful series of experiments carried out during the years before the Great War, it was established beyond doubt that the soil and climate were in every way suitable for the production of very high-grade cotton, and that only the provision of a suitable system of irrigation was necessary to make the Gezira one of the great cotton-growing countries of the world. To develop the great potential resources of this area, and to open up to trade the gum forests and cattle-raising districts of Kordofan, it was necessary to extend the railway line southward from Khartoum. The first step was to build a bridge for the railway across the Blue Nile at Khartoum. The preliminary work of boring to ascertain the nature of the foundation was carried out during 1906 and 1907, and in the autumn of the latter year, when the river had fallen, the actual work of construction began.

The Blue Nile bridge—the longest bridge in tropical Africa—carries, besides the railway, a road and a tramway, and consists of an approach span at either end, an opening span of 60 ft. at the northern end, and seven main spans, each 218 ft. long. Each pier consists of a pair of cylinders, which are sunk some 60 or 70 ft. below the bed of the river. The need for such deep foundations will be understood when it is said that the Blue Nile in full flood has a depth of over 40 ft. and runs through the bridge with a velocity of six or seven miles an hour. The exceptionally high Nile flood of 1908 swept away the greater part of the “false-work,” or temporary staging. This, however, was quickly replaced after the river fell, a temporary railway track was completed across the river to the south bank in April, 1909, and preparations were begun at once for the extension of the line southward. In spite of some further damage to the temporary staging caused by the flood of 1909, the work on the last span was completed by the end of October in that year.

From Khartoum to Sennar—a distance of 178 miles—the railway line is practically level, and is laid throughout with rails weighing 50 lbs. to the yard. The line follows the course of the Blue Nile, not far from the river, and reaches Wad Medani, the chief town of the Blue Nile province, at a distance of 109 miles from Khartoum. Wad Medani is the principal market for this part of the Sudan, and is the centre of the grain traffic. Proceeding southward the railway passes by the villages of Hag Abdulla and Wad el Nau, where large tracts of land irrigated by means of pumps are already under cotton, and reaches Sennar 168 miles from Khartoum. Sennar, in ancient times a place of considerable importance, is now only a native village, but a few miles away to the south lies Makwar, where the great dam, which is to hold up the water of the Blue Nile and divert it into canals to irrigate the Gezira plain, is now in course of construction. Space forbids any description of this great engineering work; suffice it to say that in magnitude and importance it is comparable with the Assuan Dam itself, and its completion will result in bringing under cultivation nearly five hundred square miles of some of the most fertile and best cotton-growing land in tropical Africa.

The railway line now turns westward and crosses the southern part of the Gezira plain to Hillet Abbas on the right bank of the White Nile, 63 miles from Sennar; the country is flat, and dense forests of thorny scrub alternate with wide stretches of open steppe. The plant and material necessary for the building of the bridge over the White Nile at Hillet Abbas were sent up by river, and its construction was begun while the railhead was being carried southward from Khartoum. By the time the railway reached Hillet Abbas the bridge was ready for the track to be laid across it to the town of Kosti on the left bank, a few miles downstream, of the bridge. The White Nile bridge was a far less formidable undertaking than the bridge at Khartoum; the current of the White Nile is sluggish, the annual rise and fall of the river is less than that of the Blue Nile, and a good rock foundation for the piers was found at no great depth.

The El Obeid Extension.

Soon after the line reached Kosti, preparations were made for its extension westward to El Obeid, the capital of Kordofan. The work was pressed forward during 1911, and in December of that year the railhead reached El Obeid, 191 miles from the Nile and 428 miles from Khartoum. In the following February the line was formally opened by Lord Kitchener. The El Obeid extension forms, both strategically and commercially, an important part of the Sudan Railway system. It rendered possible the re-occupation of the Darfur province during the Great War and the establishment of settled conditions and ordered government through the vast area of Western Sudan, and has also played an important part in the development of trade in the districts through which it passes.

The total length of the Sudan Railways is 1,500 miles, and the completion of the line to Kassala will bring the mileage up to 1,700. The system as it now stands serves the Northern Sudan, and it is interesting to note that the railway running east and west between Sennar and El Obeid lies very nearly midway between the northern frontier of the Sudan at Halfa and its southern frontier at Rejaf on the Uganda borders.

A Sudan Government Steamer.

The communications throughout the southern part of the Sudan territory are maintained, as has already been stated, by a service of steamers on the White Nile and its tributaries. Up to the year 1918 the steamers Administration formed a separate department of the Government, but in that year the steamers and railways were united into one department, thus incorporating under a single control the whole of the communications throughout the country. The headquarters of the steamers section of the administration, with its offices, workshops and floating docks, are situated at Khartoum North, and a regular fortnightly service of large stern-wheel steamers is maintained between there and Rejaf, 1,096 miles to the south. In addition, a weekly service is carried on over a part of the distance, and during the flood season steamers are run to Wau, the chief town of the Bahr-el-Ghazel province, and to Gambella on the Sobat River, the principal entrepôt for the trade of Western Abyssinia.

The Sudd Region.

One of the first tasks undertaken after the re-occupation of the country was the opening of the Upper Nile waterway for regular steamer traffic by clearing a channel through the "sudd" region. The "sudd" is the name given to the dense masses of papyrus and other water plants which block the main course of the river and divert the water into immense shallow lagoons and backwaters. The first sudd-cutting expedition was dispatched in 1899, and in the following year, after months of strenuous work, a channel was cleared sufficiently to allow of the passage of steamers. Since then, owing to the constant passage of steamers to and fro, little difficulty has been experienced in keeping open the main channel of the Nile, but on the rivers of the Bahr-el-Ghazel it is impossible to keep up a regular service of steamers after the fall of the Nile; the channel becomes "sudded-up" to a greater or less extent every year. The Sobat River is only navigable between June and September, but during these few months a valuable traffic in coffee and other goods is carried on between Gambella and Khartoum.

The Khartoum-Rejaf service is an important link in the great trans-Continental route, and the traveller who disembarks from the Nile steamer at Rejaf has only some 120 miles of road to traverse before he reaches Nimule, which lies in the Uganda territory at the head of the rapids. From Nimule southwards via Butiaba, Masindi and Jinja there is communication by steamer, motor, and rail to Lake Victoria and Kenya Colony.

It will be well, before bringing to a close these notes on the rail and river communications in the Sudan, to refer briefly to the possible extensions of the present system. The Kassala line, to which reference has already been made, is soon to become an accomplished fact, and an extension of this line to Gedaref and thence across the Blue Nile dam to Sennar is a possibility of the future. Such a line would open up the fertile tract of country in the vicinity of Gedaref, and would provide an alternative and shorter route to the sea for the trade of the Gezira plain. Some considerable time, however, is likely to elapse before such an extension can be undertaken. With regard to the prolongation of the line southward along the Nile Valley, it seems clear that any extension in that direction is most improbable. The physical difficulties in the way of building such a line would be enormous, and even if they could be overcome no useful result would be obtained. On the whole, it would appear that any attempt to extend the trans-Continental system must be made—if made at all—by way of the Nile-Congo watershed, but it is impossible at present to make any forecast as to the time when such a project is likely to take actual shape.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO

THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

European Developments.

It is small wonder if the business community grows weary of following the various developments in the Ruhr, for while, just before Christmas, we seemed to be nearing a settlement, to-day, prima facie, this outcome seems farther away than ever. When one bears in mind also the ever-fluctuating position with regard to Turkey, it is small wonder if some business men begin to wonder if there is any real prospect of normal conditions on the Continent and in the Near East within a measurable period. While things are admittedly unpromising on the surface as regards the Ruhr, I think it will be found that progress is being made towards a condition of affairs that will permit the resumption of trade activities in Europe. Of course, the aims of France are materially different from those of this country. If France were an industrial country to the extent that we are she would readily appreciate why the business community here so ardently desires a settlement which will enable commerce once more to pursue its accustomed course.

The Fair.

The British Industries Fair is now in full progress, and business men throughout the country will unite in hoping that it will give a substantial impetus to our export trade. In present conditions it would seem futile to hope for any very great results from the Fair, but every little helps, and for many months now trade has been on the turn, and the Fair may give a very useful stimulus to the revival. Certain it is that the authorities have left no stone unturned to make the event a success if that be possible, and if only a comparatively small proportion of the overseas buyers who have been invited put in an appearance the Fair will justify itself. Early reports I have received suggest that there is no doubt on this score. On the opening day quite a number of overseas buyers were waiting for the doors to open, and in the course of the day numbers of them arrived. That speaks for itself.

Near East Trade.

Unfortunately for yet one more year there is little prospect of the Fair serving as a medium for the development of British trade enterprise in large regions in the Near East. The position would have been vitally altered if Lausanne had resulted in a speedy settlement with Turkey, though even then the exchanges, though they would have been considerably better than they are, would have imposed a barrier. As it is, of course, these great markets are unable to play their normal rôle in world commerce. However, though the position at the moment is none too bright, there is no question that the prospects are immeasurably better than they were a year ago. Given a settlement with Turkey, and real progress in reconstruction in the Balkans in the next year, then, when the next Fair comes round, buyers from the Near East should be playing as important a part as those from more fortunate regions.

Egypt and Tutankhamen.

If anything was needed to add to the glamour of Egypt among potential tourists it was forthcoming in the discoveries when the inner chamber of King Tutankhamen's burial place was opened on Friday. The opening might have been an anti-climax; it was, as it turned out, a perfect fifth act, adding the final touch to the best advertisement that Egypt has ever received. If only political conditions are favourable, and if those responsible for these things keep Egypt well before the public eye, it will be surprising if next season does not see the commencement of a flood of tourists such as the valley of the Nile has rarely known.

Optimism from the Canal.

Quite a cheerful note is struck by our Port Said Correspondent in his letter this week. "Business in the East," he says, "seems really on the mend, though people hardly like to own to it." One can quite understand this diffidence. After a trade depression more prolonged and intense than any in the memory of men it is only natural that people should wonder whether they are right in diagnosing present signs as indicating a real trade recovery. What happens along the Canal, it may be emphasised, is a very sure index of what is actually going on, and it is very gratifying, to say the least of it, to have this confirmation of the upward movement of trade that we have been noting here.

Albania's Communications.

The message from our Tirana Correspondent, which will be found in another column, throws a vivid light on the extent to which hitherto Albania has been dependent on external aid for services that the Albanians ought to render for themselves. Early this month the Austrian Lloyd, for reasons that are not stated, suspended its service to the Albanian ports. The result of this has been to render communications very difficult between the different parts of Albania, and to leave the country dependent for its sea communications on a weekly service of an Italian company. The emergency, as an Albanian suggested to our Correspondent, ought to stimulate the country to organise its own merchant fleet. One might add that it ought not to have required this development to bring the needs of the situation home to the Albanians. No country can afford to be dependent on its neighbours in vital matters such as communications, least of all Albania.

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

Commerce and Industry.

(Reports from Our Own Correspondents.)

TURKEY.

Constantinople, February 7.

Proposed New State Bank.

A proposition, said to emanate from a strong financial group, to form a new State Bank in Turkey is now under consideration by the Council of Commissaires at Angora, and the State Banks of England and France are said to be the models upon which it is intended to work. The bank is to be formed with a capital of £T100,000,000 (from £T12,000,000 to £T15,000,000 sterling at current rates of exchange), and it is proposed that the capital should be divided into two categories—one-half in registered shares not transferable to foreigners, and the other half in bearer bonds. The £T50,000,000 registered shares are to be subscribed for by Turkish inhabitants from every town and village, and will be payable, either in raw material or in cash, within a period of four years. The shares are to be of £T20 each, thus enabling, it is estimated, every small farmer, labourer, or Turkish functionary to become a shareholder by the annual investment of only £T15 for four years. The other £T50,000,000 is to be subscribed by the group responsible for launching the scheme on the European and American markets.

The Turquie Nouvelle, commenting on the proposition, says: "Thus, and thanks to this ingenious plan, Turkey will have a bank the majority of whose shares will be in the possession of the Turkish population. This bank will be an important factor for all transactions undertaken by the Government without dependence on those banks which are Ottoman only in name, which enjoy unheard of privileges, and whose boards of directors, comprising seven or eight foreigners, govern the finances of this country, and seek only to deprive it of its profits. We sincerely congratulate this group of new men who have grasped the fact that new Turkey is no longer the cow to be milked, as was the case with the Ottoman Empire, and that there is room here for foreign capital on the sole condition that Turks collaborate and profit in it." Reference to this institution may be deferred until it has been formed and operations have commenced.

Smyrna Economic Congress.

Under the ægis of the Commissaire of National Economy, a Turkish Economic Congress has been billed to sit at Smyrna on the 15th of this month, and to deliberate for a period of one week. Smyrna can hardly lay claim to be the economic centre of the new Turkish State, and it is doubtful if the time chosen for the assembly is very propitious from the point of view of any permanent results that may be expected from the gathering. One would have thought that had the initiators of the congress any faith in a satisfactory ending to the Lausanne Conference they would have postponed it for a few weeks, and thus ensured as complete and as representative an attendance of delegates as possible for the discussion of so important and highly technical a subject as that of national economy. As it is, one reads that, in view of the political situation, members of the National Assembly will be unable to attend as delegates.

The Congress itself must be admitted to be a symbol of the good intentions of the new National Government, and its conception is in keeping with the advice and admonition so frequently given by Mustapha Kemal Pasha in the course of the speeches delivered during his present tour of Anatolia—namely, that for Turkey to become prosperous the people must work and study the sciences.

In view of present conditions, it is not to be expected that Constantinople will in any practical way be represented at the Congress, either from a commercial or industrial point of view. In other words, it will probably prove to be a truly Turkish National Assembly.

As the first Congress of the kind under the new régime, it may be of interest to quote some of the arrangements for the meeting, taken at random:—

1. Each caza (or sub-district) will appoint eight delegates, which shall include 1 trader, 1 artisan, 1 workman, 3 farmers, and 2 representatives of companies and banks.
2. Delegates will be chosen "from amongst persons the most capable and reputed for their zeal, intelligence, or talent. In any case their wealth will not be taken into consideration. They will be elected by members of a committee consisting of Chambers of Commerce and Agriculture, as well as of the local municipality, which committee will be presided over by the highest functionary in the locality."
3. The representatives of the farmers (or growers) will be selected for preference from amongst the peasants.
4. Written or verbal requests from persons wishing to take part in the Congress without being elected will be gladly considered.
5. No travelling expenses will be paid to members attending the Congress; only the necessitous will be lodged free of charge.
6. At the end of the Congress a memorandum will be addressed to the Grand National Assembly or to the Government in which will be included the decisions taken concerning such economical organisation as the Congress will have judged necessary for the progress and development of the country.

COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Persian Railways.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—May I venture to call your attention to the article entitled "Persian Railways" appearing in your number of November 16, 1922 (page 644), which was quoted from Commerce Reports of October 30, 1922, published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington?

The article in question attributes to me the following observations:—"There are also two short lines from Isfahan to Shiraz, and from Bander Abbas to Kerman. A line of about 100 miles in length links the Persian system with the Trans-Caspian railroad from Krasnovodsk to Merv and Samarkand."

When the original report was being prepared for publication in Commerce Reports the proof reader apparently failed to note that the railway lines in question were mentioned by me as "projected" and their construction as necessary for Persia's full commercial development. No such railway lines are, of course, in existence, the towns in question being linked by roads which are hardly more than caravan tracks.—I am, etc.,

BERNARD GOTTLIEB, American Consul.

Teheran, Persia, January 8.

THE BRITISH INDUSTRIES FAIR.

Some Impressions.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

On Monday the British Industries Fair commenced at the White City and Birmingham. The King, who was accompanied by the Queen, formally opened the Fair at the White City, and their Majesties subsequently made a tour of inspection round the many rooms of exhibits, and displayed extreme interest in the great and varied array of the products of British industry.

If one says that the Fair at the White City can challenge comparison with any of the previous exhibitions, one only renders bare justice. It may be no better than the best hitherto, but it is fully up to the standard we have been led to expect. Here and there sections are smaller than in previous years, but other sections are more comprehensive, and the exhibition as a whole gives an admirable indication of British potentialities in the lines covered.

It is impossible to get anything but an incomplete idea of the Fair at one visit. It is too vast, too packed with exhibits, with novelties at every turn to pay tribute to the inventive genius of British trade. All told, I believe there are about four miles of stands at the White City, and though, of course, one does not cover anything like that distance in a tour round the exhibits, the undertaking is quite formidable enough. But the scene is too varied for anyone to feel tired until afterwards. The Fair from end to end is a pleasing blaze of colour, with always something new to attract the eye. It leaves one with a medley of impressions, the dominant one being the magnitude of the undertaking. Truly it is a marvel of organisation, and one on which the officials of the Department of Overseas Trade are entitled to the completest congratulations.

A specially noteworthy feature of the Fair is the evidence it gives of the progress of those industries which owe their development to the war. Particularly interesting in this connection is the section devoted to chemicals and dyes, which, it may be added, is one of the most impressive sections in the Fair. But in this respect, as in regard to individual exhibits, it is difficult to differentiate, for so many of the sections are surpassingly good, notably that devoted to office appliances and stationery, etc., the leather and leather goods section, and the sports goods section. Once again the china and earthenware and glass and glassware section failed to come up to expectations, and is far from being representative of this great British industry. The explanation is probably to be found in the effect of the trade depression on the consuming markets.

Business was only just beginning on Monday, but trade buyers were already well in evidence (as is not usually the case on the opening day) and the atmosphere of the Fair was distinctly hopeful, to say the least of it. Outside it was not difficult to find evidence of the effects of the "slump," and the weather was not conducive to optimism, but inside one sensed a much more cheerful tone than at any of the previous fairs. And it would be strange were it otherwise. Despite the Ruhr impasse and the Lausanne disappointment, the position is immeasurably better than it was a year ago. Had both these difficulties been solved, we should be at the beginning of a great expansion of trade. As it is, the gradual growth of our commerce in recent months serves to emphasise the fact that the European situation cannot clog the wheels of trade indefinitely. The markets not immediately affected must buy, and it is because they are to a large extent without supplies that it is possible to anticipate fairly favourable results from the Fair. To look for anything exceptional would be unwise. In normal times the Fair would give an enormous fillip to our overseas commerce. We must be satisfied to-day if it affords a helpful stimulus to our gradually reviving trade.

THE EXHIBITS.

Leather and Fancy Goods, etc.

This is one of the most interesting and, it may be added, most extensive sections in the Fair. It is more varied in character than was the case last year, and some of its divisions have been greatly developed. The growth of the leather exhibits is a most hopeful sign, suggesting as it does greater success in utilising the Empire's resources of raw hides. Before the war we left the market in light leather goods to our Teutonic rivals, but it only needs the continuance of the enterprise of which the numerous exhibits at the Fair are a self-evident sign to secure for this country its fair share of a most remunerative foreign trade.

The leather and leather goods exhibits are particularly noteworthy for their quality and varied character. They cover every aspect of the trade, from bookbinding to travelling requisites, from purses (nineteen firms exhibit this indispensable commodity) to razor-strops and dog collars. Needless to say, I cannot hope to do justice to the firms in this or any other of the sections in the space at my disposal. I can only mention the few that, for one reason or another, attracted my attention, and at the same time apologise for my shortcomings in the way of omissions.

A stand of special interest is that of Messrs. Alfred Dunhill, showing the "Lytup" ladies' handbag, which, as its name implies, is illuminated when the bag is opened. It should be an invaluable accessory to ladies travelling, and should be assured of an extensive market overseas. Another stand that merits notice is that of Messrs. Frenchs, Limited, who show a varied selection of suit-cases, trunks and travelling requisites, and such indispensable commodities as golf cases, while Messrs. A. Garstin and Co., Limited, show trunks, ladies' bags, etc. Hides and leather are exhibited by a

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.
Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).
Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja),
Craiova and Ploesti.
Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL 60,000,000 Lei.
Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.
Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.
Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

number of firms: Messrs. Bryant and Co., who show case and bag leathers and velvet leathers; Messrs. J. T. Underwood, Limited, who display leather for travelling requisites, etc.; and Messrs. S. H. and W. Hart, who show leather for book-binding, fancy goods, etc. Another interesting stand in this part of the section is that of Messrs. Joseph Clark and Sons, who show a large range of their "J. C. and S." suède cleaner for cleaning and renovating all classes of suède and nap leathers. The exhibits of fancy goods and brushware cover a wide range, and I can only touch here on a few of the stands. The exhibit of Indian Arts and Crafts is well worth a visit, and is, indeed, one of the most imposing stands in the Fair. It contains a choice selection of the productions of Indian and Burmese village industries, including charming lacquered candlesticks, beautifully wrought brassware, delicate screens, and rich rugs. Another notable stand is that of Messrs. E. Berry and Son, showing brushmaking machinery. That sine qua non—the pipe—is shown fairly extensively in all ranges and sizes, notably by Messrs. Marechal, Ruchon, and Co., Ltd., who show a splendid variety of briars. Finally, Messrs. Thermos, Ltd., have an attractive stand showing an assortment of their famous flasks and other productions.

China and Glassware, etc.

As I have mentioned above, this section is far from being representative, and to those who, like myself, have a vivid recollection of earlier exhibitions, it is not a little disappointing that this characteristically British industry should not take a more prominent place in the Fair. But, in saying this, it must not be assumed that I am decrying the exhibits. That is far from my intention. They are many in number, and as regards quality, fully up to anything that this country can produce. But we cannot get over the fact that many well-known names are absent from the list of exhibitors.

As usual, one of the finest stands in this section is that of Messrs. W. Moorcroft, Limited, who are famous for their hand-wrought pottery and decorative ware. They are showing some exquisite examples of their art, among which I would single out for special mention some singularly charming vases in blues and greens. Another stand worthy of notice is that of Messrs. the Crown Staffordshire Porcelain Co., Limited, who specialise in china-ware and who show a selection of most charming examples of their products. A stand no less interesting is that of Messrs. John Steventon and Sons, Limited, who have on view a choice range of decorated vases, etc. Of special interest also is the stand of Messrs. the Berkefeld Filter Co. (British), who show water filters of all descriptions, and who should be able to do a very extensive trade in regions like Egypt, the Sudan, and the Middle East.

Furniture.

In some respects this section shows an improvement on last year. There is rather more variety, and the standard of the exhibits, generally speaking, is very good. But here, too, there are gaps, and one or two well-known names previously represented are missing, doubtless only for a season, since for the varied products included in the word furniture there will always be a special market for British trade overseas.

Office furniture, shop fittings, etc., are shown by Messrs. Fredk. Sage and Co., Limited, whose productions are so well known as scarcely to need an extended reference. Another stand of special interest is that of Messrs. Beresford and Hicks, who show a variety of antique reproductive furniture. A novelty in this section is the "Fodita" table shown by Messrs. R. Davies. It is an extending table which can be opened out rapidly to two sizes, and in view of its advantages for use abroad there should be an assured market for it overseas, particularly in regions like India and the Near and Middle East, where one of the chief considerations of the British community is that articles of furniture should lend themselves readily to removal.

(To be concluded.)

EGYPTIAN CROPS.

The bulletin of the Egyptian Ministry of Agriculture gives the following particulars of crop conditions in January:—

Wheat and Barley.—The weather, though changeable, was, on the whole, favourable, except in Middle Egypt, where severe cold affected in some localities the growth of late-sown crops. In early-sown fields the crops are in good condition.

Beans.—The weather has not been favourable to the growth of the plants. Flowering is general and pods are forming. Attacks of aphids were reported from Sharqiya and Asyût, and slight attacks of broom-rape were met with in Minufiya, Beni Suef, and Asyût. The general condition of the crop is fairly satisfactory. Some early crops are being harvested for local consumption.

Helba.—The crop, as a whole, is growing well, and some of it is being cut. Slight attacks of aphids in Asyût and dodder in Giza were reported.

Onions.—The general state of the crop is satisfactory.

Lentils.—The condition of this crop, although slightly affected by cold weather, is about normal.

Sugar-cane.—Cutting is in progress. Slight attacks of stalk-borer and mealy-bug were reported from all sugar-cane districts. Crop expectations are about normal.

Bersim.—Unfavourable weather retarded the growth of the plants in certain districts. The second cutting is almost general owing to the insufficiency of the first. With the exception of some slight amount of dodder in Minufiya and Faiyûm, no enemies were reported. The crop is expected to be somewhat below the average.

CZECHO-SLOVAK INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS

In the Prager Tagblatt Dr. K. Uhlig, the economic expert, says that the industrial crisis in Czecho-Slovakia is practically at an end. "Throughout the whole period of the crisis," he says, "the export trade has, on the whole, been maintained, and has not suffered, and we can look forward to a speedy recovery which, in the next few months, may culminate in quite a boom." He shows that a feature of the crisis has been an increase in the value of exports and a decrease in imports—a proof that it is the home consumers and not the foreign markets that temporarily stopped purchasing.

WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

The resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the London County Westminster and Parr's Bank, Limited, held on February 1, changing the name of the company to "Westminster Bank, Limited," was confirmed as a special resolution at an extraordinary general meeting held on February 16. It is proposed that the change shall take effect on March 1.

GOAT, SHEEPSKINS, KIPS, HIDES & LEATHER

Correspondence is invited from Merchants and Collectors of all Countries desirous of marketing Hides and Skins in Great Britain. Consignment or Purchase. All Enquiries promptly replied to. Leather Goods of all kinds for Exportation.

FLEMING & CO. (Bermondsey) LTD., Leather Factors & Importers,
White's Grounds, Bermondsey St., London, S.E.1.
Telegrams—Flemmat co. Berm. London

COUNCIL of ADMINISTRATION of the OTTOMAN PUBLIC DEBT.
NOTICE to HOLDERS of the OTTOMAN 4% UNIFIED CONVERTED DEBT COUPONS, 23-38 inclusive.

The Council of Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt inform holders of the Unified Debt that the period for payments on account of Coupons Nos. 23-38 is extended to the 1st September, 1923.

Constantinople, 14th February, 1923.
With reference to the foregoing advertisement, the Imperial Ottoman Bank give notice that the above-mentioned Coupons may be deposited at their Coupon Office, 25, Austin Friars, E.C.2, listed on forms which may be obtained there.

Shipping Intelligence.

THE TRIESTE LLOYD AND ALBANIA.

Effect of Suspended Service.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Tirana, February 12.

The Trieste Lloyd has suspended its service to the Albanian coast since February 4; on that day a vessel of that line made its last call at Durazzo. The Trieste Lloyd made the passage from Trieste to Corfu and back once a week by way of Pola, Zara, Sebenico, Spalato, Ragusa, Cattaro, and Antivari on the Yugoslav coast, and St. Jean de Medua, Durazzo, Valona, and Saranta on the Albanian coast. The service constituted the only means of communication between the different ports of Albania, and especially between the north and Saranta, and at present it is impossible to reach that port by sea. Here we have a country whose communications between the different parts of its territory have become extremely difficult, owing solely to the fact that a foreign company has suspended the service of its vessels.

A prominent Albanian has made the following statement to me on the position:—"I am perfectly satisfied as regards this shipping move. Of course, it is going to cause great difficulties for this country, but this will not fail to have a reaction and to act as a stimulant. If we wish we can organise a small merchant fleet with sailing vessels and motor-boats. That fleet exists already to the number of seventy vessels of varying tonnage, directed by captains who are natives of Dulcigno (Ulkum), first-class Albanian seamen. The vessels of Dulcignotes sail throughout the Adriatic and the Mediterranean. With a little effort we can improve the service and regularise it for the benefit of Albanian commerce." This is the view of an intelligent Albanian, and I think he is right. I may mention here that the Puglia shipping company of Bari provides a weekly service between Italy (Bari and Brindisi) and Albania (Valona, Durazzo, St. Jean de Medua), but if these sailings were also stopped Albania would be completely isolated by sea from the rest of the world. The contingency is not a pleasant one to contemplate.

PORT SAID NOTES.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Port Said, February 12.

It is probably not without significance that the large reductions of passenger fares by all the shipping companies coincided with the first appearance of German passenger vessels. During and after the war, when passenger fares were put up nearly 400 per cent. owing to the increase in the cost of coal and other things, people grumbled, but paid. Latterly, however, the cost of coal has come down from £10 per ton to £2 10s. per ton, and the cost of wages and stores is also considerably reduced, so people naturally thought it high time that fares came down, too, especially the Egyptian resident, as he pays proportionately higher than anyone else.

Business in the East seems really on the mend, though people hardly like to own to it. Last week there came through the Canal from England a large ship which was loaded down to her marks (if not below), and had only taken enough coal from England to bring her to Port Said. Up to now all ships have had enough coal to last them to their terminal port in the East and often halfway home again. Perhaps it is a sign of reviving trade in Russia that during January two ships flying the Finnish flag passed through the Canal outward bound.

The Suez Canal Company have now five berths in the harbour where ships can take oil-fuel direct from the shore by flexible pipe, and the number availing themselves of these facilities is increasing month by month.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Castalia for Bombay (Liverpool, March 2).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Masirah for Calcutta (Birkenhead, February 26); s.s. Holywell for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, February 28); s.s. Magdapur for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 7); s.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 14); s.s. Maidan for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 17); s.s. Imani for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 28).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Oxfordshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, February 28).

British India Line.—S.s. Mantola for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 2); s.s. Mandala for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 16); s.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16); s.s. Dumana for Bombay and Karachi (London, April 2); s.s. Merkara for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 2).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Tyria for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Glasgow, March 19).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Maronian for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, and Varna (Liverpool, February 24).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Canterbury for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 7); s.s. City of Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 28).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Baroda for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, February 27).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Eden Hall for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, February 28); s.s. Mardinian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, March 7); s.s. Castilian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, March 21).

Ellerman Bucknall and Strick Line.—S.s. Frankenfels for the Persian Gulf (London, March 6).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Kenmore for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Malwa for Bombay (London, March 2); s.s. Kaiser-i-Hind for Bombay (London, March 9); s.s. Perim for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 10); s.s. Plassy for Bombay (London, March 23); s.s. Mirzapore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 24).

The Roumanian Government has prohibited the export of all kinds of raw hides.

2,319 motor-vehicles of all kinds were imported into French North Africa during 1922.

The Southern Punjab Railway Company recommends a final dividend on the Ordinary stock of £6 per cent., less English tax, making £11 per cent. for the year.

The preliminary estimate of the olive production in Greece for 1922 is 46,354,500 oles (130,789,222 lbs.). The production of olive oil is estimated at 17,314,028 gallons.

Algeria's imports in 1922 amounted in value to 2,007 million francs, while the exports totalled 1,379 million francs. The corresponding figures for 1921 were 1,790 and 1,365 million francs. The failure of the cereal crop was responsible for the small increase in the value of the exports.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

MOROCCO'S PHOSPHATE RESOURCES.

Rich Deposits.

By the discovery of rich and vast phosphate beds Morocco has become a potential factor of economic importance (says H.M. Consul at Casablanca, Mr. C. E. Heathcote-Smith, O.B.E., in a recent report). She is credited with the possession of deposits rivalling in extent those of Florida, and in content those of any other country in the Eastern Hemisphere.

Thus the Oued Zem-El Bouroudj beds (situate 150 kilometres south of Casablanca) cover a district of some 75 kilometres in length, and from 5 to 35 kilometres in breadth. They consist of horizontal layers several metres deep, lying practically on the surface, covering an area of some 400,000 acres, and composed of a fine sand, which is nothing other than phosphate of lime of so high a percentage (73 to 78 per cent.) that Florida alone can show similarly rich deposits. Even the beds other than at El Bouroudj also contain a high percentage of phosphates varying from 68 per cent. to 72 per cent. As for their quantity, estimates vary from "many millions of tons" to "hundreds of millions." It has been calculated that even if the beds were exploited at the rate of several millions of tons annually centuries will elapse before their exhaustion.

In pre-war days (1913), the world's production was under seven million tons per annum, and Europe's consumption was over four million. The United States of America produced 3½ million, Algeria and Tunis 2½, and Europe and Oceania half a million each. The supplies of Europe were furnished as to 2½ million by Algeria and Tunis, and as to 1½ by the United States of America. Obviously, therefore, Morocco's market is to be looked for in the Old World, but, unfortunately, in some competition with her sister States, Algeria and Tunis. Already Europe is taking again her pre-war quota of four million tons. The exceptional percentage of phosphates contained in the Moroccan beds should, however, assure for them a ready market, even when competing against other phosphates, provided production and shipment expenses are kept sufficiently low.

Apart from the European and other overseas consumers, the soil of Morocco itself is, in many districts, badly in need of a good fertiliser, so that agriculture—the main wealth of this essentially agricultural country—stands to gain considerably from the presence of these beds. Experiments made locally have shown that fields in Morocco treated with superphosphates have yielded 45 1-5 cwt. per hectare (2.471 acres), as against a yield of 27½ cwt. without the use of phosphates. This represents an increase of 60.8 per cent.

For the Protectorate to obtain the fullest advantages from these "untold riches" hidden in her soil, the immensity of which was only properly grasped by the French authorities in 1919-1920, various conditions for their exploitation became essential. They may be summarised as:—(1) Production in large quantities. (2) Production and handling at a minimum cost. (3) Rapid means of production. (4) Rapid means of transport. (5) Adequate means of shipment. (6) Local factories for the transformation of the phosphates into superphosphates.

When the Protectorate authorities realised that phosphate deposits might alter the whole economic future of Morocco, their first step was to publish the decree of January 27, 1920, whereby the entire exploitation was made a State monopoly. The actual enterprise is conducted as an industrial concern, under a board of management, whose head manager is M. Beauge, formerly of the Tunisian Cafa Phosphates Company, while the shareholder in this concern is the Protectorate; consequently the board of directors is composed almost exclusively of officials, while the enterprise is worked on commercial lines free from official restraint.

The exploitation of the phosphates of Morocco has formed the subject of much adverse comment in the local Press. It is not certain, however, whether the advantage of State participation has not outweighed its drawbacks, for the authority requisite to build railways and provide port facilities might have long been lacking had private interests only been concerned. This is, however, a debatable point, and the present facts shall speak for themselves in so far as the State activities are concerned. At present 7 square kilometres of mines are being exploited, and the phosphates extracted are dried in a special machine which has a daily capacity of 30 tons.

The Shereefian Office of Phosphates has published a statement of the results of its administration for the year ended December 31, 1922. The official exploitation has now been in progress for about two years, as the five months from August to December, 1920 (the "Dahir," dated August 7, 1920, creating the Shereefian Office of Phosphates) were taken up in preparation for the actual work.

As against the potential millions of future years, actual deliveries were: In 1921, 8,230 tons; in 1922, 80,583 tons. All except 37 tons of the above are being exported. These figures appear relatively full of promise, although locally they have aroused little enthusiasm. The official Office of Phosphates defends them by stating that of the three principal phosphate companies (A, B, and C) of Algeria and Tunis, A only produced as much as 81,800 tons in its fifth year of working, B 65,000 in its third, and C 82,000 in its second.

A narrow-gauge railway (.60 metre) has been built between Casablanca and Oued-Zem-El Bouroudj, and it is owing to this that the increase in exports has been possible. A broad-gauge railway, now under construction, should be completed by October, 1923, and great hopes are based on its utility and the economies it will effect.

As from May 6, 1922, the phosphates have been railed direct on to the Great Arm of the Breakwater (Grande Jetée) at Casablanca, with a consequent and notable increase in the rapidity of loading and decrease in expense. During the year sixty steamers have taken phosphate as cargo at Casablanca, while five steamers have been loaded in other ports. Buyers have all expressed satisfaction with the high percentage contained in the phosphates sold them, and the supplies now available from Morocco, Algeria, and Tunis provide phosphates in all the varying percentages that may be in request.

In respect of the encouraging results that the Office of Phosphates claims to be the consequence of its exploitation, the local Press offers some criticisms. It points out that for the date when the Algerian and Tunisian companies achieved similar results in the early years of their existence we must go back some twenty-five or thirty years: that the deficit on the .60 metre railways is steadily increasing, and that no machinery yet exists for handling phosphates. (This, as far as Casablanca is concerned, should be remedied early in 1923. Special buildings for mechanical loading from the Grande Jetée are nearly completed.) It declares that no exploitation of phosphates can be remunerative unless intensive—that, if necessary, two or even three years should be devoted to preparing double lines of rails, telfers, and loading machinery before commencing export. All the phosphate leaving Morocco to-day is being sold at a heavy loss, and will continue to be sold at a loss until means for large-scale exploitation have been effected. From the quarries at Bou-Jniba to Casablanca the narrow-gauge line can only carry the phosphates at 52 francs the ton, while the broad-gauge is expected to perform this same service at 16 francs.

According to the Press, 30 francs net is lost on each ton discharged at Marseilles, and it points out that an estimated export of 300,000 tons in two years would at this rate represent a deficit of 10 million francs. The reasoning, however, appears erroneous, as the Press calculates the initial installation charges as though they were the running expenses; and the Office of the Phosphates affirms that they are even to-day making a small profit on their sales. Finally the Press complains that the initial work of installation is being skimmed, and, meanwhile, the State desires to show results—with the consequences that the start has been a poor one.

To this latter criticism the authorities reply that French Morocco as a new country needs publicity for its products, and, therefore, is ready to suffer some present loss for the benefit of the early publicity thereby gained for an article on which it largely relies for the future. The Phosphate Office has assured itself of markets for its present output, and has hopes of increasing its exportation figures by 200,000 tons each year. Thus the (in round numbers) 100,000 tons exported in 1922 would become 300,000 in 1923, and by 1927 1,100,000 tons. The United Kingdom is already a purchaser.

A superphosphate factory with an annual capacity for treating 15,000 tons of phosphates is now being erected at this port, and will be completed this year. It will (on the 1 to 1.6 ratio) produce 24,000 tons of superphosphates per annum. Most of this will be exported, as there is, so far, but little local demand. The pyrites necessary are brought from Tharsis and Rio Tinto through Huelva (Spain) to Casablanca. It is calculated that for fertilising purposes, 300 kilogrammes of "super" per hectare (2.471 acres) is necessary; so that a local consumption of 1,000 tons would suffice for more than 3,000 hectares. The total demand locally barely reaches this figure.

The exportation from Roumania of lime tree and poplar tree wood is prohibited.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Strong Statistical Position.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt, in their report for the week ended February 9, states:—During the past week the futures market has been fairly steady. The political news has been all against the market. A fair amount of business in the market during the past week has been on speculative account, but we do not think that any very large speculative position exists. A feature of the week has been the extraordinary firmness of the Ashmouni contract; the difference between March Sakellarides and April Ashmouni is now reduced to 3.17 dols. Spot cotton is very difficult to buy, and a decline in futures does not bring a corresponding drop in spot prices. The selection is getting very poor in certain qualities. The statistical position is daily becoming stronger. We have received this season nearly 5,300,000 kantars plus a carry-over of 1,300,000 kantars, against 3,850,000 kantars plus a carry-over of 1,800,000 kantars last year, but as a result of the very good export figures (4,400,000 kantars, against 3,300,000 kantars last year) the stock stands at only 2,200,000 kantars, i.e., 200,000 kantars less than at the same time last year. From this date last year to the end of the season, 2,500,000 kantars were exported, and it only requires a glance to show that, with a stock of 2,200,000 kantars, and prospective further arrivals of 700,000 kantars—2,900,000 kantars—anything like the same export movement would bring the stock at the end of the season dangerously low. We consider that the present difference of Sakellarides with American is absurdly small, and we think that as the season progresses and stocks in Egypt decrease, consumers who will not have filled their requirements will have to pay a considerable increase on the present exceedingly small difference.

Spot.—Total sales this week amount to about 12,700 bales, of which we estimate 8,000 bales Sakellarides, 4,300 bales uppers, 200 bales white, 150 bales brown, and 50 bales pilion.

Sakellaridis.—A noticeable feature this week has been the demand for the better grades, which have been for some time entirely neglected. Although the turnover has not been large, the premiums for these grades have somewhat stiffened. The medium and inferior grades are still in great demand, but owing to the fluctuations of the futures market and the tenacity of the sellers, business in these cottons has been concluded with great difficulty. Comparatively little has been done in middling to middling fair.

Uppers.—As has been the case for the past few weeks, the demand remains in grades fully good fair to good and good. The price of spot against contracts remains about unchanged.

Crop 1923.—We hear a lot of talk that zagora, pilion, white and brown cottons will be planted in Lower Egypt this year at the expense of Sakellarides. With the present small difference of price between the varieties there will undoubtedly be considerable incentive in this direction, but, taking into consideration the extremely conservative nature of the Delta fellahin, we do not think that the Sakellarides acreage will suffer to any large extent. It is as yet too early to give any definite opinion on this point.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Business Disappointing.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended February 14:—A good inquiry has been witnessed during the past week, but sellers have found the results extremely disappointing. Low cottons, 10d.—13d., have figured very largely on paper, and a fair business continues to take place in these qualities, although a certain amount of it is undoubtedly speculative. At one time selling against types was quite usual, but latterly, owing to the difficulty experienced in Alexandria in finding the cotton, most brokers are now rather chary of committing their clients in this way. The supply of the genuine, re-cleaned varieties has dwindled considerably, but there seems to be plenty of low cotton of sorts, although the appearance of most of it is distinctly unattractive. Spinners are still experimenting freely with anything that can be bought cheaply, and not always with success. The result is that quantities of this low cotton are constantly finding their way back to our market to be resold.

The demand for Sakellaridis has covered rather more ground than has lately been the case, but the better qualities are still dragging heavily, and quotations are still showing a tendency to shrink towards those of fully good fair. The quality chiefly in request has changed hands at anything between 16½d.—17½d. Supplies are plentiful. Uppers, 15½d.—16½d., have been freely asked for. Below 15½d. there is not much offering, and odd lots are generally sold without difficulty. Above 16½d. the off-take has been meagre, and very little has been done this week in the best. Trading in Sudan cotton has been quiet, only a few small lots changing hands. Brown and white cottons have been neglected. C.a.f. business has been very disappointing, but prices quoted from Alexandria are remarkably firm, and counter-offers are not meeting with the success that would-be buyers on this side are inclined to expect.

Manchester reports have maintained a level, confident tone, but buyers and sellers appear to have drifted too widely apart for any volume of business to take place pending more settled conditions. Throughout the week prices have invariably favoured the buyer. Forwardings to spinners for the week ended February 9, 9,330 bales. Total sales, 2,700 bales (includes 60 Sudan). Quotations of Sakellaridis are reduced 50 points for good to extra fine. Fully good fair is 40 points lower. Good fair and fair 25 points lower. In brown and upper, quotations of fair are reduced 10 points; good fair, 15 points, and fully good fair and above are 25 points lower on the week. Fully good fair Sakellaridis to-day, 17.50d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

Fair Enquiry, but Poor Business.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended February 17, states:—

This market remains in practically the same state as was reported last week. There is a fair amount of inquiry, but the business which results is disproportionate thereto, owing to the low basis of prices offered by buyers abroad. The shipments of cotton goods during January, as shown by the Board of Trade Returns, though not unsatisfactory in comparison with other recent months, emphasise yet again how much below pre-war is the consumption abroad of cotton goods from this country; whilst this is so, it is inevitable that the state of trade here should be unsatisfactory, both as to volume and price.

Yarn.—A quiet week has been experienced, without any particular feature. It is unlikely that production has been cleared during the last two weeks, and it is probable, therefore, that stocks are again accumulating. Shipments last month were 12,814,700 lbs., against 11,711,600 lbs. in December, and 14,806,000 in January last year.

Cloth.—A fair inquiry has been experienced, but, as already mentioned, much of it fails to materialise in definite orders. Indian demand, as in the previous week, has been on only a modest scale, and none of the other outlets are worthy of particular mention. Shipments in January were 399,988,000 square yards, against 360,517,000 in December, and 339,117,000 in January last year. The figures for last month are the best since July of last year, and, apart from that month, are the best for 2½ years.

Raw Cotton.—A very steady market has been experienced, fluctuations either way being small. Spot sales in Liverpool have been on a moderate scale. Closing prices are as follows:—American fully middling, 16.03d.; Egyptian fully good fair, 17.50d.

OAKEY'S

The Original Preparation
for polishing Cutlery.

Canisters, 1d., 2d., 3d., 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d. and 4s. each.

SILVERSMITH'S SOAP, for Cleaning and Polishing Silver, Electro Plate, etc.

WELLINGTON

Tablets, 6d.
"WELLINGTON BLACK LEAD" in Solid Blocks,
1d., 2d. and 4d. 1s. Boxes.

KNIFE

Polishing Paste, Furniture
Polish, Plate Powder.

POLISH

Glass Paper, Emery Cloth, Black Lead Packers,

WELLINGTON MILLS, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD, LONDON. S E.1.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank :—

Latakia.

The report for the three months ended December 31 states :—

The economic situation of Latakia has remained during the last quarter practically the same as during the preceding period. There has been no marked improvement this season, which, contrary to expectation, has continued without great activity. The arrivals have been almost identical with those of the preceding quarter, which was marked by a decrease in imports. On the other hand, the export of a portion of the tobacco crop to England and oil to Palestine has caused a certain movement without, however, bringing about an immediate return of funds to the merchants.

Transactions in the retail market have been restricted, and in general sales are limited to indispensable supplies, which have been secured in quantities more reduced than last year for the same period. This may be explained by the following considerations :—

(1) The rise in the Egyptian pound, the value of which is markedly superior to the Turkish (gold) pound, and the fluctuations in the rate of exchange have not been without harm to the existing business relations, principally with Egypt. (2) The tobacco crisis which prevailed in England deprived the population which lives on this crop of the disposable funds that they have normally: this explains the restriction of the retail market.

There has been remarkable progress in agriculture, which makes us hope that the impulse thus given will help to re-establish the commercial balance.

The Customs statistics of Latakia for imports by sea during the quarter are as follows :—From coast, 1,429 tons, valued at 1,742,900 frs.; from abroad, 900 tons, valued at 723,500 frs., making a total of 2,466,400 frs., against 2,525 tons, valued at 2,615,100 frs., received during the third quarter.

According to statistics, the export trade for the port of Latakia during the fourth quarter of 1922 has been 543 tons, valued at 471,300 frs., for the coast; 532 tons valued at 760,700 frs., for abroad.

Tobacco.

1920 Crop.—No sales of this crop have been made during this quarter. The holders of stock are very anxious in regard to the realisation of this stock, estimated at 6,800 bales.

1921 Crop.—This crop is in the hands of a syndicate. Since September there has been only one sale—of 300 bales at a price of 2s. the English pound. Disposable stock, 3,000 bales.

1922 Crop.—A great part of this crop has been exported during the course of December. In general, the quality of this crop is considered good, and it is to be hoped that it will be well received by English manufacturers. Experts say that the sale of the old crops at a low price is due to the manufacturers awaiting the new harvest, which, before arrival on the British market, has had the reputation of good quality.

Aleppo, December 31.

During the first half of the month under review the export trade showed a certain activity, as much in local consumption as for that of the interior. But towards the second fortnight the market began to experience the depression due to the approach of the "dead season," generally understood to be between December 15 and February 15. In addition, Customs and monetary difficulties, added to the present state of things in Turkey, hinder our trade with Anatolia more and more.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
 A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

} Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLET.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
 Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
 Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.
CONSTANTINOPLE.
 (Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Stock and Share Markets.

STRENGTH OF GILT-EDGED.

Markets Generally Firm.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Once again the markets have made quite a cheerful showing, and prices in many cases are well above the previous week's levels. It has, all the same, been rather a variable period. The opening of Parliament was marked by the development of a rather uncertain tone due to doubt as to the attitude that would be adopted by the Government towards the Ruhr and other matters of outstanding import. Subsequently a much better tone developed, and yesterday the markets generally were firm, with gilt-edged quite buoyant. If one is to judge conditions by the strength of Government securities, one can only conclude that we are well on the way to the solution of the questions that are still holding up reconstruction in Europe.

In another week or two the markets will come under the influence of the pending Budget, and that means that we shall most likely be in for dull markets for a period. Everyone hopes that the Chancellor will find the wherewithal to lighten the burden of taxation, but it is impossible not to have philosophic doubts on the subject. Naturally, if, as so many expect, there is a further reduction of the income-tax, it will give a great impetus to business on the Stock Exchange.

Gilt-Edged Strong.

As noted above, Gilt-edged have been a specially strong market. Once again substantial advances are to be recorded almost all along the line. Consols at 57½ have gained ¾; War Loan Fives at 101 are ¼ up, the Conversion Loan at 76½ shows a rise of 3-16; while Fundings are unchanged at 88½. Indian stocks have been fairly firm, the 7 per cent. loan being unchanged at 114, while the 3 per cent. loan is ¼ down at 56½.

Irregularity has again been the characteristic of the market in Foreign Government securities, the exchanges continuing to exercise an adverse effect. French securities have been variable. War Loan Fives are 23½xd., while the 4 per cents. are a point lower at 18½. German 3 per cents. have again improved in keeping with the rise in the exchange, and at 15-16 show a gain of ½. Italian Rentes are unchanged at 20. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified have tended to firm up, and at 23½ are a point up. Greek Monopolies have continued their rise, and close at 29½, a gain of a point.

Industrials Firm.

While quite a firm tone has ruled in the Industrial group, business has been on the most restricted scale, and only in a few directions have there been any movements worthy of notice. Textiles have been particularly firm. Coats at 64s. 9d. have gained 6d., Courtaulds are 2s. up at 63s., while Listers are 29s. 6d.xd. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares are about the same. Vickers are 3d. down at 16s. 3d. Armstrongs are 3d. lower at 18s. 6d., while Guest Keens are 3d. up at 39s. 9d. In shipping securities, P. and O. Deferred are 4 down at 318, Cunards are 9d. down at 23s., while Furness Withys are 6d. lower at 35s. 6d.

Oils Variable.

Oils have not maintained the improved tone of the previous week, and yesterday the market was distinctly variable. Anglo-Persian Ord. at 4 1-32xd. are 3-32 down, while Burmahs at 5 3-16 are 1-32 up. Mexican Eagles are 1-32 down at 2½, while Shell Transport at 4 3-16 are ½ up. Roumanians have been steady. Phoenix at 26s. 1½d. are ½d. up, while Roumanian Consolidated are 12s. 6d. Steaua Romanas at 11s. 3d. are 6d. lower, Dacia Romanos at 23-32 are 1-32 up, while Hamilton's Concessions are the same at 2s. 6d. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian B at 1 15-32 are 1-32 down.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

Near Eastern Rates Weak.

The movements of the German mark have again provided the outstanding feature of the week. The rapid improvement continued, and at one time the mark rose to 88,000 for sterling, closing, however, at 102,500. French francs have weakened, while Belgian francs have moved in sympathy. Near Eastern exchanges have been notably weak, with the Bulgarian lev at 850, the Roumanian leu round about 1,025, and the Greek drachma at 410.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½-97½
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22½	410½
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	480*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	100-105,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	24.87
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	88.55-88.65
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	1,025-1,050
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	12,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	700-750*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.69½-4.69½
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	77.80-77.90
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	158½
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	97½
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	800-900*
Teheran	Krans to £	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	320-340,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	150-180,000

* Nominal + Sellers.

In 1922 113 new limited companies were founded in Czechoslovakia.

The Czechoslovak Banking Union has opened a branch office in Dresden.

The second international samples fair is to be held at Zagreb, Yugoslavia, from April 22 to May 1.

The production of the Anglo-Egyptian Oilfields for the week ended February 9 was: Gemsah, 10 tons; Hurghada, 2,446 tons.

The half-yearly general meeting of the Ottoman Railway from Smyrna to Aidin will be held at Winchester House on March 27 at noon.

It has been decided to adopt the Western Calendar in Greece. The change will take place on February 16 (Old Style), which will be called March 1. Provision is made for the extension for a period of thirteen days of all due dates, e.g., for the payment of debts, execution of contracts, etc.

NEAR EAST MARKETS.

Owing to extreme pressure on our space our reports on Near East Markets are unavoidably omitted this week.

JAMES H. BROWN, LTD.,

MERCHANT BANKERS.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

BOUGHT AND SOLD FOR EITHER SPOT OR FORWARD DELIVERIES.

FOREIGN BILLS NEGOTIATED. CREDITS OPENED ON APPROVED REFERENCES.

AGENCIES ARRANGED ON BEHALF OF FIRMS ABROAD.

The Sale, Purchase, or Warehousing of Goods Effected. Shipments Financed.

Head Office: TELEGRAPH STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.
Telegrams: "Exchangbro, London."

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Abwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Duxdab, Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshab, Meshed, Mohommerah, Nasratabad, Reabt, Shiraz, Shubstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Buereh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd. LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - £485,580
RESERVE - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
 1, Devonshire Square,
 London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
 weekly for _____ months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION RATES U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum;
 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
 Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NOROOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - Rs. 5.62.35.500
Reserve - Rs. 4.11.82.805

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
 London Branch: 5, Whittington Avenue, E.C.3.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
 Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	£2,600,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.	SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.	ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.	ROBERT MILLER, Esq.
SIR CHARLES C. McLEOD.	J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.	J. N. STUART, Esq.	J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinja
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Kaiumu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital
12,000,000 Leva
Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS, ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIAZIONE DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - L.it. 400 millions.
Reserves - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA,

Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000, Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk, Philippopolis and Sliven

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 616—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK ...	211	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
		Britain and Irak ...	222	Notes and News ...	225
SPECIAL LETTER—				Commerce and Industry ...	226
Turkey ...	215	THE WEEK AT HOME ...	213	The British Industries Fair ...	227
				Palestine's Commercial
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST ...	217	Resources ...	228
Byzantine Survival in the		NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF ...	220	Stock and Share Markets ...	230
Balkans... ..	223	PERSONAL AND GENERAL... ..	221	Near East Markets ...	231
				Shipping Intelligence ...	233
				Cotton and Cotton Goods ...	234

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Turks and the Treaty.

According to reports from Angora, the Grand National Assembly was to be occupied this week in discussing the draft Note to the Allies which has been prepared by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the Cabinet, and the Lausanne delegation. The situation in Asia Minor at this moment presents the same characteristics as have been in evidence ever since the defeat of the Greeks. One section of the Turks is firmly convinced that they are able to dictate terms to the whole world; the other section, headed by Mustapha Kemal Pasha, is conscious that Turkey has her limitations, and has been playing for time, in order that it may seem to be in accord with the extremists until further concessions on the part of the Allies are found to be out of the question. The task of the Angora Cabinet this week will probably consist in persuading the Assembly that the draft Note represents a considerable advance on the Allies' terms, while making sure that it does not go too far beyond the modifications already verbally accepted by the Allies on the last day at Lausanne. If, as is to be hoped, it is agreed by both parties that the final alterations to the Treaty can be drawn up in Constantinople, there need be little delay in the opening of a fresh Conference, this time between the Turkish delegation and the High Commissioners. The signing of the Peace Treaty in Constantinople, however, may give offence to Turkish susceptibilities, and to avoid this they may call for another full-dress Conference in Italy or elsewhere.

The New Turkey.

Wherever the next meeting between the Allies and the Turks takes place the negotiations may be expected to last just so long as the Angora Government considers necessary to overcome the objections of the extremists. It is well that the inwardness of the Nationalist movement should be generally recognised. Turkey is for the moment an ultra-democratic country, and Mustapha Kemal Pasha's power seems to rest more on his ability to control the heterogeneous Assembly than on an unchallenged dictatorship. For this reason, no doubt, he has found it necessary to play the politician to the extent of forming a party of his own with a view to consolidating and prolonging his ascendancy in the new Turkey. Accordingly, in determining the latitude that they can give to Turkish procrastination, the Allies should bear in mind that time is a factor on their side, now that the danger of a conflict has been successfully avoided for so many months. The science of stage thunder has been thoroughly mastered in Angora. Press and deputies alike are vociferous in announcing the things to which Turkey will never consent, and add that the Treaty is on these grounds quite unacceptable. At the psychological moment they will discover that the Treaty does not contain the terms that are now being so loudly denounced.

Greece and Great Britain.

Any satisfaction that may be derived from the prospect of an ultimate settlement of the Turkish question is chastened by the thought of the unhappy position in which that settlement must find Greece. The hesitation of the present régime in Athens to face facts is responsible for such uneasiness as exists among the Allies regarding Greek military preparations in Western Thrace. We refuse, however, to believe that, however serviceable an army may now have been collected near the Maritza River, the Greek people wish to reopen a question which can lead them to no definite goal. Their chief concern—as it is the concern of all those who wish to see Greece strong and united—is rather to find the road which will conduct them to the re-establishment of close and cordial relations with the Allies. As far as Great Britain is concerned, they need be in no doubt on the subject. It may be taken for granted that the British Government will not resume diplomatic intercourse with Greece until the present régime has given place to a proper constitutional Government. The proposal to appoint as Prime Minister this or that politician who is supposed to be persona grata to the Allies does not meet the case, as his Government would still derive its authority from the Revolutionary Committee and not from the people. Quite apart from the British Government's resolve on this point, it is clearly in the interest of Greece that a perfectly free general election should take place at the earliest possible date. When the elections have been held, and a Government free from any "Revolutionary" complexion has accepted office, the way will be open for the financial help that Greece so badly needs to enable her to grapple with her refugee problem and to revive her shattered fortunes.

Cyprus Again.

A telegram that has reached us from "Press Bureau," Limassol, states that "the Colonial Secretary, answering the National Council, has rejected the demand for political liberties." The message adds: "Great indignation (prevails) throughout the island. The Press says that the answer is unworthy of England. The opinion prevails for pan-Cypriot meetings, but a radical solution, with union with Greece in accordance with the will of the people, is considered probable." From this communication it is to be inferred that the Cypriot Greeks have been ill-advised enough to choose the present time for reviving their agitation against British rule. It would have been thought that they would have recognised that, even if the British Government had resolved to hand Cyprus over to Greece, discretion would prompt silence on the subject at this particular moment, when the prospect of a large body of Turks being handed over to Greek rule might cause the Angora Government to become more exacting in its demands on Greece. The devoted band of agitators fails to realise that every action on its part which argues short-sightedness and unfitness for responsibility tends to postpone the attainment of the goal that it claims to have in view.

The Deadlock in Egypt.

At the moment of writing Egypt continues without a Ministry. During the past week the two most significant features in the crisis have been the departure from Cairo on a holiday of Hassan Nashat Bey, Assistant Director of King Fuad's Private Cabinet, and the prominence in the public eye of Adly Pasha. Hassan Nashat Bey, who has been much in the King's confidence, and, rightly or wrongly, is said to have organised the rapprochement between the Court and the Zaghloulists, is considered to have become an obstacle in the way of an understanding between King Fuad and a constitutional Prime Minister. His withdrawal from the capital in the circumstances may accelerate a solution of the crisis. Adly Pasha was invited to form a Cabinet, but, although he accepted the mission at first, he found himself obliged to decline, presumably owing to his inability to secure the co-operation of the Zaghloulists. He remains at present the most likely candidate for the new Premiership, but is understood to be handicapped by his alleged pro-British proclivities. The truth is that Adly Pasha is as staunch an Egyptian patriot as Zaghloul Pasha himself, but has the practical advantage of being a reasonable person, who knows that few people in this world can have all that they want, and that it would probably be very bad for them, if they could.

"Tax-Collecting by Bomb."

A series of articles in the Daily Mail a few months ago was introduced as giving "for the first time a clear view of what is happening in Mesopotamia." The second article was introduced by the sentence: "Tax-collecting by bomb has become almost a matter of routine for the Royal Air Force in Mesopotamia"; further statements made were: "British aeroplanes have been utilised to extract overdue revenues"; "I am told that this local bombing has been going on constantly for months past"; "There has been intensive bombing aimed solely at the enforcement of revenue laws." In the course of a debate on Irak in the House of Commons on February 20 the Secretary of State for Air stated in regard to this allegation: "In no single case has there been anything in the nature of a bombing in connection with the non-payment of taxation." To this very emphatic denial the Daily Mail's correspondent replies with an attempt to justify his assertion, in regard to which the Daily Mail remarks editorially that his "evidence leaves no doubt as to the true facts." The correspondent's "evidence" is contained in the following passage: "It was admitted to me quite frankly by responsible members of the British administration when I was in Baghdad last autumn. Bombs were raining freely at that time on so-called 'turbulent villages,' and there is not the slightest reason to doubt the very circumstantial accounts which were given me of these operations and the reasons therefor. My informants referred in a matter-of-fact way to non-payment of taxes as one of the motives for reprisals by air," and among the "informants" an anonymous "official" is quoted. Whatever value is attached to the correspondent's "evidence," in the face of the Government's denial should also be attached to his whole series of articles.

The Administration of Irak.

Without waiting for the ratification of the Treaty signed last October, the British and Arab authorities of Irak have wisely decided to proceed with the gradual transfer from British control to the purely Arab administration contemplated by the Treaty. An important step to this end was taken last Saturday, when a Royal Decree abolished the post of Divisional Adviser and substituted Administrative Inspectors under the Ministry of the Interior. The effect of this change will be to relieve a number of Arab officials of the British Adviser, who has hitherto been installed at their side, with the inevitable result of attracting to himself much of the work which it was desirable that his Arab colleague should perform, with a view to gaining the necessary experience. Under the new scheme the Inspector will be available for consultation whenever required, but the Arab official will be left much more to his own responsibility. At the same time, the British Inspector will have certain duties of supervision and inspection to carry out, and should be able to insure the continuation of the standard of administrative efficiency already set by British officials. The success of the new scheme will depend entirely on the personal element, and it is to be hoped that all Arab officials will appreciate the wisdom of learning to walk before they try to run.

Ur of the Chaldees.

The excavators who have been at work during the last few months on the site of the ancient Ur of the Chaldees are spared the embarrassments of Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter in coping with the enthusiasm of tourists and the jealousies of newspapers. Southern Irak cannot compete with Luxor as a pleasure resort, for there is no bookstall at Ur Junction, and it is unlikely that the activities of the representatives of the British Museum and the University of Pennsylvania will be rewarded with discoveries as adaptable to the camera and the cinematograph as those just made in the Valley of the Kings. But Tutankhamen can never become the household word that Nebuchadnezzar is. Consequently, a single jewel or a fragment of a vegetarian menu that could be connected with the latter will outbid in public interest (pace the Press) all the treasures of Tutankhamen. Nebuchadnezzar, however, was little more than a latter-day incident in the history of the Moon God's temple at Ur, and if the excavators should light upon any written records of the Second Dynasty, they will be, at the close of play, "one up" on their Egyptian colleagues.

British Subjects in Tunis.

The dispute between France and Great Britain as to whether the former can impose French nationality upon persons of Maltese origin living in Tunis and Morocco, who, according to English law, are British subjects, is mainly of interest in its bearing on France's colonial problem. The French authorities must be either hard put to it to keep up the quota of recruits if they are compelled to try to conscript foreign subjects, for that is the purpose of the contention, or they must be anxious to avoid unfavourable comparisons on the part of the natives between their own lot and that of the subjects of other countries. It is a grievance among the Arabs of Tunisia that they have to be French subjects, and are thus liable to compulsory service. France met the British challenge by contending that her nationality decrees were purely a matter of domestic jurisdiction, and, as such, were not open to dispute. The Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague has decided against this view, and the question of the legality of the application of the decrees to British subjects will now have to be settled.

Racial Distinctions.

The Indian Legislative Assembly was clearly quite at its best when handling the measure designed to eliminate racial distinctions from the law of criminal procedure. As we explained a few weeks ago, the provisions of the old law were out of date, and, in fact, they served chiefly as fuel for the flames kindled by anti-British agitators. At one time feeling on the subject threatened to run high, but a committee composed of Europeans and Indians in equal numbers succeeded in coming to agreement on the terms of a compromise measure, and this measure has now been accepted by the Assembly to a chorus of mutual felicitations. One more bunker has thus been triumphantly carried on the very difficult course on which new India has to play, and it is a genuine pleasure to be able to congratulate Indian legislators on the achievement. At its best, indeed, the Assembly can already claim a very high place among the legislatures of the world, and what is wanted now is a reduction in the number of lapses from grace, which have been rather too frequent during the last year.

A Military Experiment.

Lord Rawlinson is tackling the thorny question of establishing an Indian national army in what seems to us a reasonable way. Admitting that India is to rise from Dependency to Dominion, it is obvious that the troops employed must ultimately be officered within the country, and that the present professional army, which is officered by Englishmen, must undergo some modification. Some Indians think this is a quite simple operation, seeing that colonels, and perhaps field marshals, can be found ready-made in the pass-lists of the Universities, but most of us will prefer to accept the official view—that experiment is necessary; and Lord Rawlinson's plan of working on eight selected units ought to yield the required data as rapidly as the conditions permit. In four years' time all the company officers in these units will be Indians, and then the road will be open for such of them as have shown their capacity to rise higher. The army in India is so small relatively to possible demands on it that to risk the efficiency of eight units in such an experiment is, at any rate, a strong proof of sincerity at headquarters; the risk is real enough, but let us hope that the Indians now to be appointed may demonstrate their ability to command and to lead.

The Supply of Officers.

The lack of qualified Indian officers, which limits both the size and the speed of this experiment, must, of course, be attributed mainly to the segregation of the different classes of the people, which is so conspicuous a feature in the Indian social system. Hitherto the soldiers have fought, while the students have studied, and neither class has known or cared anything about the other; but nowadays the art of fighting has to be combined with that of study in order to produce efficient officers, and the problem of the moment is to effect a satisfactory synthesis. The military schools now being opened in India show how this can be attempted, and, judging from a recent speech, Lord Rawlinson is well satisfied with the start made by the most important of these, the Prince of Wales's Military College at Dehra Dun; but some idea of the ground to be covered can be formed from the official statement that "many cadets, who had apparently played no game before they joined, show a wonderful change in their physique, manliness, and agility." Unfortunate children!

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

Political Diversions.

No man, however cynical or idealistic, would call the past week dull. It is true that very few unexpected things have happened, but we have had a delightfully diverse list of anticipated events, such as the Government majorities upon the Ruhr and Mesopotamia, the gaining by England of the rubber in the final test match in South Africa, the withdrawal of "Good Gracious, Annabelle!" and the jump to favouritism of Arravale for the Grand National! Even in the Parliamentary debates there were utterances that could be read without a yawn; more than that, indeed, for the worthy defection of Lord Robert Cecil from the "Liberal" view of the occupation of the Ruhr made many a sentimentalist positively gasp. What the Government intends at the moment to do with France is fairly obviously the only sensible thing—nothing; but it has been rather disgusting to notice that Lord Robert's frank recognition of this fact has been sneered at, as if it were the outcome of impure motives, by certain sections of the Liberal Press. The matter of the debate upon

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

London:	- - - - -	Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
Calcutta:	- - - - -	1 & 2, Old Court House Corner. H. L. Bell, Gen. Man.
Cairo:	- - - - -	43, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Loc. Director.
Alexandria:	- - - - -	Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
Cyprus:	- - - - -	Najem Houry & Sons.
Jerusalem,	- - - - -
Jopra, Haifa,	- - - - -
Khartoum,	- - - - -	Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.

Irak I leave to more instructed colleagues; but it seemed, in the circumstances, a rather fatuous and unreal affair.

Our attitude towards France is still the most important topic of conversation, though it is naturally being stunted by the newspapers less than previously. This fact was illustrated the other day at Mitcham, where the oft-defeated Minister of Health, Sir Arthur Boscawen, had his dove-cotes rudely disturbed by the appearance upon his comparatively peaceful scene of an Independent Unionist, who planked for supporting the French in the Ruhr. It is a nice division of opinion that we now see cleaving the classes; you can find Tories who strongly disapprove of French methods, and you can find Labour supporters—vide the report on the Ruhr published last week by four Labour members—whose views are not far from those of such economists as Mr. Hartley Withers, who believe that the exaction of reparations is quite possible. But, quite apart from this present conflict, I find in many places evidence of a quite cold and considered desire that the best thing for Europe, and possibly for Germany herself, is the break-up of Germany. This desire is something more than mere anxiety to be prepared for all possible shocks: it is, I think, the outcome of the adoption of an extra-insular and non-sentimental view of Europe.

Double Scotch.

Intense hilarity was recently caused in clubs, bars, Dundee, and other homes of silent thought by the publication of Mr. Scrymgeour's Liquor Traffic Prohibition Bill. This maiden effort on the part of the Scotch member for Dundee is no mild, but rather a bitter, affair; in any case his health or otherwise has been through it toasted a good many times by his future victims. This generous Celt seeks "to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes." So far, not so bad, and evadible enough. But he proceeds: "Alcohol when required for medicinal purposes shall be supplied only in bottles labelled 'poison' by properly qualified medical practitioners or by registered chemists." Wider and yet more wide his tolerance extends, until with a fine, care-free gesture he ultimately flings out an offer of five years' penal servitude to anyone who is thrice convicted of drinking. Really, the loquacity of these temperance reformers is too appalling. One wonders what Burns thinks of his wild fellow-dreamer. But the spectre of Prohibition sits lightly on these islands, for though you may admit that they are no longer Christian, and are therefore unstable on the drink question, they still have a general centre of gravity which simply cannot be disturbed by the heavy antics of a primitive in the North.

Sir Christopher Wren.

It is significant of that definite revival of interest in architecture which is perhaps one of the most remarkable signs in the corporate life of this country that the papers should have been quite lavish in the space that they gave to the two-hundredth anniversary of Sir Christopher Wren, which was celebrated yesterday. Perhaps it is strange that such homage should be paid to our greatest architect when our greatest composer, Purcell, should still be comparatively unknown, though it is the way of our people, I suppose, to prefer the visible and tangible to the less concrete form of art. But it is impossible not to be moved by a Wren building. One feels in all his works, and especially in the library of Trinity College, Cambridge, and in St. Paul's—the two that I know best—a sense of dignity, harmony, and repose. There is no cloying or startling beauty about them, but a satisfying and increasing fitness.

Sport of the Week.

The issue of our test match in South Africa overshadowed the rest of our sporting anxieties, though it was more with a sense of relief than any feeling of pride that we read of our victory. Already we are looking forward to seeing Mr. H. W. Taylor, who will prove here in 1924 whether or not he is what good judges call him—the second best batsman in the world to Hobbs.

But there were a few other results of less national importance, perhaps, but causing more immediate hoarseness. At Beckenham, in most distressing weather, Cambridge University beat Oxford University at hockey by four goals to one. The heaviness of the mud upset Oxford more than their opponents, who, with that genius at all games, C. T. Ashton, showing them an example, played more in the hit-and-rush style. Even on dry ground, however, Cambridge would have won. In what appears to have been a very rough show, Wales beat France on Saturday at Swansea, and Scotland got home in a good game at Dublin against Ireland. Englishmen are not too confident about the fate of the Calcutta Cup, soon to be decided at Inverleith, but they still hope that civilisation may be saved.

Purging the Press.

If one were asked what is the distinguishing mark of the post-war Press in England one would undoubtedly reply sensationalism. Now in nothing more than in unsavoury cases, such as divorce proceedings, has this sensationalism been exploited. It has never been a question of pandering to the public demand—for the ordinary public will read whatever you give them, even to the wearisome details about Tutankhamen; it has, rather, been the creation of a demand. No one but the most impossible reactionary or sentimentalist wishes to control the Press, or to impinge on its essential freedom; but equally no decent man denies that in certain cases the publication of improprieties has been carried to extreme lengths. The exposure of privacies is indeed a mark of our age.

Whether the recent protest, signed by twenty-four members of the House of Commons, against the publication of such details in divorce cases as I have suggested will be acted upon is doubtful. The cultivation of prurience is not easily stopped, and the circulation of those papers which refrain from gushing over the misfortunes, follies, or crimes of men and women is not a hopeful criterion. Without doubt the theatricality with which nearly every crime is nowadays invested revolts hundreds of men, but it probably appeals to more than it revolts. In Italy Mussolini has taken a strong move against the publication of obscene literature: but we have probably another fifty years to go before we need a Mussolini.

An East-End Theatre.

There is a great impetus now in the movement to bring Art to the people, not perhaps so much for the sake of the people as because the "bourgeois" have been found unworthy. In London manifestation of this desire is seen in the purpose to found a people's theatre in the East End. It is rather bold of Mr. J. T. Grein to plan a whole series of modern plays to be given in the Pavilion Theatre, White-chapel Road so soon after the failure of Mr. Adrian Boult to popularise good music in the same place, but his venture will be watched with considerable interest. Mr. Grein denies that the ground has been cut from under his feet by the "Old Vic," which has already bagged Shakespeare and the classics, and he intends to begin his enterprise next June.

ALTER EGO.

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Constantinople, February 19.

The Return of Ismet Pasha.

A mere bird of passage, so far as our "vilayet" of Constantinople is concerned, Ismet Pasha, Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs, and chief delegate to the Lausanne Conference, has come and has flown past on his way to the capital of the new Turkish State. The arrival, indeed, created a flutter in the dovecote, some cooing and much rustling of wings, but, up to the time of writing, neither the powerful lens of a cinema representative nor the eagle eyes of all the special correspondents of the world's Press have succeeded in detecting the looked-for olive branch. Thus is the scene now transferred to Angora, and for some ten days or so, one is told, must the world bide its soul in patience until the oracle of the Grand National Assembly has spoken.

Turkish Press and the Treaty.

In the meantime the Nationalist newspapers continue to explain away the cause of the rupture of the Conference as being due to the Great Powers in general and to the French in particular. The Vakit says:—

"There were in the Treaty certain economic and financial clauses which it was impossible for us to accept. Rather than accept them it would have been preferable to hand over the keys of our country to foreigners, and to say to them: 'Come in, gentlemen, this place belongs to you.' However, we did not at once refuse these clauses. We simply said that we were quite ready to discuss the questions. If M. Bompard had not allowed himself to be carried away into a misunderstanding, peace would have been made by to-day.

From whatever point of view we look at the matter we find that the Powers are to blame. First of all, the inviting Powers had a duty of politeness which they neglected by leaving us behind all alone at Lausanne. Secondly, they left while the military situation was threatening without clearing it up, and this from the point of peace puts upon them the responsibility. Thirdly, the Powers, after all the fundamental concessions we had made, did not seriously continue the negotiations, but haggled and bargained, and finally left Lausanne with the hope of being called back there."

Then there is the more bellicose attitude as adopted by the Angora organ, the Tan ("Dawn"), which points out that "Turkey is to-day stronger and more united than yesterday." In an article yesterday by Nébizadé Hamdi bey, Deputy for Trebizond, one reads that "the Grand National Assembly, after having heard the report of Ismet Pasha on the Conference, will eventually decide that the shortest way to arrive at the realisation of the National Pact is by war."

The Smyrna Congress.

Much prominence, and rightly so, is given in the local Press to the proceedings of the Economic Congress, which was inaugurated at Smyrna on Saturday with an opening address by Mustapha Kemal Pasha. It is evidence of good intentions on the part of the new Government that one of its first acts (even before it has come into its own) should be to summon the people to discuss ways and means of meeting and developing the first and most vital interests of the New Turkey. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that it should have been timed to begin before peace with the Great Powers was an accomplished fact. This, however, may have been due merely to a departmental miscalculation, and should not weigh in judgment against the originators of the idea. The democratic nature of the gathering would appear to be an outstanding feature. More than 500 delegates were present, representing the various provinces of Turkey. First place was given to farmers and producers, who were accorded seats in the centre of the hall. A special section of the hall is taken up with agriculture machinery (for the importation of which, be it noted, an American company has received a large contract). To the right of the farmers were seated traders and business men. The left wing is occupied by artisans.

From the disjointed reports received of Kemal Pasha's address it is satisfactory to note the statement: "One is apt to believe that we are against

EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS.

The Cheapest, Quickest and most Comfortable Route through Egypt.
EXPRESS CORRIDOR TRAINS.

Dining and Sleeping Cars.

PORT SAID
to
CAIRO

in 4½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-18-8
(L.E.1.910 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

ALEXANDRIA
to
CAIRO

in 3½ hours.

1st Class fare Lst.1-15-5½
(L.E.1.755 m/ms)

LUNCHEON and
DINING CARS.

CAIRO
to LUXOR

and vice-versa in 13 hrs.
by the TRAINS de LUXE

1st Class fare Lst.4-4-6
(L.E.4.120 m/ms)

Sleeping Car Supplement
Lst. 1-7-2
(L.E.1.350 m/ms).

LUXOR
to ASSOUAN

and vice-versa in 6½ hrs.
1st Class fare Lst.1-15-9½
(L.E.1.770 m/ms)

LUNCHEON CAR.

FOR ALL INFORMATION APPLY TO:—

PUBLICITY SECTION,
EGYPTIAN STATE RAILWAYS
CAIRO STATION.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

foreign capitalists. This is an error. On the contrary, we want their co-operation. In consequence, we declare ourselves to be ever ready to accord the necessary guarantees, provided that they submit to our laws. We want foreign capital to come to add to our efforts and to the wealth of our country not yet exploited. But we do not admit, as in the past, that the Government should remain with folded arms merely as guardians of this foreign capital. As in the case of all civilised nations, we are not able to agree to that. We cannot permit that this country should become as a city of slaves."

Touching on the Lausanne Conference, Kemal Pasha said: "The temporary adjournment of the Conference was due to the same causes and the same reasons. Our army has achieved the greatest victory. It had not found in front of it any obstacle which barred its triumphal march when the Allies declared to us that they were going to recognise all our just and legitimate rights in opening negotiations and invited us to the Conference. We sent out delegates, otherwise interrupting the advance of our armies. The negotiations have occupied months without the Allies manifesting a desire to recognise our claims. They have to settle with us accounts for three or four hundred years, and not for three or four years. They have not succeeded in realising that the ancient Ottoman Empire has passed into history, and that it has been replaced by the new Turkish State created by this nation, full of energy and life. It is on this account that the Allies have passed through phases of uncertainty and perplexity, Comrades! Our nation has already taken a definite decision. For her moments of hesitation do not exist. (Cheers.) She will no longer allow herself to deflect from the path on which she has begun to march before her absolute independence is assured and recognised."

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 4.

Johnnie Walker : "What is't? a spirit? . . . I might call him a thing divine."

Spirit of Shakespeare : "I cap thy compliment, JOHNNIE WALKER. Thou, too, art 'a spirit of no common rate'."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., Scotch Whisky Distillers, KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

SHAKESPEARE HOTEL, Stratford-on-Avon:—The Headquarters of the historic Garrick Jubilee Memorial to Shakespeare held in 1769.

Turkey's Economic Interests.

The above quotations from Mustapha Kemal Pasha's speech were reported in our papers of yesterday (Sunday). To-day's Stamboul, however, contains a fuller account of the proceedings of the Congress, and quotes what it claims to be the essential passages of the Nationalist leader's opening address. As this later report does not contain a word of what I have already quoted, it must be inferred that this earlier account was but the peroration of the address.

In the fuller report Mustapha Kemal Pasha is speaking in more serious mood; he takes his hearers back to the past history of the Empire with a view to showing the cause of all her misfortunes, and the necessity for a complete change of front on the part of the new Turkish State. To demonstrate the trend of thought in his mind, it may be worth quoting some of these further passages of his speech:—

"Comrades, you come here to represent all those classes which directly constitute the people. You know at first hand the state of our country and of our nation, their wants and their aspirations. The words that you utter and the suggestions that you make will be considered as coming from the people. The voice of the people is the voice of right. Gentlemen, when history applies itself to searching the causes of the grandeur and of the decadence of a people it invokes political, military, and social reasons. It is evident that all the reasons spring from social events, but that which is in closest bearing to the existence, the prosperity, and the decadence of a people is its economics. This historical truth is confirmed in our existence and our national history. In fact, if one examines the history of the Turkish people, one will see that her grandeur and her decadence are merely corollaries of her economic life. So, in order to raise the new Turkey to the desired level, it is necessary, cost what it may, to accord all our solicitude to the questions which concern her economics.

"In the course of Ottoman history, all the efforts employed, all the activities of her statesmen, have had as their aim, not to satisfy the desires of the people, nor to realise their aspirations, but rather to appease petty yearnings and personal ambitions."

After citing the examples of Mahomet II., Sultan Selim, and Suleiman, Mustapha Kemal Pasha continued:—

"Comrades, if one examines closely all these movements, one finds that these great and powerful monarchs based their foreign policy on their desire to satiate their personal leanings and ambitions. They had thus to regulate their internal organisation in accordance with their foreign policy. Now foreign policy ought to be, on the contrary, subordinated to the internal organisation—that is to say, one should avoid extending and increasing beyond what the internal organisation permits." He went on to explain that this policy of regulating the internal organisation in accordance with foreign policy, rather than vice versa, led to the necessity for allowing elements of countries which had been subjugated to retain their language, their religions, and traditions in all their different forms, of grant-

APPOINTMENTS WANTED.

FLUENT Arabic, good French, fair Italian, Shorthand, Type-writing and Bookkeeping. An Englishman, 29, with above qualifications, loyal and trustworthy, requires Situation in Near East—Address V., Box 14, THE NEAR EAST.

EX-OFFICER, Captain, 29, single, desires appointment with Mercantile firm. Far or Near East. Three years' shipping experience (pre-war). French and Arabic. Excellent references; travelled extensively Egypt, Palestine, Syria. Moderate salary, with prospects; small capital available.—Box 30, THE NEAR EAST, 1, Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2.

ing them favours and privileges, and even permitting them to retain their own nationalities.

This line of thought brought the speaker to the origin of the Capitulations. Under the shelter of these concessions, he proceeded, have the people conquered and dominated been able to devote themselves peacefully to work in the fields and to commerce, while the "essential element" handled the sabre, going from one part of the Empire to the other. "Gentlemen, those who effect conquests by the sword finish by being beaten by those who employ as their arm the plough, and by ceding their place to them. . . . In the struggle between the sabre and the plough it is always the latter which comes out on top." (Applause.) Mustapha Kemal Pasha instanced the erstwhile citizens of the Ottoman Empire, Serbs, Bulgars, Magyars, and Roumanians.

After further reference to the foreigners within their gates, and to the manner in which they have worked their way in and interfered in the internal affairs of the country, the leader of the Nationalist Government made the following passing reference to Turkey's debts:—

"The monarchs and the Sublime Porte, anxious to maintain their position and to satiate their mean yearnings, searched everywhere for means to obtain money. It was then that loans were incurred. These loans have been concluded under conditions so onerous that the country is not even able to pay the interest."

Owing to postal delays a number of letters from our correspondents overseas have not reached us.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

Irak.

In commenting upon the recent debate in the House of Commons on Mesopotamia, the Manchester Guardian of February 21 says:—

We are not now in the happy position of being able to make a free choice. We have been in control of the country for some six or seven years. We have set up a ruler there, and we have entered into a treaty with him. To limit our responsibilities to the utmost possible extent is what we must all desire, but the time and the method need a good deal of consideration. In the course of the debate a Conservative member declared it to be his opinion that the choice before us was in reality either to annex the country or to clear out of it. It is possible that he is right, and evidently the whole question of our occupation and our responsibility for the future government of the country will have to be considered afresh. That is not a thing to be done in a hurry, and, particularly, it is not one which can be undertaken at the moment when we are negotiating a treaty with the Turks in which the question of their claim to an essential portion of the territory is involved. That matter has to be settled first, and we can then address ourselves freely to the other. It must be decided coolly on the merits. Some of our critics, as Lady Astor last night complained, profess to believe that the whole question is a question of oil. If that were true it would certainly be the most expensive oil that ever was tapped from the earth. The charge has been so often and so confidently repeated that a good many people have, perhaps, come to believe it to be true. Mr. Bonar Law brushed it aside in a sentence: "There is no question of oil, and never has been." It would be a poor and discreditable thing indeed if the policy of the country in so great a matter could be determined by a motive so paltry and so sordid.

The Times of the same date says:—

Surely there is no real doubt about the conditions under which we found ourselves in Iraq (after the mandate, as the Prime Minister admitted, had been refused by the United States), or about the only conditions under which we could honourably take our departure? There is no use in finessing, as Mr. Asquith did, upon the precise juridical interpretation of our pledges and obligations. Nobody who knows them can doubt the meaning they were intended to convey to those to whom the promises were made, or doubt the meaning which the Arab populations in fact placed upon them, or doubt that it was on the strength of this meaning that the Arabs joined us in our contest with the Turks—itsself an essential part of the world-war with Germany. Mr. Asquith rightly reminds us that he was as responsible as anybody for our going to Iraq at all. Now he is for a complete—though apparently not for an immediate—"scuttle," not only from Mosul and Baghdad, but from Basra as well. He conceives that we have fulfilled all our pledges. We promised the Arabs "freedom and emancipation from Ottoman rule." Have we not conferred these boons upon them? Are they not autonomous? Feisal is our friend; his position depends upon our support, and so lately as last October we signed a treaty with him. But, fortunately, it has not been ratified, and so Mr. Asquith advises that we may regard it as not effective or binding. In fact, we have no duties in Iraq and no interests there. Our object, in Mr. Asquith's opinion, should be to "cut ourselves completely clear of all our obligations and responsibilities in that part of the world." The Prime Minister's view, so far as he thinks it permissible to have a view, would seem easier to reconcile with Mr. Asquith's than with that expressed by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs at Lausanne. Towards the end of the debates on the Treaty which Mr. Bonar Law rather curiously states that we "have made" with Turkey, Lord Curzon dwelt most impressively upon the reasons which should forbid us to entertain for a moment all suggestions for the abandonment of Mosul, not to say for the

(Continued on p. 219.)

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL CO., LTD.

"The All-British Oil Company"

The range of products manufactured by the Company and its subsidiaries includes :—

Aviation Spirit, Motor Spirit, Lamp Oils, White Oils (Turpentine Substitute), Gas Oils, Tractor Vaporising Oils, Diesel and Semi-Diesel Oils, Fuel Oil, Lubricating and Batching Oils, Paraffin Wax and Candles.

The ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL COMPANY controls by itself and through its associated Companies Bunkering Stations at the following Ports :—

LONDON	MANCHESTER	BOMBAY
Royal Albert Docks and Purfleet	CHRISTIANIA	COLOMBO
HULL	ANTWERP	MADRAS
SUNDERLAND	DUNKIRK	CALCUTTA
JARROW (Tyne)	HAVRE	RANGOON
GRANGEMOUTH	DONGES (Loire)	MOMBASA
SOUTHAMPTON	MARSEILLES	DURBAN
SWANSEA	PORT SAID	FREMANTLE
AVONMOUTH	ADEN	MELBOURNE
LIVERPOOL	ABADAN	SYDNEY
	KARACHI

Other Stations are in the course of erection.

British in Capital, Management and Policy

ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL Co., Ltd.

Britannic House, 23 Gt. Winchester St., E.C.2

(Continued from p. 217.)

abandonment of the rest of Iraq. Lord Curzon spoke of our "solemn pledges" to the Arabs. Among them was a pledge that Basra would "never again" be suffered to pass under Turkish rule. Then there were promises that the people of places under our control might "in all circumstances" rely upon our protection against the Turks for "the future." There is Mr. Lloyd George's declaration that it would be "impossible to restore these regions to Turkish sovereignty," and there is our declaration, made jointly with France, that the "definite" liberation of the inhabitants from the sway of the Turks was one of our common objects. But it is not only to the Arabs and their chiefs that we are bound. We are also bound by our position as mandatories, as Lord Curzon insisted. The Powers gave us the mandate for Mesopotamia at the same time as they gave France the mandate for Syria, and upon the same footing. The measure of our authority as mandatories was referred to the League of Nations, and the League, pending the final draft of the mandate, have requested us to continue conducting the affairs of Iraq in the same way as we have done. In our capacity as mandatories we have made the Treaty with King Feisal which binds both the signatories not to cede any part of the mandated territory either to Turkey or to any other Power. We cannot abandon Iraq without absolute discredit (not more or less discredit), except at the request of those to whom we are bound in honour. That we can, and should, curtail our expenditure there is quite another proposition.

Indian Army Reform.

The Morning Post of February 26 thus begins an article dealing with the Indian Army, which is dealt with in our "Notes of the Week":—

The measure recently announced by Lord Rawlinson for giving effect to the policy of opening up the military service for chosen young men of the country is not one which can be accused of being in advance of its time. This policy is commonly spoken of as the "Indianisation of the Army," whereas, as everyone knows, the Army in question is entirely composed of Indians, except for the officers, who until recently were entirely British. This was a state of things that could not last for ever, and after the splendid part played by the Indian troops in the war, the barrier that kept the higher portion of the service closed against the Indian was evidently bound to be raised. Thirty years ago the Duke of Connaught approached the Government of India with suggestions for the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst, and it is the fault of the politicals themselves that subsequently the scheme receded into the background. . . .

But this departure, it goes on, is not enough for the "politicals'" interpretation of Indianisation, which demands that British recruitment for the Army be shut down forthwith. However—

With great forbearance and patience Lord Rawlinson had to explain that it is not as easy to manufacture an Army officer as a Legislative Councillor or a Minister. The former must have some knowledge of what he is about; he must be physically fit; he must possess certain moral qualities; he must inspire confidence in others. A supply of men with the necessary qualifications is not to be obtained by a Legislative resolution. The Commander-in-Chief said that the first results of the Government's attempts to secure a supply of promising candidates for Sandhurst had been disappointing. Very few of the boys offering were either sufficiently well educated or of sufficient physique to qualify for the first stage of a military career. We gather that the experience of the Dehra College has not been encouraging. The promotion of men who have grown grey in subordinate positions, many of them with strings of medals on their chests, to lieutenantcies, is plainly ridiculous. The idea of the military authorities is turning towards the creation of a system of special schools which will catch the right lads young, and turn them into keen and vigorous ephebi, capable of turning Sandhurst or Dehra to good account.

At any rate, the Government and the Army authorities have accepted the principle of the Indian officer, and are genuinely determined to do their best by him. The difficulty that has stood in the way so long is that they have also had to consider the feelings of their own officers. The whole history of the Indian Army proves that the British officer has nothing to be taught in regard to the cultivation of sympathy with his men or as to the acquiring of their confidence. But at the same time there are points at which he draws the line. To many most open-minded soldiers the idea of being under the command of an Asiatic is insufferable; and all would wish to have the regimental home, the Mess, to themselves. Therefore, everyone who has seriously considered this question has come to the conclusion that the only way of surmounting the obstacle is to tell off a certain number of regiments as receptacles for Indian officers on posting, so that, in process of time, these corps shall come to be staffed entirely by Indians. This is the method the Government has actually adopted. Eight units have been marked off, in each of which a British officer is to be replaced yearly by an Indian subaltern, until in these corps a few years hence all the squadron and company officers will be Indians. Promotion beyond this will depend upon merit, and if the system proves as successful as we hope it may eventually we shall see eight regiments entirely officered by Indians, inspired by the honourable ambition of showing themselves the equals of those under British direction. The objection to the scheme, as explained by Earl Winterton, is that eight units at the rate of one recruit a year will not nearly absorb the Indian candidates coming forward, so that the plan merely promises to mitigate the social difficulty we have touched upon. However, it is a great thing that the subject has been taken in hand, and on the right lines.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

Near East Bookshelf.

ARAB SOCIAL LIFE.

"BEHIND TUNISIAN WALLS." By L. E. Douglas. A rendering from the French "A Tunis, derrière les Murs," par Lt.-Colonel R. B. de Voligny. (Published by "The Near East," 1, Devonshire Square, London, E.C.2. Price 3s. 6d. Postage 3d.)

Although dealing with Tunisia, and forming an invaluable handbook of that country, this small volume has an interest which will appeal to wider circles than merely those who contemplate a visit to Tunis or may care to read about Tunisia. The two main divisions of the Tunisian population are the Arabs and the Jews. "Behind Tunisian Walls" takes the reader, as the title suggests, into the inner social life of both peoples. He is introduced at once into the family circle, and learns a great deal about Arab manners, customs, sayings, and beliefs. Much of what is written about the Arabs of Tunis is applicable to all Arab peoples and to the native world of Islam, for the Moslem family, in whatever country it happens to be, is subject to certain laws founded on the Koran and tradition. The knowledge that this book gives will render a visit to any Arab country far more interesting to the traveller. He will learn something of Arab politeness, of the ceremonies of Moslem life, of the religious brotherhoods of Islam, and of Arab superstitions. A chapter is devoted to tales and legends, an excellent selection being given of the stories told by the itinerant story-teller whose profession goes back through the ages past the Roman and Greek orators to the bards of Homer's time. Native Jewish manners and customs are also described, and there are two good Jewish legends.

To the translation of the French volume Mrs. Douglas has added some useful information for visitors to Tunisia, making the whole book a handy guide. With a chapter on "What to See in Tunis" are included others on excursions in the neighbourhood, miscellaneous information useful for travellers, and a glossary of terms. The book is illustrated with Tunisian scenes.

THE STORY OF SIWA.

"SIWA: THE OASIS OF JUPITER AMMON." By C. Dalrymple Belgrave. With an Introduction by Sir Reginald Wingate. (London: The Bodley Head. 15s. net.)

The importance and potentialities of the Libyan Desert are now being increasingly recognised, though the amount of literature written upon it is yet small; and it is good, therefore, to have a first-hand and unvarnished account of a certain part of it. The author of this book, though his main purpose is to tell the story and describe the peculiarities of Siwa, which is 200 miles south of Sollum, the Egypt-Tripoli port, does in effect give a vivid picture of much of the desert. After the Armistice he was with the Frontier Districts Administration Camel Corps, first on the coast, and later as District Officer of Siwa. During this function he studied to excellent purpose the history, customs, and geography of the place, and for the most part his book is made up of experiences and impressions gained on the spot.

Siwa itself he describes as one of the least-known and most interesting places in North Africa. Once it was famous as the home of the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, which, built in the sixth century B.C., was so revered amongst the ancients; but now, with its Berber population decreasing in numbers, and with the withdrawal of British officials from Egypt, it will probably relapse into obscurity. The oasis of Siwa is reached either from Sollum or from Matruh—ports on the Mediterranean west of Alexandria—in a six-days' camel ride. These coastal places were, of course, well known to the Romans, since whose time, however, little importance has been attached to them. Matruh is inhabited now chiefly by unpopular Greek traders, and has a sponge industry, in which Italians are mostly employed. Sollum Mr. Belgrave did not care for, but his sojourn there gave him an opportunity to examine the nature and habits of the Arabs of the Western Desert. These nomads he found very different from the fellahs of Egypt. They were picturesque, as are all Arabs, fairer in appearance than those of Arabia and Palestine, and a kindly, hospitable people.

The author gives an extremely interesting account of the personnel of his Camel Corps, and of his journey with them across the desert south to Siwa, where he was at once impressed with "the intense heat, the excellent bathing, the enormous height and strange appearance of the town, and the incessant sound of tom-toms from sunset onwards." Siwa and its neighbouring village, Aghourmi, where lie the ruins of the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, must, indeed, be wonderfully picturesque, situated in a valley which is 72 ft. below sea-level, with the desert plateau above, 672 ft. higher.

The history of Siwa is here divided into four periods: (1) From the foundation of the Temple of Jupiter Ammon; (2) from the beginning of the Mohammedan invasion in the seventh century A.D.; (3) from its subjugation by Mohammed Ali in the nineteenth century; and (4) from the Great War. We cannot recapitulate this history, fascinating as it is, and must content ourselves with advising curious readers to go to this book itself. Mr. Belgrave's account of it, particularly in regard to the Senussi and their activities during the War, is strictly impartial, and is confused by no theories upon the potentialities of the present-day Arabs in this region. He concludes his very informative book by relating some of the customs and superstitions that he witnessed.

Throughout this volume is written in easy, not to say ungrammatical, style, and is consequently by no means difficult to follow. It is illustrated with several excellent photographs and coloured sketches by the author, has a useful index, and includes a map, which perhaps is a little inadequate. Without doubt it is a valuable production, for it not only lightens our ignorance, but dispels certain false notions that we may have entertained from reading books of other authors.

BOOK RECEIVED.

"Persian Literature: An Introduction." By Reuben Levy, M.A. (London: Oxford University Press. 2s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 2d.)

A NEW QUARTERLY.

We have received the first issue of World Dominion, a new quarterly review, edited by Dr. Thomas Cochrane, C.M. The object of the journal is (to quote the editorial) "to think in world terms and to review the distribution of the forces and resources of the Christian Church in the light of world need. It will plead for co-ordination and co-operation and a world plan." The quarterly will deal with missionary principles, policies, and methods. The first issue contains an article by the editor on "Hope for the Leper." Other articles deal with Indo-China, Central China, the Near East, Japan, and Africa from the above-stated points of view. The quarterly is published by the Livingstone Press for the L.M.S. Laymen's Movement, at 48, Broadway, London, S.W.1 at 6d. per copy, or 2s. 6d. per year post free.

The Catholic Association, which before the War organised many successful pilgrimages to Catholic places of interest both at home and abroad, announces a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in May, 1924, which, it is hoped, will be led by Cardinal Bourne. The outward journey will be via Marseilles, Alexandria, and Cairo, and the return via Smyrna, Constantinople, Naples, and Rome.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

March 1 (New Style).
February 16 (Old Style).
Ragab 13, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.
Adar 13, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

The Earl of Lanesborough, who is wintering in Egypt, will remain abroad until July.

Lt.-Colonel Colley, of the Palestine Police, left Palestine early last month for England.

Prince Nicolas of Roumania will join H.M.S. Benbow on March 6 as a midshipman.

Viscountess Ridley, who is travelling in India, will return to London about the middle of April.

Mr. Frank Noyce, acting Indian Trade Commissioner, and Mrs. Noyce left for India on February 23.

Lord Leigh and the Hon. Agnes Leigh will return to London from Egypt towards the end of March.

Queen Olga of Greece visited Queen Alexandra at Marlborough House on February 21, and remained to luncheon.

Mme. Titulesco, wife of the Roumanian Minister, is expected to return from France next week to 50, Grosvenor Street.

Mr. Ronald Storrs, Governor of Jerusalem, arrived at Southampton on February 27 in the Berengaria, from New York.

Mr. Leonard R. Whittall gave a lecture on "The Burning of Smyrna, with Personal Experience," before the Société Internationale de Philologie last Friday.

Lord William Cecil will preside at a lecture on needlework found in Egyptian tombs, to be given by Mr. Frederic Wilson to-day (March 1), at 4.30, at the Royal School of Needlework, South Kensington.

Mr. Harold Spender, at a meeting of the Anglo-Hellenic League, held last Thursday at University College, Gower Street, spoke of his recent visit to Athens and the conclusion he had formed as to the condition and future of Greece.

The Earl of Mount Edgcumbe left London last Friday, in the British India Company's s.s. Mulbera, for Port Said. He will from there proceed to Luxor as the guest of the Earl of Carnarvon. Lady Mount Edgcumbe is remaining in London for the present.

A course of three lectures is being given at the London School of Economics and Political Science (Houghton Street, Aldwych, W.C.2) by Sir Wil-

DOMESTIC ANNOUNCEMENT.

ON the 15th February, at Windermere, the wife of Captain J. F. D. Jeffreys, 96th Berar Infantry, I.A., a son.

COPIES OF OLD MASTERS.

BULGARIAN Artist, painter, undertakes to paint good copies of pictures of the Pinacothèques, Munich, same size. Price £1 to £2 each. Will send catalogues first for order.—Address D. Kratschkoff, Neureuther St. 29 IIm, Munich, Germany.

liam Vincent, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E. His subject is "Political Developments in India from 1920 to 1922," and the lectures will be given at 6 p.m. on March 1, 8, and 15. At the first lecture the chair will be taken by the Right Hon. Lord Meston, K.C.S.I., LL.D.

The annual general meeting of subscribers to the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem is being held to-day (March 1) in the Hall of St. John's College, Oxford. The chair will be taken at 2.30 by the Rev. Professor Burney, D.Litt., and the Director of the School (Prof. John Garstang, M.A., D.Sc.) will give an account of the progress of the work of the School in Palestine. In the evening Prof. Garstang is to deliver a public lecture on "Field Work in Palestine" in the Ashmolean Museum.

APPOINTMENTS, PROMOTIONS, Etc.

Rida Pasha el Rikabi has resigned his position as Chief Adviser for Transjordan. Mushar Bey Arslan has been nominated in his place.

The two Burmese Ministers appointed by Sir Harcourt Butler are Mr. J. A. Maung Gyi, barrister-at-law, in charge of the Forest, Agriculture, and Excise Departments; and U. Maung, in charge of the Local Self-Government, Education, and Public Health Departments.

Where to stay in the East

THE CAIRO CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,
At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO.
Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULOU) ALEXANDRIA.
First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards.
Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.
A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.
LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.
FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.
LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.
FOR SUMMER SEASON.
TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.
6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October.
Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.
For Tickets and further Particulars, apply
NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.
Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."
Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.
Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.
All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1923.

BRITAIN AND IRAK.

The debate in the House of Commons last week on the subject of Irak will not have been in vain if it gives the death-blow to two untruths that have been sedulously circulated by our yellow Press and by a few people who are dependent on it for their political knowledge. A correspondent sent out to decry the country and the British mandatory connection with it drew a lurid picture of Royal Air Force squadrons bombing Arab villages and their inhabitants on receipt of a message from a political officer to the effect that the villagers were in arrears with their taxes. "Tax-collecting by bomb has become almost a matter of routine for the Royal Air Force" were the actual words used in one of a series of articles that were announced to give, "for the first time, a clear view of what is happening in Mesopotamia." At the time the fanciful picture was challenged advisedly in these pages, but it was not until the mover of the amendment in the House of Commons repeated the legend that the Government took the trouble to repudiate it. "In no single case," said the Secretary of State for Air, "has there been anything in the nature of a bombing in connection with the non-payment of taxation." With this statement, it is to be hoped, the last has been heard of a despicable libel on the Royal Air Force and a British Administration. The second misrepresentation nailed to the counter concerned the alleged subordination by the British Government of Imperial interests to capitalist oil interests. On this point the Prime Minister said: "If ever this country was engaged in an operation which is not directed at getting oil or anything like that, but which is entirely unselfish from this country's point of view, our being in Mesopotamia is in that category. There is no question of oil, and never has been. What obligations bind us are the obligations to the people of that country."

In other respects the debate was not particularly helpful. Mr. Bonar Law's speech was more characteristic of his political honesty than indicative of statesmanship. On taking office he had announced that his policy would be one of curtailment of expenditure abroad where, after investigation, this was found compatible with the commitments already entered into by Great Britain. Four months later he can only report that the investigation has not yet been completed, and he left the House to infer the genuineness of the "open mind" that he himself still had on the subject from his rambling and unpolished presentation of the Government's case. "Whatever the reasons that induced us to go to Mesopotamia, the fact that we have been there for six or seven years must bring in its train certain obligations which no country would desire to get out of, if it is possible to avoid it without losing the goodwill of the people whom you have left." "If we are to go—if we are to go, everyone would say that the right way to do it is by negotiation." "We have got to consider in this question, before we come to a decision, what the obligations are, and in what way, with the least discredit to this country, if we decide to leave, it is possible to take our departure." Apart from the fact that the investigation regarding Great Britain's obligations to Irak is not yet completed, the only point that Mr. Bonar Law attempted to make was that the future of Irak was inseparably linked up with the Turkish settlement, and that for this reason "to come to a decision before this Treaty of Lausanne is signed would be a very unwise procedure." The contention is so obvious that it might have been expected to prevent any public discussion on Irak for the time being. As often happens, party politics over-ruled Imperial considerations in this matter, but it is fair to the Opposition to point out that the amendment suggested merely that there should be "immediate and drastic curtailment of British responsibilities in Mesopotamia." So worded, the motion was innocuous enough to be acceptable to everybody in the House; but, as Mr. Bonar Law reminded members, an amendment to the Address constitutes a vote of censure on the Government, and for that reason cannot be accepted, whatever the terms. From the speech of the mover, moreover, it was evident that the intention behind the motion was to rally as many votes as possible in support of a policy of "scuttle" pure and simple, regardless of Imperial interests and obligations, and solely in response to the narrowest dictates of the clamour for economy. It was well, therefore, that the amendment met with a substantial defeat, in order that the Little England "scuttlers" should derive no encouragement from those who are legitimately in favour of a drastic curtailment of British responsibilities in Irak.

This question of Irak as it is now being raised in Great Britain is, after all, much ado about nothing. It is true that a policy of annexation found favour with many people in this country at one time, not from any promptings of land-hunger, but from a sincere belief that only by such means could the true interests of Irak and the Irakis be served. The idea was definitely abandoned in 1920, and now, by common consent, has become impossible. Its place has been taken by the policy of the gradual substitution of Arab for British administration. In this policy the Mandate is merely an incident; for the whole scheme of Mandates represents an attempt to systematise for the benefit of the world at large an essentially British practice in regard to backward peoples. It is inevitable that differences of opinion should occur as to the rate at which the transfer from British to Arab rule should be effected and concerning the procedure; but these differences of opinion, it might be thought, would be restricted to the inhabitants of the country and the British officials. What is difficult to understand is the feverish anxiety of a small section in Great Britain to foul their own nest to no purpose. The Government is committed to a curtailment of British responsibilities in Irak by the spirit of the Mandate, by its own inclination, and by the demands of the Arabs themselves. The surest way of hastening the process is to secure peace with the outside world for Irak and to strengthen the hands of the Arab Government for the maintenance of peace and order within the country. But the irresponsible critics of British policy go out of their way to encourage Turkish intrigue against Irak and to undermine the authority of the existing régime, fondly imagining or pretending that by such means they are assisting the British withdrawal. At the same time the more restless elements in Irak are led to suppose that fresh activities on their part are calculated to accelerate the withdrawal, and further obstacles are placed in the way of the British Government in giving effect to a policy that all wish to see carried through in Irak.

BYZANTINE SURVIVALS IN THE BALKANS

By MALCOLM BURR.

In all the accounts of travels in the Balkan Peninsula it is seldom that the reader comes across any reference to the survival of the old Balkan, or Byzantine, civilisation. The Turks are credited with all that is Oriental in origin, which assumption, if justified, would give them far greater constructive power than is generally attributed to them. If we eliminate the relatively modern introduction of coffee and tobacco (although the former is of Eastern origin), the Turks are responsible for but little in the material life of the Balkan Christians. Destructive powers, it is true, they have, but yet they have been preservers to a far greater extent than is generally assumed, not from active desire, indeed, but from indifference, indolence and the inertia of their resistance to Western progress.

For the main facts of Southern Balkan life to-day come down from remote antiquity, originally from Asia, the home of civilisation. The use of the ox as beast of burden, and especially to pull the plough; the well-developed system of irrigation, which alone renders possible vegetable and fruit gardening in Macedonia; many kinds of crops, of wheat, barley, and oats, of fruit, as peaches, pomegranates, and the inevitable egg-plant or brinjoll, the régime of the olive and vine, the precious flax and hemp, all of which are predominant in the southern portion of the Balkan Peninsula to-day—all this is not of European, but of Asiatic, origin, and was probably as characteristic of life in Byzantine days as it is in the Twentieth Century. For, after all, Byzantium drew its civilisation from the East, tapping Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, and even Persia. And now the name of Byzantium is gone, and the association therewith, but the relics remain, though to-day called Ægean or Levantine, and commonly attributed to the Turks. The area in Europe where the remains of the Byzantine tradition survive most strongly is that part of the Peninsula south of the Balkan Range and of the Shar Planina; it is most vigorous in the east, in Thrace and Macedonia, as might be expected, and weaker in the west, in Epirus and Southern Albania. In Greece and the isles, of course, it is dominant. It is, in fact, the type of life which is most suited to the climate and geographical conditions.

Naturally, the Byzantine tradition survives most strongly in the Church. The idea of Orthodoxy overshadowing that of nationality suited the Turks, who found it convenient to make use of the Greek organisation, and classified their Christian subjects according to their religion. The whole hierarchy, the ceremonial, vestments, customs, ikons, and adornments and language come straight down from Byzantium. The architecture of the churches, not only of the famous buildings of St. Demetrius and St. George, in Salonika, which, happily, were not destroyed by the great fire, have come down practically intact. But, besides these, there is a whole series of monasteries and churches throughout the Balkans which date from the late Byzantine days, and the splendid foundations of the Serbian Tsars owed much to Byzantium, though the Serbs impressed their own personality upon the work. The monasteries of Grachanitsa and Dechani and numerous others were erected in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, when the Serbs were struggling with Byzantium for the hegemony of the Peninsula, on the very eve of the collapse of both before the all-conquering Turk. But the greatest monument of all is the entire religious community of Mount Athos, where many of the monasteries hold their title-deeds from Byzantine emperors. And it is not only in ecclesiastical, but also in lay architecture, that this influence is seen. The domestic houses, except the modern villas in the French and Italian styles, are built to suit the materials available and the climate to be lived in. The great baths of Salonika are almost replicas of many old Byzantine churches, and, outwardly, have more the appearance of monasteries than of bathing establishments, and the interior, with the massive vaulted stone chambers and columns, with rounded arches and light admitted by innumerable tiny windows pierced in the cupolas, make the bather think that he is performing his ablutions in a cathedral.

But it is in the small towns of Macedonia that we find the old spirit of Byzantine urban life. The Turks never built real, well-paved towns, such as Vodena, Edessa, and the remote, lofty, and seldom-visited township of Stefanina Raja, scarcely marked upon the map, perched on the heights of Beshik Dag, overlooking the picturesque Gulf of Orphano, hardly accessible by wheeled traffic; yet it has paved streets, hotels, cafés, and shops, and might well pass muster for a small township in Western Europe.

In the everyday life of the inhabitants of these towns we see the old age-long tradition. The cut of the women's clothes, in particular, their gold and silver embroidery, much of the jewellery, especially the filigree ware now generally attributed to Albanian craftsmen, all come down from the ancient Balkan civilisation, for the Turks never brought those with them. Probably much of the cooking has the same ancestry, and mousaka, sarma or ambelodolmades, kebab and djuvech are Byzantine dishes.

But the Turks did destroy something, and effectively enough, too. In vain we look for an aristocracy, in vain for traces of literary and intellectual culture. But the energy of the population, shut off by the greedy Turks from great wealth or political eminence, finds its vent in outward piety and genuflections, in crossing and in ikons, although the numerous pious texts in their houses do not prevent the people, as Professor Cvijich quietly remarks, from robbing their neighbour. For that is their chief, if not only, interest in life. Petty commerce and outwitting each other are their main occupations. The spirit of the bazaar dominates their souls. Individualism precludes solidarity, and small profit replaces patriotism and ambition.

As in the West, town life leads to degeneration. The cramped activities, the sitting posture so usual

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

in craft or business, the rich and oily foods, absence of healthy bodily exercise, the density of the population and absence of common hygiene, all contribute as much to the stunted stature and sallow skins as the prevalent malaria itself.

There remains one other feature in public life throughout the Balkans which is certainly a relic of the Byzantine-Oriental tradition, and that is the method of politics. The numerous cliques that do duty for parties, the inevitable bargaining, bribery, and deception, procrastination and prevarication, so characteristic in Balkan politics, have helped to retard the moral and material progress of the Peninsula. But there are faint signs to-day of a new spirit abroad, after the Great War, among the Turks as well as in the Balkan States, and it may be that this, the worst relic of Byzantinism, is doomed to make way for a healthier type of political life.

THE INDIAN STUDENTS' UNION AND HOSTEL.

There is no need to commend the Indian Students' Union and Hostel in London to our readers, who will regret to learn that there is a possibility that the institution may have to close down. The Indians who have used the Hostel exercise an important influence when they return home, and when it is realised that during the three years of the institution's life over 1,300 members have been registered, the loss both to Great Britain and India which the disappearance of the Union would cause can easily be seen. The site on which the present premises stand has been sold, and the future of the work is in the balance. However, a circular, signed by some eminent men, has been drawn up, in which is expressed the purpose of acquiring new premises for the Union in Gower Street, the cost of which is estimated at £20,000. Gifts have already been promised amounting to £7,000, so that a sum of £13,000 remains to be raised. We are certain that the necessary funds will be found, for the relations between educated Indians and Englishmen were never of more urgent importance than at the present time. Contributions may be sent to the Honorary Treasurer, Mr. H. G. Sudd, C.A., 8, Frederick's Place, E.C.2.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

A street in Tel-Aviv has been named in memory of the late Mr. Ben Yehuda.

The Jewish Archaeological Museum in Jerusalem was opened on February 1.

The French Senate has passed a Bill authorising the creation of a French Legation in Kabul.

The death is announced from New York of Mr. William H. Goodyear, the distinguished Egyptologist.

Tutankhamen's tomb was finally closed to visitors on February 25, and the shaft has been filled in.

The Mizrachi Organisation of Poland has purchased 1,000 dunams of land in Palestine, in the Galilee district.

The position of the Christian refugees in the Near East formed one of the subjects discussed at the Convocation of Canterbury recently.

Flying Officers Curtis and Embleton and an aircraftsman were killed in an aeroplane smash in the Mokallam Hills, near Cairo, last Friday.

The death is reported from Belgrade of Dr. Varga, who was recently sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude on a charge of organising Hungarian espionage in Serbia.

Mr. Gorgi Shemtob, the Jewish philanthropist of Basrah, has made a will leaving the whole of his property, to the value of £140,000, to the Keren Hayesod (Foundation Fund for Palestine).

The Aden correspondent of The Times reports the formation there of a historical society. At the opening meeting Dr. J. Young, of the Scottish Mission, who has spent thirty years at Aden, gave an address.

A Bill was passed by the Bulgarian Sobranie on February 23 providing for a modification in the Electoral Law, whereby districts instead of departments will be taken as electoral units.

A fine of £E180 has been levied on the area of Cairo in which the bomb was thrown on February 12, which resulted in the death of a Greek canteen proprietor and injuries to two British soldiers.

From the accounts of the British Crescent Society for the year 1922, just issued, it appears that the remittances for the relief of suffering in Asia Minor and Constantinople during the year amounted to £658 18s. 6d.

The Postmaster-General states that the Air Mail for Baghdad, which left London on February 8, reached Baghdad on February 21. The next Air Mail for Baghdad will be dispatched from London on Thursday, March 8.

Reports have been received that the situation in Transcaucasia is improving, but there is still much misery, and the relief work carried on by the Lord Mayor's Fund, which is entirely non-political, is being continued and requires support.

A Vegetarian Society has been formed at Tel-Aviv, the aims of which are: (a) To diffuse the vegetarian idea among the masses; (b) to establish a vegetarian restaurant and library; and (c) to organise members with a view of establishing a settlement for vegetarian labourers.

Statistics issued by the Universities Bureau of the British Empire show that the total number of students from overseas attending universities and colleges in the United Kingdom is 4,131, of whom 1,171 are from Africa, 1,401 from Asia, and 542 from Europe. Of these totals, India, Burma, and Ceylon contribute 1,094, Roumania 38, and Greece 37 students.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,
At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Fair.

By the time these notes appear the British Industries Fair will have nearly run its course, and, so far as one can tell, when the results come to be weighed up, it will be found to have fully justified itself. At both centres buyers have been very numerous, particularly so, of course, at Birmingham, where the machinery exhibits are on view, but the White City has had nothing to complain about in that respect. I spent some hours there at the end of last week, and found the visit quite an unpleasant ordeal. Certain sections—the more popular ones—were literally thronged with people, and a walk along some of the gangways was an extremely slow process.

Satisfactory Results to Date.

But the mere fact that numbers of people have visited the White City does not entail a corresponding amount of business. However, the inquiries I made indicated that last week things had been progressing very favourably in this respect. Good orders had been booked in a number of the sections, and at intervals one came across notices to the effect that the whole contents of a stand had been bought by a certain firm. Once normal conditions obtain I have not the slightest doubt that the White City fair will be a great success, but in present circumstances the exhibits—the greater part of which would come under the heading of luxury articles—naturally cannot attract buyers to the same extent as those at Birmingham. I trust that firms at the White City who may be disappointed with the business they have done will persevere, for assuredly their turn will come.

Trade Prospects in Turkey.

While it would be idle to expect that peace with Turkey will lead at once to a considerable trade movement, it goes without saying that British commerce cannot fail to derive immediate benefit from a settlement. In a message that will be found on another page our Constantinople correspondent briefly touches on the subject. He points out that present stocks of textiles are not extensive, and, in his view, there should be good prospects for importers as soon as settled conditions obtain. Another opening that he instances is for agricultural machinery. Turkey, it appears, is about to take a greater interest in modern methods of agriculture, and our correspondent mentions that there is already "a considerable demand from Anatolia for agricultural machinery." From what he says regarding an arrangement with a Turco-American Company, the assumption is that the United States is to benefit immediately from this demand, but if, as soon as peace is signed, the representatives of British manufacturers of agricultural machinery bestir themselves, there is no reason why they should not obtain a fair proportion of the trade that is going.

New Angora?

Much has been heard of the intention of the Turkish authorities to make Angora the capital of Turkey, and our correspondent refers to "ambitious schemes" for the development of that town that are now under consideration. It would be quite in keeping with the evident desire of the Turks to make their country different in all essential respects from what it was before the war if they carried out their intention of replacing Constantinople by Angora. That it would be a foolish policy is obvious. The great centres of countries cannot be selected in a haphazard way. The principal cities of the world have sprung up because of certain natural advantages. Angora has nothing specially to commend it as a capital, and efforts to make it so would result in a deplorable waste of energy which could be much better employed in numerous other directions. New Angora would be a white elephant; but it must be remembered that those who seek memorials usually get what they deserve.

The Palestine Market.

We give elsewhere the concluding instalment of extracts from the report of Mr. A. E. Southard, formerly American Consul at Jerusalem, on the economic resources of Palestine. In these he deals, inter alia, with the market for manufactured goods and with methods of entering the market, and he has much to say that is of interest on these questions. He points out that at present Palestine has 700,000 potential consumers of manufactured goods, and that, as the country can supply the neighbouring population, this total can be expanded by trade enterprise and the development of communications to 3,000,000 or over. It is eminently desirable to bring this fact forcibly to the notice of the British merchant and manufacturer, for there is a far from adequate realisation here of the possibilities of Palestine as a market.

Principal Openings.

Palestine's chief imports are textiles and general hardware, but Mr. Southard points out that "a considerable variety of manufactured goods is required to supply the market." Naturally, as immigration goes, and Palestine is constantly being recruited from other countries, it follows that the market will expand both as regards range and variety. Mr. Southard, it will be noted, holds out small prospects with regard to openings for machinery, though he says that there may be a possible demand for cigarette machines in the near future. His verdict is that "it is quite unlikely that there will be, for some years, at least, any manufacturing development on a large enough scale to require heavy supplies of the more elaborate industrial machinery."

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

Commerce and Industry.

(Reports from Our Own Correspondents.)

TURKEY.

Constantinople, February 13.

Textiles.

Importers of textiles are suffering like those in most other industries owing to the continued state of uncertainty and insecurity; and English representatives here in this line of business are feeling somewhat despondent. Yet there should be good prospects for importers as soon as peace has been established and settled conditions once more obtain in Turkey. Present stocks are not so very extensive; in fact, rather the contrary, and many merchants, owing to the extended crisis here, sold out all they possess on hand, even at a loss, rather than run the risk of the greater loss that would be incurred on goods left behind in case of evacuation.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the Angora Government are big bidders just now for part-worn khaki clothing for their army; the only hindrance to the signing of the contracts would appear to be the insistence of importers competing for this business on payment being deposited in London before the goods are shipped.

Opening for Agricultural Machinery.

Notwithstanding the present irreconcilable attitude of the Nationalist politicians, there are every day increasing indications of the impatience of the Turkish peasant of Anatolia to get back to the land, and to exchange the ploughshare for the sword. Mustapha Kemal Pasha himself, in his recent speeches, has been urging the necessity for work and of the study of modern methods on the part of agriculturists; and in this connection it should be noted that already there is a considerable demand from Anatolia for agricultural machinery. A Special Commission has recently been appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the needs of the population in the matter of machinery and farming implements. It is stated that, as a result of negotiations with the Commissariat of National Economy, an agreement has been arrived at and since ratified by the Council of Commissaires, authorising a Turco-American Company to import, within a period of three months of signing the contract, a definite quantity of agricultural instruments. The company itself, it would seem, is to be locally registered, and 70 per cent. of the shares are to be reserved for Turks. Assembling and repair workshops are to be installed at different points.

Development of Angora.

The restoration of Angora has for some time past been under serious consideration, and judging from the ambitious schemes on foot it would undoubtedly appear as if it were the intention, as so frequently rumoured, to make that town the permanent capital of Turkey.

Nationalist Funds.

Where the Angora Government—cut off, as it has been for the three years since the Armistice, from its commercial base and practically from the outside world, and without resorting to the practice adopted so freely by the best of Governments of issuing paper money to enable it to meet current war expenses—has managed to get its funds from for the Anatolian campaign, and to carry on up to the present time, still remains rather a mystery. One is told that there was a certain amount of Turkish gold hidden away amongst the peasantry of Anatolia, which doubtless they have succeeded in borrowing in one form or another. Then there has been the Anatolian Revenue, due to the Public Debt, which has also been successfully borrowed. But it is Russian gold, one is told, that has really saved the situation. In the latter connection, however, it is hard to believe that the Bolsheviks would have depleted their own gold supply to assist Turkey to defeat the Greek Army without a quid pro quo of some monetary value, and of this there is little evidence.

Considerations of these points are at least interesting, and are apt to make one feel that the true cost of the whole Nationalist venture, and the terms of payment to the pipers, will in all probability only come to light after the peace has been signed. To what extent this may have been the cause of the intransigent attitude of the Turkish delegates at the Lausanne Conference, and of their final refusal to sign the treaty, it is difficult to say; but certainly what has happened since the conference has been sufficient to give one good cause to think on the subject.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

The report of the Imperial Bank of India for the half-year ended December 31 states that the past half-year was characterised by dullness of trade, the result being a poor demand for finance for the greater part of the period. The rate of interest on demand loans was reduced from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent. on July 6, and remained at the latter rate until October 26, when it was raised to 5 per cent. It was further raised to 6 per cent. on December 14, and to 7 per cent. on December 28, a strong demand for money setting in towards the close of the year chiefly for cotton and other crop finance in Bombay. The average rate for the half-year was 4.510 per cent. The net profits of the bank for the half-year amounted to Rs.52,88,563-11-11, which, with Rs.16,28,435-11-7, brought forward from the half-year ended June 30, made a total of Rs.69,16,999-7-6. This sum the governors of the bank disposed of as follows: (1) In payment of a dividend to the shareholders at the rate of 16 per cent. per annum free of income tax, Rs.44,99,700; (2) transferred to reserve fund, Rs.10,60,649-9; (3) transferred to pension funds, Rs.3,00,000; (4) carried forward to profit and loss account of the current half-year, Rs.10,56,649-14-6.

Since the publication of the report for the half-year ended June 30 new branches have been opened at Darjeeling, Muttra, Mymensingh, and Sargodha. Arrangements are nearing completion for the opening of further branches at Asansol, Bhowanipore (Calcutta), Chandpur, Dhanbad, Dibrugarh, Ferozepore, Fyzabad, Gorakhpur, Hathras, Jamshedpur, Jhansi, Jullunder, Nadiad, Rungpur, Serajunge, and pay offices at Chandausi, Hapur, Jherria, Mandalay City, and Meerut City.

Negotiations concerning a revision of the Czecho-Slovak commercial treaty with France, which had been broached as early as February, 1922, and continued in writing, are about to enter their final stage in Paris. The preliminary negotiations have already been concluded.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.

Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI. Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

THE BRITISH INDUSTRIES FAIR.

Some Interesting Exhibits.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Chemicals, Dyes, etc.

This is beyond question one of the most impressive sections. It has developed greatly since last year, and is as representative as any section in the Fair, and in saying that one says everything. In pre-war days this section would have made a poor showing had the British Industries Fair been in existence, and it shows plainly how far we have travelled since 1914 as a result of war conditions.

One of the most interesting exhibits is that of the British Dyestuffs Corporation, Limited, who are showing a complete range of aniline dyes for all trades. A feature of the stand (one of the largest, by the way, in the whole exhibition) is a series of exhibits of various materials designed to illustrate the national necessity for dyestuffs. Another notable stand is that of the British Alizarine Company, Limited, showing dyes and intermediates of the alizarine series. Messrs. Burroughs Wellcome and Co. have an attractive stand on which are displayed a number of their well-known products, while Messrs. the Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Limited, show a variety of their manufactures, such as rectified solvent naphtha, pitch, and sulphate of ammonia. Finally, Messrs. the Roberts Patent Filling Machine Co. show machines for filling all kinds of liquids, for which there should be an excellent market overseas.

Musical Instruments.

This is another excellent section, and one which offers a most pleasing contrast to last year's rather disappointing exhibits. The leading firms are well represented, and the quality of the exhibits makes it quite clear that this country is well able to hold its own in this important industry. Unfortunately, music, however essential it may be as an impartor of variety to life, comes under the category of luxuries, and the trade has felt the depression with special incidence, and, it may be pointed out, will be among the last industries to benefit from the recovery. In the circumstances it is satisfactory to be able to state that on my various visits there were signs of activity on the part of buyers in this section, and I was particularly interested to notice that Far Eastern representatives were in the market for pianos.

Among the firms showing pianos, etc., mention may be made of Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, Limited, Messrs. the Chappell Piano Co., Limited, Messrs. the Harper Piano Co., Limited, and Messrs. the Moore and Moore Manufacturing Co., Limited. A large number of stands are devoted to gramophones. Among them may be mentioned the exhibit of Messrs. the Æolian Co., Limited.

Sports Goods, etc.

This section seems to grow with each succeeding Fair. It is now most comprehensive, and quite worthily represents one of the most typically national of British industries. The strength of the section is indicative of the world-wide development of sport. But a few years ago the market for sports goods outside the British Empire was very limited; now it is very extensive, and is constantly expanding in unexpected directions, and if we are not yet able to export cricket-bats to the Balkan countries, it is by no means improbable that a market will be found there for this commodity eventually, such is the increasing freemasonry of sport.

A stand of special interest is that of Messrs. F. H. Ayres, Limited, who show a most pleasing selection of sports equipment, ranging from cricket-bats to bowls, from golf-sticks to gymnastic apparatus. Another notable stand is that of Messrs. the Philip Mead Bat Co., Limited, whose display includes cricket-bats, racquets, hockey sticks, etc. In the Toys and Games Section interesting exhibits are those of Messrs. Meccano, Limited, showing constructional outfits, etc., and Messrs. Hobbies, Limited, who show fretwork tools, outfits, and machines, etc.

Cutlery, Silverware, etc.

Were the general public admitted to the Fair, this is undoubtedly one of the two or three sections that would prove most popular. It is not an exhaustive display of the potentialities of British industry in this particular line, but it is sufficiently extensive to present quite a bewildering range of exhibits of the most attractive character. The stands in this section merit special mention for their charming arrangement.

A particularly attractive stand is that of Messrs. George Butler and Co., Limited, whose exhibits include choice cases of cutlery, notably a Jacobean table cabinet. When the King made his tour round the Fair after opening it this was one of the stands to which he paid special attention. Another stand of interest is that of Messrs. John Turton and Co., Limited, whose exhibits comprise table-ware, cutlery, etc. Special features at this stand are examples of black and rose and black and yellow china ware. Messrs. H. Williamson, Limited, have an excellent display of presentation cups and silver and electro-plated ware, while Messrs. Fenton Bros., Limited, show hotel and ship's plate, etc., and also have on view some magnificent challenge cups.

Stationery, etc.

The section devoted to stationery has always been one of the most elaborate features of the Fair, and this year it is no exception. It is equal in area to the largest section in the exhibition, and is fully up to the average as regards quality.

An interesting stand is that of Messrs. Spicers, Limited, who show an admirable variety of their products. As usual, Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons, Limited, have a very attractive exhibit showing their famous postcards, calendars, pictures, etc. Another notable stand in this section is that of Messrs. Winsor and Newton, Limited, who show artists' colours, and other painting requisites.

OILFIELDS OF EGYPT.

The Oilfields of Egypt have issued the following:—"Since the circular issued on January 1 last, well No. 2 Ras Dhib has been drilled to 1,900 ft., at which depth the 6-in. casing has been set. The manager reported that from 1,685 ft. the formation was strongly impregnated with petroleum with a little gas. At 1,793 ft. the formation was unchanged, and the petroleum content was increasing with the depth. At 1,895 ft. he reported that signs of oil continued. Pending the arrival on the field of additional 4-in. casing now on order, drilling will be slow. The casing will, however, be shipped the first week of March, and should reach the company's property early in April, after which a normal rate of drilling should be resumed."

PALESTINE'S COMMERCIAL RESOURCES.

The Trade Outlook.

We give the following further extracts from the report of Mr. A. E. Southard, formerly American Consul at Jerusalem on the commercial resources of Palestine:—

From the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea the Jordan is 65 miles long. The river is 90 to 100 ft. wide, flows with a zigzag current, and has a depth varying from 3 to 12 ft. Near the Sea of Galilee it falls about 40 ft. per mile, but the fall for the entire 65 miles of length is given as 610 ft. The more or less barren Jordan Valley is widest at Jericho, near the Dead Sea, where it reaches 14 miles, but it narrows down to three miles at other places. This valley is said, therefore, to be considered by some engineers as too narrow to be available for irrigation. With irrigation, however, the Jordan Valley should add tremendously to the variety and value of the commercial agricultural crops of Palestine, as expert opinion believes that fine crops of dates, rice, sugar cane, flax, and cotton could be produced. The temperature of this greatest land depression below sea level ranges from 73 deg. to 130 deg. F.

It is also proposed to parallel the eastern bank of the Jordan with an irrigation canal to be supplied mainly from the Jarmuk River, which flows westward into the Jordan, but there are many obstacles to this project.

From Lake Huleh (Waters of Merom) to the Sea of Galilee the Jordan falls 700 ft. in about 15 miles. The main Jordan scheme, as already outlined, contemplates also the draining of the Lake Huleh marshes, thus recovering about 50,000 acres of very fertile agricultural land, and the providing of another power house to utilise the fall of the Jordan between Huleh and Galilee. This project is subsidiary to the main Jordan scheme, but appears to offer possibly more practical promise of realisation than does the latter.

These hydro-electric and irrigation schemes, both principal and subsidiary, would be of most remarkable economic value, but the outlook for their prompt realisation either as a whole or in any considerable part, excepting in the matter of the Auja River project, is not encouraging, in view of the difficulties in raising amounts of capital of unusual size in comparison with the economic status of the country, and the general lack of population and established natural wealth or resources. Minor obstacles of a political nature exist, but these have no place in a commercial report.

Transportation Facilities.

Palestine is already reasonably well provided with the various forms of transportation facilities usual in these progressive times. There are in actual or regular operation about 487.66 miles of railway, according to the Government schedule of distances; about 500 miles of first-class motor roads; 1,500 miles of unsurfaced roads usable in large part for motor vehicles in the dry season and usable for more extended periods of the year by wagons or carts; and, in addition, upwards of 2,000 miles of caravan routes.

Credit Facilities.

Only very restricted credit facilities are available, as the banks now actually operating here confine their business almost exclusively to receiving money for deposit and checking accounts, to buying and selling gilt-edged negotiable paper, and to making short-term loans against substantial and safe merchandising security. Practically no long-term loan business is accepted, and the banks rarely grant even short-term loans other than to import and export merchants who can offer high-class security. The average bank rate of discount, or of interest, is 9 per cent. on good security on short-term accommodation. Rates are seldom lower than this, and are often higher. Ordinary merchandising enterprise is reasonably well served, and the reluctance of the banks to grant credit without high-class security is probably justified. This policy is certainly of some advantage in that it curbs the tendency toward a multiplication of small business establishments which attempt to operate on minimum capital and thus force up the general cost of doing business and handicap the operations of more substantial merchants.

Inability to secure long-term loans has most seriously affected agricultural development. Agriculture in Palestine does not yield a great margin of profit, and can hardly support the present interest rate of 9 per cent. and upward. In the absence of a bank dealing in agricultural loans the Palestine farmer has had to depend mainly upon private moneylenders, who often exact as much as 15 per cent. interest on good security.

In view of this serious situation the Palestine Government during the past year made available a few hundred thousand Egyptian pounds for agricultural loans at 6½ per cent., but has now exhausted its resources in that respect. The matter of agricultural credit facilities has been receiving serious attention and a general mortgage bank with a capital of ££200,000 has recently been registered with the Palestine Government. Other similar banks are contemplated, and the situation should be relieved in the near future. The Palestine Government is also making plans for the organisation of a Government mortgage bank which will receive the funds derived from the liquidation, which is now in progress, of the former Ottoman Agricultural Bank. There are a few co-operative loan societies among the Jewish colonists, but they have not been able to exercise any important influence in relieving the situation in general.

There appears to be a need in Palestine for pawnshops. Well-regulated establishments of this sort should be of real economic value in aiding people who find it necessary to raise small personal loans. . . . It is perhaps somewhat remarkable that Palestine has no institutions of this kind, especially in view of the obvious need for them and the profitable returns likely to be gained from their operation. This is a line of financial undertaking which offers favourable inducements to foreign investors.

Insurance.

Palestine offers a limited field for both fire and life insurance. Companies in both lines have been operating here for many years, and the people are acquainted with the uses and purposes of insurance. At this time there are represented in Palestine seven fire insurance companies, one doing a combined fire and life business, one accident company, and four companies writing life insurance only. These companies include American, British, Italian, and French organisations. German and Austrian companies operated before the war, but have not since resumed. Locally organised companies are being considered by Jewish capitalists. Regulations for the registration and operation of insurance companies may be obtained from the Jerusalem consulate.

Investment Opportunities.

There are many investment opportunities in Palestine, but none of them appear particularly promising just now. Schemes have been outlined for harbour construction, for port building, for hydro-electric development, for agricultural enterprise on a large scale, for general real estate development, and for a variety of proposed industrial enterprises. Railway construction is not likely to receive immediate attention on any important scale, as the country is already reasonably well supplied in that respect. Harbour and port construction, and possibly hydro-electric development, will require such large sums of money that the first years of their existence are apt to be barren of dividends of any sort, and are therefore more likely to await Government capital or guarantees.

There are many industrial enterprises eagerly seeking capital, but because of such handicaps as lack of local supplies of fuel, raw material, etc., some of them will not be successful, and the few which may pay their own way in operation are not likely to return real dividends for many years. Care must therefore be exercised to an unusual degree in considering the investment of money in Palestine in industrial enterprise.

Market for Manufactured Goods.

Just now Palestine has 700,000 potential consumers of manufactured goods within its own frontiers, and a definite increase of this number will be made by several thousand adults each year through immigration. From Palestine can also be directly supplied in this respect the demands of a neighbouring population, which with increased trade efforts and development of communication should easily grow shortly into a total of 3,000,000 or more, mainly in the long strip of territory east of Syria and Palestine which merges into the northern Arabian desert. A considerable variety of manufactured goods is required to supply the market, but by far the most important lines are cotton textiles and general hardware.

An interesting phase of the Palestinian market for manufactured goods is the absence, to an important extent, of a fixed demand for goods of specific description and quality. The market has heretofore been comparatively small, and as such has been a dumping ground for various odds and ends of foreign manufactures which were left over from, or had proved unsuitable for, larger and more important markets. The Palestine importer has had the habit of purchasing job lots, or small quantities, and practically forcing his judgment as to merchandise upon the local consumer.

GOAT, SHEEPSKINS, KIPS, HIDES & LEATHER

Correspondence is invited from Merchants and Collectors of all Countries desirous of marketing Hides and Skins in Great Britain. Consignment or Purchase. All Enquiries promptly replied to. Leather Goods of all kinds for Exportation.

FLEMING & CO. (Bermondsey) LTD., Leather Factors & Importers,
White's Grounds, Bermondsey St., London, S.E.1.
Telegrams—Flemmat co, Berm. London

Accordingly, the consumer has not on the whole had a really favourable opportunity to develop a strong liking for any standard variety of particular lines of goods, but has had to take what he could get. Merchandising here has recently improved somewhat in this respect.

Most of the population of Palestine and of surrounding territories is agricultural or nomadic, and it has for centuries supplied its own wants to an important extent. These people are being educated to use foreign manufactured goods, but their education and possibilities in this respect are far from complete, and as their educational process advances there may be expected the development of a demand greater in quantity as well as in variety in any given community, whether or not there is any increase in population. Encouragement of and assistance to the local distributor in more intensive work in this market is essential from the foreign manufacturer and exporter interested.

Industrial Machinery.

For reasons already outlined in this report there is little probability of any important development in manufacturing pending a remotely possible improvement in the general lack of sufficient local supplies of raw material and fuel. A few small industries which can make use of the products of the land, such as tobacco, fruit, grain, olive oil, etc., are already progressing by the use of hand labour or comparatively simple mechanical equipment.

In the immediate future there is a prospect of a possible demand for cigarette machines. As discussed under a previous heading, the abolition of the tobacco monopoly has encouraged the starting of several cigarette factories on a small scale. The factory of the former monopoly concern is the only one in Palestine known to have in use a cigarette machine, and it is the first and oldest factory. It can turn out 100,000 cigarettes a day, while the smaller factories recently established and utilising hand labour have a much smaller output. The several native tanneries now in operation are sure in some instances shortly to reach a point of development where machinery is required.

As regards industrial machinery in general, the smaller and less complicated forms of equipment for fruit drying and preserving plants, for soap factories, for flour mills, for oil extraction from olives and sesame, and for similar projects are all that require consideration at the present time. It is quite unlikely that there will be for some years at least any manufacturing development on a large enough scale to require heavy supplies of the more elaborate industrial machinery such as the American exporter is generally accustomed to supply to foreign markets.

The development of a mining industry of any sort which will require big machinery is at this time quite problematical. Grain-handling machinery, such as might be used in equipping elevators, may be required with the development of ports, but is not a phase of the general possibilities of the market, and will be developed as a specific trade opportunity, should circumstances warrant. The same may be said of cargo-handling machinery in general for port or large railway station equipment.

At the present time there is no assured or definite market in Palestine for any appreciable amount of general industrial machinery. An important obstacle in the way of the sale of new machinery for such few enterprises as are contemplated lies in the general tendency to acquire the equipment of dismantled establishments in Europe. For instance, a syndicate has definitely planned the construction of a fair-sized flour mill which will be equipped from a dismantled plant in Europe. A small enterprise for spinning yarn from local wool, backed in part by American capital, is making use of equipment brought from a dismantled plant in Poland owned by one of the partners in the new enterprise. Other instances might be given, but these are sufficient to indicate a well-developed tendency which will generally preclude the sale of new equipment to such small manufacturing enterprises as may be set up in Palestine, at least in the immediate future.

Methods of Entering Market.

Importing is done upon a comparatively small scale in Palestine for various reasons. Most of the importing firms are working on quite small capital. There are many of such firms, including a large number of commission agents, who often live by buying and selling from each other when regular business is slack. Purchases of goods abroad are, therefore, often made in minimum quantities. The average Palestine retail merchant likes to consider himself an importer, and if he can find a foreign manufacturer or exporter willing to sell him small amounts he imports directly. If he is temporarily unable to do this he will buy from the local commission agent, but usually in minimum quantities, with the hope that he may shortly be able to obtain his needs directly from abroad again. The limited scope of the market and purchasing power of the consuming public has some influence in maintaining this condition, but the general commercial exhaustion arising out of the war is also a factor. The general character of the population of Palestine tends to maintain an over-supply of small traders and importers, and until some of these are eliminated, or until some particularly strong houses arise by consolidation or otherwise, the market presents some difficulties to the foreign manufacturer or exporter accustomed to dealing in wholesale orders. Lack of bank credits is eliminating some of the superfluous traders who are importers, exporters, wholesalers, and retailers all in one, but handling a comparatively small volume of merchandising business. This condition will undoubtedly improve, but it is still an important consideration to the foreign exporter, who may find discouragement in the attempted placing of small orders by local trade prospects when other conditions might have led him to expect orders of more substantial size.

Under present conditions the Palestine market seems essentially one in which the American or other foreign exporter should select and confine his business to one or two promising firms rather than to attempt entering the market by accepting small orders from many firms, most of which will never lead to anything big, and will usually handicap the building up of an appreciable and advantageous local demand for his goods possible by placing them through one or, at the most, two firms. The choice of the local firm presents difficulties, and is a matter which can be worked out only at the time. There is a tendency among foreign firms, American firms included, to establish a central representation with merchandise depots for catering to the Egyptian, Palestine, and Syrian markets in a smaller way than would be profitable or desirable from the home or head establishment. Alexandria, Haifa, or Beyrout are possible locations for such central representation.

EGYPTIAN GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

The attention of British firms is drawn to the following regulations in regard to the general conditions of tender for Egyptian Government contracts.

Railway Contracts.—Firms tendering for Egyptian State Railways' contracts must be represented in Egypt or must elect as their address for service of documents H.M. Consulate at Cairo. Firms who are not represented in Egypt are advised to tender through British merchant houses who have Egyptian connections. A list of United Kingdom firms who are prepared to handle tenders on behalf of United Kingdom firms can be had on application to the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, London, S.W.1.

Firms who prefer to elect the British Consulate at Cairo as their domicile can do so subject to the following conditions:—

- (a) That H.M. Consul does not recommend the firm concerned in any way, and is not responsible for its financial standing or commercial morality.
- (b) That H.M. Consul does not undertake to represent the firm in any way, as, for example, by presenting a tender on its behalf, or to undertake any of the functions or responsibilities of an accredited agent other than that of providing a postal address.
- (c) That in the event of any dispute arising between the Egyptian State Railways and the tenderer, any legal document served at H.M. Consulate in Cairo for the tendering firm will be considered as having been served direct to the firm interested. Further, that no responsibility whatsoever can be accepted by H.M. Consulates in Egypt for the non-transmission, delay, or loss of any documents received for or from the firm.
- (d) That the firm wishing to elect domicile at H.M. Consulate in Cairo shall pay a registration fee of £1 2s. in advance, for one year, and a similar amount at the end of one year if it is desired to re-register for a further period of one year. Further, that the firm shall also remit to H.M. Consul at Cairo a fee amounting to 9s. 5d. for officially notifying the railway or other authorities that the firm has been registered or re-registered; and for each transmission of documents or letters to the firm or on its behalf, the fee of 9s. 5d. shall be charged to the firm concerned.

As registration is now only valid for a period of one year, it is suggested that firms already registered at one of H.M. Consulates should communicate with the Consul regarding the date of expiration of the present registration.

Other Egyptian Government Contracts.—Representation in Egypt is essential, and consequently the election of one of H.M. Consulates in Egypt as domicile will not meet the general conditions of tender in this respect applicable to all Egyptian Government tenders. Firms who desire to tender and are not represented in Egypt should apply to the Department of Overseas Trade for a list of British firms who are prepared to handle tenders through their branch houses in Egypt, on behalf of British manufacturers or exporters.

Stock and Share Markets.

GILT-EDGED STILL RISING.

Firm Tone Prevails.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Quite a firm tone has prevailed in the markets during most of the week, and yesterday prices in many cases closed at levels well above those of the previous week. It goes to show that political uncertainties abroad are not rated too high on the Exchange, though the great cause of the movement is, of course, the fact that until trade develops the channels for the investment of capital must perforce remain very restricted.

From now onwards attention will be concentrated on the Budget. Developments during the week suggest that the prospects of a decrease in the income-tax are diminishing, but hope will not be lost until the fait accompli, and the expectation is still entertained by many that whatever concessions the Chancellor of the Exchequer may feel it incumbent upon him to make, a reduction of the income-tax will certainly be among them. Well, we shall have to "wait and see," in the historic phrase.

Consols a Feature.

Gilt-edged have been specially firm. At one time the market showed signs of depression on the political situation, but it was a very temporary phase, and rises are again to be recorded in a number of directions. Consols at 57½ are ½ up; War Loan Fives are unchanged at 101; the Conversion Loan is 75¾ x.d., at which it is about the same, while Fundings at 88½ are ½ up. Indian stocks have hardened, the Seven per Cent. Loan being a point up at 115, while the Three per Cent. Loan at 57½ shows a gain of ½.

Irregularity has again been displayed in the market in Foreign Government securities, but there have been no price changes of any special importance. French stocks have hardened, War Loan Fives at 25 showing a rise of 1½, while the 4 per cents. have gained a similar amount at 20. German 3 per cents. have eased off, and at 13-16 are ½ lower on the week. Italian Rentes are unchanged at 20. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified are a point up at 24¾, while Greek Monopolies have again been a feature, rising to 30½, a gain of two points.

Industrials More Active.

While business has, generally speaking, still remained on a restricted scale, in various directions in the Industrial group there has been much more activity than usual during the past week. Textiles have again been a specially good spot. Coats at 66s. 3d. are 1s. 6d. up, Courtaulds have gained 1s. 9d. at 64s. 9d., while Listers at 31s. 3d. are 1s. 9d. up. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares show little change. Vickers at 15s. 9d. are 6d. down, Armstrongs are unchanged at 18s. 6d., while Guest Keens are 3d. up at 40s. Tobacco shares have been fairly active, with Bats at 86s. 3d., while Imperial Tobaccos are 75s. 3d. x.d. Bank shares have been good. Bank of British West Africa are 4½, Imperial of Persia are 6 7-16, Chartered of India are 19½, while National of India are 46½. In Shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are 3 lower at 31½, Cunards are 6d. down at 22s. 6d., Furness Withys are 6d. lower at 35s., while Khedivial Mail are 1½.

Oils Firm.

A much better tone has ruled in the Oil group as a whole, and there have been some firm spots, notably Anglo-Persian Ordinary, which at 4 7-23 are 3-16 up. Burmahs have also been specially strong, and at 5 13-32 are 7-32 up. Mexican Eagles have also firmed up, and at 2 5-16 show a gain of 3-16, while Shell Transport at 4 7-32 are 1-32 up. Roumanians have improved somewhat. Phoenix at 26s. 9d. are 7½d. up. Roumanian Consolidated are unchanged at 12s. 6d., Steaua Romanas are 3d. down at 11s., Dacia Romanos are ¾, while Hamilton's Concessions remain at 2s. 6d. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian B are unchanged at 1 15-32, while Oilfields of Egypt are 2s. 9d.

Rubbers Inactive.

It has been a rather variable week in the Rubber market. The raw commodity has been fairly firm, but the share market has been somewhat depressed, and yesterday rather a weak tone was in evidence. Stocks of rubber continue to decline, and the position for the industry generally continues to improve, so that it should not be long before the market makes a better showing.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

Movements of the exchanges have been much less pronounced than in the previous week. The German mark has temporarily been stabilised round about 105,000. French francs and Belgian francs both show improvement. In Near Eastern exchanges Bulgarian leva have risen to 800, while Greek drachmæ have weakened to 435.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½-97½
Athens	Drachmæ to £.....	25.22½	435*
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	475-500*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	104-106,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	25.02-25.05
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	87.85-87.95
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	1,010-1,040
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	13,500-15,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	690-740
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.69½-4.69½
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	77.05-77.15
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	158½
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	97½-98
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	775-825
Teheran	Krans to £	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	325-345,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	210-230,000

* Nominal

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the eleven days ended January 31 amounted to ££10,201, making the total for the year ££286,987.

Steaua Romana (British), Ltd., are advised that the approximate gross fields production of the Steaua Romana Co. for January was 17,910 tons. This decrease in production is largely due to the Roumanian Christmas and New Year holidays.

JAMES H. BROWN, LTD.,

MERCHANT BANKERS.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

BOUGHT AND SOLD FOR EITHER SPOT OR FORWARD DELIVERIES.

FOREIGN BILLS NEGOTIATED. CREDITS
OPENED ON APPROVED REFERENCES.

AGENCIES ARRANGED ON BEHALF OF FIRMS ABROAD.

The Sale, Purchase, or Warehousing of Goods
Effected. Shipments Financed.

Head Office: TELEGRAPH STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "Exchangbro, London."

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Demand for Bosnian Plums.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in good demand. Tate's cubes have come to business at 65s., an advance of 7s. Lyle's granulated has been done at 60s. 3d., at which it shows an advance of 7s. 1½d., while London granulated at 60s. is 6s. 1½d. up. Foreign descriptions have firmed up. West Indian crystallised at 54s. has risen 7s. 6d., while White Mauritius at 53s. 3d. is 5s. up. White Java has gained 6s. 7½d. at 56s. 6d. Futures are: May, 30s. 6d.; July, 30s. 1½d.; August, 30s. 1½d.

Coffee.—The spot market has continued quiet and steady. East Indian is unchanged at 106s., Costa Rica remains at 100s., while Nairobi is unaltered at 90s. Futures are: May, 61s. 3d.; July, 60s.

Desiccated Coconut.—There have been fairly heavy arrivals, but the demand is considerable, and as supplies in sight are not of an extensive character it is very probable that rates will harden.

Rice.—There has been a slight increase in the demand, but it has been without effect on prices; which have, in fact, eased off slightly. Futures are distinctly easier.

Green Fruit.—With only small supplies of oranges coming to hand, the market position has again been strengthened. Prices have advanced sharply, and, so far as can be seen, will rise still further, unless larger supplies are forthcoming. Quotations are:—Denia and Valencia oranges, 15s. 6d. to 35s. box (240's to 504's). Ample supplies of lemons are coming to hand, but the demand is keeping pace with the arrivals, and the market continues very firm. Quotations are: 13s. to 20s. box (300's), 30s. to 37s. 6d. case (300's). There is no change to report with regard to apples. The demand continues fair, and rates are unchanged. Supplies of onions are now greatly in excess of requirements, and the market is very weak.

Dried Fruit.—There is very little change in the position. The demand for currants has tended to decrease, with the result that prices have continually tended to fall. There has been only a moderate demand for sultanas, but the market has remained fairly steady. Plums continue in fair request, and, as a matter of fact, are moving off as well as any of the dried fruit except figs. It is interesting to note that the bulk of the demand is for Bosnians, as has been the case for some weeks. This should encourage other Balkan countries to compete with Yugoslavia in regard to this produce. Figs have continued to be in excellent demand; indeed, the continually increasing request for this commodity is the feature of the dried fruit trade. Supplies are now short, so it is inevitable that prices will rise.

Oilseeds.—Linseed has been fairly firm. Indian is unchanged at 20s. 6d., while La Plata is 3d. down at 18s. 3d. Rapeseed has been very firm, with Toria 7½d. up at 18s. Cottonseed has risen rather variable. Indian is 3d. down at 9s. 1½d., Egyptian black is 10½d. down at 11s. 6d., while Sakellariadis at 10s. 10½d. shows a drop of 10½d.

Oils. Linseed has weakened, closing 9d. down at 41s. 6d. Rape oil is steady, with crude unchanged at 44s. and technical refined at 47s. Cotton oil remains much the same. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s., technical is unaltered at 40s., while deodorised is the same at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The market is harder. Linseed cake is 20s. up at 300s., coconut cake has risen to 220s., at which it is 30s. up, cottonseed cake is 5s. up at 170s., while cottonmeal cake at 280s. is 10s. up.

SHARP DECLINE IN RAW FUR PRICES.

The London Fur Trade Association reports that the first series of sales held this year was attended by an extraordinarily large number of people. Considering the quantity of goods offered, the time occupied, the fluctuations in exchanges, the doubtful outlook with regard to conferences, the surprising fact is that we have not to record a more serious dwindling in values. The home trade bought very freely. The American trade was quieter than usual at this time of the year. The French bought rather more than had been expected with the exchange so much against them. Germany bought considerably less than usual, many of the buyers thinking that the sudden and violent changes in mark values would prove to make trade within the country very difficult. The comparison of prices is with those of October last:—American badger, declined 15 per cent.; Russian badger, declined 10 per cent.; black bear, declined 20 per cent.; brown bear, declined 10 per cent.; grizzly bear, declined 10 per cent.; white bear, declined 30 per cent.; beaver, finest skins unaltered, other grades declined 15 per cent.; civet cat, declined 20 per cent.; chinchilla, unaltered; ermine, Russian unaltered, American declined 15 to 20 per cent.; fisher, unaltered; fitch, principally Russian white, advanced 10 per cent.; blue fox, declined 25 per cent.; cross fox, fine skins declined 20 per cent., medium and lower grades unaltered; grey fox, declined 15 per cent.; red fox, better sorts full last prices, other sorts advanced 10 per cent.; silver fox, best skins slightly lower, other declined 20 to 25 per cent.; white fox, best skins unaltered, others declined 10 per cent.; South American fox, no fine goods offered, prices unaltered; white hare, sold well at full last prices; kolinsky, advanced 10 per cent.; Persian lamb, unaltered; lynx, unaltered; American marten, slightly easier; baum marten, unaltered; stone marten, unaltered; mink, dark sorts advanced 10 per cent., others unaltered; mole, unaltered; monkey, unaltered; black musquash, unaltered; brown musquash, declined 20 per cent.; southern musquash, finest skins declined 10 per cent., other grades declined 20 per cent.; nutria, unaltered; American opossum, declined 15 to 20 per cent.; otter, best sorts declined 20 per cent., lower grades unaltered; raccoon, declined 25 per cent.; Russian sable, declined 10 per cent.; skunk, fresh skins of best sections declined 10 per cent., other sections declined 15 per cent., all stale skins declined 20 per cent.; Squirrel, declined 15 per cent.; wolf finest skins unaltered, others declined 15 to 20 per cent.; wolverine, about last prices; fur seals, Cape of Good Hope declined 12½ per cent., other sorts sold well.

THE C.P.R. AND EMIGRATION.

To be of service to Western Canadian farmers and also to British settlers wishing to find employment on Canadian farms, the Canadian Pacific has organised a comprehensive scheme to place the Canadian farmer requiring help in touch with the settler requiring employment. The Canadian Pacific has invited the farmers to apply for a form stating their requirements. On this form they mention the kind of help they wish for, whether male or female, married or single, wages paid, and the date the engagements start from. These forms are then forwarded to the London offices of the Canadian Pacific Railway, where intending settlers can be advised of the vacancies available. The settlers will pay their own passages to their destination, and will have an assured post to go to, and can start work on arrival. Though the scheme has only just come into operation, over two hundred applications have already been received from Western farmers requiring assistance of various kinds, and many more are expected.

The Italian Chamber has just ratified the commercial treaty between Italy and Czecho-Slovakia.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,800,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Jaffa.

The report for January states:—Barley and wheat are firm in the market. The quotations for beans and vetches remain unchanged. Sesame has eased off as a result of the extensive consumption of cotton oil imported from Egypt. In consequence of the improvement in the price of local barley, 100 tons of Syrian barley have been put on this market, and have been sold at prices below those of the local product.

The prices obtained in Great Britain for oranges at the commencement of the month were very unsatisfactory, giving a loss of 4s. to 5s. per case on the cost price. Towards the end of the month prices improved considerably, yielding a profit of 1s. to 2s. per case. The cause of the poor prices obtained is principally to be attributed to the large shipments made in December and to the competition of the Spanish crop. The shipments are now more regulated, and better results may be anticipated. 400,000 cases have been shipped to Great Britain since the commencement of the season.

At the present time Jaffa is suffering from a serious financial crisis. The poor prices obtained for the oranges, the large stocks of all kinds of goods unsold in the merchants' hands, and the fact that the banks are generally abstaining from granting new credits have contributed to this state of things.

Jaffa, January 27.

There is nothing of interest to report except that rain is very badly needed. The prices obtained in England for oranges have risen to 14s. 6d.-15s. 6d. per case. If this level is maintained the growers and exporters will make a profit.

Jaffa, February 3.

The prices of oranges continue to be better. Prices received averaged from 14s. 6d. to 16s. Much rain has fallen during the week.

Nablus, February 3.

Good rain has fallen, and farmers are well forward with their work.

Jerusalem, February 3.

A few tourists have visited Jerusalem. The tourist agencies are rather anxious with regard to the season, as they fear that the political situation in Constantinople may induce many tourists to cancel their arrangements. The large American tours visit Athens and Constantinople on the way to Palestine.

Jerusalem, February 10.

Business is very slack, and there is a great shortage of money among the local tradesmen.

Haifa, February 3.

This week the market in cereals, dari and sesame is weak on account of the lack of demand for export from abroad. However, certain sales have taken place at profitable prices.

Naredni Listy reports a further improvement in the prospects of the Czecho-Slovak iron and engineering industry.

The Vienna Abend states that the Czecho-Slovak Danube Navigation Co., whose headquarters are at Bratislava, is negotiating for a dock zone on the Danube at Vienna. The Czecho-Slovak Danube Navigation Co. is a State-owned concern.

According to the Vossische Zeitung the participation of Czecho-Slovak capital in the industries of Saxony is steadily growing. The paper gives several concrete examples, including shipping, engineering, glass, and electricity interests.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
 A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLET.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
 Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
 Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.
 CONSTANTINOPLE.
 (Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Shipping Intelligence.

NEW ELLERMAN CITY LINE STEAMER.

S.S. City of Canterbury.

The s.s. City of Canterbury has been built for the various Eastern services of the Ellerman City Line by Messrs. Swan, Hunter and Wigham Richardson, Ltd., at their Wallsend shipyard. A single-screw passenger and cargo steamer, the City of Canterbury, which has been constructed to the highest class of the British Corporation, has a cruiser-shaped stern, her leading dimensions being 466 ft. 11 in. in length over all, 56 ft. 4 in. in width, with a moulded depth of 34 ft. 4 in. Her hold capacity permits of carrying about 10,000 tons dead weight. The engines are of the inverted direct-acting quadruple expansion type, working on four cranks balanced on the Yarrow, Shlick, and Tweedy system, and, together with the boilers, four in number, were constructed by the Wallsend Slipway and Engineering Co., Ltd., Wallsend-on-Tyne.

The passenger accommodation, extending over three decks, is designed for 130 first class and 48 second class passengers. On the promenade deck is situated the first class entrance hall and music-room, the latter a charming apartment fitted on three sides with cottage windows of Queen Anne style. The scheme of decoration is in quiet tones of white and grey, with furniture in mahogany. Immediately beneath this apartment is the first class dining saloon, extending almost the full width of the ship, and also fitted with cottage windows in place of the old-time ports. The decorations are carried out in white, the walls being relieved with panels and mouldings delicately tinted. The central well overhead, surrounded by a handsome metal balustrade, adds to the attractiveness of this apartment, in addition to augmenting the lighting and ventilating arrangements. At the after end of the promenade deck is situated the first class smokeroom, which is a roomy and comfortable apartment furnished in fumed oak and provided with numerous small tables, settees, and easy chairs. Here also rectangular windows have been introduced, adding greatly to the airiness and cheerful tone of the room.

The first class staterooms, situated on the promenade, bridge and upper decks, comprise one, two, and three-berth rooms, each one having an outside porthole, and being fitted with an electric fan, wardrobes, chests of drawers, etc. The staterooms throughout are particularly spacious, and the entire scheme of ventilation in the passenger quarters has been the subject of particular care to ensure the utmost comfort to passengers whilst traversing Eastern waters. The second class, whilst not so extensive, is particularly comfortable, the cabins being designed in similar manner to those of the first class, and being provided with every modern convenience. The public apartments consist of dining saloon, with attractive lounge adjoining, and a roomy smokeroom situated on the bridge deck. A feature of the steamer is the spaciousness of the promenade decks, which afford ample room for games and recreations.

The City of Canterbury leaves Birkenhead on March 7 on her maiden voyage to Calcutta, and will worthily maintain the high reputation which the "City" Line enjoys in the Eastern passenger and cargo services. After a further voyage to India, she is intended to run in the Straits, China, and Japan service of the Ellerman Lines.

It is of interest to note that the City Line (George Smith and Sons, managers), in conjunction with their colleagues Messrs. Hall Line, Ltd., Liverpool, have now twenty-one passenger-carrying ships engaged in their various Eastern passenger services, in addition to a large number of modern freight-carrying steamers, all specially constructed for their particular trades. The combined tonnage of the various lines controlled by Sir John R. Ellerman, Bart., C.H., now approximates one and a-half million tons deadweight, and further steamers are at present under construction.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Castalia for Bombay (Liverpool, March 2).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Magdapur for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 7); s.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 14); s.s. Maidan for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 17); s.s. Imani for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 28).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Pegu for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, March 6); s.s. Lancashire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, March 14).

British India Line.—S.s. Mandala for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 9); s.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16); s.s. Merkara for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 28); s.s. Hatarana for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 6); s.s. Dumana for Bombay and Karachi (London, April 6).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Tyria for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Glasgow, April 5).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Flaminian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (Liverpool, March 14).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Canterbury for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 7); s.s. City of Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 22).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Paris for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, March 12).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Mardinian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, March 7); s.s. Castilian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, March 21).

Ellerman Bucknall and Strick Line.—S.s. Frankenfels for the Persian Gulf (London, March 6).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Kenmore for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Kaisar-i-Hind for Bombay (London, March 9); s.s. Perim for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 10); s.s. Plassy for Bombay (London, March 23); s.s. Mirzapore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 24); s.s. Macedonia for Bombay (London, March 29).

FAST PASSAGE TO INDIA.

The Ellerman City liner City of London of 9,000 tons has just accomplished a smart run to Calcutta, where she arrived on February 20. Having left Liverpool on the afternoon of January 26, the passage was completed in less than twenty-five days.

A company is to be established in Sofia for the manufacture of telegraphic apparatus, with a working capital of five million leva. Half the capital will be supplied by the Bulgarian Government, the remainder by the Czecho-Slovak Telegraphia Company.

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA

.. SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPE ..
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA

also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LECHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER ..
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET

Business Quiet.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt in their report for the week ended February 16 states:—

Since our last report the futures market has been quiet, with quotations ruling within a very narrow range. There is very little news to report this week. The near positions in the New York market have again been quoted over 28 cents, but in view of the continued fairly large arrivals from up-country, and the moderate demand for our cotton from abroad, our market has not been active, and prices have, more or less, remained almost unchanged. Ashmouni contracts have shown their usual firmness, and the difference between March Sakellaridis and April Ashmouni is now reduced to just under $3. A feature worth mentioning is the extremely small difference between March American cotton contracts and March Egyptian cotton contracts in Liverpool: at to-day's close this difference is but 1.39d. The political situation in Europe is as complicated as ever, to the great prejudice of trade. The total arrivals from up-country now amount to 5,440,000 kantars, and, judging from the stocks still held by some important factories in the Delta, there is now no doubt that by the end of August this total will reach 6,000,000 kantars. On the other hand, export figures continue to be very satisfactory: the total since September 1 up to to-day is 4,575,000 kantars, against 3,440,000 kantars last year. The stock in Alexandria stands at 2,200,000 kantars, about 160,000 kantars less than a year ago.

Spot.—Total sales for this week amount to about 13,000 bales, of which we estimate 8,400 bales Sakellaridis, 4,200 bales Uppers, 250 bales Brown, and 150 bales White.

Sakellaridis.—The recently awakened demand for the better grades is still in evidence, with the result that prices for these cottons are appreciably hardening in relation to contracts. The bulk of the business concluded in Sakellaridis, however, remains in the medium grades, whilst the demand for inferior cottons seems to have somewhat fallen off, probably on account of the small supply and comparatively high prices.

Uppers.—The position with regard to these cottons shows little change from the past week, though the demand has been distributed over a wider range, embracing practically all grades.

Various.—An unimportant business has been transacted in Brown and White, and it is difficult to comment on the prices paid owing to the very narrow market and infrequent demand for these varieties.

Crop 1923.—Preparation of the land is now general and well advanced, owing to the favourable climatic conditions of the last week. The Ministry of Agriculture has just published a warning to the cultivators about the restriction in force on the acreage of land to be planted with cotton, and announces that exceptional measures will be taken for the enforcement of these restrictions. However, in view of what has happened in previous years, we have not much confidence in the efficiency of these measures. The last Government report on the state of the river reads as follows:—The White Nile has been very disappointing and has fallen away rapidly after the slight improvement mentioned last month. The prospects of the summer supply are therefore not improved, and there seems to be no likelihood of any improvement on last year.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Good Inquiry and Increased Business.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended February 21:—

A good inquiry has continued throughout the past week; prices have remained very steady, and an increased business has resulted. Uppers have attracted most attention, and a fair business has taken place in this growth at prices ranging from 16.00d. to 16.50d. per lb. Sellers have not encouraged bids, and there are signs that this cotton is getting scarcer. Much of the inquiry has been fruitless, as it emanated from spinners and would-be speculators who were not au fait with the situation, and their ideas of the price at which they ought to obtain their cotton was not in accordance with facts. In a short time there will be no Upper Egyptian available under 16.50d. per lb.

Low cotton has again been asked for, though not with the eagerness that was such a feature last week. Sakellaridis has hardly contributed its usual share to the sales this week, and the tendency, if anything, has been towards the lower-priced cotton, i.e., taking fully good fair as a zero point. Any lot of genuine "straight" cotton between 15½d. to 16½d. attracts immediate interest, and there is usually little difficulty in finding a buyer. Unfortunately, most of the cotton offering at this price is so largely mixed with (if not not entirely composed of) re-cleaned cotton that a certain amount of suspicion is generally encountered, as the number of spinners who really favour re-cleaned cotton from choice is very limited. Rather more interest has been taken in Sudan cotton, and several spinners have recently been inquiring for the old style of brown Tokar, of which there are only a few odd lots still held on this market, and these are labouring under the disadvantage of absurd limits. The new season's crop of Sudan and Tokar Sakellaridis cotton is eagerly awaited, but there will have to be some drastic reduction in prices (as compared with last season's) if it is to compete with Sakellaridis, which is offered here on such a comparatively low basis. A little inquiry for white cotton has been in evidence, but prices asked are generally too much for the buyer. Brown cotton has been neglected. Manchester reports have been rather quiet, and spinners are reported to be losing ground. A little more has been done with China. C.i.f. business remains very quiet. Forwardings to spinners for the week ended February 16 are returned as 14,153 bales, the highest for a long time. Total sales 4,100 (includes 370 bales Sudan). Quotations are unchanged. Fully good fair Sakellaridis, 17.50d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

Inquiry Again Restricted.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended February 24, states:—

During recent weeks the cotton trade has been encouraged by the hope that inquiry was on the point of being translated into actual business, but during the last few days even inquiry has been restricted and actual business has been small in the extreme. Producers are losing ground, and in spite of the advance in the raw material it is easily possible to purchase on the basis of prices a week or two ago.

Yarn.—Demand for all classes of yarn has been very poor, and the situation is discouraging. There is a great deal of discussion as to the remedy to be applied, but the views expressed vary considerably. Cheaper production will, in the end, probably be found to be the one and only sound solution.

Cloth.—The above remarks would apply also to this section. No improvement can be noted for any one outlet. The Near East, as might be expected, remains practically stagnant. A few orders are mentioned here and there for South America, and a little business is said to have been put through for colonial buyers. Weaving looms are being kept going with more and more difficulty.

Raw Cotton.—In view of the state of this market, it is somewhat surprising that raw cotton should again have shown considerable strength, and one is forced to the conclusion that Lancashire demand no longer occupies the important position which it did in settling the price. The ratio of the supply to the home consumption in America is now apparently the predominant factor in the situation. Closing prices are as follows: American fully middling, 16.44d.; Egyptian fully good fair, 17.50d.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	Dr. C. A. ANDRIKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 617—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	235	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Realities of Indian Finance	246	Notes and News	249
Egypt	239	THE WEEK AT HOME	237	Commerce and Industry	250
Irak	240	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	242	The Minerals of Albania	251
Greece	241	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	243	Syria's Economic Resources	252
Turkey	241	PERSONAL AND GENERAL	245	Near East Markets	253
SPECIAL ARTICLE—				Shipping Intelligence	255
Moharram and its Passion Play				Cotton and Cotton Goods	256
in Baghdad	247			Stock and Share Markets	257

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Angora in Council.

The past week has been a serious period for Angora. The Government has elaborated its counter-proposals to the Allies' terms, and has submitted them to the National Assembly. There has been much impassioned oratory, if report be true, behind closed doors; for the sessions have been held in secret, except when the Treaty debates were interrupted to enable Mustapha Kemal Pasha to deliver his annual presidential address on the fourth anniversary of the Assembly. His speech on this occasion, so far as can be gauged from the reports, did not come up to the standard of his address to the Smyrna Congress. It was trimmed too much to catch the favouring breeze from every part of the Assembly. Peace rested with the Allies; the New Year might bring peace, but it was better to take every precaution in case of war; if the war continued, the Turks could rely on the army; life was nothing without independence. Perhaps the sentence that most betrayed his real preoccupation was the statement that last year the Turks had done without a foreign loan, and he hoped that they would not need a foreign loan this year. It is difficult to avoid the suspicion that if Mustapha Kemal Pasha had felt surer of his own political position he would have contrived to introduce into his speech some response to the outspoken desire of the Allies to be friends with Turkey.

The Splitting of Hairs.

Much is being made in Angora of the wide breach between the Allies' peace terms and the National Pact; but if the two documents, as well as the circumstances of the case, were dispassionately compared, the difference between them would be found to be too slight to justify all the stage thunder of the National Assembly. The contested points are just those which are likely to concern the Turks least in practice: for it is certain that, when once the present pothole is over, their first anxiety will be to promote the economic prosperity of the country, without which they will not be able to maintain even the army on which so much reliance is placed at the moment. By their own deliberate action they have destroyed the economic edifice built up by the commerce and industry of the "minorities," whom they have expelled; and if they give a thought to the subject, they probably imagine that at the word "Go!" the former economic standard will be restored by exclusively Turkish effort. But it will not be so. Whether for the upkeep of the army or for economic reconstruction, foreign loans will be required, and these Turkey will be able to obtain only if she accepts the financial and judicial terms that she is so bent on rejecting now. Even if they are not embodied in the Treaty, they will have to be accepted in the near future; it will then be found that they do not bear the meaning attributed to them at Angora, but are merely necessary precautions prompted by the Allies' business sense, until such time as it is known whether Turkey is to be governed by men of ordinary intelligence and modern education or by Anatolian extremists, whose knowledge of the world is restricted to their own hill country.

The New Turkey.

Mustapha Kemal Pasha is probably right in claiming that Turkey is stronger to-day than she was yesterday, and he might have added that in relation to Europe she is stronger than at any time during the last century. It is her moral strength, however, that is so much in evidence, and the surest way of destroying it is to lay too much stress—as the Nationalist leader was inclined to do for the benefit of the extremists in his audience—on her military strength. Her army is all-powerful for just so long as it does not suit any Power or group of Powers to put it to the test. Turkey's moral strength rests on her amazing recovery of her independence as a result of the Allies' peace mistakes. She will do well to remember, however, that she lost that independence completely as a result of challenging the Allies' armed strength, and that the occasion for the mistakes of the last few years is passing. The tactics of Angora have been successful in Anatolia; but they may lead to disaster if practised and pushed to an extreme from Constantinople. In returning to Europe the Turks will be entering upon a trial of strength other than that of military strength, and they can only hope to come out of the struggle successfully if they engage in it with weapons as serviceable as those which are used in Europe.

The Next Move?

We can only regard it as unfortunate that the Allies should allow any differences of opinion to arise in regard to what is to be done next in the Near East. It will be early enough to raise the question when the Turks have made known their counter-proposals. The desire to have done with all full-dress negotiations is natural; and it would be legitimate for the Allied Governments to inform the Turks that, in the event of the counter-proposals assuming, as it is reported that they do, formidable proportions, they will have to be considered first by the High Commissioners in Constantinople with the Turkish representatives, in order that as much common ground as possible may be cleared away, and that the agenda for any further conference to be attended by members of the various Governments may be reduced to a minimum. There is no need, however, at this stage to suggest to the Turks that they may still have something to gain by trying to play upon differences between the Allies; yet this must be the effect of publishing France's view of a Treaty shorn of its economic clauses, or the Italian attitude towards further judicial concessions.

The Asia Minor Deportations.

While Mr. Lloyd George is pointing the finger of scorn at those who found fault with his Near Eastern policy, because they conceived it "to be a revival of the old Gladstonian attitude towards the Turk and Christian populations in the East," the closing act of the drama for which he will doubtless be regarded as much responsible as anyone is being enacted in Asiatic Turkey. The disastrous failure of the Greek venture that began with the landing at Smyrna led to the Turkish decision, to which the Greeks found themselves obliged to agree at Lausanne, to deport the whole Greek population of Asia Minor. That step is being carried out with an accompaniment of suffering and horror as can be found only in the East. The unhappy people—mostly women and children—are being driven from the interior to the Black Sea ports, regardless of the capacity of these places to receive them, to be herded on ships as they become available and dumped down on the shores of the Bosphorus for subsequent removal to Greece, which is already overburdened with refugees. To absence of accommodation and to shortage of food is added the terror of disease and epidemics. The Turks have surrendered to the panic caused by the Greek advance to the gateway of Angora and to the traditional hatred of the Giaour in their midst, but it is strange that none of the wiser politicians among them has realised that Turkey is cutting off her nose to spite her face, and has urged the better course of keeping this section of the population, invaluable from the economic point of view, while insisting that it should be made innocuous, from the point of view of political intrigue, under the guarantee of the League of Nations.

Yugoslavia and Bulgaria.

The meeting of a Yugoslav-Bulgarian Commission to deal with all outstanding questions between the two countries is an event of considerable interest in Balkan history; it will become of first-class importance if the Commission's labours are crowned with satisfactory results. Two years ago the idea of such a conference would have been indignantly scouted in Belgrade, but, in spite of efforts to perpetuate the bad blood between the two countries by the dissemination of false reports, the correctness of Bulgarian foreign policy has had its reward. Credit for having brought the Commission into being belongs to M. Pashitch and M. Stambolisky; the former is especially to be congratulated on having secured in this matter the absorption of Serbian feeling in the wider outlook of Yugoslav statesmanship. While the negotiations are in progress an incident in Southern Serbia, where the inhabitants of a village have openly espoused the cause of a komitaji band against the gendarmerie, ought to convince the Yugoslav Government that it is confronted with a more serious problem than the instigation of unrest from the Bulgarian side of the frontier. The unrest exists; but it is spontaneous, and not engineered. The Bulgarian Government may prove to be as anxious as the Yugoslavs to put an end to it. What the joint Commission ought to investigate is whether the trouble is ever likely to be suppressed by force or whether there is a wiser way of eliminating it by meeting such of the claims of the insurgents as are justifiable and reasonable.

A Montenegrin Echo.

The question asked in the House of Commons last week whether the Government would in the interest of peace in the Balkans publish the report of Count de Salis on Montenegro suggests that, although little reaches the outside world regarding that unhappy country, its affairs have not been altogether lost sight of by its old friends. Little more is known, however, of current events in Montenegro than that a state of war still continues there, a large number of the inhabitants having "taken to the mountains," and defying the attempts of the authorities to bring them to book. The answer of the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs seemed to confirm the report that a form of terrorism existed in the country. In Italy, also, to judge by a statement made in the Chamber of Deputies a few weeks ago, the last word on the subject of Montenegro would seem not to have been spoken. In connection with the ratification of the Treaty of Santa Margherita it was officially stated that the agreements with Yugoslavia leave unprejudiced the rights of Montenegro. Now that the Yugoslav Government is reaching an understanding with Italy on the one hand, and Bulgaria on the other, it is to be hoped that it will see its way to evolve a settlement of the Montenegrin question which will remove unhappiness from that country and a source of weakness from the kingdom of the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes.

More Egyptian Outrages.

The campaign of outrage with which a misguided section of the Egyptian people is seeking to testify to its fitness for self-government has not only been revived during the last few weeks, but has also become bolder in regard to the objects of its attacks. Last Sunday one bomb was thrown into a café at the back of the Eden Palace Hotel, the General Headquarters of the British military forces in Cairo, and a second bomb immediately afterwards into a room of the hotel used as the headquarters of the Signal Corps. The latter bomb fortunately did not explode; but the first did, killing an Egyptian waiter and seriously wounding a number of British soldiers who were in the café at the time. As on previous occasions, the assailants escaped. Lord Allenby has found himself obliged to intern more members of the Wafd or Zaghoulouist delegation. It is unfortunate for Egypt that the Zaghoulouists will not realise the criminal folly of the murder campaign until the authorities are forced to adopt extreme measures against them. A word from them would probably disarm the fanatics, who lack the intelligence that their instigators have, and Great Britain could leave the arena free to the Egyptians to settle their own differences. Until the outrages cease, however, it is difficult for the British Government to take any step in the direction in which the Zaghouloulists are so anxious that it should go.

The Irak Debate.

The House of Commons devoted another field-day to the subject of Irak on a supplementary vote for sundry Middle Eastern services. It is impossible in a single note to summarise a debate which was conspicuous for the number of those who addressed the Committee. Among the twenty-three speakers outside the Government spokesmen a striking variety of knowledge and ignorance was displayed, ranging from the informative speech of Colonel Sir Charles Yate to the efforts of members who urged that the Irak railways should be scrapped in order to allow camel caravans to be resuscitated, or confessed to not understanding, and not wanting to understand, the difference between Shiabs and Sunnis, or who compared King Faisal in Irak to an Italian in Iceland. Far too much has been made of the alleged unpopularity of King Faisal on the evidence of an iconoclastic critic, and Colonel Aubrey Herbert uttered a useful caveat when he reminded the Committee that, if King Faisal were put up for election, he would have the cultivator, the trader, and all the people interested in progress and order voting for him, with the marsh Arab, who would vote only for anarchy and liberty to loot, against him.

Afghanistan.

The Afghans, we may hope, know enough about the happiness attributed to countries which are not in the limelight of contemporary history to understand that the interest taken in their affairs in Great Britain is not to be measured by the paucity of the references to Afghanistan in the daily Press. It was a happy idea on the part of the Afghan Minister in London, Sirdar Abdul Hadi Khan, who has himself been scarcely a year at his post, to give a banquet on March 1 in celebration of the fifth anniversary of the declaration of Afghanistan's independence. The occasion enabled him to remind the British public that his countrymen are now well launched on their voyage of experience as an independent nation, anxious to learn and test things for themselves, but not ungrateful to those who encouraged them in their first efforts, and among these Sirdar Abdul Hadi, not unnaturally, attributed a prominent position to Great Britain. In the short time during which Afghanistan has been entirely on her own feet she has felt drawn in many directions. It is satisfactory, therefore, to be able to record that she now seems to have made up her mind that she is not suited to Central Asian adventures at this stage of her development, but has realised that the quickest road to prosperity lies in keeping in close touch with the British Empire, always, be it understood, in a healthy attitude of self-reliance. Not a little of this spirit, we may infer, is inspired by the Ameer Amanullah Khan himself, if it be true, as reported, that he has adopted the plan of moving in disguise among his subjects in order to find out things for himself. As far as foreign relations are concerned, His Majesty will note the eagerness with which many countries are availing themselves of the opportunity of getting into direct touch with Afghanistan, but we trust that he will not allow commercial interests to serve as a cloak for political intrigue.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The Politicians.

The air is full of political talk now. The housing question, and politicians' views upon it; by-elections; more talk of Liberal reunion—these are the topics of the week. And with uncanny instinct Mr. Lloyd George seized the moment to make, as Lord Rector of Edinburgh University, a speech upon "The Difficulties of Politicians." It is needless to say that the ex-Premier emphasised the difficulties, as he exalted the politicians. But for the moment what he says does not count; our memories of him are unalterably mixed, and it is fairly obvious that he cannot yet come back. Distrust of him is perhaps deepest in the Liberal Party, the Independent part of which has just spurned his very personal offer of reunion. The Liberal Party does well to reject the ear-close-to-the-ground methods of the ex-Premier; but for the time being it is itself remote from reality, and official English Liberalism is consequently as sterile to-day as, say, that of Italy. There is in this country any amount of real Liberalism, but the official setting out of it is deplorable. It does exist in some degree, however, even in the House of Commons, in the personalities of such members as Mr. Reginald Berkeley or Mr. J. R. M. Butler.

By-Elections.

By those who write upon these things it has been stated that the Government has suffered a shock in the defeat of its candidates, Colonel Stanley and Sir Arthur Griffith-Boscawen, at East Willesden and Mitcham respectively. But these results, surprising though they may be, do not really signify a condemnation of Government policy, for the issue which burned alike at both places to the exclusion of all others was the housing question. Genuine alarm was felt about the Government's proposal to decontrol the rents of middle-class houses next year, which touched the suburban voter to the quick—that is, his pocket. That there was no real anti-Government feeling is proved by the fact that at East Willesden little over 50 per cent. of the electorate voted, and at Mitcham only two-thirds.

What the future of the second jaded victim is to be is not yet known. Colonel Stanley, who was Under-Secretary for Home Affairs, has tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister; and one can scarcely think that so graceful a step will not now be followed by the Minister for Health. Sir Arthur Griffith-Boscawen, who really does know something about agriculture, has had very bad luck; if he ever had a political "touch" he has obviously lost it, and whatever the explanation of this his latest defeat may be, he will probably languish away from politics with bitter sighs of relief.

The Problem of Population.

Beyond all question the problem most popularly discussed and most seriously considered in Europe to-day, and especially in England, is that of population. Each individual country has, according to whether it is industrialist or agriculturist, its own problems; in this country the cry of over-population is once more being raised, and the prophets are full of woe. England, they say, cannot find work for all her millions, and if emigration to the colonies is an impossible solution, artificial means must be employed to control the population.

Limelight was thrown last week on the whole debate when Dr. Marie Stopes, having brought a claim for libel against a man who had written against what he called her "monstrous campaign" of birth control, lost her case. But she is appealing against the Lord Chief Justice's judgment, so that the matter will once more be threshed out.

It is difficult to hold convictions on this matter of birth-control. Ever since the days of Malthus, who better than anyone else exposed the futility of his own theories, we have had experts in the problem of population; but it still remains unsolved. Why it should be so urgently discussed at the present time is rather a mystery, because thirty years ago the population in England was increasing far more rapidly than now. However, we are in the mood at the moment to view State problems in their purely practical aspect, and there is an undoubted tendency to think of the family in purely utilitarian terms. It is being taken as an axiom that the poorer classes will always breed up to the food limit, and the problem, as these experts see it, is to limit this proclivity in the working-classes and to develop it in the more well-to-do. That it is so possible to divorce the practical from the moral, to submerge the private in the public, I cannot believe; but, frankly, I do not know much about the matter. Yet any cause which in its endeavour to save the world has for motto "contraception or confraternity" must obviously be all wrong, mustn't it?

Libel and Truth.

The Stokes v. Sutherland case to which I have referred was extraordinarily interesting from a legal point of view. For one day we learned that the special jury had awarded Dr. Marie Stokes £100 damages, and the next day were told that the Lord Chief Justice had given judgment for the defendant! The whole confusion in our minds had arisen out of the legal interpretation of the jury's verdict. The jury found that the words of which Dr. Stokes complained were true but defamatory. Now, we had previously thought that "the greater the truth the greater the libel." But in some circumstances, it seems, truth alone may be defence enough. The Lord Chief Justice is reported to have put the case thus:—"I think that it is always the rule of law that if the words complained of are true in substance and in fact that ends the matter." It is extremely useful to have this dictum, though one can remember cases, e.g., the Marconi case against the late Mr. Cecil Chesterton, in which it was hardly applied. Doubtless it is now vexing the minds of the Bench.

St. David's Day.

London was not greatly perturbed by the celebration of St. David's Day last Thursday. There were a few wild men, it is true, with gallant leeks in their caps, but for the most part the discovery of their secret pride was confined to banquets and other similar forms of entertainment where vent can with impunity be given to national feelings. Of course, there are hundreds of Welshmen in London, but they generally try (and successfully) to get the best of both nationalities, and there are not many who prefer St. David to St. George. The secret of their personality seldom escapes them, and, generally speaking, it is in sport alone that they disclose their prejudices.

It was rather amusing, by the bye, to find the other day a Welsh audience to "Taffy," a Welsh play written by Mr. Caradoc Evans, objecting very strongly to the portrayal of Welsh characteristics on the stage. Welshmen naturally consider themselves to be the finest of the Celts, but in this matter they showed themselves no more to be possessed of a sense of proportion than are the Irish, who would not listen to Synge's "Playboy of the Western World" because it was not wholly favourable to the Irish character.

Divorce and Legitimation.

We are travelling fast in these days, and it sometimes seems that the laws are catching us up. Our morality is in a curiously restless state, having lost its old moorings and being dependent on man's good sense. To so frail a support was due the second reading last week of two Bills in the House of Commons. The purpose of the first was, briefly, to make of adultery alone a lawful ground for a wife to seek divorce; the second Bill provides that if the parents of an illegitimate child marry later in life that child shall for certain purposes be legitimated. It will easily be seen from this how we are moving away from Canon Law to Roman or Civil Law—in other words, Christianity is disappearing as a practical force in our public life. The facility with which these two Bills passed their second reading—the first by 231 votes to 27 and the second unopposed—is significant of the spirit of the new Commons. In theory—and if we have no religion we must have theories of life—there is little to be said against equal divorce; but I believe that a thorough mess of it will be made in practice. Yet it may be that the marriage tie is already too much dissolved to make it worth saving. We shall have to begin again one day, when the present frenzies shall have run their course.

Business with Russia.

A tremendous hubbub was raised in the City a day or two ago when it was announced that Mr. E. F. Wise, an ex-Civil Servant, has been appointed Director of the London Office of Centrosoyus and economic adviser to the head office at Moscow of Centrosoyus. The old cry of "No dealings with Soviet Russia" has been bandied about, but very little wool has been collected. Everyone knows that relations, both political and economic, but particularly economic, are opening with Russia; it rather looks, in fact, as if France were getting ahead of ourselves in this respect. Naturally, those who cannot mention the word "Soviet" without frothing are intensely angered at Mr. Wise's step, but it is a hard rule which lays down that a Civil Servant is never to seek advancement outside his profession.

Round the Theatres.

It is scarcely a heartening experience to go round the London theatres just now, for the level of plays is thoroughly bad. You have, generally speaking, either to waddle in the sticky sentiment of something like "Secrets," or go to a revue or a melodrama. About the only two certain places where you regain sanity and a sense of proportion are at "The Beggar's Opera" and the "Old Vic," and it was to these two that last week, in a desperate effort to find comfort, I hied me. "The Beggar's Opera" has undoubtedly coarsened with prolonged production, but it is still (as, of course, is "Polly") a joy for its scoring alone. At the "Old Vic" they were doing two little British operas, Dame Ethel Smyth's "The Boatswain's Mate" and Mr. Nicholas Gatty's "Prince Feron." The first is a very jolly affair on the whole, without genius and with certain dull passages, but is written broadly, honestly, and extremely efficiently. "Prince Feron" is also capital fun, notable, like the other opera, chiefly for its joinery. But it is much more consistently enjoyable, being more mouvementé, varied, and coloured. Its production was quite lavish for the "Old Vic," which always excels itself when Mr. Clive Carey is playing.

ALTER EGO.

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, February 20.

The Political Situation.

The political crisis, the beginning of which I reported a fortnight ago, still continues. The resignation of Nessim Pasha has been accepted by the King, but so far no new Cabinet has been formed. Considerable activity has been noticeable at the Palace, whither King Fuad summoned a large number of prominent Egyptians in order to discuss with them the present situation. Those whom King Fuad consulted comprised for the most part ex-Prime Ministers, including Adly Pasha, Mohamed Said Pasha, Mazloum Pasha, Wahba Pasha, and Rushdi Pasha. At one time there was a talk of a Coalition Cabinet under Mazloum Pasha, but that appears to have failed. Next, efforts were made to get Rushdi Pasha to take the Government, but his health obviously would not permit of his undergoing the great strain which the post of Prime Minister to-day would entail. The last candidate to be mentioned is Adly Pasha, but although he would be a popular Prime Minister it is difficult to conceive his accepting office at the present juncture unless some important changes are introduced in the present political situation. It is quite possible that the Ministerial crisis will last some little while yet. Meanwhile the Under-Secretaries are exercising the functions of Ministers.

The influences which have been responsible for the aggravation of the recent crisis appear still to be at work. The Wafd El Masri, whose close relationship to the Palace is well known, held a meeting at Abbassia this week, at which resolutions were passed approving the attitude of the Nessim Cabinet, disowning any Cabinet which would accept office under the conditions created by the removal of the Sudan clauses from the Constitution, and demanding the immediate promulgation of the new Constitution with those clauses.

A Royal Visitor.

The latest arrival in Egypt is the Queen of the Belgians, who, accompanied by Prince Leopold and Dr. Jean Capart, arrived at Alexandria on Wednesday last, and proceeded straight to Luxor. Her Majesty came from Brussels direct without a stop, and the seven days' incessant travelling left her slightly indisposed on her arrival. She was, however, quite well enough to attend the official opening of King Tutankhamen's tomb on Sunday. This is not the Queen's first visit to Egypt, as she spent some considerable time in 1911 at Luxor and Assouan while the King went on a big game shooting expedition in the Sudan. Her Majesty is much interested in Egyptology, and has followed Lord Carnarvon's discoveries very closely. This explains the reason why the Royal party made such a speedy journey in order to arrive in time at the opening ceremony and why the Queen is accompanied by Dr. Jean Capart, the Keeper of the Musées Royaux du Cinquantenaire, who is himself an eminent scientist and Egyptologist.

The Luxor Discoveries.

Sunday, the 20th, was a gala day at Luxor on the occasion of the official opening of Tutankhamen's tomb. The sealed wall had actually been pierced on the Friday, in the presence of the chief officials of the Antiquities Department, as this was a business taking several hours and could not have been done with a crowd of distinguished guests waiting to enter.

Among the guests whom Lord Carnarvon had invited for the occasion were the Queen of the Belgians, Prince Leopold, Lord and Lady Allenby, M. Gaillard (the French Minister), Dr. Morton Howell (the American Minister) and Mrs. Morton Howell, Count and Countess de Lalaing (of the Belgian Legation), Count de Serionne (superintendent of the Suez Canal Company) and Mme. de Serionne, the Hon. E. S. Scott (Counsellor at the Residency), Marquis and Marchioness of Granby, the Hon. Mervyn Herbert, and Mrs. Herbert, Sir John Maxwell, Sir William Garstin, Abdel Khalek Pasha Sarwat (ex-Prime Minister), Wassel Semeika Pasha (ex-Minister of Communications), and the Comité de l'Égyptologie, comprising Mr. H. Farnall (British Commissioner of the Caisse de la Dette), Mr. H. M. Anthony (Director-General of the State Domains), Mahmud Pasha Sami (Under-Secretary for Communications), Ismail Pasha Hassanein (Under-Secretary for Education). There were also present Abdel Hamid Pasha Suliman (Under-Secretary for Public Works, representing King Fuad, from whom Lord Carnarvon received a very warm letter of congratulation), M. Lacau (Director-General of Antiquities), and his inspectors.

Everyone who visited the new chambers appeared simply overwhelmed by what they saw. As many of the visitors subsequently told me, there was so much to be seen; everything was concentrated in such a small space, and the objects they saw were so surprisingly novel that they were completely at a loss to collect their thoughts and describe what they had seen. There appears no doubt whatsoever that the discovery made by Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter is the greatest ever known in the realm of Egyptology, and that what has been found will completely revolutionise the ideas hitherto prevailing with regard to ancient Egyptian art and industry. The find is indeed a stupendous one, for even now the excavators have no idea of its real extent, since so much still remains sealed up as it was originally deposited in the funereal chamber. It will, in fact, take the excavators several seasons and a considerable amount of trouble and ingenuity to clear all these chambers and make the objects found therein ready for exhibition purposes.

The Press Controversy.

It is, in all these circumstances, highly regrettable that there has occurred the recent Press controversy with regard to the manner in which details of these discoveries should be made public. I do not now propose to enter into the merits of this controversy, which is not really based on high principles, but is entirely due to journalistic jealousy, since the highest authorities have declared that Lord Carnarvon had every right to act as he had done. What is in the highest degree regrettable is, in the first place, that three English newspapers claiming to represent the British public should wash so much of their own dirty linen in an Oriental country, and, secondly, that in order to counteract an advantage which their own lack of initiative and enterprise gave elsewhere, they should make use of and encourage the anti-British feeling in Egypt to the point where a grave political crisis threatened to break out.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

The whole spectacle has been most unedifying, and the general public may be surprised to learn that the so-called struggle is not between The Times and the Press of the world, but is between three London papers and the majority of the world's papers who have subscribed towards the news service which the leading British organ has organised on behalf of Lord Carnarvon.

IRAK.

Baghdad, February 15.

Mosul.

In spite of all the stories current at the time when the Baghdad garrison was moved up to Mosul to discourage any tendency the trans-frontier tribes might show towards making extensive raids into Irak at the instigation of the Turks, and to minimise the danger of any attack on Mosul by the Turks with a view to obtaining by force of arms what they seemed unable to obtain by peaceful negotiation, Mosul has not yet fallen, and interest in Lausanne and Mosul is now at a very low ebb. The Emir Zaid, King Faisal's brother, has made a protracted stay in Mosul, where he presented colours to the regiments of the Irak army stationed there, and has also visited Tel Afar and some of the interesting sites in the neighbourhood of Mosul. Everywhere he has been received with enthusiasm, and reports to hand indicate that he has made a very good impression on all with whom he has come into contact. He has not yet paid a visit to the Kurdish qadhas, and it is improbable that he will do so at present, but deputations from all those qadhas have waited on him in Mosul, and are reported to have been no less favourably impressed than the Arabs. There is in that part of the world a high feeling of dislike between the Kurds and the Arabs, and it says much for the ability of the Emir that he has been able to impress the Kurds so favourably. If the Kurdish districts of Mosul are to remain a part of the State of Irak it is essential that better relations between Kurds and Arabs be established at an early date, or incessant trouble is likely to result.

The High Commissioner in England.

Much interest is being evinced in Sir Percy Cox's visit to England and his attendance at meetings of the Cabinet while Irak affairs have been under discussion. Hopes are entertained that the result of his visit will be certain alterations in the existing form of Government, which will leave to the people of this country wider independence and a more permanent form of government than that now obtaining. It does not, however, seem to strike those who have for so long been advocating the boycott of the elections to the National Assembly that their attitude in this matter is in every way inconsistent with a demand for wider independence. Nothing has been heard of the elections for some weeks, and it can but be assumed that they have been indefinitely postponed pending the results of the Lausanne Conference.

Baghdad Municipality.

A few months ago it was decided to split the Baghdad municipality into three, each with its own mudir, but to retain one municipal council to administer the three areas. The ex-officio president of the council was the Muhafidh al Balad, who performed the duties of both Lord Mayor and Governor of the Baghdad Division. It has now been decided to separate the duties of Lord Mayor from that of Governor of the division, and to reunite the three municipalities into one, the council to be under the presidency of an appointed official to be known as Amin al Asimah (Keeper of the Capital). The first incumbent of this post is Subih Beg Nishat, a former Minister of Communications and Works. It is generally considered that the new arrangement will make for more efficient administration, and as such is to be welcomed.

Improved Communications.

Reports indicate that a big improvement in the communications in and around Basrah is being made by the opening of new roads and the erection of new bridges over the more important creeks. This is a step in the right direction, as hitherto the large number of creeks and the almost complete absence of bridges has made communication by land between Basrah and the big villages on the river to the south of it almost impossible.

Social Functions.

Two important social events of the past few days were the fancy dress ball at the Aliviya Club, given by "A Few Remaining Bachelors," and an afternoon reception given to Sir Henry Dobbs at the Irak Club to enable him to meet the members. The former—in spite of the weather, which did its worst—was attended by Lady Cox, Sir John Salmond, and Sir Henry Dobbs, and was a brilliant

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 5

The "ANGEL," Henley-on-Thames. For several hundred years a familiar haunt of Thames boatmen and fishermen.

Shade of Izaak Walton: "Yes, JOHNNIE WALKER, what I said about fishing equally applies to you. 'After tedious study a rest to the mind, a cheerer of spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness'."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

success, while the latter enabled Sir Henry Dobbs to meet a number of the local residents with whom he would probably not come into contact in the ordinary course of his work.

GREECE.

Athens, February 24.

Greece and Lausanne.

Despite the optimistic news received from abroad a day or two earlier, the failure of the Lausanne Conference caused no surprise here. Everybody expected it. On the other hand, it would be a mistake to think that the news was received in Athens with regret. The Greek is delighted to know that the Turks have sacrificed the extremely favourable terms offered them by the Allies, and he sincerely hopes that the "irreconcilables" of Angora will not change their mind at the eleventh hour. In the opinion of everyone here, the Allies, in their endeavour to secure peace at any price, went far beyond the limits of concessions, and even sacrificed their own dignity. Whether the questions of the Capitulations and Mosul are solved or not is of little interest to the Hellene, but public opinion strongly objected to the unlimited number of Turkish troops to be stationed in Thrace, and to the forcible exchange of the Greek and Turkish populations. It is argued that it would be impossible for Greece to demobilise her army knowing that a huge Turkish force was waiting at her doorstep ready at the first opportunity to carry out the "National Pact." As for the exchange of populations, it should be pointed out that, apart from the Greeks and Armenians—there is not a single refugee who is not hoping that some day he will return to his old home—the Turks themselves residing in this country are very much against it. A wealthy Turk of Macedonia who a fortnight ago was travelling with me by the Orient Express from Athens to Salonika asked me whether I thought it would be right that he and his people whose forefathers had been established for centuries in Macedonia, and who possessed large property in that country, should be compelled to leave everything and go to Asia Minor, where they would find nothing but ruins. I ventured to suggest that his compatriots were to a large extent responsible for that, whereupon he very excitedly informed me that his people were all "Old Turks," and therefore entirely disapproved of Kemal and his methods.

Government Measures.

There has been no change in the political situation, and nothing is likely to happen until some sort of a solution is found for the perplexing Near East problems. Meanwhile, the Revolutionary Government, after completing its original task—namely, the reorganisation of the Army—has turned its attention to the financial problems of the country, which it is trying to solve in a true military fashion. Almost everything has been taxed. After acquiring the gold deposits in the banks, the Minister of Finance has imposed a tax, varying from 3 to 15 per cent., on all capital and property. From this tax alone the Government expects to realise 1,500,000,000 drachmæ. Tobacco has also been heavily taxed. A packet of first quality cigarettes which six months ago was sold at 2 drachmæ to-day costs 6 drachmæ. Our Turkish coffee, our afternoon tea, and our luncheon at the restaurant are also taxed, and the Hotel "Grande Bretagne" is taxed for not calling itself "Xenodochion tis Megalis Brettanias"!

All these new taxes are naturally extremely unpopular, but the Revolutionary Government, having made up its mind to reconstruct the public finance of the country, is determined to carry out its plans, even though it is aware that by so doing it is digging its own grave for the forthcoming elections.

Miscellaneous News.

M. Alexander Diomedes, ex-Minister of Finance, has been elected Governor of the National Bank of Greece, obtaining 570 out of 590 votes. One vote was given to M. Maximos.

The exchange of the prisoners of war will commence next week. The Turkish prisoners have been moved to concentration camps in Athens, and the Greek Government has already chartered several boats for their transport to Smyrna. At present an equal number of prisoners will be exchanged, and as the Turks hold more than the Greeks, the prisoners who will remain in Turkey will be handed over only after the signing of the peace.

The Gregorian Calendar will be introduced in Greece on February 16 (O.S.), which will be called March 1. All salaries, rents, and so on for February will be paid for seventeen days only.

Constantinople, February 27.

The Hidden Hand.

While no one would wish to accuse the Nationalist authorities of delaying action deliberately in the matter of the peace negotiations, it is, perhaps, an outstanding and, as such, a significant feature of these negotiations, from the time of the Mudania Conference to the present moment, that the Angora Government and Parliament have shown little or no evidence of impatience in the matter of the progress made, or of any serious anxiety to hasten the achievement of peace. This fact, taken in conjunction with the general attitude of the well-inspired and well-censored Turkish Press, the bellicose remarks uttered from time to time, especially at critical junctures, by members of the Angora Parliament, and the relations past and present, between Angora and Moscow, should not be lost sight of. It is no secret that the Parliament at Angora is composed of two or more groups or parties holding vitally divergent views, yet supporting one another at times on many questions on which there is common agreement. Thus one hears of the Party of Independence, a military party, the pro-Kemalists, the anti-Kemalists, and the like. But in the matter of the present discussion on the draft Peace Treaty, the cross-currents, and the inter-party differences, can all be ignored; we are watching a definite trial of strength between the extremists and the moderates of the new Turkish Parliament. Will it prove to be the death-rattle of a decadent race, or the struggle to life in the birth of a new nation? It is impossible to ignore the fact that for services rendered to the Nationalist cause in the past, and for other reasons, some of the extremists are influenced by the machinations and ambitions, and the outlook towards the outside world, political and economical, which have their being and inspiration from the present Government of Russia. Confirmation of this feature may be found in some of the new or proposed Parliamentary and municipal legislation which has found its way into Turkey's Nationalist Assembly. There is much of this legislation that is sound, modern, and progressive, but, on the other hand, there is much that is—Moscow.

The Struggle of the Moderates.

This aspect of the situation enables one to understand what otherwise must appear as the somewhat extraordinary attitude and actions broadcasted to the world from time to time as the official product of the new Nationalist movement in Turkey. The most notorious instance is the recent incident of the Port of Smyrna and the threat to the Allied Fleets. Fortunately for the new Nationalist movement in Turkey, the absurdity of that action was so apparent, the effrontery so colossal, that no one really took the matter very seriously.

But while the struggle in the Angora Parliament continues, and unless and until sane and moderate Turkish Nationalism succeeds in gaining the upper hand the political situation in Turkey and the Near East must be considered as serious. Undoubtedly a most dangerous thing to happen would be that the extremist element should agree to compromise in order to secure a temporary peace and early liberation from the existing control by the naval, military, and air forces of the Allies. The possibility of this contingency happening is the cause of some concern and anxiety to the foreign populations domiciled in Turkey, and to all who have commercial or other relations with the country.

Glib Talk of War.

There has been much glib talk of the possibilities of war by the extremists since the return of the Lausanne delegation. Sections of the Turkish Press have continued day by day seriously to discuss the possibility of war as the best means of obtaining the final concessions on the one or two remaining points at issue.

Thus the Yeni Gun, in an article entitled "War and Peace," remarks: "It is very possible that the National Assembly will pose certain questions to the Western Powers, and it is according to their answers that it will become clear as to whether it is to be peace or war." This paper, incidentally, violently attacks French economic policy.

The Tevhid Efkiar is persuaded that "Anatolia will notify the world of her readiness to have recourse to the shedding of blood rather than accept conditions assailing Turkish prestige and independence." But later, however, really, as it were, to cap the paradox of the present situation, this paper declares that "it is neither France nor Britain, who is going to have the chief voice now in making peace, but Turkey . . . it is a great error to suppose that the question of our peace depends solely upon the wishes and opinions, the decisions and caprices of these two Powers."

Two more quotations:—

The Tevhid:—"The Independence group is categorically opposed to accepting anything which constitutes an infringement of the National Pact. Their number is increasing."

The Tan, analysing the Treaty project and speaking of the possibility of the European Powers changing their attitude towards Turkey, fears "that it is now too late."

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

Egypt.

The Glasgow Herald of February 24 thus begins an article upon "Trouble in Egypt":—

A new and somewhat difficult situation has arisen in Egypt the outcome of which may conceivably affect the relations of that country with Great Britain very appreciably. Within the last few days strong measures have been taken against some leading supporters of the exiled Zaghloul Pasha, and the headquarters of the Wafd or Zaghloulist delegation have been closed down by order of the Military Governor of Cairo on the ground that the delegation had issued a manifesto tending to cause disorder. Following on this step and the accompanying arrests there have been strikes in the Cairo schools and minor demonstrations, which have been easily dealt with, but the political and social atmosphere is highly charged with electricity, and it remains to be seen whether fresh and more serious disturbances will arise, or whether the display of firmness will have the desired result of bringing about a definite cessation of the more discreditable and dangerous forms of Zaghloulist propaganda. As the latter are largely, if not exclusively, anti-British, what is happening now can hardly fail to have an important bearing upon the conclusion of a satisfactory Anglo-Egyptian Treaty. In any case, and more particularly because of the nature of the crisis and of the events leading up to it, these new developments should clear the air and incidentally serve as a wholesome check to the doubtful efforts which are being made in sundry quarters to bring pressure upon the British Government to permit Zaghloul Pasha's early return to something resembling his former position and activities.

It goes on to explain the private Cabinet which King Fuad has been having in addition to the Cabinet of the Egyptian Government, and the difficulty, with the Zaghloulist Hassan Nashat Bey at the head of the private Cabinet, of making the two work harmoniously together. And it concludes:—

It is obvious that in relation to this complicated state of affairs there have been wheels within wheels, and it is pretty broadly hinted that at one time King Fuad was allowing himself to be unduly swayed by his so-called private Cabinet, an institution hardly in harmony with Western ideas of Constitutional government. In particular, it is pointed out that the relations between the King and Nessim Pasha were of a very intimate description, so much so, in fact, that the latter's resignation of the Premiership came to be

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558

—COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.—

invested with the character of not merely a political but also a Palace anti-British movement. It is clear that such a situation must have been a very trying one for Lord Allenby, who, judging by events, has dealt with it, as usual, both firmly and wisely. In any case, it is obvious that the power behind the throne in the shape of the private Cabinet of the King has been sharply reminded of its limitations, while the King himself must have realised that the persistent retention among his immediate entourage of politicians with a known anti-British bias will not make for the peaceful and prosperous development of Egypt under any conditions likely to prevail for a considerable period. It is unfortunate, of course, that there should be any connection at all between the events of the last few days and the Sudan question, but this is entirely the fault of the Commission which has been engaged in framing the new Egyptian Constitution, and which obstinately ignored—doubtless under Zaghoulouist pressure—the British stipulation that the question should be reserved for future discussion. A way out, may, perhaps, be found by a specific recognition of a continuance of the Anglo-Egyptian condominium in the Sudan.

Articles to Note.

"Ceylon Constitutional Reforms," by H. J. Temple; and "Lord Curzon and Lausanne," by H. Charles Woods, in the Fortnightly Review (March).

"The Indian Police Officer," by District Magistrate (retired), in the Empire Review (March).

"Lausanne and its Lessons," by Arden Hulme Beaman, in the Nineteenth Century (March).

A MONTENEGRIN GATHERING.

Among those present at a luncheon given on February 28 at Claridge's Hotel by Mr. Alex. Devine were Mr. Ronald McNeill, M.P., and Mrs. McNeill, Monsieur and Madame Jean Gennadius, Count de Salis, Brigadier-General Bruce, and Captain O. F. M. Ward. Mr. Devine is well known as a champion of the cause of the independence of Montenegro, and two of his guests were at one time prominently associated with the efforts made in this country in support of that cause. Count de Salis, formerly British Envoy to the Vatican, prepared a special report on Montenegrin affairs, and Mr. Ronald McNeill was one of the members of Parliament who continually pressed for the publication of that report. In reply to a question in the House of Commons last week, whether the Government would now publish the report of Count de Salis, Mr. McNeill, as Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, stated that the Government considered itself bound not to publish the report owing to the fact that it contains the names of witnesses who gave information under the pledge of the strictest secrecy and who might suffer from divulgations.

The Postmaster-General states that postal packets for Anatolia are liable to examination by the Turkish censorship authorities. Communications should be written in English, Turkish, French, or Italian, and should be as short as possible. The use of codes is not permitted. Registered letters are accepted only at the senders' risk.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF.

TURKEY YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY.

"THE TURKISH EMPIRE: ITS GROWTH AND DECAY." Second Edition. From 1288 to 1914, by Lord Eversley. From 1914 to 1922, by Sir Valentine Chirol. (London: T. Fisher Unwin, 21s. net.)

In the opinion of the present writer this book is possessed of two outstanding merits. Nothing comprehensive has been written on the question since the original publication of "The Turkish Empire," just over five years ago, when the author consulted all the existing authorities, and Sir Valentine Chirol, who now contributes five new chapters, brings the story right down to the Mudania Conference held so lately as October last. And then, whether we agree or disagree with the Gladstonian point of view of the principal author, he writes as a statesman rather than as a journalist or ordinary historian, and he discusses matters with which he has been intimately connected for many years.

As very few changes have been made in the main part of the book, it is sufficient to say here that the author outlines the manner in which the size of the Turkish Empire was increased under its first ten great Sultans and the way in which its importance decreased under their twenty-five successors. In undertaking and accomplishing these tasks Lord Eversley not only avails himself of his wide experience of world affairs, but he bases his remarks upon knowledge of the East gained during various visits paid to that quarter of Europe. He was present as a spectator during part of the Crimean War, and, two years later, he rode from Belgrade to Constantinople. Thirty years afterwards, and, therefore, when Abdul Hamid was well established on the throne, the author again went twice to the Near East, and he then compared the conditions with those prevailing in previous years. On those occasions he was greatly impressed by the remarkable change which had been effected in Greece and Bulgaria, and by the facts that in the latter country a progressive democratic Government had been established, a proper system of education had been inaugurated, and the construction of roads, harbours, and improvements of all kinds had already been begun.

To the average reader the later chapters of the book will be the most interesting. The events here chronicled took place during the period when Lord Eversley was an experienced eyewitness. Thus even if he looks at these developments as a man who obviously has no love for the Turk, the author gives a good account of the dreadful treatment of the Armenians, of the ever aggravating conditions under which Christians and Moslems lived, and of the way in which the whole country was overrun by spies in the time of Abdul Hamid. In this section of the book, too, Lord Eversley brings out several interesting points. After describing the deposition of Abdul Hamid, he gives it as a rumour that the German Emperor, who had already begun to intrigue with the Young Turks, made it a condition of their recognition that the life of the ex-Sovereign should be spared. This object was achieved, but the administration of the Committee was as bad as, if not worse than, that of Abdul Hamid, and the Turco-Italian war precipitated the Balkan campaigns. Lord Eversley has very little that is favourable to say in regard

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

to Bulgaria and those campaigns, but he is right in pointing out that the recovery of Adrianople redounded to the prestige of the Young Turks, who received the immediate congratulations of the German Emperor upon their success.

The original edition possessed the shortcoming that it contained practically no reference to the way in which Germany gradually brought Turkey under her control—a shortcoming, no doubt, resulting from the fact that perhaps it was not desirable, in the middle of the War, to admit the success of the German Emperor's intrigues in the East. This disadvantage has now been obliterated, for Sir Valentine Chirol begins his part of the volume with a masterly chapter, entitled "The Genesis of the Turkish-German Alliance." He traces the gradual growth of this friendship from the year 1880 until the outbreak of the War. There was economic and political activity on the part of Germany all over Turkey. William II. was prepared to condone the worst features of Hamidian policy, and he paid two State visits to the Sultan. The author goes on to show that, after the advent to power of the Young Turks, German ascendancy was only temporarily shaken; that Baron Marschall von Bieberstein "was probably the ablest and most skilful of all modern German diplomatists"; and that even subsequent to the setback caused by the results of the Balkan Wars, German officers and German supplies continued to stream into Turkey.

In four further chapters, occupying about fifty pages, Sir Valentine Chirol provides a brief though comprehensive survey of the events which occurred between the beginning of the War and the Mudania Convention. Here he rightly draws attention to the disastrous consequences of the manner in which the British Government requisitioned the two Turkish warships, then practically ready for delivery, and of the arrival of the Goeben and the Breslau at Constantinople.

It is impossible to follow Sir Valentine Chirol into all the interesting details which he provides. Nearly every page of this section of the book might be expanded into a chapter, and even if the author does not look with favour upon the aspirations of the Nationalists he explains very clearly the reasons which have led to the recovery of the Turkish nation. He admits that the Greek landing at Smyrna was bitterly resented by Turks of all parties; he alludes to the career of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, who had shown himself possessed of fine military qualities, during the War, and he refers to the Imperial Rescript and the Fetva, in which the Nationalists were denounced in 1920. And, whereas Sir Valentine Chirol is obviously loath to give any unnecessary encouragement to the Turks, he says, and this with reason, that, save for the fact of the Sultan's remaining at Constantinople, the terms of the Treaty of Sèvres could hardly have been more severe.

Under headings entitled "The Turkish Recovery" and "The Mudania Convention," the author sketches the events of the penultimate stage in this dreadful drama. The influence of the Constantinople Government grew more and more shadowy; the effect of the Allied declaration of neutrality in the Turco-Greek Campaign of 1921 was greatly minimised at Athens by assurances stated to have been given by Mr. Lloyd George, and the ex-Premier's speech of August last reacted upon Mustapha Kemal as a trumpet-call to action. A little later, thanks to Lord Curzon's efforts, unity was more or less restored between the Allies, and the Note then despatched to Angora "constituted the first formal acknowledgment that the Treaty of Sèvres was finally scrapped and that the Allies had agreed to leave Greece to pay the full penalty of the disastrous adventure upon which they themselves had at first launched her. . . ." The situation of last autumn was saved by the wisdom and self-restraint displayed by Sir Charles Harington, and, at Mudania, Turkey "was resuscitated, and resuscitated in a blaze of military glory, which, however cheaply earned, could not fail to vindicate, in the eyes of the East, her claim to be regarded as the triumphant sword of Islam and the spearhead of the Asian revolt against the West."

In conclusion, it is only necessary to add that if "The Turkish Empire" contains certain minor inaccuracies, it is none the less a volume which will live. Indeed, its merit is proved by the fact that Sir Valentine Chirol agreed to perform a task which Lord Eversley was unable to undertake owing to his great age, and by the fact that it is cited as an authority by Dr. Stanley Lane Poole in his new edition of "Turkey" in the "Story of Nations" series. H. C. W.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"A Chapter of Misfortunes"—The Battles of Ctesiphon and of the Dujailah, in Mesopotamia, with a Summary of the Events which Preceded Them. By Major-General W. D. Bird, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O. (London: Forster, Groom and Co., Ltd. 8s. 6d. net. Postage abroad, 6d.)

"The Mystification of the Allied Peoples. Why? How? By Whom?" By André Chéradame. Translated by John A. FitzGerald. Containing 36 maps and facsimiles. (Evreux: Ch. Hérissey Press. 12s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 6d.)

"Journal of the Manchester Egyptian and Oriental Society." No. X. (London: Longmans, Green and Co. 7s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 2d.)

"Privilege." By Michael Sadleir. (London: Constable and Co. Reprint. 3s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 4d. extra.)

THE FATHER OF SLOVENE LIBERALISM.

Our Liubliana Correspondent writes (February 25):—

By the death of Dr. Ivan Tavtšar on February 20, Yugoslavia, and Slovenia in particular, has lost one of the most striking figures in Slovene public life. Dr. Tavtšar was a brilliant speaker, successful in politics, a famous author, an admirable journalist and stylist—beyond all doubt one of the best sons of the Slovene people. But what specially endeared him to the whole people, friends and opponents alike, was the sterling integrity of his character, contrasting sharply—especially in these days—with so much in the world around him.

Ivan Tavtšar was born in 1851, at a village not far from Liubliana, the son of an old-established peasant family. He studied law in Vienna; in 1884 he helped to found the Young Slovene Party; in 1900 he was elected member of the Austrian Parliament, and in 1911 Mayor of Liubliana. The last-mentioned position he held throughout the War, despite dangers and difficulties. His two greatest services to the nation were: first, that he founded Slovene Liberalism; and, second, that he saved the towns of Carniola from the tide of Germanisation. In every way and direction he laboured steadfastly and hopefully to preserve the national character of Slovenia. In order to abate the evil of litigation among the Slovene peasants, he wrote the legal standard work, "The Slovene Jurist," with special regard to the needs of the peasant class. More even than as a politician, Tavtšar deserves to be remembered as an author. Two of his novels at least ("Flowers in Autumn" and "Chronicles of Visoko") are already recognised as Slovene classics, and would be well worth translating on account of the excellence of style and freshness of sentiment.

MARLBOROUGH'S SELF-TAUGHT SERIES OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGE BOOKS.

	Containing
	Travel Talk.	Classified Vocabularies.	Officials' Ranks and Titles.	Cloth.	Wrapper.
	Railway.	Conversations.	Shooting and Fishing.
	Steamboat.	Commercial Terms.	Pronunciation.
	Hotel.	Grammar.	Money, etc.
		Cloth. Wrapper.
'HINDUSTANI	4/0	3/0	'BURMESE	6/0	5/0
SINHALESE	4/0	3/0	PERSIAN	4/0	3/0
TAMIL	4/0	3/0	GUJARATI	4/6	3/6

* Contain Military and Naval Terms.

Sold by all BOOKSELLERS. Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.
London: E. MARLBOROUGH & CO., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

March 8 (New Style).
February 23 (Old Style).
Ragab 20, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.
Adar 20, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Mr. Ronald Storrs, who returned from America last week, left for Jerusalem on March 6.

Mr. W. D. Matthews, British Consul at Constantinople, has returned to Inverness on leave.

Viscount and Viscountess Goschen returned to 25, Rutland Gardens yesterday from Algeria and Morocco.

Lady Lamington has returned to 26, Wilton Crescent, from Florence, and will remain in London for some time.

Mrs. Leggett and Mrs. Sturges have left St. Jean, Cap Ferrat, in the Mauretania, for Constantinople and Egypt.

Prince and Princess Christopher and Prince and Princess Andrew of Greece will leave New York on March 20 for Paris.

Colonel M. S. MacDonnell, who, since 1919, has been Governor of Western Egypt, has now entered on his new duties as High Commissioner of the League for the Danzig Free State.

Mr. D. M. Dalal, the newly appointed High Commissioner for India, and the first Indian to hold the office, will not assume charge of the London office until the beginning of April.

On February 2, at 5, Park Crescent, Worthing, a son was born to Inis, the wife of Mr. Nigel G. Davidson, Legal Secretary to the High Commissioner for Irak, and for some years in the service of the Sudan Government.

The Bulgarian Minister in London, M. Stancioff, who is also accredited to the Dutch Government, left for The Hague last Thursday, on the occasion of the King of Sweden's official visit to Holland. M. Stancioff returned to London on March 5.

"Journeyings in the Northern Provinces of Persia" will form the subject of a lecture to be given before the Persia Society, at 74, Grosvenor Street, W.1, next Wednesday (March 14), at 5.30 p.m., by Mr. L. C. Fortescue. The lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides.

To celebrate the entrance of Prince Nicolas of Roumania into the British Navy, M. Titulescu, the Roumanian Minister in London, gave a luncheon party last Friday at 50, Grosvenor Street. Mme. Titulescu gave a dance on March 5 in honour of Prince Nicolas, who to-morrow is to join H.M.S. Benbow at Chatham.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

A Public Lecture entitled "CUSTOMARY LAW IN THE PUNJAB" will be given by Mr. S. WILBERFORCE (late Puisne Judge of the Lahore High Court) at the LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS (Houghton Street, Aldwych, W.C.2.), on THURSDAY, MARCH 22nd, 1923, at 5.30 p.m. The Chair will be taken by Sir Charles Bayley, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., Member of the Council of India. Syllabus obtainable on application to the undersigned. ADMISSION FREE, WITHOUT TICKET.

EDWIN DELLER, Academic Registrar.

General Sir Charles C. Monro, Bt., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., Aide-de-camp general to the King, has been appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief, Gibraltar, in succession to General Sir Horace L. Smith-Dorrien, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.S.O., who vacates his appointment in September next.

Among the passengers in the P. and O. express which left London on March 1 to connect at Marseilles with the s.s. Mantua were Sir Alexander Kennedy, for Port Said, and Sir Chettur Sankaran Nayar, for Bombay. Major Allan and Lady Honor Bridgeman, who are proceeding to Bombay, joined the special boat-train at Paris.

Sir Reginald Craddock (upon relinquishing his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Burma) and Sir William Vincent (upon relinquishing his appointment as Home Member of the Executive Council of the Viceroy and Governor-General of India) had the honour of being received by the King at Buckingham Palace on March 3.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—

NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.

LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.

FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.

LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.

6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October.

Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.

Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."

Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.

Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.

All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.

Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1923.

REALITIES OF INDIAN FINANCE.

India, like most other countries, has of late been in a position of great financial difficulty. The causes which have been in operation are too well known to require restatement in detail. An impoverished Europe has been unable to buy what the country had to sell: an inexperienced Legislature has shrunk from the stern measures needed to restore the equilibrium of the Budget; bad seasons in the past have reduced the national income, and it must be admitted that the management of the finances has at times left much to be desired. The result is seen in the summary of the Budget statement which was issued last week. Heavy additional taxation was imposed a year ago but nevertheless there is a very serious deficit, which is now calculated at $17\frac{1}{2}$ crores of rupees, a unit which, at the current rate of exchange, may be taken as about £670,000; in other words, expenditure is expected to exceed income by nearly 10 per cent., a result which is very bad for India, though it may possibly excite the envy of some countries nearer home. Sir Basil Blackett, the new Finance Member, has set out boldly to restore equilibrium, and the interest of the Budget lies in the measures which he proposes for this purpose. Speaking broadly, he hopes to get rid of two-thirds of the deficit by economies in expenditure, while one-fourth is to be covered by doubling the salt tax, and the balance is obtained by appropriating, for the occasion, the interest accruing on the reserve fund of about forty millions sterling, which is held as a security for the maintenance of the gold standard. This last measure may be accepted as a reasonable temporary expedient, for the capital sum available is at least sufficient so long as the gold standard does not exist, and the Budget shows that its restoration is not at present contemplated. The increase proposed in the salt tax strikes us as certainly good finance, but possibly bad politics. It is the easiest and least inequitable course open at the moment, and the only question is whether it is likely to be accepted by a Legislature which has not yet developed a just sense of financial responsibility, and which has shortly to face the constituencies with very little material for a popular appeal. The onus, however, is placed on the elected members, and for the moment there is nothing more to be said.

As regards the reductions in expenditure, which incorporate at least the bulk of the proposals made by the Inchcape Committee, the facts so far published are insufficient for a final verdict, but it may be well to indicate the principles by which, in our judgment, they can best be tested. One half of the total reduction is made in military expenditure, and its realisation depends, we are told, on "substantial reductions in the strength of British and Indian troops." According to recent expert opinion, the army in India has of late been barely sufficient for its task, and consequently this reduction in strength must mean either that the magnitude of the task has diminished, or that a very grave risk is to be taken. It has been usual to speak of military expenditure as analogous to an insurance premium, but the present proposal is not merely to reduce the premium paid, but to scrap part of the appliances which are now available to cope with a conflagration, appliances which are in thoroughly good order, and which cannot be improvised in emergency. We shall, therefore await with some anxiety the Commander-in-Chief's exposition of this portion of the Budget. If he is able to assure the Legislature that the risk of a conflagration has diminished, whether in India itself, on the borders, or beyond, to such an extent that the proposals are safe, we shall accept his statement as the best news that has come from India for a long time; but if no such assurance can be given, we shall be left with the poor consolation that the Government of India will be responsible for any results which may ensue when the fact of the reduction, magnified tenfold, or perhaps fiftyfold, by popular rumour, penetrates to the predatory elements of Asia. The reductions in civil expenditure stand on an entirely different footing, and, in our opinion, they should be judged mainly by their influence on the earning power of the country. As we argued at length a year ago, immediate Budget equilibrium will not be the end of India's difficulties. There is urgent need of vast additional expenditure, which can be defrayed only out of a progressive increase in the aggregate of individual incomes, and momentary equilibrium may be too dearly purchased if it is secured at the expense of future development. We shall then welcome any measures which promise a reduction in items like the cost of clerks or secretaries, luxurious provision for legislators, or even refinements of higher education, such as the Central Government has recently been inclined to favour, but we shall condemn any curtailment in technical progress, or in those branches of research on which the economic future so largely depends.

The particulars which have so far been issued throw little light on the bearings of the central Budget on national earning power. The provision of $38\frac{1}{2}$ crores for capital outlay on railways may be taken as satisfactory for the time, but, on the other hand, there are apparently to be reductions in the rate of development of postal and telegraphic communications which may prove to be injurious. It is, however, mainly to the provincial Budgets that we must turn for information on this question, and here the outlook is gloomy, for it is common knowledge that the scarcity of capital is holding up many projects which would pay directly, and at the same time add largely and progressively to the income of the people. This fact leads us straight to the centre of the whole financial problem. We may take it that the provinces could, among them, usefully spend on such projects a maximum of 50 crores annually, or, say, a crore a week, if they could get the money on reasonable terms. In fact, they cannot get it, yet India is just now spending precisely that amount—a crore a week—on the purchase of foreign gold, which she will either put back into the ground whence it came, or hang in useless fetters on her neck. Until this national vice is eradicated the fundamental difficulty will remain, and the national income cannot rise in proportion to the national needs. Its eradication was not attempted by the despotic Governments of the past, and the task lies ready to the hands of the members of the new popular Legislatures. If they can divert the surplus income of the people to productive uses, they may hope to move forward steadily along the path of progress; so long as the surplus income is wasted on gold or silver or precious stones, the spectre of national poverty must continue to preside over their deliberations.

MOHARRAM AND ITS PASSION PLAY IN BAGHDAD.

By E. S. STEVENS.

Moharram is just over*—"without incident." This is always a matter of congratulation for the police, upon whom the business devolves of keeping order among the excited and fanatical crowds brought together by Moharram, and tactfully and cleverly they perform their duties. A Persian flagellant dead of his austerities; an indiscreet Jew mauled a little—these were the only casualties this year. The Turks in their day allowed no Moharram processions or ceremonies in Baghdad, and restricted all observances to Kazimain. And at Kazimain, with its golden-domed shrine, the observance of the ten days of Moharram culminates on the tenth day, when all Shiah Baghdad streams out at sunrise to the shrine-suburb four miles away. Only in the precincts of the great Kazimain mosque may devotees wound themselves with swords, and even the number of cuts is restricted by the police to three on the head! A phlegmatic policeman stands at the big gate of the shrine and collects the swords from the hands of the bloodstained and excited fanatics as they rush one by one into the street, as coolly as a ticket collector takes tickets at a railway station.

Night after night in Moharram the drums sound and the processions gather together; night after night one may watch from the roof the glow of torches in the narrow streets; night after night devotees beat their breasts and flog their bare backs with chains. But the demonstrations gain in fervour as Moharram wears on, and the last three days are an orgy of religious fervour and devotion culminating in the Passion Play in Baghdad on the ninth afternoon, and the processions and Passion Play (a repetition of that in Baghdad) on the tenth day in Kazimain.

Those who have visited Moslem India and Arab countries, of course, know that the first ten days of Moharram are devoted to the memory of the tragedy of Kerbela, when Hussein, drawn from Mecca by the entreaties of the Kufans and their promise to support him if he would make an effort to wrest the Khalifate from the usurper Yezid, came across the desert with his family and a few adherents, to find that the fickle people of Kufa had lost heart and were ranked with his enemies. Hopelessly outnumbered, and cut off from the river so that they were unable to assuage their thirst, the hapless Hussein and his adherents were slaughtered on the field of Kerbela, which has ever since been a place of mourning. To the Sunni this was merely a "regrettable incident," but the Shiah, devoted to Ali and his house, works himself into a frenzy of grief when he remembers the cruel betrayal of Hussein, son of Ali and grandson of the Prophet.

Shimr, to whom tradition ascribes the actual slaying of Hussein, is execrated bitterly, and with him those who led the forces of the Ommayad usurper against the martyrs. "Shimr," said a little Shiah maiden to me, "is the worst man in the world—except Shaitan there is no one as evil."

Some Sunnis courteously gave us permission to view the processions from the roof of a mosque which, situated in a roomy square into which a number of narrow streets from other quarters converge, gave us a good view of the various processions as they came up and passed through the square. The streets and coffee-houses were already crowded with spectators as we drove up, just before nine, and every roof was edged with black-veiled women gazing below.

The frequenters—or, as we should say, "congregation"—of each mosque get up a procession for themselves, so that one may see as many as six or seven separate processions in one quarter in a night. There is, naturally, rivalry, and thus the maximum of effort is produced by each band of devotees. There is little collaboration between the processions, with the result that one may have to wait in a side street while another is passing through the square, and it is possible to witness, as we did several processions at once from a vantage point such as the flat roof of our mosque—flagellants chanting and scourging themselves beneath in one street: half-naked breast-beaters in another, their arms moving upward like flails in the torchlight and coming down on their bare breasts with a savage thud, and in a third the solemn splendour of Hussein and his horsemen with sacred banners, green and gold, and tall standards of wrought metal. But all eventually pass through the square, and it is better to sit on the strip of roof which dominates it. The smoky glare of the torches and petroleum flares, the fitful thunder of the drums, the chanting, the strident noise of the brass instruments, and, above all, the long, shrill wails of the women on the housetops, make it easy to believe one is witnessing a scene of Dante's Inferno. Some of these souls in torment, however, on this seventh night are merely teigning torment. The chain-men do not flay their backs with great vigour, and the breast-beaters' chests, though bruised, are not broken and bleeding as happens on the two last days. They are reserving their greatest efforts till then. Occasionally a devotee will pause and light a cigarette or fall out to take a cup of coffee as it is offered from the crowd.

The order of the procession varies, but is roughly as follows:—First of all come torch-bearers, then the mash-al, a wooden crossbar mounted on a pole, about fifteen feet across, to which are affixed some twenty tin sockets. Into these rags soaked in petroleum are stuffed, and are fed with oil from a can while still alight. Showers of sparks and burning pieces fall on the crowd perpetually, setting some unfortunate person a-smoulder, or the mash-al holder himself, whose garments and turban are permanently charred. There are usually people suffering from burns in hospital after Moharram, and houses often catch fire in the narrow streets. Sometimes the mash-al bearer dances and whirls the flaming thing round, sending down showers of fire. The torches are made of oil-rag, flares on long poles. The kerosene is carried in skins on a donkey or in tins in a push-cart so that the flares are never suffered to die down. Drums precede the procession, and each section has its own drums. The flagellants scourge themselves to the beat of the drum; as it quickens, their blows rain faster.

Next come led horses, heavily caparisoned and draped with embroideries, and often bearing steel helmets transfixed by arrows. Later on in Moharram, Hussein's steed is covered by a blood-stained sheet transfixed by numerous darts. Then come Hussein, his brother Abbas, his family, and his followers, riding on more caparisoned horses. Hussein and Abbas wear splendid armour, usually old Persian armour inlaid with gold and silver, borrowed from curio-dealers, or kept in store from one year to the next, some of it extremely fine. All the followers of Hussein are clothed in green. Qasim, Hussein's cousin, is usually played by a handsome youth, for his wedding was to have been held on the day of battle in which he was slain, and his bridal bed decorated with silken hangings and lamps, and a gay lit model of the bridal chamber (El Gubba) are borne in this part of the procession. A cradle in pink represents the suckling Abdullah, and there is a child or two on led horses (one tiny boy sprawled fast asleep on the neck of his).

A section of breast-beaters or chain-flagellants follows, and then Shimr and his following on horseback. Red is their colour, and their armour is as fine as Hussein's. Breast-beaters are men of finer physique than the chain-men, and are naked to the waist. They are mostly men of low class—boatmen, porters, labourers, and the like. They do not beat themselves continually, but at intervals their leader turns and faces them, calls a halt, and in a wild, rapid chant, incites them to effort. Or they utter short exclamations such as "Ali! Ali!" or "Hussein! Hussein!" The pace gradually increases and becomes fiercer till suddenly, at a second signal, they stop and move on, often linking arms and chanting as they go. On the eighth night I watched a crowd of some fifty Kurdi breast-beaters. They kept up the beating for more than half-an-hour, and there was no half-heartedness about it. Their arms were tossed aloft and brought down with all their might, and the noise made one think instinctively of the gorilla in Africa who drums upon his mighty breasts at the approach of a foe. A few sympathisers hang about the ranks of the fanatics and slap themselves gently with one hand in token of fellow-feeling.

* Written in 1922.

The evening terminates each night with a "Muharaba"—a mock battle of Kerbela preceded by a short colloquy between the two parties.

The processions on the eighth night are more elaborate. The "corpses" of Hussein, Abbas, Abdulah, and others are borne along and work the beholders to a frenzy of grief. The hands and feet of the "corpse" protrude from the blood-stained shroud, and where the body is headless, a bloody stump, the actor's own head being covered by the sheet. The corpse of Hussein is guarded by two tethered doves, their feathers dabbled in blood, and on his bier sits a little girl representing his daughter, her hair dishevelled and strewn with earth and grass, wailing and flinging her arms over the body.

Shimr is attended by walking acolytes dressed in scarlet, who blow heavenwards, like the priests of Jericho, enormous wooden trumpets with bell-shaped mouths. The trumpets only produce a little bleat of discordant sound, but Shimr is never seen without his trumpeters. Peacock feathers adorn the head-pieces of the villains of the piece. Yezid is not in armour, neither is the false Kufan Abdullah ibn Ziad under his scarlet umbrella, but they wear red from head to foot. Omar ibn Sa'd and the troops in scarlet uniform follow, the two children of Muslim dressed in green, tied by scarlet ropes and led by Harmala. Another heretic warrior leads bound together a number of captive children who carry triangular wooden halters and pretend to cry and shrink. Lastly, among the Ommayyads one sees the Frank, the Christian. There is a legend that a Christian in Kufa sympathised with Hussein, and eventually joined him and fought with him. The Christian wears a hat or a sun-helmet, a uniform, spectacles, and almost invariably bears a black umbrella and wears gloves. He rides on horseback. Last of all the train come the Bedouin horsemen. Mingling pell-mell with the crowd run little boys with high, painted paper hats, representing Jinns and evil spirits.

More flags and squads of flagellants follow.

The "chain-men" wear a curious uniform of black cotton, the backs of which are entirely cut out from the top of the shoulder to the waist. They go bare-headed, and on the ninth and tenth days smear their heads and faces with clay, and wear shrouds which, often stained with their blood, become treasured possessions kept for the day of their own burial. The scourges are bunches of chains fixed into brass handles, and are manipulated with both hands, while the flagellant jerks each shoulder alternately forward to receive the blow. Boys have smaller scourges, and tiny boys are seen among the flagellants keeping perfect time with the others and joining in the monotonous chant.

A TRANS-DESERT RAILWAY.

On February 22, at the Royal United Service Institution, Major A. L. Holt lectured to the Central Asian Society on "Some Journeys in the Syrian Desert." His main endeavour was to describe the route of the projected railway from Iraq to the Hejaz, though he scattered about his lecture some illuminating details on general desert life. His address throughout was illustrated with extremely fine lantern slides.

Major Holt began by estimating the respective values of the three means of travelling in the desert—the camel, the car (Ford or Crossley), and the aeroplane. He, himself, at the time of his survey work in the Syrian desert could get no more than forty miles a day out of his camels, and consequently preferred the last two means of transport. Much of the projected line lay through quite unexplored country, and in deciding upon it supreme consideration had naturally to be given to the question of water, not for the sake of the locomotives, the lecturer explained, but for the small group of the various station-staffs. The line itself was north of the Royal Air Force route from Baghdad to Amman, and of its security from marauding Arabs Major Holt had little doubt. The sleepers would be either steel or iron, so that all incentive to rob would be removed.

In response to various comments and questions made, among others, by General Lubbock, Jaafer Pasha, Colonel Leveson-Gower, and Major Burton, the lecturer showed that the line could be made a commercial success within, say, four or five years. Not only would it provide an outlet for the goods of Persia and of Irak, but it would enormously increase the traffic of pilgrims. Seven hundred miles by land compared with 2,000 miles by water was an unquestionable advantage. In concordance with the railways in Persia the metre gauge would probably be adopted.

A well-attended dinner was given at the Hotel Cecil last Thursday to celebrate the fifth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of the Independence of Afghanistan. The Afghan Minister (Sirdar Abdul Hadi Khan) presided, and amongst the guests were the French, Belgian, and Japanese Ambassadors, the Persian, Roumanian, Hungarian, Esthonian, and Argentine Ministers, Lord Lamington, and Lord Headley.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO

THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

The Budget.

From the references to the coming Budget in the Government Press it would seem that there is but a small prospect of a reduction of the income-tax on this occasion. The corporation profits tax, it appears, is to be abolished, beer drinkers are to benefit (I must add that I view the question from no Pussyfoot standpoint); there is to be a reduction of the tax on sugar, and one or two minor concessions are to be given. Such are the forecasts. On the other hand, one cannot help noting that week by week the surplus in the current year's Budget is increasing; it is now somewhere in the region of 80 million; and will be substantially larger by the time that the Budget is introduced. In the circumstances one would think that the Chancellor would find it possible to grant the one concession for which all are looking. Frankly, if the Budget, whatever else it contains, does not provide for a reduction of at least 6d. in the tax (one hopes for more!) I shall be profoundly disappointed.

Indian Finance.

This year's Indian Financial Statement is of special interest. For a considerable period Indian finances have been in an unsatisfactory condition. The revised Budget estimates of the past year provided for a deficit of about £6,000,000, but, owing to the decrease in revenue as a result of the prevailing commercial conditions, it would seem probable that the actual deficit on the year will be nearer double that total. Even so, that would be scarcely more than half of the deficit of the previous year. In endeavouring to balance the Budget the new Finance Member, Sir Basil Blackett, has had no light task, and whether he has succeeded remains to be seen. It was not possible fully to carry out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee in the current Budget, but in various directions the suggestions of this body have been utilised, and the estimated expenditure amounts to 204 1-3 crores, at which total there is a reduction of 11 crores on the previous Budget. The estimated revenue is 198½ crores, there being thus a deficit of rather over 5½ crores. To balance the Budget it is proposed to transfer to the revenue the interest on securities held on account of currency reserves, and to double the salt duty—a proposal made last year and subsequently rejected. The yield from the increase in the salt duty is estimated at 4½ crores, which would leave a small favourable balance on the estimates. It remains to be seen whether the increase in the salt duty is accepted by the Legislative Assembly, but even if it is it must not be too hastily assumed that India's financial difficulties are at an end. The problem has been throughout one of coping with a continually falling revenue. Is the trade position now so stable as far as India is concerned that one can be certain that this year also the revenue will not belie expectations?

Success of the Fair.

It is eminently satisfactory to be able to record that this year's British Industries Fair has been a most distinct success. There never was any doubt that the Birmingham section would show good results, but the position was not so certain with regard to the White City section, because, as I have pointed out, the exhibits there consisted to a considerable extent of what may be called luxury articles. The latter section, which, by the way, has come in for a certain amount of criticism, has fully justified its existence by the volume of business that has been done, and the fact that such favourable results have been forthcoming speaks volumes as to the general improvement that is taking place in the trade position.

Goods in Demand.

Business at the White City, it may be explained, was good not merely in one or two sections; in almost every division of the Fair there was the same story of excellent orders that had been booked. But in certain sections the activity was more pronounced than in others. Specially favourable results were obtained in the musical instrument section, in that devoted to pottery, chinaware, etc., and in the leather and leather goods section. The trade done in the first of these sections was remarkable and surprising. A brisk demand was in evidence for pianos, while a very large order was placed for gramophones. In another section well over a hundred orders from new customers were booked by one firm. Another section in which the exhibitors had every reason to feel satisfied with themselves was that devoted to chemicals and dyes. When one considers that trade has not long been on the mend, and that large markets are still inaccessible, it must be admitted that the results of the Fair have come fully up to expectations.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON. E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

Competition with the Exhibition.

Before leaving the subject of this year's Fair I cannot refrain from expressing the view that it is more than a little unfortunate that it has not been arranged to hold next year's Fair at the same time as the British Empire Exhibition. The White City Fair of 1924 is to end on February 29, while the Exhibition will, of course, be held in the summer. It is too much to suppose that buyers will make two journeys from abroad to these undertakings. Most of them will do nothing of the kind, and either the Fair or the Exhibition will suffer. By making the dates coincide and by holding the White City section at Wembley it would be possible to make the most of both Fair and Exhibition.

Albania's Mineral Resources.

The article on the mineral resources of Albania by our Tirana Correspondent will no doubt surprise many people who regarded Albania as a region with very limited potentialities. The investigations of M. Ineichen have made it very evident that Albania possesses mineral resources of considerable, and possibly extreme, importance, the adequate utilisation of which will, in the most literal sense, alter the face of the country. In a number of cases the deposits have been worked for some time, and their value is not in question; in others the deposits have yet to be proved. While M. Ineichen however, is reserved regarding the commercial value of the minerals he has investigated, it is obvious from what he says that in all probability Albania will shortly be receiving very marked attention on the part of concession hunters.

Dried Cherries.

The variety of the inquiries that from time to time reach this office is very interesting, and some of the questions, it may be added, take a good deal of answering. I would instance one that reached me the other day from a reader who required details as to the market in this country for dried cherries from a Balkan destination. The usual trade channels have been tried, but without result, for none of the firms approached hold out any hope in regard to the disposal of this commodity in the British market. Perhaps some of my readers in the dried fruit trade will let me have their views on the subject.

COMMENTATOR.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL - - - - - Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES - - - - - 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.
Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).
Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja),
Craiova and Ploesti.
Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL - - - - - 60,000,000 Lei.
Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.
Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.
Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY.

GREECE.

Athens, February 24.

The New Taxes.

In addition to the cutting down of staffs and all unnecessary expenses, the Government, in its effort to reconstruct the public finance of Greece, has instituted many new taxes, the principal of which are the following:—

A tax varying from 3 to 15 per cent. on all capital and property of a value of 50,000 drachmæ and upwards. This tax, which will also affect foreign companies operating in Greece (but not foreign or Greek capital imported from abroad), is payable by instalments within five years, and Government circles estimate that it will yield about 1,500,000,000 drachmæ.

An increase of the tax on tobacco consumed in Greece of 24 drachmæ per kilogramme for the first quality, 16 drachmæ for the second quality, and 8 drachmæ for the third quality. It is hoped that this new tax will yield 100,000,000 drachmæ.

The present tax on spirits of wine and alcohol of wine has been increased to 10 drachmæ per litre, with a further supplementary tax of 7.40 drachmæ for spirits of wine and 3.70 drachmæ for alcohol of wine.

Further, the duty on spirits and alcohol imported from abroad has been increased fivefold. However, the duty on alcohol imported from abroad to be mixed with the wine for local consumption has been reduced by half.

From 1/14th of January, 1923, dealers in alcohol are forbidden to supply distillers with any imported molasses. The control on molasses will continue until all the present stocks and those which are now on their way to this country are used up. Two-thirds of the alcohol thus obtained must be transformed into methylated spirits, the remainder to be mixed with wine. A tax of 5 drachmæ per head on sheep and goats, and 12 drachmæ per head on pigs is imposed. It is estimated that these new taxes on alcohol, sheep, goats, and pigs will bring in 130,000,000 drachmæ per annum.

The present tax on acetylene produced in this country or imported from abroad is doubled. The tax on fares abroad is doubled; also the tax on all premiums of insurance companies. The tax on insurance companies commencing operations in Greece is also doubled. A tax has been imposed on all first-class hotels, boarding-houses, restaurants, and any other establishment where meals or teas are served. These establishments will also pay a further tax of 10 per cent. on their net daily takings. All establishments displaying signboards in a foreign language are heavily taxed.

Regulations Regarding Gold.

A decree has been published concerning the regulating of obligations in gold, as well as gold deposits at present in the various banks. According to this decree, all debts in gold and deposits in gold in the banks will be repaid in paper drachmæ at par value, namely, 25 drachmæ to the pound, the gold being handed in to the National Bank of Greece and placed to the credit of the State. The total of these gold deposits and debts is estimated at 100,000,000 drachmæ, and so far 54,000,000 drachmæ have been handed over by the principal banks here. The above decree does not apply to deposits or obligations in cheques.

The Greek Moratorium Law has been further extended to March 31.

The traffic receipts of the Suez Canal from February 17 to 23 amounted to 3,860,000 francs, as compared with 3,900,000 for the corresponding period of last year.

THE MINERALS OF ALBANIA.

(From Our Tirana Correspondent.)

A comprehensive report has been drawn up by the engineer, M. Giovanni Ineichen, in the service of the Albanian Government, on the mineral riches of Albania, which he has been investigating for more than a year. M. Ineichen has been able to take advantage of previous researches, notably those made by the Austrian and Italian authorities during their occupation of Albania (1914-1920). The report has been summarised, translated into Albanian, and published in the form of a brochure by the Ministry of Public Works at Tirana. The following is an epitome of the work, in the preparation of which recourse has been had to M. Ineichen's manuscript of 180 pages.

Ever since the Roman period the bitumen mine of Selenitza, ten miles east of Valona, has been one of the richest bitumen deposits known and worked both for the purity of the material and for its chemical composition. It is equally useful for distillation purposes as for employment in building. By distillation, 50 per cent. of crude oil can be extracted.

It is probably very little known that in 1875 Turkey granted the concession for this mine for twenty years to Mr. Mayers on behalf of a British company. Ten years later the concession was renewed by Imperial Decree for a period of seventy-five years; but the following year (August, 1886) it was transferred to the name of Foster Morgan, director of the Imperial Ottoman Bank at Constantinople. In July, 1891, the concession was entered in the name of the bank; in September of that year it passed into the hands of the Société des Mines de Sélénitza, with its head office in Paris. During the Great War, in July, 1918, the rights of this company were ceded to the Società Italiana delle Miniere di Selenitza, with its head office in Rome.

The deposits of bitumen at Selenitza are very rich. The production attained 4,000 tons per annum in the period from 1899 to 1913. Since the war the yield has decreased, despite the trade demand; but it is capable of being doubled or trebled. It may be mentioned here that in May last the Italian company made a contract with the Albanian Government by which the rights that the French company had ceded to it have been recognised by Albania with the obligation to construct a Decauville line from Selenitza to Valona and a quay at Valona, which will facilitate and increase trading operations.

Griba Iron and Mameliaj Coal.

The Griba mountain and the village of Mameliaj are west and north-west of Tepeleni, on the left bank of the Vjosa. M. Ineichen thinks that the development of the iron mines and coalfields (situated near to one another) is destined to give a remarkable importance to all this region. The presence of iron in the Griba mountain is proved by the large quantity of limonite, in the form of fine powder or mixed with clay, which is found as an outcrop, lias and mesozoic strata, resembling the iron deposits of Lorraine, of the Meurthe and Moselle, and of Luxemburg. The samples taken show the great richness of the iron content, but nothing can be assumed regarding the industrial value of the mines before borings have been carried out and test wells examined. However, the extent of the territory, the relative proximity to the sea, the possible utilisation of the Vjosa as a navigable way, and especially the proximity of iron and coal mines on the same site, give very great value to this part of Albania, which is destined beyond doubt to become in the near future an industrial centre of the greatest importance.

The centre of the coal deposits is situated at Mameliaj, to the north of Tepeleni. Already on the Vjosa, as a result of the erosion of the water, a seam of coal two metres in thickness has been revealed. The Italian Navy and Army had commenced to exploit this coal during the occupation of Albania, digging a well and two tunnels and establishing a depot at Dukaj, on the road from Tepeleni to Valona. It has been established as a fact that this coal was utilised in the submarines of the Italian fleet as well as for the manufacture of lime. Chemical analysis of this coal has yielded the following percentages:—Hygroscopic water, 0.98; mineral substances (ashes), 6.16; volatile matter, 44.64; fixed carbon (coke), 49.12. The calorific capacity is from 6,500 to 7,000 thermal units. This analysis proves that the coke is of excellent quality, of the type called thick anthracite. One cannot yet give any definite indication of the commercial importance of the deposits, but it is known that the area of the deposits is a wide one, extending from the valley of Leftinia to that of Benca and, as already stated, they offer exceptional advantages for industrial exploitation owing to their proximity to the sea and the navigability of the Vjosa.

Metal Deposits of Puka.

There is a small hamlet called Gryka e Kabashit, twenty-five miles east of Scutari. This locality is the centre of an area of several square kilometres, where various minerals are found as an outcrop. This is the sub-prefecture of Puka. Near Narel village there is copper, and traces have been found of the exploitation by the Austrians during their stay in Albania (1916-1918). At a little distance from the said locality, at Perroj Medes, north-west of Narel, copper is again encountered. On the south side, at Gumina, M. Ineichen found pyrites. To the west, 9 kilometres away, at Mali Cajes, he discovered ferruginous formations and arsenic. The iron which is to be noted in the trias and lias strata is in the form of pyrites, limonite and hematite; sometimes the mineral presents itself in the form of magnetite associated with sulphur. Arsenic is met with to the east of Kalaja e Dalmaces, in the form of realgar and orpiment. In the present state of our knowledge it is difficult to express an opinion on the industrial value of these veins; one cannot say whether the metals which usually accompany arsenic (such as mercury, gold, tin, and tungsten) exist or not in this part of Albania.

What is certain is the richness and importance of the copper deposits, traces of which are visible over a vast area, from Mirdita to Narel. The compounds of the copper that is found are malachite, azurite, and brochantite, accompanied by manganiferous colorations in a strata of cyst. The exploitation of the mines of Puka will be facilitated by two important factors—the abundant forests at hand to supplement the mining operations, and the utilisation of the Drin as a means of navigation and transport.

Thus far the report of M. Ineichen. The following information may be added, to complete this

GOAT, SHEEPSKINS, KIPS, HIDES & LEATHER

Correspondence is invited from Merchants and Collectors of all Countries desirous of marketing Hides and Skins in Great Britain. Consignment or Purchase. All Enquiries promptly replied to. Leather Goods of all kinds for Exportation.

FLEMING & CO. (Bermondsey) LTD., Leather Factors & Importers, White's Grounds, Bermondsey St., London, S.E.1.
Telegrams—Flemmatico, Berm. London

short review of the position in Albania. Extensive beds of coal are to be found south of Koritza; the veins begin at a distance of three kilometres from the town, and run as far as Kolonia and even to Kourvelesh, east of Himara. It is a lignite very rich in volatile substances, and giving 4,000 calories. This fuel, being so very rich in mineral matter (ash) and sulphur, will be much utilised for distillation.

The lignite that is to be found south of Tirana, at Kraba, is rich in other respects. It gives 5,000 calories, does not contain sulphur, is deficient of mineral matter, and rich in volatile substances. The beds of this coal attain in certain places a thickness of more than two metres, and the geological configuration leads to the supposition that the beds stretch even under the level of Tirana. Lignite is met with again at the foot of Mount Daiti, east of Tirana, and to the north-east of the town, at Kamza, but it is a coal not yet completely formed.

To the south of Koritza, between the villages of Rehova and Bithkugi, one finds copper in the form of cerestite, azurite, and malachite at the surface, and of chalcopyrites in the lower strata. Two kilometres to the south of Pogradec, at Mamelishta, chrome iron exists.

A region which appears rich in minerals, but which has not yet been sufficiently examined, is the district of Dibra, on the Yugoslav frontier; samples have been taken of iron and chrome at Bulgiza, of sulphur at Kercishta, and of sulphate of aluminium at Magelari. In conclusion, it may be mentioned that asbestos is found in the neighbourhood of Koritza, at Deshnitza and Voskopoja, as well as near Scutari.

SYRIA'S ECONOMIC RESOURCES.

Improving Commercial Outlook.

The present economic capacities of Syria are briefly reviewed in the current issue of the Monthly Circular of the Imperial Ottoman Bank.

It is estimated that out of a total superficial area of 17,000,000 hectares, 4,600,000 hectares, or 28 per cent., are fit for cultivation. The area actually under cultivation does not exceed 775,000 hectares, or 4.5 per cent. Wheat occupies nearly half the land under cultivation; the normal yield is about 1,000,000 tons, barely sufficient for local consumption. It is admitted that the production could be increased to 3,000,000 tons, two thirds of which would be available for exportation. Barley takes second place, with an average crop of 500,000 tons, which could be increased to 2,000,000 tons. Other cereals, such as rye, oats, and maize, are cultivated as a complement only.

Syria was once the centre of the world's cotton production, but the principal cotton lands were in the Adana Vilayet, now outside the Syrian frontier; in Syria proper cotton could only be grown satisfactorily in the Aleppo Vilayet. The renowned cedar forests of Lebanon suffered greatly through wholesale felling during the war. Live stock in Syria, which comprises sheep, goats, and horses, was also affected by the war.

Improvement in the yield of Syrian agriculture would necessitate a reform of the land laws, with the object of parcelling out the latifundia and enabling the peasants to own land, and also a fiscal reform replacing the tithe system, which taxes the gross proceeds of crops, without taking into account the area cultivated, by a land tax proportional to the value of the land. The development of industry, the introduction of more modern methods and of more up-to-date implements, would also increase the agricultural yield.

Underground prospecting, often attempted, has not up to now given satisfactory results; the industries are therefore only transformation industries, using principally local agricultural products. Spinning mills are established mainly in the Lebanon; they are of a primitive nature. Before the war about 2,000,000 dry cocoons were produced annually, three-quarters of which were used locally. The weaving centres are at Homs and Aleppo. The materials produced range from the richest brocades embroidered with gold to the humble multi-coloured cottons. There are also very primitive oil and soap factories and flour mills. Technical training and an adequate Customs organisation would probably result in the development of industries of an average importance in Syria to the benefit of its agriculture and commerce.

Two towns only deal in foreign trade: Beyrout and Aleppo, the port of the latter being Alexandretta. Damascus is the principal interior market. The absence of mining exploitation makes Syria tributary for most of these products: Coal from England principally, petroleum from Russia and the United States, cements, chalk, ceramic from France, marble from Italy, metals, worked or not, from Belgium, Great Britain, Germany, and France. The Syrian market receives cotton goods from England principally, silks from France, woollens from England and Austria, to the total value of about 70 to 80 million francs. Syria imports also in smaller quantities chemical products, crystals, glassware, silkworm eggs, foodstuffs.

The principal articles exported are textiles (coarse or worked). They include silks, woollens and materials woven locally. The greater part of Syrian wool goes to France and the rest to England, Italy, Germany, and America; silks find an outlet on the Turkish market. Other Syrian exports include hides (2,000,000 francs), tobaccos (7,500,000), apricot paste (3,500,000), goat butter (2,000,000), vegetable and liquorice.

The trade balance of Syria shows a deficit. Before the war imports were double the value of exports. Without taking into account the years 1919 and 1920, during which exports were very small, the figures for 1921 stood as follows for the three principal Syrian ports: Beyrout, Tripoli, and Alexandretta: imports, 576,000,000 francs; exports, 42,000,000; the proportion is 13½ to 1. For the year 1922 this is reduced to 5½ to 1, total imports and exports figuring at 501 and 87 million francs respectively.

It should be noted also that part of the goods imported into Syria are re-exported to neighbouring countries, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Anatolia, and should, of course, be deducted from the total figure. Whatever this reduction may be, it is certain that it is not sufficiently large to account for the balance, though other factors, such as administrative and army expenditure, as well as remittances from Syrians residing abroad, must be reckoned also. Several measures have been taken in order to facilitate the clearing of the Syrian markets and the development of trade with neighbouring countries.

In conclusion, the commercial situation at the beginning of 1923 is brighter than during the previous year; the market is rid of part of the stocks with which it was overburdened, and the possibilities of a larger traffic with neighbouring countries are greater. The commercial balance shows a gradual diminishing deficit liable to further reduction through the development of local agricultural and industrial products and the increase of transit trade.

Telegraphic communication has been established between India and Jellalabad and Kabul (Afghanistan).

The directors of the African and Eastern Trade Corporation announce an interim dividend of 4 per cent., less tax, on account of last year.

The Palestine Advisory Council has adopted the proposal of the Palestine Government to participate in the British Empire Exhibition. A special pavilion is to be devoted to Palestine products.

The resolution to change the title of the London County Westminster and Parr's Bank to Westminster Bank took effect on March 1. In conformity with this action of its parent institution, the London County Westminster and Parr's Foreign Bank will change its name to Westminster Foreign Bank as soon as the necessary formalities have been carried through.

OAKEY'S

The Original Preparation
for polishing Cutlery.

Canisters, 1d., 2d., 3d., 6d., 1s., 2s. 6d. and 4s. each.

SILVERSMITH'S SOAP, for Cleaning and Polishing Silver, Electro Plate, etc. TABLETS, 6d.

WELLINGTON

"WELLINGTON BLACK LEAD" in Solid Blocks,
1d., 2d. and 4d. 1s. Boxes.

KNIFE

Polishing Paste, Furniture
Polish, Plate Powder.

POLISH

Glass Paper, Emery Cloth, Black Lead Packers,

WELLINGTON MILLS, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD, LONDON. S.E.1.

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Oranges Harder.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in good demand. Tate's cubes have been done at 66s., at which they are 1s. up. Lyle's granulated has come to business at 60s. 9d., an advance of 6d., while London granulated has gained 6d. at 60s. 6d. Foreign descriptions have been steady. West Indian crystallised is unchanged at 54s., while White Mauritius at 55s. is 1s. 9d. up. White Java is unaltered at 56s. 6d. Futures are: May 30s., August 29s. 6d.

Coffee.—A quiet but steady tone has ruled. East Indian is unaltered at 106s., Costa Rica remains at 100s., while Nairobi is unchanged at 90s. Futures are: May 60s. 9d., July 59s. 9d.

Rice.—The market has been rather quiet, and there is practically no change in the position, except that there are indications of a slight increase in the demand. The tone has been fairly steady, but prices in some cases are a shade easier.

Green Fruit.—The market is getting very short of supplies of oranges, and prices have again advanced sharply. Unless very considerable shipments are forthcoming prices may be expected to go still higher. Quotations are: Jaffa oranges, 22s. box (144's); Denia and Valencia oranges, 13s. 6d. to 45s. box (240's to 504's). Large supplies of lemons continue to come to hand, but the market position is much the same, as the demand continues at a good level. Quotations are: 12s. to 17s. 6d. box (300's); 22s. to 37s. 6d. case. The demand for apples is on the increase, and the market is a trifle harder. An increased demand for onions has improved the position somewhat as regards this commodity, and prices are a little higher.

Dried Fruit.—Good business has been done during the week in a variety of lines. Currants have been in much better request, and are indeed moving off quite freely now, and prices are on the up-grade. Sultanias have also been a very good spot, a considerable business having been transacted at steady rates. Plums have again been a feature of the market. As usual, the demand is mainly for Bosnian plums, which are in strong request. Supplies are now getting short, and higher prices may therefore be looked for. A brisk trade has been done in figs, the market for which continues to broaden.

Oilseeds.—Linseed has continued to present a firm appearance. Indian at 20s. 7½d. is 1½d. up, while La Plata has also gained 1½d. at 18s. 4½d. Rapeseed is very firm, with Toria 9d. up at 18s. 9d., and real bold Ferözepore 18s. 1½d. Cottonseed has been steady. Indian at 9s. 4½d. is 3d. up, Egyptian black has gained 3d. at 11s. 9d., while Sakellaridis is 4½d. up at 11s. 3d.

Oils.—Linseed has hardened, closing 6d. up at 42s. Rape oil is steady. Crude is unchanged at 44s., while technical refined remains at 47s. Cotton oil is firm. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s., technical remains at 40s., deodorised is unaltered at 46s., while Egyptian crude is 38s.

Oil Cakes.—A weak tone has ruled. Linseed cake is 10s. down at 290s., coconut cake at 210s. is 10s. lower, cottonseed cake is 10s. down at 160s., while cottonmeal cake has shed 10s. at 270s.

ASIA MINOR FRUIT REPORT.

Unfavourable Outlook.

Messrs. C. J. Giraud and Co., of Smyrna, have issued the following report, dated January 31:—

In our last report, dated December 31, we estimated the shipments and stocks to that date at the following figures:—Shipments to the United Kingdom, 9,000 tons; to the Continent, etc., 5,500 tons—14,500 tons; estimated stocks, Smyrna and in the country, 6,500 tons, making a total quantity for the season of about 21,000 tons. During the course of this month demand has assumed considerable activity. Shipments effected since January 1 have been the following:—To the United Kingdom, s.s. Maronian, for Liverpool, 9,345 b/s; s.s. Bassano, for London, 43,660 b/s; s.s. City of Versailles, for London, 45,000 b/s—98,005 b/s, equal to about 1,200 tons; to Continental markets, s.s. Orion, 520 tons; s.s. Fauna, 450 tons; s.s. Saturnus, 220 tons; s.s. Achilles, 580 tons—say, a total net weight of about 2,970 tons.

The following extract from a report just published locally sums up the situation:—"The month of January has recorded active dealings in sultana raisins, sales having amounted to about 15,820 bags, compared with 2,730 bags in 1922. This activity is due to the following reasons:—Consequent on the events of last September, the heavy loss of fruit and the setback in business for several weeks, exports to the end of the year had fallen off by about 40 per cent., compared with the season of 1921. The quantity of sultanias actually shipped from Smyrna, exclusive of what left Vourla up to the early days of September, is officially recorded at 13,515 tons, as against 21,090 tons the preceding season. Shipments to Continental markets during this period have been proportionately much lighter than to the United Kingdom. In spite of the reduced yield, prices have ruled throughout this interval at a moderate level, well below that of the previous year, fluctuations in foreign equivalents being mainly dependent on and regulated by the rates of exchange. Owing to the unusually heavy demand during the past four weeks and the wide fluctuations which have been recorded in exchanges, the tendency of the market has been upwards.

"Stocks show a heavy reduction, and remaining existences are now estimated as follows:—Smyrna, Vourla, and Sivrihissar, 14,500 bags; Menemen and Phocæa, 1,500 bags; Magnesia, 5,000 bags; Cassaba, Salihli, and Alascheir, 4,000 bags; Axar, Soma, Kirkagatch, and Pergamus, 4,000 bags; Nymphio, 3,000 bags; sundries, 1,000 bags—33,000 bags; 4,500 tons. From this estimated total, allowance should be made for at least 500 bags, which, owing to their poor condition, or to their being in speculative hands, are not likely to be disposed of for export in the present half-year.

"The prospects for the coming summer are unfortunately very unsatisfactory. Work in the vineyards has not progressed, and it is at present reckoned that at this date over 40 per cent. of the vines have received no cultivation or care. Labour is scarce, wages are excessively high, and, however favourable atmospheric conditions may prove this season, the extent of fruit which will be gathered and dried into raisins will in no way be adequate to the normal demands of foreign consumption."

There is little which we can add to the above beyond the fact that the figures and statistics given in it very closely confirm the estimates we have given in our own reports. With the reduction in stocks we must reckon henceforward on a steady diminution in exports. Fine grades have reached the point of exhaustion, and what now remains in the country consists mostly of good average quality in a better or worse condition. Exchanges have fluctuated pretty widely during the month, sterling having ranged from 800 to 670, political influences being the guiding factor in rates.

It is announced that next year's British Industries Fair has already been arranged for, so far as the White City is concerned, and the period during which the 1924 Fair will be held at Shepherd's Bush has been fixed at February 18 to 29.

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

PALESTINE AND THE BRITISH EMPIRE EXHIBITION.

At a meeting of the Advisory Council of the Government of Palestine, at Government House, Jerusalem, on February 15, at which the High Commissioner, Sir Herbert Samuel, presided, the question of the participation of Palestine in the British Empire Exhibition was discussed.

Sir Herbert Samuel stated that it had been decided that if she desired, Palestine might be admitted, and the title of the exhibition would include, pro forma, "The Mandated Territories."

Colonel Solomon said that the participation of Palestine would involve a considerable sum. On the other hand, a very great advantage to the industry of the country might be anticipated. Practically every part of the British Empire had decided to take part—most of the self-governing Dominions on a very large scale—and the exhibition would be visited by people from all parts of the world. If Palestine were to participate in a manner representative of its economic life, a space of 2,000 square feet would be necessary. He had, with the assistance of the accountancy staff of the British Empire Exhibition Council, examined the financial aspect, and, although it was difficult to form an exact estimate, the cost of a Palestine pavilion would be about £5,000. This would be constructed in the traditional Palestinian style of architecture, and the amount of £5,000 would cover water installation, electric light, seating accommodation, etc., but not stalls or shop cases. It would, however, include, besides many general expenses, the construction of edifices for Palestinian craftsmen, who might ply their trades at the exhibition, thus adding to the attractiveness of the pavilion. With a view to lessening the amount chargeable to the Palestine Budget, he had approached various bodies for a guarantee fund of half the anticipated expenditure. He was glad to say that he had been successful; £1,000 had already been promised, and the remainder would be forthcoming shortly. It was for the Council to decide whether it was worth incurring an expenditure against public funds of £2,500.

After some discussion the High Commissioner proposed that the Council should approve in principle the participation of Palestine in the exhibition, and that Colonel Solomon take steps to secure the local support and co-operation required, and this was agreed to.

DRIED FRUIT REPORT.

Messrs. J. C. Houghton and Co., of Liverpool, report as follows under date March 1:—

Currants.—The Gerano's 600-ton cargo was available in the early days of the month, the response from the trade being fair. Cleaned fruit was in most request, especially smalls, a considerable quantity of which had been disposed of before arrival. Bold fruit cleaned 58s. to 60s.; small cleaned, 60s. to 62s.; Gulf, 58s. to 60s.; Vostizza, 68s. to 72s. Later, on the arrival of the Astra with about 650 tons, the situation through pressure developed uncertainty, and the business consequently was adversely affected, Pyrgos selling 55s. and ordinary Gulf 56s. to 57s.; cleaned, 56s.; small cleaned continued in demand, 59s. to 60s.; Vostizza, 64s. to 68s. The Sea Glory, with 1,000 tons, is now discharging. The general tone on the whole is favourable, as stocks are undoubtedly for the time of the year very light, and with any real renewal of buying prices should improve. Latest quotations:—Pyrgos, 55s.; cleaned Amalias, 56s. to 57s.; small cleaned, 59s. to 60s.; Gulf and Panariti, 56s. to 62s.; Vostizza, 65s. to 70s.

Raisins.—Valencia: Lack of animation still exists, and with the exception of a few quarter boxes 45s., no movement is reported. Capes, on the other hand, have sold in fair lines for export, 25s. to 24s.

Sultanas.—Smyrna: The market does not move very much, and prices have kept round about 77s. 6d. to 80s. for medium qualities. A few good quality changed hands 90s., and Carabouna 105s. Greek sell slowly 80s. Afghans continue to be firmly held, red 60s., yellow 80s. to 90s., a few parcels of outstanding quality as regards colour and condition fetching 90s. to 95s. The Maronian, with 8,000 boxes, arrived, adding to our supplies, and we understand the Gulf of Suez is afloat with further quantities. There seems to be a good deal of hesitation, and opinions are sharply divided with regard to the prospects of the future. So much centres round what is taking place with the growing crop in Smyrna, as the conditions now prevailing in that country are likely to have serious and far-reaching effects on next year's yield.

Figs.—The low prices have stimulated the consumption, and stocks are becoming reduced. Calamata, 21s. bags; Valencia, 20s. to 23s. boxes; Algerian, 26s. bags.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended February 10 amounted to £E8,462, making the total for the year £E295,449.

THE NORTH AFRICAN PHOSPHATE INDUSTRY.

A recent issue of the Vie Financière contained an article to the following effect on the phosphate companies of North Africa:—

In 1913 the world production of phosphates amounted to 7,000,000 tons, of which North Africa contributed 2,486,000 tons, viz., Gafsa, 1,361,000 tons; Dyr, 170,000 tons; Tunisiens, 362,000 tons; M'Zaita, 93,000 tons; Constantine, 200,000 tons. The balance was produced by various small companies, but it may be mentioned that the output of the Rebiba-Maknassy-Gouraya group, in which the Compagnie des Phosphates Tunisiens was interested, amounted to 120,000 tons. In 1913 Europe consumed 4,413,000 tons of phosphates, of which 2,345,000 tons were supplied by North Africa, 1,618,000 tons by America, and 450,000 tons by France and Belgium.

The situation of the North African phosphate companies was completely transformed by the War, notably as a result of the closing of the Central European market, the difficulties in securing a sufficient supply of labour on account of mobilisation, and the reduced consumption in neutral countries. The companies also suffered from the submarine campaign. The scarcity and cost of freight was such that the output of the Gafsa company in 1917—although in 1916 it had made a great effort to increase production—fell to a quarter of the pre-war figures. It was consequently obliged to reduce production in order to avoid an accumulation of stocks.

After the Armistice the companies still suffered from the scarcity of freights and the difficulty of recruiting labour. Moreover, the French Government regulated the trade in phosphates in order to assure sufficient supplies for French agriculture. In 1920, as a consequence of this situation, North Africa only produced 1,970,000 tons of phosphates, as against an American production of over 4,000,000 tons. At this date there was a considerable rise in the price of phosphates, which were sold at more than 100 francs a ton instead of 30 francs a ton in 1913. This higher price was only applicable to sales to foreign countries, as France enjoyed a special rate. The increase was of little advantage to the companies on account of higher manufacturing costs, and it was only in the second half of 1921, when the restrictions on trade in phosphates were removed, that the companies could resume their normal activity. At the same time, there was an improvement in the supply of labour. The economic crisis, however, hindered the revival, and the diminished consumption obliged the companies to accumulate stocks and to reduce their output to an extent which in certain cases reached 50 per cent.

Before the 1922 harvest there was a great improvement in the situation. The price of superphosphates fell from 30 francs the metric cwt., rate ruling in 1920, to 15 francs, and there was at the same time an increased demand from agriculture. The results of this revival are shown in the balance-sheets of the companies.

Some fears have been expressed that the recovery of the Alsatian potash field and the possibility of an increase in the production of nitrogenous fertilisers may have an unfavourable influence on the North African phosphate companies. The competition of the phosphate field in Morocco must also not be neglected, although the difficulties of transport and the want of ports for shipment seem likely to prevent production on a large scale within four or five years. It is expected that in 1924 about 300,000 tons of phosphates will be despatched from Morocco and 1,000,000 in 1928; whereas Algeria and Tunisia should produce from 3½ to 4 million tons towards the same date. On the whole, the future of the North African companies may be regarded as promising.

NEW NEAR EASTERN COMPANIES.

The Société des Tramways et Eclairage de Beyrouth was recently formed with a capital of 200,000 francs, divided into 400 shares of 500 francs each. The objects are the study, the establishment, and the exploitation in Syria, particularly in Beyrouth, of all public services such as transports, distribution of power and water, public and private lighting, etc.; the purchase of such concessions or the substitution of rights of previous concession holders; the direct or indirect participation in all operations relating to one or more of the objects specified above. Head office: 33, Boulevard Malesherbes, Paris.

The Société d'Etudes pour la Reconstruction de Smyrne has been established with a capital of 200,000 francs, divided into 400 shares of 500 francs, the objects being the demolition and erection of buildings in Turkey, especially in the vilayet of Aidin. Head office: 6, Avenue Victor Emmanuel III., Paris.

Mr. A. W. Ibbett, B.E., M.A., I.M.E., M.I.P.T., late general manager of Trinidad Leaseholds, has been appointed technical adviser to the Cyprus Oil Trust.

Shipping Intelligence.

NEW BRITISH INDIA MOTOR SHIP.

There was launched at the yard of Messrs. Alexander Stephen and Sons, Ltd., Linthouse, Glasgow, on the 1st inst., the twin-screw motor ship Dalgoma, of 6,000 tons gross, which has been built to the order of the British India Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. The vessel, which is 430 ft. in length, 54 ft. 6 ins. in breadth, and depth 35 ft., is intended for trade in the Indian Ocean. She is fitted for the transport of Indian native passengers, all fore and aft, and is also fully equipped with cargo gear, having six holds, each loaded by two winches, and steel tube derricks mounted on derrick posts, as well as a large derrick to lift 30 tons. The auxiliary machinery, including the winches, windlass, and steering gear, are all electrically driven, as are the Clayton fire-extinguishing and disinfecting apparatus and the refrigerating installation. The propelling machinery will consist of two Stephen-Sulzer two-cycle Diesel engines, each developing 1,600 b.h.p. at 85 r.p.m. at sea and capable of 2,000 b.h.p. when running at 100 r.p.m.

NEW ELLERMAN LINES VESSEL.

The steel-screw steamer City of Eastbourne was recently launched from the yard of Messrs. Wm. Gray and Co., Ltd., West Hartlepool, who have built this vessel for the Hall Line of the Ellerman Lines, Ltd., Liverpool.

This vessel is handsomely modelled, having a cruiser stern, and her dimensions are: Length over all 422 ft., breadth (extreme) 54.2½ ft., and depth (moulded) 31.5 ft., and classed at Lloyds 100 A1.

The ship is fitted out to meet the owners' special requirements for the trade in which she is intended to run, and the double bottom is arranged for the carriage of oil fuel and fresh water.

The cargo handling appliances are very complete, including 13 steam winches and 16 steel derricks, as well as a heel socket for a heavy derrick, and the foremast is especially strengthened to take a lift of 40 tons if required.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Scindia for Bombay (Liverpool, March 16).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 17); s.s. Maidan for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 27); s.s. Imani for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 31); s.s. Malakuta for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 9); s.s. Maihar for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 14); s.s. Makalla for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 19).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Lancashire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, March 14); s.s. Yorkshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, March 28).

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST

REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO

GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS

PIRAEUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA

SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE

BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA

also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR

GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO

MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI

ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOSA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP

AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND

BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER

GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES

PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND

DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.

LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.

OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

British India Line.—S.s. Mandala for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 9); s.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16); s.s. Merkara for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 28); s.s. Hatarana for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 14); s.s. Dumana for Bombay and Karachi (London, April 6); s.s. Margha for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 27).

Clan Line.—S.s. Clan Mackinnon for Bombay and Persian Gulf (Birkenhead, March 24).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Tyria for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Glasgow, April 5).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Flaminian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (Liverpool, March 14); s.s. Grodno for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (Liverpool, March 20).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Calcutta for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 23); s.s. City of Durban for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 9).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. City of Paris for Bombay, Karachi, and the Punjab (Liverpool, March 12); s.s. Traiford Hall for Bombay (Liverpool, March 29).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Mardinian for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, March 10); s.s. Castilian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, March 21); s.s. Tasso for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, April 14).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Kenmore for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, March 10).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Kaisar-i-Hind for Bombay (London, March 9); s.s. Perim for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 10); s.s. Plassy for Bombay (London, March 23); s.s. Mirzapore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 24); s.s. Macedonia for Bombay (London, March 29); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, April 6); s.s. Novara for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 20).

SMYRNA-AIDIN RAILWAY.

Mr. Grattan Doyle asked the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether the Smyrna-Aidin Railway Company had an admitted claim of £49,000 against the Greek Government for services which the company, at the instance of the British Government, was compelled to render to the Greeks in Asia Minor; and if any steps were being taken to secure payment of this claim, the amount having been agreed to by the Greek authorities.

Mr. McNeill: The services given by the Smyrna-Aidin Railway Company to the Greek military authorities during the Greek occupation of Smyrna were not rendered at the instance of His Majesty's Government. The company were unavoidably forced by circumstances to render certain services to the Greek military authorities in order to avoid requisition of the railway. The claim of the company against the Greek Government for these services was understood to amount to £45,000 in September last, when His Majesty's Minister at Athens was instructed to press the Greek Government to settle it. Owing to the political and financial crisis in Greece, the representations made by His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires have not so far proved successful. The claims are now understood to amount to £49,000, and His Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires is instructed to renew his representations.

The National Bank of Egypt proposes a final dividend of 11 per cent., making 15 per cent. for 1922.

Messrs. J. Samuel White and Co., Ltd., of East Cowes, are reported to have obtained an order, through Messrs. Back, Manson, and Hornblower, Alexandria, for the construction of two sea-going tugs for the Ports and Light-houses Administration (Ministry of Communication), Egypt. These vessels, which will be driven by 500 h.p. two-cycle heavy oil engines, are being specially designed for quick manoeuvring in restricted areas, and will be used for work in Suez harbour.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Fairly Satisfactory Inquiry.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended February 28:—

A very fair inquiry has been in evidence, and, although the amount of business resulting has so far shown a decrease from the preceding week, a considerable amount of "averaging" has taken place, which will no doubt bear fruit in due course. Sakellaridis has been in good demand at prices ranging from 16½d. to 17½d., and the cream of the market, at these prices, has already been skimmed. We believe there is plenty of cotton available between Strictly Good Fair and Strictly Fully Good Fair, but already the tendency is for the basis to stiffen, and most of it appears to be strongly held. There has been slightly more interest taken in the better grades of Sakel this week, but business in these qualities is still woefully limited. 21.00d. was paid to-day, but this was quite exceptional, and, generally speaking, spinners are unwilling to pass the 19.00d. figure. Uppers have been freely asked for, and the basis has again stiffened, quotations from Alexandria registering a rise of ½d. in two days. Much "chasing the market" has occurred, and many would-be buyers have been disappointed again. Cotton of any grade is now difficult to find at anything under 16½d. but even so, with March American quoted at 15.88d., it seems nothing if not reasonable. A further advance in Uppers seems highly probable. The inquiry for Low Egypt, which last week showed some signs of falling off, has latterly improved, and a fair business has taken place in these qualities at prices ranging from 6.00d. to about 15.00d. Alexandria complains bitterly of the scarcity of this class of cotton—but always more appears in sight. However, here again prices show a tendency to harden somewhat. Sudan, Brown, Pillion, and White cotton have all added their quota to the sales, but business in these growths has been very spasmodic, and prices are irregular.

Manchester reports have ruled quiet, and have displayed a somewhat pessimistic tone, which, however, is a reflection more of the American than of the Egyptian section. The only bright spot is contained in the information that China is gradually taking more notice of things. C.i.f. business has shown some signs of broadening out slightly, but it is still rather disappointing. Forwardings to spinners for the week ending February 23 are returned at 7,056 bales. Total sales, 3,300 bales. Quotations of Sakellaridis are reduced 10 points, with exception of Fair, which is advanced 20 points. Upper and Brown are unchanged, with the exception of Fair, which is advanced 20 points in both growths.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW.

Position Practically Unchanged.

The Manchester "Cotton Trade Review" of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended March 3 states:—

There is no actual change to report regarding the amount of business being done, though perhaps the sentiment of the market is a trifle more cheerful. The turnover has been of very modest dimensions, as most limits offered by possible purchasers have been unworkable. Stocks are still tending to increase, and so long as this is so the market is bound to remain in a weak condition.

Yarn.—There is perhaps a little more inquiry, but the volume of business finding its way to the order book is far from adequately absorbing the output. There is nothing to report as regards price changes, the principal interest of the week being centred in the discussion of ways and means of relieving the present situation. A suggestion has been made that the mills should stop work entirely for a fortnight during the month of March, to be followed by a similar measure during April if necessary; and the suggestion seems to meet with a considerable amount of support, although there is at the same time some opposition. Whether the scheme will be adopted, and if adopted, will be successful in its object, remains to be seen.

Cloth.—The only incident calling for special mention is the renewal of a modest inquiry for China. It is reported that fairly important sales were effected at the recent auctions in Shanghai, but little real activity can reasonably be expected until the political situation there improves. Other outlets abroad call for no special reference, and the home trade remains quiet.

Raw Cotton.—A steady market has been experienced, fluctuations either way being very slight. Although the mills spinning Egyptian-cotton are, and have been for some time back, much more favourably situated for orders than those spinning American cotton, it is interesting to note the very slight difference between the prices of the respective raw materials. This would seem to bear out previous references to the smaller influence which Lancashire now exercises over the price of American cotton. In this connection, we may chronicle the prices of "futures" for two or three selected months. It is interesting to note that, whilst the quotations for American are in a progressively downward direction, those for Egyptian are more stable and are slightly upward in direction:—American: June 15.75, October 14.14, January (1924) 13.65. Egyptian: June 17.30, October 17.65, January (1924) 17.80. Closing prices are as follows:—American, fully middling 16.54; Egyptian, fully good fair 17.50.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Estimate of Cotton Position.

The Commercial Co. of Egypt, in their report for the week ended February 23, state:—

Since our last report the futures market has been again rather dull, with very few transactions passing and prices remaining almost unchanged. Had it not been for the unabated strength of the American market, where quotations are now nearing 30 cents, the depressing effect produced by the continuous flow of fresh arrivals from up-country would have been still more pronounced, and even the present low level of prices would not have been maintained. Another explanation of the dullness of our market may be found in the instability of the local political situation.

The total quantity of cotton received so far exceeds 5,600,000 kantars, and it is estimated that another 500,000 kantars is still in the ginneries and villages; therefore by the end of next August something like 6,100,000 kantars will have been received in Alexandria; this is far beyond the highest estimate made even in December. However, in spite of the prospective huge total of arrivals the position is not as heavy as one would expect; the high prices of American cotton, which, in fact, have been quoted this week above Ashmouni, if one takes into consideration the difference in the exchange, have drawn spinners' attention to our cotton, and the result is to be found in the excellent export figures, which have now reached 4,760,000 kantars, as against 3,540,000 kantars at the same period last year. We estimate the local supply position as follows:—Actual Alexandria stock, 2,180,000 kantars, against 2,350,000 last year; to receive from the interior, 500,000 kantars, against 1,250,000 last year—total, 2,680,000 kantars, against 3,600,000 last year. If we assume that for the balance of the season we shall export as much cotton as we did during the same period last year—namely, 2,250,000 kantars—we are confronted with an extremely satisfactory situation; the carry-over in Alexandria at the end of next August will probably be as low as about 430,000 kantars, and in the interior the quantity will be negligible, whereas the total stocks in Alexandria and the interior last year must have amounted to 1,850,000 kantars. Of course, the figure of prospective exports of 2,250,000 kantars given hereabove is in no way definite; but, on the other hand, if one considers the present cheapness of our prices as compared with American, and the depleted stocks of the latter, we do not think it would be an exaggeration to expect this figure to be reached.

Spot.—Total sales this week amount to about 16,000 bales, of which we estimate 11,300 bales Sakellarides, 4,300 bales Uppers, 200 bales white, and 200 bales brown.

Sakellarides.—All grades have been dealt in, and there is still a fair demand for the better qualities, but for the latter the premiums paid remain about the same as last week. Cotton round about good fair is much sought after, with a resultant stiffening in the prices asked.

Uppers.—Practically all the business transacted has been in the grades fully good fair to good and good, and the prices of spot against contracts remain unchanged.

Various.—A few sales of white and brown have been registered.

Orders have been placed with Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth, and Co., Ltd., for twenty main-line locomotives for the Indian State Railways and seventeen for the East Indian Railway.

The Municipal Council of Belgrade intends to raise a loan abroad, the proceeds of which would be spent on paving the streets, repairing the tramways, waterworks, drainage, and other public services (says a Renter message). The authorities have already secured the State guarantee for the loan, and they will also mortgage for the same purpose all their real estate and revenues. Interest on the loan would be payable from the day when the first instalment is received by the municipality.

Stock and Share Markets.

— TONE RATHER INACTIVE. —

Gilt-Edged and Industrials Firm.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Generally speaking, it has been a very quiet week on the Exchange. There have been no momentous political happenings to disturb the even course of the stocks. The French have advanced further, it is true, but while the news from the Continent is viewed with a certain amount of anxiety it has not done more than cause a ripple of excitement in the markets. Apart from the usual developments in the Ruhr we have had a double defeat of the Government candidates during the week, which is little to the taste of the Exchange, which, above all things, desires stability of government. There are those, however, who see in the defeats a not undesirable development, arguing, not without reason, that if anything was needed to impel the Government to undertake the most stringent economy it would be the knowledge that their present policy will not do for the constituencies. I am well aware that both defeats are put down mainly to the housing question, but while I do not underestimate that factor, I fancy that the pressure of the Income-tax and the knowledge that the Budget is approaching had something to do with determining the course of the "independent" voter. Certainly the forecasts in the Press of the concessions that will be made by the Chancellor cannot be described as exactly attractive to the average voter. There is much to be said for all the concessions forecasted, for there is not a tax that is not far too high, but there are some taxes that must have the preference over all the rest as regards alleviation, and quite a number of people are of the opinion that the tax whose incidence is greatest is much more likely to receive attention in the Budget as a result of East Willesden and Mitcham. Well, we shall see!

Gilt-Edged Steady.

A very steady tone has ruled in the gilt-edged group, and here and there quotations are above those ruling the previous week. Consols at 57 $\frac{3}{4}$ xd. again show an improvement. War Loan Fives at 101 3-16 have gained 3-16; the Conversion Loan at 75 $\frac{5}{8}$ xd. is $\frac{1}{8}$ lower; while Fundings are $\frac{1}{8}$ up at 88 $\frac{1}{2}$. Indian stocks have remained firm. The Three per Cent. Loan stands at 56 9-16 xd., while the Seven per Cent. Loan is 112 $\frac{1}{2}$ xd.

As usual in these times the market in Foreign Government securities has displayed irregularity on developments on the Continent and the movements of the exchanges. French stocks have been rather dull, War Loan Fives at 24 $\frac{1}{4}$ being $\frac{3}{4}$ down, while the Four per Cents. at 19 $\frac{1}{2}$ are $\frac{1}{2}$ lower. German Three per Cents. have recovered again, and at 15-16 are $\frac{1}{8}$ up. Italian Rentes remain at 20. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified are $\frac{1}{8}$ up at 25, while Greek Monopolies have been a specially strong spot, and at 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ show an advance of 3.

Industrials Quiet.

A fairly good tone has prevailed in the Industrial group during the week; indeed, the business done in this section has probably been as good as in that of any of the markets. Yesterday, however, there were signs of the renewed restriction of business, and a quiet tone prevailed throughout most of the group.

Textiles have again been a notable feature. Courtaulds at 65s. 9d. are 1s. up, Coats at 67s. 6d. have gained 2s. 9d., while Listers are 1s. 3d. down at 30s. Iron, Steel, and Engineering shares have been inactive. Vickers at 15s. 6d. are 3d. down, Armstrongs are unchanged at 18s. 6d., while Guest Keens are unaltered at 40s. Tobaccos have been inclined to dullness, with Bats at 85s. 6d. and Imperial Tobaccos at 74s. 9d. xd. Bank shares have been steady. Chartered of India at 19 $\frac{3}{4}$ are $\frac{1}{8}$ up, National of India at 46 $\frac{1}{4}$ are unchanged, Bank of British West Africa at 4 $\frac{7}{8}$ have gained $\frac{3}{8}$, while Imperial of Persia are unaltered at 6 7-16. In Shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are 10 lower at 305, Cunards at 23s. 3d. have shed 9d., Furness Withys are unchanged at 35s., while Khedivial Mails are unaltered at 17.

Oils Inactive and Dull.

A rather uncertain tone ruled in the Oil group at closing yesterday. The market as a whole has been inactive during the week, though there have been some firm spots. Anglo-Persian Oil at 4 $\frac{1}{8}$ are 3-32 down, while Burmahs at 5 11-32 are 1-16 lower. Mexican Eagles are 1-16 down at 2 $\frac{1}{4}$, while Shell Transport are unchanged at 4 7-32. Roumanians have been fairly steady. Phoenix are unchanged at 26s. 9d., Roumanian Consolidated remain at 12s. 6d., Steaua Romanas are 9d. lower at 10s. 3d., Dacia Romanos are unaltered at $\frac{7}{8}$, while Hamilton Concessions are 3d. up at 2s. 9d. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian B are 1-32 lower at 1 7-16, while Oilfields of Egypt remain at 2s. 9d.

Rubber Steady.

A quiet but firm tone has ruled in the Rubber market. There are no developments of interest to record. The undertone of the market is very firm, and once the general position improves, it goes without saying that the Rubber group generally should go ahead.

The Economiste d'Athènes states that the Greek Government has granted the right of fishing for coral and sponges off the coasts of the Morea to an American company. The agreement provides that Greek labour shall be employed.

Lloyds Bank, Ltd., announce that, in connection with the recent incorporation of the business of Messrs. Cox and Co., official agents to the Army and Royal Air Force, a local committee has been appointed consisting of Sir H. Seymour King (a director of Lloyds Bank), Mr. H. A. Cox, Mr. A. C. Cox, Mr. O. V. G. Hoare, Sir Reginald Brade (formerly Secretary of the War Office), and Mr. R. M. Rowley-Morris (hitherto manager of Lloyds Bank, Law Courts).

JAMES H. BROWN, LTD.,

MERCHANT BANKERS.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

BOUGHT AND SOLD FOR EITHER SPOT OR FORWARD DELIVERIES.

FOREIGN BILLS NEGOTIATED. CREDITS
OPENED ON APPROVED REFERENCES.

AGENCIES ARRANGED ON BEHALF OF FIRMS ABROAD.

The Sale, Purchase, or Warehousing of Goods
Effected. Shipments Financed.

Head Office: TELEGRAPH STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.
Telegrams: "Exchangbro, London."

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Nablus, February 10.

The soap factories are busy, but the export has not yet commenced.

Baghdad, January 31.

The chief feature of the Baghdad market during the past few weeks has been the uncertainty of the rupee sterling exchange. The fluctuations are due to the extreme tightness of money in Bombay and to the heavy Indian cotton exports. The market has indulged in a little speculation, but business generally has been quiet. The rate for first-class discount has risen to 9 per cent., and money is in strong demand at this rate. The Persian trade is very dull owing to the condition of the roads. There is quite a strong demand for general goods in Mosul. It may be assumed that this is due to the influx of troops during the past few days.

THE ABYSSINIAN CORPORATION.

For the year ended June 30 last the accounts of the Abyssinian Corporation, Limited, show a loss of £24,464, which, with the balance at June 30, 1921, makes a total of £435,849 to be carried forward to the debit of profit and loss. The directors have confined their efforts almost entirely to the liquidation of stocks and the further reduction of overhead charges. The financial liabilities have been reduced during the year by about £50,000, chiefly by the repayment of bank advances. Since the close of the financial year the balance (nearly £20,000) of the loan raised for buying dollars has been liquidated. Meeting, Winchester House, to-day, noon.

THE PORT OF SALONIKA.

A telegram from Athens, published by the Politika, states that the Greek negotiations which are being carried on in London for a loan have led to a postponement of the arrangements proposed for the establishment of a Serbian port and neutral zone at Salonika (says a Reuter message from Belgrade). The telegram adds that a syndicate is stated to have made an offer of a loan on condition, among other things, that it be granted a concession for the operation of the harbour of Salonika for ninety-nine years.

SOUTHERN PUNJAB RAILWAY

The accounts for the year to September 30 last show net earnings at exchange of 1s. 4d. as follows: Main Line and Kaithal Branch, £234,978; Ludhiana Extension, £54,166; Sutlej Valley Railway, £45,933; Jullundur Doab Railway, £40,067; total, £375,144. The average value of rupees remitted for the year was less than 1s. 3½d., reducing the sterling value of the receipts as compared with last year by about £20,000. The net revenue, after deducting £93,689 payable to the Secretary of State as the share of the surplus net receipts due to Government, and allowing for Indian taxes, interest on debenture stock, and administration expenses, is £202,743, and £142,797 was brought in, making £345,540. After paying the preference dividend, the directors recommend a further dividend on ordinary stock of 6 per cent., making 11 per cent. for the year, less English income-tax at 3s.; forward, £143,540, subject to excess profits duty and corporation profits tax, if found due. Meeting, 36, New Broad Street, E.C., March 14, at 2.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
 A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLET.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office: 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
 Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
 Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

CONSTANTINOPLE.

(Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

BRIDGES FOR ALBANIA.

A notice in the Official Gazette of Albania states that the Albanian Government desires to enter into pourparlers with companies willing to take up a concession for building large bridges. The Gazette states that payment, totalling one million gold francs, will be made by instalments over a period of one year. Bridge tolls will be left at the company's disposition, and the company's entire ownership of the works pending complete payment is recognised. The Albanian Government offers the Customs as a guarantee for the payment of whatever sum is decided on. Firms interested should apply to the Ministry of Public Works for details. No further information on the subject is available in the Department of Overseas Trade. It is suggested that the most satisfactory way for British firms interested in the matter to ascertain what work is involved would be to send out a competent engineer to discuss details with the Albanian Government.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

(Particulars of tenders marked D.O.T. are to be obtained from the Department of Overseas Trade, 35, Old Queen Street, S.W.)

Egypt.

Cast Iron Weights.—The Physical Department of the Egyptian Ministry of Public Works invites tenders covering delivery to the Central Stores of the Department in Egypt for the supply of 51,650 cast-iron weights of various denominations in accordance with drawings. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Photographic Materials.—Tenders are invited by the Egyptian Ministry of the Interior for various photographic materials required during 1923. The goods required include photographic apparatus and accessories, plates, paper, cinematograph film stock and apparatus, and small quantities of miscellaneous photographic chemicals, etc. March 15. (D.O.T.)

Weighing Machinery.—The Physical Department, P.W.M., Cairo, invites tenders for the supply of weighing machinery during 1923-1924. April 1.

Oils, etc.—The Director of Stores, Frontier Districts Administration, Arsenal, Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply of oils, paints and varnishes. April 17.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

Movements in the exchanges have not been so pronounced as usual during the week. The German mark has remained practically stationary, while French and Belgian francs are about the same. In Near Eastern exchanges the Roumanian leu has improved slightly, while the Greek drachma is weaker at 445-450.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½-97¾
Athens	Drachmae to £...	25.22½	445-450
Belgrade	Dinars to £	25.22½	445-465*
Berlin	Marks to £	20.43	105-106,000
Berne	Francs to £	25.22½	25.12-25.14
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4¾
Brussels	Francs to £	25.22½	88.10-88.20
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	980-1,020
Budapest	Kronen to £	24.02	13,000-15,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4¾
Constantinople	Piastres to £ ...	110	675-715*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.70-4.70½
Paris	Francs to £	25.22½	76.90-77.00
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	158½
Rome	Lire to £	25.22½	97½-98
Sofia	Leva to £	25.22½	750-850
Teheran	Krans to £	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	330-340,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	205-215,000

* Nominal

The imports of coal into Alexandria last year amounted to 642,738 tons.

Anglo-Egyptian oil output for the week ended March 2: Gemsah, 10 tons (last week 9 tons); Hurghada, 3,048 tons (last week 3,455 tons).

The American Palestine Development Council has decided to devote 250,000 dollars to a scheme for building a new suburb at Jerusalem.

The Palestine Co-operative Bank, a Jewish Correspondence Bureau cable from Jerusalem announces, has granted a loan of £12,000 to the Jewish colonists to enable them to carry on their work till the harvest.

The Times Belgrade Correspondent reports that the Yugoslav Ministry of Posts and Telegraphs has decided to remove the censorship on mails and telegraphic communication to Russia which hitherto has been in force.

PROMINENT INDIAN INDUSTRIES

LALIMLI PURE WOOL

Manufacturers of
"Everything made of Wool"
from Coolie Blankets to Fine
Worsted including Braid
Felt, Hosiery & Knitted Goods
Tweeds and Tartan Rugs.

The CAWNPORE WOOLLEN MILLS & CO.
CAWNPORE.

N.W.T.

for HARNESS, SADDLERY,
TRUNKS, SUIT CASES,
FANCY LEATHER GOODS,
BOOTS AND SHOES.
Taxidermists etc.

The NORTH WEST TANNERY CO.
CAWNPORE.

Kakomi Cawnpore

Manufacturers
of

TENTS,
DURRIES,
TWEEDS, DRILLS, FLANNELETTES,
SHEETINGS, TOWELS ETC.,

The CAWNPORE COTTON MILLS & CO.
CAWNPORE.

Dhariwal

LONG LIFE WOOL WEAR

BLANKETS, TRAVELLING
RUGS, KNITTED GOODS, TWEEDS
SERGES WORSTEDS BRAIDS
HOSIERY ETC.

The NEW EGERTON WOOLLEN MILLS & CO.
DHARIWAL, PUNJAB.

Branches of The British India Corporation, Limited.
CAWNPORE.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF PERSIA.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1889.)

CAPITAL (fully paid) - £650,000 | RESERVE - £340,000
Reserve Liability of Shareholders, £1,000,000.

Branches at Ahwaz, Bunder Abbas, Bushire, Duzdab, Hamadan, Isfahan, Kazvin, Kerman, Kermanshah, Meshed, Mohammerah, Nasratabad, Resht, Shiraz, Shuhstar, Sultanabad, Tabriz and Yezd.
 Agencies at Bueh, Bagdad and Bombay.

The Bank is prepared to transact Banking business of every description in and connected with Persia and Mesopotamia; and in London grants Drafts, Telegraphic Transfers and Letters of Credit, and negotiates or collects Bills on Persia and the Near East.

London Office: 25, ABCHURCH LANE, E.C.4; Chief Office in Persia: TEHERAN.

IONIAN BANK, Ltd.

LONDON, GREECE, EGYPT.

The only British Bank or Financial House in Greece originally established in London and the Ionian Islands in 1839, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter in 1844, and registered under the Companies Acts in 1883. The Bank now has branches and correspondents throughout Old Greece, the Ionian Islands, Macedonia, and the Islands recently rejoined to Greece; and is therefore able to offer special facilities to all British and Allied firms having business with that country.

In Egypt the Bank's principal office is at Alexandria; but it also has agencies throughout the cotton-growing districts, and specialises in all operations connected with the moving of the cotton crop.

In Turkey the Bank has a branch at Constantinople.

For information as to terms of business, etc., apply to the HEAD OFFICE:

BASILDON HOUSE, MOORGATE STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL - £600,000
PAID-UP CAPITAL - £485,580
RESERVE - £150,000

THE NEAR EAST.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER.

To the Manager, THE NEAR EAST,
 1, Devonshire Square,
 London, E.C.2.

Please forward THE NEAR EAST
 weekly for _____ months. Remittance enclosed.

Name.....

Address.....

SUBSCRIPTION RATES U.K., £1 7s. 6d. per annum;
 14s. 6d. for 6 months.
Post Free ABROAD, £1 10s. per annum;
 15s. 6d. for 6 months.

To be obtained at all Bookstalls.

IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA

Incorporated and constituted in India under the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for the purpose of taking over the undertakings and business of the Bank of Bengal, the Bank of Bombay and the Bank of Madras.

Local Head Offices:—

CALCUTTA, BOMBAY, MADRAS

Managing Governors in India:—

Sir ROBERT AITKEN
 Sir BERNARD HUNTER

London Manager:—

Sir NORCOT WARREN, K.C.I.E.

Authorised Capital - Rs. 11.25.00.000
Paid-up Capital - Rs. 5.62.50.000
Reserve - Rs. 4.22.50.000

BANKERS in INDIA to the GOVERNMENT of INDIA.

Branches in all Principal Towns in India.
 London Branch: 5, Whitlington Avenue, E.C.3.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED.

Registered in London under the Companies Act of 1862, on the 23rd March, 1866.
 Established in Calcutta, 29th September, 1863.

BANKERS TO THE GOVERNMENT IN KENYA COLONY AND UGANDA.

AUTHORISED CAPITAL	£4,000,000	Paid-up Capital	£2,000,000
Subscribed Capital	£4,000,000	Reserve Fund	£2,600,000

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esq., Chairman.

Sir JOHN P. HEWITT, G.C.S.I., K.B.E., C.I.E.

Sir CHARLES C. McLEOD.

J. DUNCAN NIMMO, Esq.

ROBERT WILLIAMSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

ROBERT MILLER, Esq.

J. N. STUART, Esq.

J. A. TOOMEY, Esq.

HEAD OFFICE: 26, BISHOPSGATE, LONDON, E.C.2.

BRANCHES.

Calcutta	Cawnpore	Tuticorin	Mandalay	Kandy	Mombasa	Kenya Colony (Brit. E. Africa)	Entebbe	Uganda
Bombay	Lahore	Cochin (S. India)	Aden	Newera Eliya	Nairobi		Kampala
Madras	Amritsar	Chittagong	Aden, Steamer Point	Zanzibar	Nakuru		Jinia
Karachi	Delhi	Rangoon	Colombo		Katimu

TANGANYIKA TERRITORY—Dar-es-Salaam, Tanga.

The Bank purchases, grants advances against or collects Bills payable in India, Burma, Ceylon, Aden, Zanzibar, British East Africa, Uganda, etc., on current terms.

The Bank issues Drafts on its Branches, as well as on its Agents in the principal towns of India and Burma, Africa and elsewhere, and also sells Telegraphic Transfer on all its Branches, at the exchange of the day.

The Bank, on behalf of its Constituents, undertakes the collection of Furlough Pay and Pension from the India and Colonial Offices, the Custody of Government and other Securities, and the receipt of interest and Dividends thereon.

Powers of Attorney or other forms and any information required may be had on application to the Bank in London or any of its Branches.

The Bank receives Deposits for fixed periods not exceeding one year at rates to be obtained on application.

Banque Générale de Bulgarie.

Capital

12,000,000 Leva

Fully Paid.

Head Office:—SOFIA.

Branches:

BOURGAS, PHILIPPOLIS,
 ROUSTCHUK, VARNA.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ITALIENNE & BULGARE, SOFIA.

Capital - Leva 12 millions.
Reserves - Leva 556,000.

FILIAZIONE DE LA BANCA COMMERCIALE ITALIANA, MILANO.

Capital - L.it. 400 millions.
Reserves - 176 millions.

SUCCURSALE A VARNA.

Adresse Télégraph: "Bulcomit."

BULGARSKA BANKA. LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY.

Capital - 60,000,000 Levas

Head Office - SOFIA

Branches at Varna, Rustchuk,
 — Philippopolis and Sliven —

Telegraphic Address: Promichlenbank.

The Bank has extensive connections in the principal Cities of the World. It conducts every kind of Banking operations, and undertakes the collection of Bills on moderate terms throughout Bulgaria.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 618—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	261	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		The Angora Counter-Proposals	272	Notes and News	277
Egypt	265	THE WEEK AT HOME	263	Roumania's Mineral Resources	278
Bulgaria	266	CORRESPONDENCE	269	Engineering Topics	279
Turkey	267	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	270	Stock and Share Markets	280
SPECIAL ARTICLE—		PERSONAL AND GENERAL	271	Near East Markets	281
The Lausanne Treaty	273	PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST	275	Shipping Intelligence	283
				Cotton and Cotton Goods	284

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Angora and the Draft Treaty.

At the moment of writing the full text of the Turkish Note and of the counter-proposals to the Allies' draft terms of settlement is on its way to London. As far as can be judged from the summaries of the documents, there is no reason for abandoning the confidence inspired by Ismet Pasha's actions at Lausanne that the Turks are eager to sign peace. They have fenced with their own extremists without allowing themselves to be forced into a non-possumus attitude. In point of length the counter-proposals should suffice to disarm criticism in Angora that the Turkish Government has shown excessive subservience to the Allies. Some of the demands or suggestions now made affect portions of the draft Treaty that Ismet Pasha had already accepted at Lausanne; but they concern for the most part the economic sections, and it is impossible to say what the attitude of the Allies towards these questions will be until the French and Italian experts have had time to exchange views on the subject with the British Government.

Reciprocity and Good Faith.

The reopening of subjects already regarded as closed at Lausanne, even by Ismet Pasha himself, indicates that the Turks are still trying to avoid the obligations of reciprocity and good faith without which absolute equality can never regulate the relations between States. It was their unwillingness to live up to these obligations in the past that was responsible for all the ills from which they claim to have suffered. The very essence of the present Treaty, apart from all consideration of details, is that Turkey should accept the verdict of the Great War in regard to all territories outside her new frontiers. Article 16 accordingly states that: "Turkey hereby renounces all rights and title whatsoever over or respecting all territories situated outside the frontiers provided for in the present Treaty and the islands other than those over which her sovereignty is recognised by the said Treaty." If it is the case that the Turks now wish to eliminate this Article, they are merely giving a fresh warning to Europe still to be on its guard, and not to expect to find in the new Turkey the qualities that are indispensable to any country wishing to take its place in the comity of nations. For the rest, the further claims of the Turks show the steadfastness of their resolve to rid themselves of all control, even to the prejudice of their own interests, and a desire to obtain through the Greeks a sum of money, however small, in order to begin the new régime with some cash in hand.

The Situation in Egypt.

No solution has yet been found, or, rather, adopted, for the situation in Egypt. With the assumption of office by Sarwat Pasha last year it was thought that the way had been made smooth for the formal inauguration of Egyptian independence, based on a treaty with Great Britain. But a seemingly satisfactory state of affairs lasted only so long as no definite obstacle was reached. At the first sign of a real difficulty the edifice so carefully built up by Lord Allenby in the spring of 1922 collapsed. A draft Constitution had to be elaborated for submission to the Egyptian Parliament, with the certain prospect that, as soon as it had been ratified by the latter body, Egypt would have become an independent State under constitutional monarchy. In this Garden of Eden there was virtually only one forbidden tree—the Sudan was not to be mentioned, as it had been reserved by agreement with Egyptian representatives for subsequent discussion between independent Egypt and Great Britain. Upon this particular tree, however, that very small part of Egypt which is articulate concentrated all its attentions, and the British Government had to remind the Egyptians that Great Britain could not allow herself to be flouted in this way. This legitimate and very natural step revealed the fact that there was not in the country a single Egyptian politician capable of taking his stand on the point that Egypt should be true to her pledged word. A series of outrages against British subjects then followed, as if for the set purpose of further complicating the impasse.

Cui Bono?

An analysis of the Egyptian situation reveals some amazing aspects. It is impossible to believe that feeling in the country on the subject of the Sudan—in view of Egypt's former experiences with the Sudanese, and apart from considerations of Nile water, which do not need to enter into the question—is so strong that it can over-rule the desire for the refreshing fruits of independence. In any case, the time for protest on the subject will be when an adverse decision has been recorded against Egypt. If the agitation regarding the Sudan and the outrages are solely the work of Zaghouloulists, it must be clear to the meanest intelligence that they have gone out of their way to risk an indefinite prolongation of their leader's exile. Had the draft Constitution been completed last October without containing a forbidden reference to the Sudan, it is probable that it would have become law by now, an Indemnity Act might have been passed, martial law repealed, and Zaghoul Pasha might have been back in Egypt. The British authorities are not likely to yield to terrorism, and the Zaghouloulists make a point of disclaiming all responsibility for the campaign of outrages, although they continue to issue intemperate manifestoes which are a direct incentive to crime. To argue that, by making the formation of a Ministry by anyone else impossible, they will hasten the recall of Zaghoul Pasha, is a perverted line of reasoning, for such a method must necessarily work more slowly than the easier alternative of passing the Constitution and securing the withdrawal, in whole or in part, of British control. There is little need for surprise, therefore, that some people are wondering whether a more occult influence is at work in Egypt than Zaghoulism or mere anarchy. To-day both Egyptian and British interests are suffering, and if it be the case of a sinister agency, and not merely irresponsible folly, then that agency must set its own personal interests—which are supposed to be in jeopardy from a working agreement between Egypt and Great Britain—above the interests of the two peoples.

The Case for Zaghoul Pasha's Return.

The suggestion made in these columns before the more recent outrages in Cairo that the return of Zaghoul Pasha offered probably the only chance of a settlement of the Egyptian question has been echoed in various directions. Some of the advocates of the step are content to regard it as an inevitable ingredient of a policy of "universal skedaddle"; but, needless to say, it can be supported on sounder grounds than this. If all the courage of Egypt is concentrated in the Nationalist leader, and if there is no one else capable of standing up and saying that this or that must be done because it alone is the right course, then Great Britain is prejudicing herself as well as Egypt by keeping Zaghoul Pasha out of an arena which no other Egyptian politician is able to occupy. His removal was undertaken to substantiate the claim that, his presence being admittedly at that time subversive of all order in the State, other politicians would be able to govern the country quietly and successfully in his absence. This claim has been proved to be untenable. If to-day Zaghoul Pasha can satisfy the British authorities in regard to the few points on which they require a definite undertaking on Egypt's part, a good case can be made out for allowing him to try where so many others—in fact, everyone else—have had to admit failure. The terms on which he would return would preclude the suggestion that Great Britain had yielded to force.

Mosul and Irak.

On another page will be found extracts from the Blue-book just issued on the Lausanne Conference dealing with matters which form the subject of the counter-proposals now made by Turkey to the Allies' peace terms. In the 850 pages of this massive book there is an abundance of good reading matter, which deserves a wider public than it is likely to receive in the case of a Blue-book costing 30s. Of special interest are the dialectical duels between Lord Curzon and Ismet Pasha in regard to the numerous points brought up for discussion by the First Commission. In one passage it will be noted that Lord Curzon completely demolished the Turkish contention that Mosul has no right to be included in Irak, as it was not occupied by British troops at the time of the 1918 Armistice. The facts are as follow:—The Armistice was concluded on October 30, 1918. The news of it did not arrive in the remote districts of Mosul until November 1. On October 30 the British forces were already in occupation of the principal Turkish towns in the vilayet, and were actually thirteen miles outside Mosul when news of the Armistice reached them. On November 3 they occupied the town, and the Turkish commander did not receive the full terms of the Armistice until the next day. Lord Curzon pointed out that Armistice conditions have nothing to do with the final settlement of the conditions of peace, and that Article 7 of the Mudros Armistice expressly authorised the Allies' troops to occupy strategic points in Turkey outside the Armistice lines. Ismet Pasha's reply compared the post-Armistice occupation of Mosul to that of Constantinople, Smyrna, and other towns, and stated that "the people of Turkey is equally determined to employ to the utmost limit of its power all the means it possesses to obtain the return to the mother-country of the Mosul vilayet."

Waziristan.

The announcement of a definite policy in Waziristan is welcome, if only for the prospect it offers of a temporary cessation of controversies which, at any rate, encourage the borderers to prolong their resistance. The policy itself is, like most things in these days, a compromise. It is generally recognised that the protection of Indian life and property can never be complete till the tribes become sufficiently civilised to give up their habit of raiding. It is probably true that an effective military occupation of the tribal country would secure this result more rapidly than any other measure, but the cost would be prohibitive; and so we come to the accepted plan of making raids too dangerous to be tempting, while they will still be physically possible. On paper this is quite feasible, so long as conditions favour general tranquillity, though there is an obvious risk of a breakdown in the event of trouble on other sections of the frontier, or in India itself. Given time, even the Mahsuds should be able to learn by experience that raiding no longer pays, and, since poverty is one of the most important factors at work, the acceptance of that view should be decisive, but we fear it may be considerably delayed.

Indian Military Expenditure.

We shall not do Lord Rawlinson the injustice of attempting to deduce his views on the Indian military budget from the telegraphic reports of his speech, which are very condensed, and in places apparently confused. We note, however, that he laid stress on the improved external and internal position, so that it is now possible to welcome economies which would have been condemned a year ago. At the same time there are some disquieting tendencies to be taken into account. Some of the provinces, for instance, are trying to economise by cutting down their reserves of armed police, and, of course, the Army must be prepared to take over the emergency duties for which those reserves have hitherto been maintained. The extremist parties again have come together after the recent split so far that all sections are to help in the enrolment of "volunteers"—that is to say, a force subversive of internal order, which will make fresh demands on the police, and on the Army where the police do not suffice. There do not appear to be any particular reasons for anxiety at the moment, but such matters as these may serve to remind enthusiasts for economy that the strength of an army is affected by factors which its commander is not in a position to control.

The Inchcape Economies.

If suspension of judgment is desirable regarding the military economies which are now being effected in India, the same attitude must be adopted towards the remaining proposals of the Inchcape Committee, which are not yet available in this country in sufficient detail for a final verdict. According to such figures as have been published, something less than half the total reduction proposed represents economy in the ordinary sense of the word, the balance being in the nature of financial adjustments—either a raid on reserves or a transfer of expenditure to capital. The largest aggregate of real savings would appear to have been found in the railway department, a fact which may possibly interest the ardent advocates of State management, while in other directions there are ominous suggestions that much scientific research is to be stopped in order to secure relatively small economies. Perhaps India is in fact too poor to entertain any hopes of being either rich or healthy in the future, but it is certain that the fulfilment of such hopes involves much tedious laboratory work, and we must wait for the detailed budget to obtain information of the extent to which the future is being mortgaged in this respect.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE

Incorporated A.D. 1720.

FIRE, LIFE, SEA, ACCIDENT,
MOTOR CAR, PLATE GLASS,
ANNUITIES, BURGLARY,
FIDELITY GUARANTEES,
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,
THIRD PARTY, LIFT,
BOILER, MACHINERY,
TRUSTEE AND EXECUTOR.

London: - - - - - Head Office, Royal Exchange, E.C.3.
Calcutta: - - - - - 1 & 2, Old Court House Corner. H. L. Bell, Gen. Man.
Cairo: - - - - - 48, Place de l'Opera. M. G. Harris, Loc. Director.
Alexandria: - - - - - Societe Generale de Pressage et de Depots.
Cyprus: - - - - - Najem Houry & Sons.
Jerusalem, }
Joppa, Haifa, } - - - - - Anglo-Egyptian Bank, Limited.
Khartoum, }

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The Future of the Parties.

The defeat of three Government candidates and the incessant talk of Liberal and of Tory reunion have set the party men thinking hard. No one party is particularly confident in its own strength, and the two older parties have begun to consider seriously whether it is worth while opposing each other in order to provide Labour with a seat. Of course, this Labour bogey has been set up before; but it is now more of a ghost than a guy. Instead of trotting it round, as hitherto, just to collect funds and votes, the Liberal and Tory Parties appear to be really afraid of Labour, and are seeking to consolidate their camps.

Mr. Lloyd George, who is bound to be the evil genius—so impulsive and susceptible to outside influence is he—of any party to which he may belong, has had a very rude and firm rebuff to his overtures for reconciliation with the Independent Liberals. There is, however, a considerable belief that he will return to the Liberal fold, and some of the Liberal papers simply cannot resist the rich prospect of recapturing this strayed sheep. But I doubt the wisdom of such a return. Liberal principles may want rejuvenating, but, even so, dull principle and sharp practice are ill-matched.

The Centre Party, which was a bright flash of an idea emanating from the most opportunistic of our compromising politicians, has definitely fizzled out—Mr. Lloyd George said so in a specially constructed letter to Major Entwistle. The way is thus clear to those Conservatives—Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Lord Birkenhead, and the rest—who followed the ex-Premier in his final failure, to rejoin the Tory Party. Lord Derby has publicly kissed hands with Lord Birkenhead, and the personal differences that erstwhile marred the beautiful face of Conservatism are said all to have been dissolved. This erasure of wrinkles has set the beauty experts agog with talk that Conservative ex-Ministers have been invited to join the Government, and though these rumours have been denied, they are not yet disbelieved. If Mr. Bonar Law were to get the debating strength of Lord Birkenhead and Mr. Austen Chamberlain on his side, it might add years to his health; certainly it would postpone the advent of Labour. And nobody supposes that our domestic politics are conducted but for the day.

The Budget Estimates.

Although it is anticipated that the next Budget estimates will show a saving of £100,000,000 on our present expenditure, the hopes that the taxpayer will find relief are slight. It appears that the most noticeable saving is to be effected on the Navy; perhaps this is the one problem that has been really tackled. The difficulty with so many departments—the Board of Education, for instance—is that the expensive policy already begun cannot without loss be discontinued. Contracts have been signed, and to repudiate them and compensate contractors would be even more expensive than the present policy! Altogether it is not too satisfactory that on the one department for which we would more willingly put our hand in our pockets than for any other the biggest saving has been made. And to suppose that the Navy cannot have its independent air force is really rather niggardly. In modern warfare aeroplanes and airships are obviously indispensable to a fleet, by which they must be separately commanded.

An Irish Move.

An exciting round-up of Irish suspects in England and Scotland was made on Saturday, when over a hundred people were arrested. Acting in concert with the Free State Government, the Home Department seized these suspects and conveyed them to Dublin, where they were taken by Free State troops to prison. These men and women are supposed to be emissaries from the Irregulars sent over to England to organise the supply of munitions, and if it is true, as officially stated, that their incarceration will do good not only to Ireland but also to the British Empire, the claim that Bolshevik activity is keeping the Irish question burning will to some extent have been proved. But the affair at present is rather obscure, and the report that a deep-laid plot against the Crown and State has been scotched in the nick of time scarcely convinces us as yet.

"The New Science."

It cannot be said that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has made much of a hit with his post-War spiritualism; most people, in fact, deplore his decline, and it is possibly in recognition of this fact that he is going—his precious collection of spirit photographs with him—to the land where all incredible things are believed—America. Sometimes it would seem that the group of spiritualists, or rather spiritists, to employ the useful distinction of Mr. A. T. Schofield, wish to exalt their science or art above religion, to make it supersede Christianity, in fact. And, equally, there are others who say that the whole subject of occultism is one for scientific study alone.

But, whatever be the correct way in which to regard "the new science," as Sir Arthur calls it, it is not obvious that increased knowledge of it creates further happiness or wisdom in the human race. Throughout our history we have been on the threshold of new knowledge; doors are always about to be unlocked, curtains to be pushed aside; and still the mystery of life abides. However, Sir Arthur is not repressed by failures of countless previous generations; he knows that ectoplasm does exist. He has himself touched it and seen it; it has been weighed and photographed. But this ectoplasm, which is viscous and solid, and forms a vapour that issues from the medium in a state of trance, is solid under very rare conditions, and therefore difficult to demonstrate. In the cold realities of London this sort of thing does not go down too well; but who shall say that it will not succeed in America?

The Progress of Prohibition.

Lady Astor guided her Bill to prevent the selling of liquor to youths under eighteen years of age through the Commons successfully enough, and the Press has duly hailed it as a noble measure. But so long as the progress of Prohibition consists merely of things like this we are safe enough. There is not the remotest chance that this crusading Americaness should be able to induce us to copy the methods of her home country in regard to drink. It is by no means because we differ from America in a good many things—witness Lord Balfour's recent speech immediately concerning Mr. Harvey's remarks on our financial debt to America—but we simply do not like Prohibition either in its theoretical or practical form. In theory there is nothing to be said for curtailing man's freedom to drink; and in practice—well, as Mr. G. K. Chesterton has just reminded us, Prohibition does not prohibit, for in nearly every private house that he went to in America he was given wine and cocktails in large quantities. Such measures as Lady Astor's need, therefore, excite no alarm; they are merely suggested improvements to our pleasant laws, and are a hundred miles from being the thin edge of a very unpleasant wedge.

Gifts for Future and Past.

Two munificent gifts that have recently been made have deservedly attracted wide attention: Sir Alfred Yarrow's gift of £100,000 to the Royal Society, and the gift by an anonymous donor of £50,000 for the H.M.S. Victory Fund. Sir Alfred, in making this money over for scientific research, not only made a generous gesture, he finely devised his presentation, for he entrusted it to the "unfettered discretion" of the Royal Society. He is thus making safer the hitherto risky road of research work.

The "Victory" Fund, though sponsored by Admiral of the Fleet Sir F. D. Sturdee, had been making but slow progress until the gift of £50,000 appeared. The restoration of Nelson's famed flagship to her appearance at the time of Trafalgar can now begin. She will lie permanently in dry dock at Portsmouth—there is no possibility of her being at sea again—where her timbers will be supported in a specially constructed steel frame.

Theatrical Invention.

There are very few English pioneers, such as Mr. Gordon Craig and Mr. Granville Barker, in the theatre world, and the Schwabe-Hasait system of stage lighting—which, of course, is well known both on the Continent and in America—has only just arrived in this country. Mr. Basil Dean has had the system installed in the St. Martin's Theatre, and we shall now get the electrician playing an adequate part in modern production. The atmospheric effects that can be obtained from this invention are extraordinary. A cyclorama is drawn round the back of the stage, and coloured slides are projected on to it, so as to produce wonderful cloud and silhouette effects. At a demonstration of it last week most of the critics were impressed; in fact, the only deprecatory remark that I have heard was to the effect that this beautiful changing and merging of colours, the unfolding and piling up of clouds, and so on, might distract attention from the actors. But surely the synthesis of the respective impressions of eye and ear depends merely on the intelligence of the spectator or auditor; and this synthesis of the senses is undoubtedly an implication of modern art. Anyhow, we look forward with impatience to the production of a play under this system, and might suggest that Mr. Basil Dean start with J. E. Flecker's "Hassan."

ALTER EGO.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

FOUNDED

1710.

THE OLDEST INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WORLD.

Head Office: 63, THREADNEEDLE ST., LONDON, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Principal Agents in the Near East:

ALEXANDRIA	BEHREND & CO., LTD.
ATHENS	Dr. C. A. ANDRIKIDES
CAIRO	VICTOR HANAN
CYPRUS	C. S. CRAMBY
PORT SAID	L. SAVON & CO., LTD.
PORT SOUDAN	A. FRANK & CO.
SALONICA	THE LEVANT CO. (GREECE), LTD.
SOFIA	JAMES S. TULL

THE ESSENCE OF INSURANCE IS SECURITY.

The Near and Middle East.

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, February 28.

No Cabinet Yet.

Negotiations for the formation of the new Cabinet have continued throughout the week, but with no more success than before. None of the Egyptian statesmen whose experience and services marked them out for the direction of affairs at a critical moment like the present has been able to see his way to accept the offer made by King Fuad. The Wafd El Masri has continued its campaign against all those whom the King has from time to time summoned to the Palace. Particularly violent have these attacks been against Adly Pasha, whom rumour at one time credited with the intention of taking office.

At a meeting of the Constitutional Liberal Party held last Saturday in Cairo, Adly Pasha confirmed that he had declined the honour of forming the Cabinet. He drew particular attention to the personal differences existing amongst the various political parties, and expressed his sincere regret that his appeal for unity had been met by a bitter personal attack upon himself, since this showed to the world that Egyptians were not yet able to sink their personal animosities for the good of their country. Adly Pasha said that he felt that the ideal towards which their party should work should be unity. The meeting, which was quite representative, approved of this, and passed resolutions to support any Ministry that works to attain the removal of the restrictions laid upon the country in respect of the clauses in the Constitution relating to the Sudan, the promulgation of the Constitution in accordance with the principles laid down by the Dastour Commission, the immediate abolition of martial law, and the release of the political prisoners and the establishment of unity and harmony throughout the country generally. It is considered that this meeting has cleared the air and paved the way towards some settlement, and it is noteworthy that the Zaghloulit organs which led the attacks have not returned to the charge, but have merely commented in a mild manner on the too general nature of Adly Pasha's statements.

Generally speaking, there is a tendency to consider that the situation has improved, but, nevertheless, it is difficult to see exactly how the present critical state of affairs can be overcome unless those who have for some time led public opinion make up their minds to sink the personal factor and unite in support of any Egyptian who may be prepared to accept office and do the best he can for his country.

The Removal of Nash'at Bey.

One eminently satisfactory feature is the removal of Hassan Bey Nash'at from the Palace service. Nash'at Bey is an exceedingly intelligent and able young man who for some time has had very close relations with Wafd El Masri. For some reason or another he has exercised great ascendancy over the King, and it is generally believed by Egyptians who are in a position to know that he has been responsible for the very curious and ill-advised policy that has been followed by the Palace during the past six or eight months. It is stated that Nash'at Bey's departure has nothing to do with politics. Whether that is so or not, the fact remains that he will no longer be a power in the entourage of the King, and consequently there is a hope that saner influences will begin to operate in that quarter. Everyone recognises the difficult position in which King Fuad finds himself to-day, but there is general agreement that this position would never have arisen had it not been for the intrigues of certain of his entourage, among them Nash'at Bey.

That a feeling of relief is felt by instructed Egyptians at his removal from the Palace is incontestable, and—here I am voicing responsible-minded Europeans as well as Egyptians—that feeling of relief would be still greater if a similar clearance could be made of certain English officials who have for some time been taking part in the conversations that have been going on for a settlement of the political situation.

I have been simply amazed at the views expressed by both prominent Europeans and instructed Egyptians, who one and all attribute the present unfortunate state of affairs in a great measure to the influence of the personality of the officials in question, and who have expressed to me the considered opinion that not until those personalities are removed will the confidence of the foreign and Egyptian communities be restored in our policy.

The Sealing of the Tomb.

To-day the work of sealing up the tomb of King Tutankhamen in the Valley of the Kings was completed. Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter have decided that as there was more than enough in the laboratory to occupy the experts until the advent of the hot weather, and as, therefore, it will be quite impossible to tackle the contents of the sepulchral chamber, the best thing will be to close it down entirely. During the past three days a large gang of boys had been engaged in filling in the entrance to the tomb with rubble and stone, and to-day nothing remains but an enormous heap of stone with a small kiosk on it to mark the spot which has aroused more controversy in the world than any other portion of the historic Valley of the Kings.

The campaign of vituperation to which Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter have had to submit during the past two months continues in certain quarters, which are doing their level best to inflame Egyptian opinion against the excavators. Those in charge of the affairs of the Antiquities Department, as well as the more responsible-minded Egyptians, are fully aware, however, of the interested motives underlying these attacks, and they have gone out of their way to express to Lord Carnarvon and Mr. Howard Carter their sympathy and their intention to see that they have fair play. Particularly are they disgusted at the cry that archaeological science is being prostituted to commercialism having been raised in a quarter which should be the last to utter it.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

BULGARIA.

Sofia, February 28.

The New Cabinet.

There has been a continual series of political crises during the month of February. On the 7th inst. the entire Cabinet resigned, but M. Stambolisky was entrusted with the task of forming a new Ministry. This he has only partially done, as at the moment of writing four Ministerial posts remain vacant. The following circumstances caused the resignation of the old Cabinet. For a very long time MM. Tourlakoff, Thomoff, and Manoloff, Ministers of Finance, War, and Railway, respectively, have held different views from their colleagues. The three Ministers in question were inclined to be moderate, and they did not approve of the dissolution of the Sobranie. They were accused of being friendly with the Bourgeois Parties, and it had long been apparent that an open split would ensue between them and the other Ministers. This split occurred after the throwing of a bomb at M. Stambolisky in the National Theatre. An extraordinary meeting of the Agrarian Council was called, and after a stormy debate the Council decided that the reconstruction of the Cabinet had become necessary. It is, however, interesting to note that this decision was mainly arrived at by the personal consultation of M. Stambolisky with the Council. No other Ministers were allowed to be present at this consultation. On February 9 the King signed a Decree reappointing M. Stambolisky as Prime Minister, Foreign Minister and War Minister per interim, with M. Oboff Minister of Agriculture and Interior per interim, M. Bakaloff, Public Works and Railways per interim, M. Yaneff, Justice and Finance per interim, M. Radouloff, Commerce, and M. Omartchevsky, Education. There are thus four places to be filled. These places will probably be given to MM. Stoyanoff, Atanasoff, Muravieff and one other. In addition it is highly probable that MM. Radouloff and Omartchevsky will retire at an early date.

Meanwhile, besides the disappearance of MM. Tourlakoff, Thomoff, and Manoloff, the redoubtable M. Daskaloff has left the Cabinet and will in future act as a kind of electioneer-in-chief to the Agrarians. He remains in favour with the Government, but the other three Ministers, besides being officially excluded from the Party, are threatened with arrest.

The result of all the above has been considerably to increase the power of M. Stambolisky. The new Ministers will all be his personal nominees, and more than ever he will be able to dictate his policy. In Bourgeois circles the changes are greatly deprecated, as it is feared that the Government's policy will become more extreme. Sufficient time has not yet elapsed to show whether these fears are grounded on actual fact, but the writer is of the opinion that unless any strong external influence is brought to bear on M. Stambolisky, things will go on very much as before. The Agrarians are certainly ruling by force, but their force will become somewhat useless unless they are opposed by force. At present this latter contingency seems very unlikely, as the Bourgeois Parties are still disorganised, whilst the so-called moderate Agrarians do not seem inclined actively to oppose their own party. In these circumstances M. Stambolisky and his adherents should have no difficulty in securing an overwhelming majority at the general elections, which will probably be held at the end of March. It is clear that the King is almost entirely under M. Stambolisky's influence, and although the acting leaders of the Bourgeois Bloc spent two hours at the Palace yesterday, endeavouring to convince King Boris that a coalition Cabinet was necessary, it is very improbable that their démarche will lead to anything. The fact remains that as long as M. Stambolisky remains at the head of the Agrarian Party there is little chance of a change of Government. There are, however, rumours that the Macedonians intend to again create trouble, and it is from these people that the Government have most to fear.

The Aegean Outlet.

A most lucid and important declaration on the reasons which prompted Bulgaria to refuse the Allies' offer concerning the proffered outlet to the Aegean, was recently made by M. Kosta Theodoroff, Bulgarian Minister at Belgrade, and Delegate to the Lausanne Conference. M. Theodoroff pointed out that it will never be worth while for Bulgaria to construct at considerable cost a port which would be separated from Bulgaria by some 60 odd kilometres. He also made light of M. Venizelos's offer to allow Bulgaria an outlet at Salonika, saying that where Serbia had failed it was not likely that Bulgaria would succeed. In conclusion M. Theodoroff said, "We are accused of territorial ambitions. Why not? The Allies had the choice of making Western Thrace autonomous, keeping it themselves, or dividing it between Bulgaria and Greece. They chose to give it to Greece. We protest against this decision, and we are sure that sooner or later our protest will prove to be well grounded."

Reparations.

During February the Inter-Allied Commission and the Government exchanged several Notes

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 6.

NELSON'S STAIRWAY.
the "George," Portsmouth:—Very little remaining of its antiquity excepting Nelson's bedroom and the staircase which he descended before the Battle of Trafalgar.

Johnnie Walker: "Ah! England expects. . . ."

Shade of Nelson " . . . that you, JOHNNIE WALKER, (interrupting): will go on paying duty."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

relative to reparation payments during 1923, and the guarantees concerning these payments. At the moment the situation is that a Commission, composed of MM. Gatcheff, Secretary of the Finance Ministry, Kosseff, a former diplomat and financier, and Petkoff, Director of Political Affairs, are conducting unofficial negotiations with the Commission. The object of these negotiations is to determine what sum of money Bulgaria can pay this year, and also the necessity of the reduction of the total amount due to be paid. The Commission are somewhat optimistic regarding the outcome of these negotiations, but in the writer's opinion, although the Government are certainly showing good faith, it is exceedingly doubtful whether any practical agreement will be reached. The Government have signified their readiness to guarantee Custom receipts up to the sum demanded in payment, but they are endeavouring first of all to obtain a reduction in the total debt. Meanwhile the leva has fallen in value vis-a-vis the pound sterling, and to-day the rate is 820. Regarding the sum to be paid this year, no official statement has been made, but it is said that ten million French francs, equivalent to approximately 105 million levass, will be the amount demanded.

National Theatre Destroyed.

A most destructive fire broke out in the National Theatre during a performance on February 10. The whole of the scenery and dresses were destroyed, whilst the total damage is estimated at forty to fifty thousand pounds, of which, it is reported, only 25 per cent. is covered by insurance. The fire was caused by a petroleum lamp catching fire and setting alight a curtain. The fire brigade was quite unable to deal with the conflagration, water being short, and the instruments old and out of date. Fortunately, scarcely any loss of the life occurred, as the fire-screen separating the stage from the auditorium was promptly let down. A national appeal for funds to assist in the reconstruction of the theatre is shortly to be made.

Constantinople, March 6.

Angora Notes and News.

"Tout vient à point à qui sait attendre." Optimistic as I have ever been, that is all that I propose to say this week on the subject of Peace. The people of Constantinople have grown accustomed now to seeking the telegraphic messages from Angora in the daily news sheets (rather as a "wanted" man may be supposed to scan with furtive glance the police news) to discover the latest thing that is to happen to them; what new laws and regulations are to be applied, and when; what further restrictions are to be imposed on their going out and coming in, their getting up and lying down, their incomes and expenditures, their pleasures and their woes. But anything on the subject of the Peace, nowadays, is passed over, just as our "wanted" man might be expected to skip an interesting description of the life of Tutankhamen or other restful reflections on topics of ancient history.

From the "Capital" we have learned during the current week—to take a few of the daily paragraphs, culled at random:—

That a school is being opened for instruction in accountancy—double system. It will be open to Moslems only, who will now replace the Christian employees who do not know Turkish.

That whereas, owing to exceptional circumstances, it has not been possible to apply in their entirety the new laws enacted at Angora, the law exonerating non-Moslems from military service on the payment of the sum of £T100, came into force as from March 1.

That £T35,000 has been subscribed for the Victory monument, or statue of Ghazi Mustapha Kemal Pasha, which is to be erected in Angora, and that £T8,750 of this amount was collected in Constantinople.

That Mustapha Kemal, on the occasion of the ceremonial opening of the New Year of the National Assembly, in his address stated that in anticipation of the possibility of having again to resort to arms, certain military preparations had been made in Mesopotamia.

That Turkish agricultural interests have been invited to be represented, at the expense of the Russian Government, at an international Agricultural Exhibition to be held at Moscow in the month of August.

That the Civil list of the Khalif has been fixed as follows:—His Majesty, £T15,000 a year, plus an allowance of £T11,000. The sons of his Majesty up to the age of 16 years, £T50 a month; 26 years, £T80; 36 years, £T120; 46 years, £T150. To his Majesty's daughters up to the age of 21 years, £T50; 31 years, £T60; 41 years, £T80, and beyond 41 years of age, £T100 a month. The wives of deceased Khalifs will receive £T50 and his daughters-in-law £T30 a month. The Khalif's nephews are not included in the Civil List.

The Private McCartney Story.

Many such news jottings from Angora, appear in our daily Press, all tending, at any rate, to divert our minds from the threadbare subject of Peace. But the one that has, perhaps, aroused in the British community during the week more interest than any other is the soulful story from Angora cabled by the correspondent of a London newspaper, in which he describes the discovery "in the muddy little town, now the capital of Nationalist Turkey," of one Private William McCartney, of the 1st Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers. One reads how the "Angora Scot" has been having such a lovely time that the only reason that he had

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative):

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

Phone: MAYFAIR 1558.

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

Refinery at ABADAN, PERSIA

ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL CO., LTD.

"The All-British Oil Company"

The range of products manufactured by the Company and its subsidiaries includes :—

Aviation Spirit, Motor Spirit, Lamp Oils, White Oils (Turpentine Substitute), Gas Oils, Tractor Vaporising Oils, Diesel and Semi-Diesel Oils, Fuel Oil, Lubricating and Batching Oils, Paraffin Wax and Candles.

The ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL COMPANY controls by itself and through its associated Companies Bunkering Stations at the following Ports :—

LONDON	ABADAN	DURBAN
Royal Albert Docks and Purfleet	ADEN	FREMANTLE
AVONMOUTH	ALGIERS	HAVRE
GRANGEMOUTH	ANTWERP	KARACHI
HULL	BOMBAY	MADRAS
JARROW (Tyne)	BORDEAUX	MARSEILLES
LEITH	CALCUTTA	MELBOURNE
LIVERPOOL	CHRISTIANIA	MOMBASA
MANCHESTER	COLOMBO	ORAN
SOUTHAMPTON	COPENHAGEN	PORT SAID
SUNDERLAND	DONGES (Loire)	RANGOON
SWANSEA	DUNKIRK	SYDNEY

Other Stations are in the course of erection.

British in Capital, Management and Policy

ANGLO-PERSIAN OIL Co., Ltd.

Britannic House, 23 Gt. Winchester St., E.C.2

not been altogether pleased to meet the correspondent of an English newspaper was due to the fear that he might have come to arrange for his release. Having been reassured that the correspondent was influenced by no such unhumanitarian designs, he proceeded to tell how, as a Scottish Borderer and a mechanic in a British aeroplane forced to land owing to fog, he found himself in the Turkish lines near Chanak. Boots and spats, adds the correspondent in his narrative, being the only articles which needed renewing in order to complete this soldier's smart military appearance, were forthwith indented for in Angora. The correspondent concludes by expressing his belief that this fortunate prisoner-of-war, having spent several months in Turkish hands, with "good food and no work," is likely to become "the first naturalised British citizen in Angora."

The whole story sounding so extraordinary, I was tempted to make some inquiries as to its veracity. I have been informed that for some months past there has been a warrant out for the arrest of a Private William McCartney on the charge of having deserted from the King's Own Scottish Borderers, now stationed at Chanak, and it remains to be seen whether there is any connection between the deserter and the hero of the very un-English and un-Scottish story cabled to a London newspaper, and repeated in our local Press.

The Visit of the "Mauretania."

The periodic visits to Constantinople of the great Atlantic liners in the course of their Mediterranean cruises afford at the present time a pleasant break in the monotony of life. With the majority of our womenfolk away, and in the enforced absence of the usual tourists and visitors, life in the town may be said to have reached a dead level of dull routine.

In spite, however, of wars and rumours of wars, our American cousins are coming over in their hundreds from all parts of the great American continent, including Canada, on pleasure bent, and regardless of expense, to gain a flashlight impression on the spot of Turkey and the Near East question. On the 12th of last month the Cunard liner the "Homer" made a two-days' stay in the port, with some 400 passengers, which event was capped on Thursday last by the Mauretania, with her 550 first-class tourists. These visits, which perhaps in more normal times might pass unnoticed, are welcomed at the present time of our depression by the hamel (who carries your bag), the cab and taxi drivers, the carpet and curio merchants, and the many languishing hotels and restaurants, to say nothing of the American colony and the English colony, as an interesting social event.

On the evening of her arrival the "Mauretania" gave a fancy dress ball on board, which was attended by some 100 American and English residents. The ship's spacious ballroom, the wealth and variety of the costumes and the costumed, assisted by the excellent orchestra, made a pleasing and interesting study, and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The mere Englishman, indeed, felt himself to be in an American town for the time being—if not in an American ship, until the conclusion of the evening's entertainment, when the ship's orchestra struck up the British National Anthem.

The "Mauretania" remained for three days, and conducted tours were provided for the tourists to all places of interest, including a trip up the Bosphorus. She left for Athens at 6 p.m. on Sunday. On the same evening another Cunard liner, the "Caronia," arrived with a further quota of American tourists.

INDIAN ARMY REFORM.

To the Editor of THE NEAR EAST.

Sir,—I have not served in India since 1883, but your "Notes of the Week" in your issue of March 1 reminded me how in many respects India is far more backward than Egypt. You speak of Lord Rawlinson's tentative measures to Indianise the Army as a "thorny question," and refer to the cadets at the College at Dehra Dun as having played no games before entering the College. To an old Egyptian like myself, who has for a quarter of a century and more witnessed the annual sports of the Egyptian Military School at Abbassia and assisted at the Inter-College football matches which are so keenly contested at Cairo, it seems hardly credible that Indian youth should still be so effeminate. In Egypt there never was any lack of recruits to officer the Army, physically qualified. The trouble was that in the early days the boys with education all went to one or other of the technical colleges, and the military authorities had to be satisfied with a lower standard of education. But ten years ago, when I left Egypt, youths with secondary certificates were rapidly increasing in number, and now the supply is probably equal to the demand of all the Government services.

In your same issue you also quote from an article in the Morning Post, which is rather misleading, as the Morning Post refers to the Army as being entirely composed of Indians "except for the officers who, until recently, were entirely British." This is not so, as Indian officers of the rank of jemadar and subadar correspond with lieutenants and captains in the English Army, and have always existed, but were, and I believe still are, rankers promoted. It is these rankers who are now to give place to the cadets from the Military College.

But I believe that I am correct in stating that this system of ranker-officers was deliberately adopted after the Mutiny, as it was thought that a promoted ranker with a pension to lose would be more loyal than youths with better education. I will not attempt to argue that we were not justified in adopting this policy at the time, but it is, of course, not in keeping with our declaration of policy since the War, and there would appear to be no reason why these promoted N.C.O.s should not be replaced as rapidly as possible—in fact, as fast as they can be turned out from the College. The only question is: Will the one Military College turn out cadet officers fast enough to satisfy the demands of Indian reformers? As far as I can see there can be no question of British officers serving under Asiatics, as it will take some years before these cadet officers are qualified for the higher commands, and when that time arrives there should be no difficulty in arranging that certain units are entirely Indianised. If any difficulty arises it will be the new cadet officers associating for the time being with rankers. If the scheme is to leave the company officers as at present and simply replace the English officers by young Indians as they qualify, this would appear as absurd as continuing to recruit the Civil Service with Indians paid at the rates prescribed for Britons serving in India.—I am, etc.,

Biarritz, March 5.

COLES PASHA.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON BOSS, Director.

Near East Bookshelf.

"THE REAL MESOPOTAMIA."

The title chosen by "Harun" for his modest pamphlet may seem somewhat ambitious, but there is a mass of common sense and sound information in the eighteen pages devoted to his subject. We may be inclined to think that he has overlooked one English publication which has faced the problem of Irak "in a practical and impartial spirit," and might prefer to find a truer perspective in the criticisms of the Irak Administration. The whole pamphlet, however, deserves to be closely studied, and should be in the hands of all those who ever venture to discuss the Mesopotamian question. "Harun" does not make allowance for the difficulties that confronted Irak's administrators, or for the inevitable half-way stage between the legitimate extravagance of the Army during the War and the ultimate balancing of Budgets by a civil Government. He is right in pointing out that the money over which the British taxpayer is being urged to yell himself hoarse was not spent in the development in the Mesopotamian deserts, but for other purposes. He challenges Mr. Asquith's dictum that Mesopotamia is the worst British investment ever made, because, "in point of fact, very little investment, British or otherwise, has ever been made there." In a brief chapter on the resources of Irak he reminds us, among other interesting facts, that the exports (including re-exports) for the six months ending September, 1922, amounted in value, roughly, to £3,000,000. Again, referring to Mr. Asquith, who declared that there are no British interests in Mesopotamia, "Harun" instances a number of British interests, e.g., the railways, electric power plants, twenty large British companies, as well as a number of smaller enterprises run by individual Englishmen on their own account, a number of large Indian firms, two out of three banks. More important than all these, he points out that ten years ago there were only about fifteen Government schools for boys in the whole of Mesopotamia, and none at all for girls. To-day there are 126 boys' schools and twenty-five girls' schools, and the latter can deal with only about 50 per cent. of the applicants. "Before the War the Courts of Justice in Mesopotamia were a by-word. . . . Now the Courts of Law are above suspicion. Before the War the only hospitals in the country were those of the missionaries. They were understaffed and overworked, and every sort of disease was rife among the people. Now there are forty-nine Government-controlled hospitals and dispensaries, an X-Ray institute, a pathological institute, and a travelling dispensary, which is doing magnificent work amongst the tribes."

A final quotation :—

"Many great Imperial nations have invaded and conquered Mesopotamia, and all of them have made a success of it. All of them—that is to say, except two. The Chaldeans, the Assyrians, the Persians, the Parthians, the Romans, the Greeks, and the Arabs in turn successfully built up there a brilliant civilisation. There have been so far in Mesopotamian history only two Imperial failures. One is the Turk, and the other the English. Are you willing to leave it at that? Are you willing to evacuate the country with your work only just commenced? Are you willing to be bracketed in history with the Turk?"

BENGALI FICTION.

"TALES OF BENGAL." By Sita and Santa Chatterjee. (London: Humphrey Milford. 3s. 6d. net.)
 "SRIKANTA." By Saratchandra Chatterji. Translated by K. C. Sen and Theodosia Thompson. (London: Humphrey Milford. 3s. 6d. net.)

These are the first two volumes of an Eastern Library, published by the Oxford University Press. We judge from them that the publisher's aim is to give us a series of translations of fiction by Eastern writers. The first volume of the Library contains short stories by two Bengali sisters, and the second contains the first part of the most famous novel of a well-known Bengali writer. Having read them, we look forward eagerly to the volumes which are to follow. Both are introduced by Mr. E. J. Thompson, who tells us about the authors what is necessary for a more complete appreciation of their work.

In "Tales of Bengal" there are three stories by Santa Chatterjee and three by Sita Chatterjee. They give a vivid picture of the life of the women of Bengal, as seen through the eyes of these advanced countrywomen of theirs. The stories by Sita Chatterjee are frankly sentimental, stories of disappointed love, filled with a haunting, lingering sadness like the scent of a flower stealing at sunset through some brilliant Indian garden. They are stories of aching hearts, of shattered hopes, and they celebrate tenderly the self-effacement, the complete resignation to fate, of the Indian woman.

Santa Chatterjee also dwells on the fact that in India "a woman is born to suffer," and to suffer in uncomplaining silence whatever destiny may thrust upon her. She has, however, a touch of irony that is lacking in her sister's stories, and she also has more command of the art of writing a short story. With Sita Chatterjee's talent we feel that we should see it at its best in her novels, but "The Ugly Bride," by Santa Chatterjee, in this volume, is a most satisfyingly complete production.

Saratchandra Chatterji's "Srikanta" is also sentimental, and this first part ends on a gently sorrowful note. It is written as an autobiography, and this part is divided between Srikanta's recollections of his childhood and the beginning of his love for the beautiful singing girl, Piari. There is something curiously impersonal and dream-like about the way in which the story is unfolded. Some of the incidents, however, stand out with tremendous vividness, particularly the boy Srikanta's adventure by night in a small boat on the Ganges and his lonely vigil at Burning Ghat when he is older. These are both remarkable descriptions of attempted struggle against abject fear.

Although "Srikanta" is evidently written as a novel that is formed from European models, its utter strangeness and remoteness from anything produced by the European mind are apparent from the very beginning, and make it of extraordinary interest. We think that many are likely to take the chance given by this translation of looking at life from the point of view of the gentle-minded and timid Srikanta. They will fall under the fascination of the story from the first incident of the football match between Hindu and Moslem students, the transformation of which into a fight with umbrellas is taken so much as a matter of course.

That book you want

on the Commerce or Industries of the East, the Study of Oriental Languages, Oriental Literature, Sport, Tropical Medicine, etc., etc.
 FOYLES have it, or will quickly obtain it

SECOND-HAND OR NEW.

Over 1,000,000 volumes in stock on every conceivable subject.
 Write for Catalogue 165 (free), mentioning requirements or interests.
 Books sent on approval. Books Purchased—Best Prices paid.

FOYLES, 121, Charing Cross Rd., London, Eng.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

March 15 (New Style).

March 2 (Old Style).

Ragab 27, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Adar 27, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir William Garstin has returned to London from Egypt.

Colonel Vlassos, the Greek Military Attaché, left London for Athens on March 4.

Sir Charles and Lady Ellis will arrive in London at the end of next week from Egypt.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Anglesey have left Cairo for a short stay in the Sudan before returning to London.

General Sir John and Lady Maxwell, who are finishing the winter in Egypt, are expected to return to London early in April.

The Persian Minister will be At Home at 47, Bramham Gardens, on Thursday, March 22, from 4 to 7, in celebration of the Persian New Year.

Queen Olga of Greece, who is staying at Spencer House, St. James's, London, visited the King and Queen on March 11 and remained to luncheon.

Sir Marshall and Lady Reid will return early next month to Woodcote Lodge, Epsom, from India, where they have been spending the winter.

Mr. Robert Williams, who has been the guest at Khartum of the Governor-General of the Sudan, left Khartum on March 6 for Rhodesia and Katanga.

Mme. da Gama, wife of the Brazilian Minister, who has been visiting Syria, is on her way to Egypt, and will not return to London until the first week in April.

The Treasury has decided to continue in his office for another year Sir Ernest Wallis Budge, Keeper of the Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities at the British Museum, who was due to retire under the age limit on April 9.

Under the auspices of the Near and Middle East Association, Colonel H. F. Jacob, C.S.I., will lecture, on March 19, at 8.30 p.m., on "Yemen and its People." The lecture, which is to be illustrated with slides, will be given at 40, Upper Grosvenor Street, W.1.

Mr. Sachindrab Nath Sin, the only Indian officer in the Meteorological Office, South Kensington, has had conferred upon him by the

NATIVE HANDWORK FROM CYPRUS.

A wide selection of ladies' suede leather and Oriental bead handbags, made in a variety of original designs and colour schemes, each handbag a veritable work of art—no two alike—may be seen at THE NEAR EAST offices, 1, Devonshire Square, E.C.2. Readers in the Near East are invited to apply direct to the Leather Industry, Kyrenia, Cyprus, for parcels to be sent on approval. Parcels can also be made up to include samples of hat trimmings (a speciality), card cases, blotters, etc., Cashmere embroideries, and inexpensive embroidered rugs.

University of London the degree of M.Sc. in Physics; in recognition of his researches on the upper air.

On March 19, at 4 p.m., Mr. F. H. Skrine is delivering a lecture at King's College, Strand, on "The Southward and Eastward Expansion of Russia: and Russo-British Rivalry in the Near and Middle East."

The King has granted to Lieut.-Colonel R. D. Waterhouse, C.B., C.M.G., C.V.O., private secretary to the Prime Minister, the Royal licence and authority to wear the Insignia of Grand Officer of the Order of the Crown of Roumania, conferred upon him by the King of Roumania.

Sir John Wallis (late Chief Judge, High Court, Madras) will preside at a meeting of the East India Association at Caxton Hall, Westminster, on Monday next, March 19, at 3.30 p.m., when Mr. Gilbert Slater, M.A., D.Sc., will read a paper entitled "Protection for India."

Lord Winterton, Under-Secretary for India, will preside at a joint meeting of the Dominions and Indian sections of the Royal Society of Arts to-morrow, March 16, at 4.30, when Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Leonard Rogers, C.I.E., F.R.S., will deliver an address on "Recent Advances Towards the Solution of the Leprosy Problem."

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE

CONTINENTAL-SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,

At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO. Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOULO) ALEXANDRIA.

First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.

A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.
LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.
FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.
LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.

TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.
6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.

For Tickets and further Particulars, apply

NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.
Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."
Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.
Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.
All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."

Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1923.

THE ANGORA COUNTER-PROPOSALS.

The Allied Powers are now in possession of the Turkish counter-proposals to the draft Treaty presented to Ismet Pasha at Lausanne, and, so far as these have been revealed in telegraphic summaries, it cannot be said that they contain many surprises. Full credit may be given to Mustapha Kemal Pasha for his handling of the National Assembly. Up to the last moment the extremists continued to let off steam, which, it is of interest to note, impressed no one except the French, who have all along shown a curious inability to understand Turkish mentality. A week's debate was promised, but the closure was applied at the end of the first day, and the Government was accorded what was equivalent to a mandate to continue the peace negotiations on the lines previously followed by Ismet Pasha. The advantages of these tactics to Mustapha Kemal Pasha are obvious. If the Delegation had signed the Treaty at Lausanne there was the danger that the extremists would have been able to make capital out of an alleged betrayal of the National Pact, and would have either secured the rejection of the Treaty or at least used the Lausanne Conference to undermine Mustapha Kemal Pasha's position. As things are, the Assembly has confirmed the acceptance of all the main terms of the Treaty, and has expended most of its powder and shot in endorsing the quibbles that the Delegation had to interpose to provide an excuse for the interruption of the Conference. Negotiations can now be resumed at the point where they were broken off on February 4, and when the Treaty is signed its ratification by the Turkish National Assembly will follow as a matter of course. No doubt the Turkish delegates will continue up to the very last to manœuvre for position, and will still try to extract further concessions from the Allies; but unless all the indications are at fault, the signature of the Peace Treaty will now be a matter of only a few weeks.

It is entirely in accordance with Turkish tactics that the counter-proposals and the covering Note should raise a few minor points in the political clauses of the draft Treaty. In his memorandum of February 4 Ismet Pasha stated: "We accept the western frontier as proposed by the Allied Powers." The new Note, however, asks for Turkish sovereignty over Castellorizzo and the small islands dependent on Tenedos, and suggests the Thalweg of the Maritza as the frontier of Thrace rather than the left bank of the river. If these requests are refused, it is, no doubt, hoped that their rejection will dispose the Allies to yield a point or two in other directions. The proposal that the Treaty should be split into two parts, one to be signed at once and the remainder to be reserved for subsequent discussion, is renewed. It is a plausible suggestion, prompted perhaps by the reflection that the signature of the first part of the Treaty, or at least its ratification by the Angora Assembly, would entail the immediate withdrawal of the Allied Army of Occupation from Constantinople. The discussion of the reserved clauses could thus proceed under conditions more gratifying to Turkish amour propre and less conducive to that "generous spirit of conciliation and good will" on which Ismet Pasha prided himself at Lausanne. It would not be fair to read too much into the Memorandum prepared rather hurriedly by the Turkish Delegation for the Allies on February 4; but it was noticeable that it contained the proposal that the Treaty of Peace to be signed that day should record the abolition of economic capitulations, while leaving the question of what should take their place for subsequent discussion. On condition that this was done Ismet Pasha was prepared to promise acceptance of the convention regarding the commercial régime, although the Note now sent out by Angora states that this convention contains matters on which agreement has not been reached. The Allies are not likely to give way on this point of a divided Treaty. It is true that on February 4 they were ready, in order to obtain Turkey's signature there and then, to reserve half a dozen clauses for later consideration; but it was stipulated that those clauses must remain in the Treaty as they then stood. The reason for postponing discussion on the articles now challenged by the Turks has passed. If there are to be further negotiations at all, they must be final and must produce a complete Treaty ready for a single act of signature and for a single act of ratification.

If the theory advanced above as to the reasons that compelled the Turks to refuse to sign the Treaty at Lausanne is correct, it disposes of the contention made in some quarters that the handling of the Conference by the British Delegation left much to be desired. From the records of the proceedings now published in a Blue Book it is evident that the Turks have set themselves to obtain the maximum freedom from control that can be won without any further appeal to arms. Even in regard to such a question as sanitary organisation they press to be allowed to engage European medical specialists for a period of five years as advisers in the sanitary administration of the Turkish frontiers rather than to have a sanitary committee, as suggested by the Allies, composed of a Turkish doctor as President and of three doctors of three different nationalities, to be chosen by the Turkish Government out of a list drawn up by international bodies. Judged by the standard of the Capitulatory régime, the "concessions" already made to the Turks may well seem to foreign residents in Turkey preposterous and far beyond the safety limit. In the light of pledges on the subject of independence and sovereignty, and in view of post-War developments in other lands, such as Egypt and Irak, the Allies' terms assume a different complexion. It is difficult to say where the line could have been drawn. At every stage of the negotiations we seem to see the Allies wondering whether, having gone so far, they can logically hold on to this or to that point, if the guiding principle is to be the attainment of a settlement and a peaceful one at that. The mischief, if such it is, was done long before the Lausanne Conference met or the Mudania Agreement was signed. In this matter the Allies are victims of circumstances and their own earlier blunders, unless they happen to be instruments of an overruling and farther-seeing Providence. Certain it is that the Turks have now an opportunity, such as they have never had before, of proving their capacity for new and better things. Mustapha Kemal Pasha's masterly handling of a situation not without its difficulties proves that Turkish ability is not wanting; but the question remains whether it will be employed on sound lines to sound ends. Mishandled, the complete independence now won by Turkey will set a seal on the decadence of the Turkish race; used circumspectly, it may change the course of Asiatic history.

THE LAUSANNE TREATY.

Special interest attaches to the issue of a Blue Book (Cmd. 1814, price 30s.) on the Lausanne Conference on Near Eastern Affairs, 1922-1923, which contains the official minutes of the meetings of the Conference, the draft terms of peace, and an account of the proceedings which took place between the date of the presentation to the Turkish Delegates of the draft Treaty and the departure of Lord Curzon from Lausanne. Eight pages are devoted to the British Secretary's notes of the meeting held in Lord Curzon's room at the Beau Rivage Hotel, Lausanne, on Sunday, February 4, from 5.40 o'clock to 7.45 p.m.

The extracts given below have special reference to the clauses of the draft Treaty to which the Turkish Delegation took exception, and which are now to be the subject of counter-proposals, as the result of the decision of the Angora National Assembly to authorise the resumption of pourparlers with the Allies. This decision would seem to do little more than to pick up the negotiations where Ismet Pasha broke them off on February 4. In the memorandum that he presented to the Presidents of the Allied Delegations that day he enumerated the "essential questions in regard to which peace can be concluded immediately." These were: Territorial questions; Nationality; Rights of Minorities; Financial Clauses, Public Debt (Reparations); Communications; Sanitary questions; Prisoners of War, and Graves; Convention regarding the Straits; Convention regarding the frontiers of Thrace; Declaration regarding the Administration of Justice in Turkey; Convention regarding Commercial Régime in Turkey; Declaration regarding the Amnesty.

✓ Ismet Pasha's memorandum, however, is obscure in parts, and appears to accept as settled certain clauses embodying modifications proposed by the Turks before the Allies had passed judgment on these Turkish alterations. Ostensibly the Conference broke down on two of the "essential questions" in regard to which Ismet Pasha suggested that peace could be concluded immediately—viz., the Administration of Justice in Turkey and the Convention regarding the Commercial Régime. The former subject was dealt with under Document No. IV. of the Final Act, consisting of two parts, the first being the Draft Convention respecting the régime applicable to foreigners in Turkey, and the second being the Draft Declaration relating to the administration of justice in Turkey. This second part (No. 44A in the Blue Book) was redrafted after the presentation of the Draft Treaty on February 3, with a view to meeting Turkish susceptibilities. In its original form it provided for the appointment by Turkey of a number of Legal Counsellors, who, in addition to taking part in the preparation of schemes of judicial reform, were to sit as members of the Turkish Courts in all civil cases involving sums of over £T50 in which a foreigner was concerned, and in all criminal cases where the accused was a foreigner. The Inviting Powers offered to replace this draft Declaration by another under which the Legal Counsellors were to possess no judicial functions and were to have merely general powers of observing the working of the Turkish Courts, ensuring appeals against improper decisions, and bringing complaints to the notice of the proper Turkish authorities.

Judicial Safeguards.

The amended Declaration which the Allies wished Turkey to make regarding judicial safeguards for foreigners in Turkey was as follows:—

"The Turkish Delegation has already had occasion to state that the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey is in a position to ensure to foreigners in the Turkish Courts all the safeguards of a good judicial system, and to provide therefor in the exercise of its full sovereignty and without any kind of foreign interference. It is, nevertheless, prepared to have an investigation made and to cause the situation to be examined with a view to the institution of such reforms as may be rendered advisable by the development of manners and civilisation.

Animated by this spirit, the Turkish Delegation desires to make the following declaration:—

The Turkish Government proposes to take immediately into its service, for such period as it may consider necessary, not being less than five years, legal counsellors whom it will select from a list drawn up by the Permanent Court of International Justice.

These legal counsellors will serve under the Minister of Justice, will take part in the work of the commissions for the reform of legislation, and will be attached more particularly to the areas under the jurisdiction of the Courts of Appeal of Constantinople and Smyrna, and the Courts of First Instance of Samsoun and Adana. In all cases which may affect the international relations of Turkey it will be their duty to observe the working of the Turkish civil, administrative, commercial, and criminal courts; to require that suits, appeals, or applications for cessation or revision should be instituted by the representatives of the State against any acts or judicial decisions which they consider contrary to law; and to receive all complaints to which the administration of justice in civil, commercial, administrative or criminal matters, the execution of sentences, or the manner of application of the law may give rise, with a view to bring such complaints to the notice of the competent Turkish authorities in order to ensure the strict observance of the provisions of Turkish legislation.

Domiciliary visits, searches, or arrests of persons other than those taken flagrante delicto, which the Turkish authorities may have to effect in connection with the matters stated above in the above-mentioned judicial areas, should be carried out in agreement with the said counsellors.

In cases of misdemeanour and felony, release on bail should always be ordered unless this entails danger to public safety.

In civil or commercial matters every kind of reference to arbitration and clauses in agreements providing therefor are allowed and the arbitral decisions rendered in pursuance thereof should be made effective for purposes of execution by being counter-signed by the President of the Court of First Instance, who should not refuse his signature

ASK FOR

WHITE HORSE WHISKY

BY APPOINTMENT.

unless the decision should be contrary to public order."

The Turkish Counter-Draft.

On February 4 Ismet Pasha submitted the following counter-draft as "the maximum judicial safeguards for foreigners which the Turkish Delegation could offer," and the Note now sent by the Angora Government to the Allies suggests that the title of this section should read "Convention d'Etablissement entre la Turquie et les Puissances Alliées."

The Turkish Delegation has already had occasion to state that the Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey is in a position to ensure to foreigners in the Courts all the safeguards of a good judicial system, and to provide therefor in the exercise of its full sovereignty and without any kind of foreign interference. It is nevertheless prepared to have an investigation made and to cause the situation to be studied with a view to the institution of such reforms as may be rendered advisable by the development of manners and civilisation.

Animated by this spirit, the Turkish Delegation desires to make the following declaration:—

The Turkish Government proposes to take immediately into its service, for such period as it may consider necessary, not being less than five years, European legal counsellors whom it will select from among jurists nationals of countries which did not take part in the war of 1914-18, and who will be Turkish officials.

These legal counsellors will serve under the Ministry of Justice, in which department they will take part in the work of the commissions for the reform of legislation. It will be their duty more particularly to observe in the cities of Constantinople and Smyrna the working of the Turkish civil, commercial, and criminal courts, and to receive all complaints to which the administration of justice in civil, commercial, or criminal matters, the execution of sentences, or the manner of application of the law may give rise, with a view to bring such complaints to the notice of the Ministry of Justice in order to ensure the strict observance of the provisions of Turkish legislation.

In correctional cases release on bail should always be ordered unless this entails danger to public safety, or unless such provisional release is calculated to impede the proper investigation of the case.

In civil or commercial matters every kind of reference to arbitration and clauses in agreements providing therefor are allowed, and the arbitral decisions rendered in pursuance thereof should be executed on being countersigned by the President of the Court of First Instance, who should not refuse his signature unless the decision should be contrary to public order.

The present declaration shall remain in force for a period of five years.

Reserved Clauses of the Draft Treaty.

The Note now issued from Angora claims that in addition to the Economic Clauses embodied in the draft Treaty, Articles 1 to 11 of the Convention respecting the Commercial Régime should be separated from the draft, and be reserved for subsequent discussion. In his memorandum of February 4 Ismet Pasha stated in regard to the latter clauses: "We are prepared to accept the convention regarding the commercial régime on condition that the abolition of economic capitulations also figures in the Treaty of Peace; that this convention shall have a duration of five years for the four Allied Powers and of one year for the other signatory Powers; that the clause restricting the right of Turkey to regulate the question of coastal traffic shall be suppressed; and, finally, that goods the importation of which was prohibited on December 15, 1922, shall be transferred from the list of articles coming under the co-efficient of increase of 8 to the list under the co-efficient 12."

At the meeting at the Beau Rivage Hotel in the late afternoon of February 4, the Allied representatives declared their willingness to insert in the Treaty a clause reserving for further examination and settlement a certain number of clauses in the economic section to which Ismet Pasha had taken exception. The articles in question were Articles 83, 84, 91, 92, 93 and the Annex to Article 83. The five Articles read as follow:—

Article 83.—Insurance contracts will be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the annex to the present section.

Article 84.—Contracts other than those set out in Article 82 and 83, entered into between enemies before the date when they became enemies, will be deemed to have been dissolved from that date.

Nevertheless, in the case of goods to be delivered, if the contractor proves that he had begun the execution of the contract before the said date and has suffered loss from the fact of its cancellation, he will have the right to claim, within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, compensation from the other party to the extent of the loss suffered, and, in default of agreement, to have the amount fixed by the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal referred to in Section VI. of this part.

Article 91.—Judgments given or measures of execution ordered during the war by any Ottoman judicial or administrative authority, which, on August 1, 1914, was not competent to exercise jurisdiction with regard to the rights of a person who was then a national of an Allied Power, or the rights of a company in which Allied interests were preponderant, shall be subject to revision on the application of such national or society to the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. In such case the parties shall, if it is possible and equitable, be replaced in the situation which they occupied before the judgment was delivered or the measure of execution ordered by the Ottoman authorities. If not, the national of an Allied Power, or the company in which Allied interests were preponderant, which has suffered damage from the judgment or execution, shall obtain such compensation as the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal shall consider equitable. This compensation will be paid by the Turkish Government.

Article 92.—The sale of real property mortgaged, or of a security held under contracts entered into before the war for an unpaid debt owing by an enemy, shall be deemed to have been valid irrespective of notice to the owner if the creditor acted in good faith and with reasonable care and prudence. In this case no claim by the debtor, on the ground of the sale, shall be admitted.

If, however, the creditor has not acted in good faith and with reasonable care and prudence, the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal may, on the application of the debtor, fix the compensation to be paid to him by the creditor.

Article 93.—Within the meaning of the present section, the parties to a contract should be regarded as enemies from the date on which trading between them became impossible in fact, or was prohibited or otherwise became unlawful under laws, orders, or regulations to which one of these parties was subject.

Nevertheless, the special provisions in Articles 82 to 85, 89 and 90 do not apply to contracts entered into in an enemy country with enemy nationals by nationals of Allied Powers or of Turkey having stayed in the country during the war and there freely disposed of their persons and their property. These contracts will be subject to the general law.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

Mr. Rutenberg arrived in Palestine at the beginning of this month.

Two Americans and two Frenchmen, who stated that they had visited the Yemen in search of minerals, recently arrived at Aden from Sanaa, via Lahj.

Flying Officer Dove and Air Mechanic Neale, who were arrested by the Turks last December after they had made a forced landing at Chanak, have been released.

The Postmaster-General states that the Air Mail for Baghdad which left London on February 22 reached Baghdad on March 3. The Air Mail for London which left Baghdad on March 3 reached Cairo on March 8, and should arrive in London about March 14. The next Air Mail for Baghdad will be dispatched from London on Thursday, March 22.

PRESS ON THE NEAR EAST.

The Decision at Angora.

The Westminster Gazette of March 1 did not believe it possible that the Angora Assembly should reject the Treaty:—

It is quite true that the Turks have an almost uncanny insight into the graver pre-occupations under which the Western nations labour at this moment. They certainly know that not the most bellicose among us would wish for war either for the sake of Mosul, whose fate, indeed, we have referred to the League of Nations, or for any other of the provisions which they may find objectionable. No one wishes for war. But at the same time we must remind Turkey that the Treaty is an organic whole. It was drawn up by the interested Powers, of whose interests it represents an agreed summary. Whatever the Turks may decide must be referred to the Allies. They cannot hope to obtain terms which shall, in general, be more acceptable to them. It is to be hoped that the wiser heads at Angora will be able to make these considerations appreciated, and so give a stable peace to the Near East.

The Morning Post of the same date, however, was impressed with the seriousness of the opposition to Mustapha Kemal Pasha, and was not so hopeful:

A Government which has to face the united opposition of Orthodox Turks, Communists, fed and flattered by Moscow, and a considerable proportion of the Unionists, is obviously not in a strong position to enforce a Treaty. Modern representative assemblies make the task of the Treaty-maker a hard one in the East as well as in the West. We quite understand and to some extent sympathise with the attitude of Turkey. A comparatively small State, cut off by the rigours of war from direct contact with the outside world, has liberated itself, by its own efforts, from a foreign menace. Such a triumph is a vindication of nationalism, and it is only natural that the Turks should be determined to make Turkey a land for Turks, particularly as in the past the aliens in their midst have been employed not only to secure an economic control of the country, but also to foment political intrigues which gravely endangered the stability of the State. A root and branch policy as regards foreigners is, therefore, bound to find many adherents in the highly excited atmosphere of Angora. But no one has realised more acutely than Kemal the perils of too extreme a nationalism. In the speeches which he has delivered since the conclusion of the war he has again and again pointed out that the main task of Turkey is economic reconstruction, and he is too shrewd a statesman not to know that such reconstruction can be carried out only with the assistance of foreign capital. Russia is before his eyes an example of the fate which befalls any country which cuts itself off from honourable association with the rest of the world. Is Nationalist Turkey going the way of Bolshevik Russia? That is the momentous issue which is now being debated at Angora, and which the Turks must thresh out for themselves. But there is one point to which we respectfully draw their attention. The rejection of the Lausanne Treaty does not mean isolation, glorious or inglorious, for Turkey. Isolation, in the modern world, is an impossible policy. If Turkey throws over the Western Powers, it means for her in the end a Bolshevik servitude and the installation of Lenin in Constantinople.

The Oil of Mosul.

We take the following extract from World's Work of February:—

The most stubborn business at Lausanne was, of course, over Mosul, and here we are under the uncomfortable imputation of having unavowed motives which cannot easily be squared with our professions of zeal for nationality, or even with our disinterested regard for our Arab friends. The word "oil" is always spoken with bated breath, and it does not appear to have been even mentioned at Lausanne. In the long run, it is far better to be frank about these things, and, if it is oil we are after, to say so openly. There is no shame in avowing that we wish to keep a valuable oil area under our control, if we have come by it honestly. But all the oil that can be got out of Mosul will not prevent it being a profitless and dangerous possession for the British taxpayer if the Turks believe that we have filched it, and proceed to stir up Kurds and Arabs to revolt against us, let alone the possibility of their taking into their heads to march against it themselves. The only chance of getting any profit out of Mosul is to arrange with the Turks for its peaceful possession or control. There are a dozen ways in which a skilful diplomacy might do this without issuing ultimatums or throwing down the gage to Turkish sovereignty. The Turks will make nothing of the oil without our help, and we shall make nothing of it without their acquiescence. There never was an occasion on which a fair deal was more clearly indicated, and if, as is now reported, we have decided to take Mosul out of the general negotiations and conclude a separate arrangement about it between ourselves and the Turks, we have done a wise thing which ought greatly to improve the prospect of a settlement on other issues.

Peace with Turkey.

The New Statesman recently took the view that the "economic clauses" which are to be discussed between the Allies and Turkey are in effect "certain rights claimed by French and Italian concessionaires." It goes on:—

Optimists believe that the Turks, having blown off steam, will give way and accept the Treaty, hated clauses and all. We doubt it. It seems more likely that they will press for further negotiations. In that case, and

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

A Public Lecture entitled "CUSTOMARY LAW IN THE PUNJAB" will be given by Mr. S. WILBERFORCE (late Puisne Judge of the Lahore High Court) at the LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS (Houghton Street, Aldwych, W.C.2.), on THURSDAY, MARCH 22nd, 1923, at 5.30 p.m. The Chair will be taken by Sir Charles Bayley, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., Member of the Council of India. Syllabus obtainable on application to the undersigned. ADMISSION FREE, WITHOUT TICKET.

EDWIN DELLER, Academic Registrar.

particularly if their objections are confined to these "economic clauses," the Allies will have to get off their high horse and talk. Possibly Paris and Rome may have a good case; but we have not yet heard it, nor, for that matter, have the French and Italian peoples heard it. Even, however, if it proves to be a better case than we suspect, it cannot conceivably be good enough to amount to a casus belli against Turkey. The British public, in any event, do not intend to fight—or even to perpetuate the present armed truce—for the profit of a handful of capitalists. And if France and Italy should show themselves intransigent (which we hardly think they are likely to do) and ask us to support them in the name of the Entente, they would be asking too much. Allied solidarity was certainly necessary as a means to negotiating any reasonable settlement at all in the Near East. But it was a means and not an end in itself. We have got a settlement within our grasp; we are not going to throw it away from sentiment or pride or petty greed.

JUDAISM.

Dr. D. M. Kay is responsible for the Croall Lectures this year at Edinburgh, and is delivering a series of six lectures upon "The Semitic Religions," in which he is endeavouring to show that Hebrew, Jewish, Christian, and Moslem may all be friendly. The following is a summary of his third lecture on "Judaism," delivered in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, on February 25:—

Between the Old and New Testaments there are two centuries about which our Bible says nothing. In this interval many books, such as the Apocrypha, were produced. The dominance of the Mosaic law made freedom of speech difficult. Authors had, therefore, to go back to Methuselah for a nom de plume. Books appeared in the name of Adam, Enoch, Noah, and the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. Hebrew life appears only at its best in the Bible; the actual history of these two centuries reveals in Hebrew character an element of stern ferocity and grim power for evil as well as for good. It was not among weaklings or cowards that the religion of Scribes, Pharisees, and Apostles had its being.

Judaism may be used as the name for that form of Hebrew religion which made self-preservation its chief end, and which definitely rejected the evangelic invitation to convert the Gentiles. In the time of Pontius Pilate the Hebrews had a fair chance of becoming the directors of human history. The remnant that survived the Chaldean captivity had multiplied a hundredfold. They had sound domestic morals, and were strong at home and abroad. They could have secured better terms for their religion from Rome than from Assyria, Chaldea, or Greece. But, like all other nations, Judea preferred independence; national energy turned away from the diffusion of religion, and went to war for sovereignty and possibly for world dominance. The result was the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and a second disastrous war with nearly a million casualties under Bar Kokkba, A.D. 130-134.

The strict rules of Judaism (e.g., Sabbath, diet) required indulgence as well as hospitality in the lands of their dispersion. Among races with no organised religion, the Jews made converts of rulers and people—e.g., Chazars on the Volga—but beyond mere persistence Jews made little impression in India or China. In the West Judaism had to arrange for recognition by the Roman Empire, at first Pagan and later officially Christian. In the East it encountered Persian religion, and, later, Islam. Long periods of peaceful intercourse were interrupted by violent outbreaks of hostility. When Christian Europe expelled Jews, the refugees were hospitably received by Turkey. The attempts to use coercion in converting Jews to other religions were defeated by the constancy of the Jews, and the principle of religious toleration was gradually accepted.

Rationalism has been claimed as an ornament of Judaism. Yet in spite of centuries of labour by great scholars, the authors of the Talmud failed to discover the modern analysis of the constituents of the Pentateuch. And mysticism has produced many Messianic claimants.

The relation of the Jewish religion to its ancient habitation is a question that still invites general interest. Is Judaism a religion? If so, does it require a national home?

Nations have seldom offered a moral claim to their territory beyond the fact of continued possession. Victory in war justifies annexation, according to the early practice of Hebrew and other nations. The prophet Amos first insists that there are moral conditions attached to Israel's lease of Palestine. Later disciples justify the dispossession of the Amorites because of their iniquity. The Priests' Code, which became a celestial imperative for the Pharisees, sanctions a war of extermination by Divine commission for the protection of its own type of religion in the Holy Land. The prophetic and apostolic type of religion taught that the health of the spirit does not depend on externals, like temple, sacrifice, geographical position; the field is the world.

So far as Judaism maintains the perpetual validity of the Mosaic law, its national home could not consistently give to immigrants the free exercise of their religion. No other religion asks or would receive a territory for itself alone, because territory is as indifferent to true religion as it is to philosophy or music or mathematics. No other nation asks that its members may settle with equal right in foreign countries, and retain an exclusive citizenship in its own national home. If it were proposed on grounds of international generosity to provide an area for the intensive culture of Judaism, the generous donors would require to do justly by others who already inhabit the area.

The proposal to re-establish the Jews in Palestine is patently unjust to the present inhabitants; it fosters dangerous illusions among discontented Jews; it cannot be reconciled with spiritual religion, international comity, or elementary political prudence.

NORTH PERSIAN FORCES MEMORIAL.

A Memorial Trust Fund has been instituted to commemorate the services of the late North Persian Forces. The Fund has been subscribed by officers of the R.A.M.C. and I.M.S. who served with these forces. The desire of the subscribers being to encourage the study of tropical medicine and tropical hygiene, it has been decided that the Memorial shall take the form of a silver medal, to be known as the "North Persian Forces Memorial Medal," which will be awarded annually for the best paper on tropical medicine or tropical hygiene published in any journal during the twelve months ending December 31 by any medical officer, of under twelve years' service, of the Navy, R.A.M.C., R.A.F., I.M.S., or Colonial Medical Service.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.

3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO

THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,

At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

Trade and Currency.

It is an axiom that a depreciated currency is a serious handicap to the import trade in the country concerned, but it is by no means true that all trade is out of the question. The point needs emphasis in view of the fact that, while so many firms consider it inopportune to display any interest in Near Eastern markets, others are able to report satisfactory transactions. Everything depends on the agent on the spot. Where the goods are in stock the disposal of them is a comparatively simple proposition, provided that there is any demand for them. If they have to be ordered, and delivery may be long delayed, the risk to the purchaser with the possibility of a further depreciation of exchange is obvious. The terms of sale should accordingly make some attempt to meet this difficulty, always remembering that a "good turn" now may be the means of securing a lucrative market in the future. It is noticeable that whenever the rate of exchange shows a tendency to remain more or less stationary over a period business improves—a sure sign that it is the violence of the fluctuations rather than the extent of the depreciation that hampers trade, and that the countries in question, when once exchange is more or less fixed, will be ready buyers, no matter at what figure exchange may stand.

The Coming Budget.

Opinion has been gradually coming round to the view that when the secrets of the Budget are revealed it will be found that the Chancellor has made the same concession in respect of the income-tax as his predecessor a year ago. Of course, expectation may prove ill-founded, but there is so much in favour of the measure and so little against it that any other outcome may be regarded as improbable. There is no question of not having an adequate surplus to deal with on the estimates, though the margin would be much greater if the "axe" had been applied in certain directions with more determination, and there is the all-sufficient reason for the reduction of the tax that it is the most direct and effective means of alleviating the prevailing unemployment by setting free capital for employment in new enterprises.

Cotton Growing in Irak.

The latest report on agriculture in Irak gives very encouraging details regarding the progress made in the cultivation of cotton. So far the industry is on only a very small scale, it is true, the crop of the past season amounting to no more than 300 bales. That small yield, however, was five times the amount exported the previous year, so that it will be evident that the industry is already in process of being firmly established in Irak. As regards the next season, we are told that the indications are that there will be a large demand for seed, and that it will come from wider areas, and that "a number of landlords have now assured themselves that the crop is a remunerative one, and, most important of all, the cultivators are gaining confidence in it," all of which helps to make one view the future of cotton-growing in Irak with very considerable hope.

The Rupee.

The vexed question of the parity of the rupee is again attracting attention. The rupee now stands round about 1s. 4d., and, so far as can be seen, there is not much likelihood of any immediate change of any importance. It is possible to conceive a peculiar train of circumstances as a result of which the rupee will reach the official parity of 2s., but, to put it mildly, such an eventuality is extremely unlikely in present conditions. Most people, indeed, doubt whether 2s. is a possible figure. Whether that be so or not, it should be clear to everyone now that the alteration of the parity of the rupee was most ill-advised. There is much to be said in favour of retracing the step, but whether that is feasible or not is a moot point. It is beyond question, however, that as long as the nominal parity remains at what may be termed an idealistic figure there will continue to be dissatisfaction in India.

Yugoslavia and Salonika.

The settlement of the question of a free zone at Salonika for Yugoslavia still hangs fire, and it is, perhaps, not surprising in the circumstances that Yugoslavia should be displaying signs of impatience at the delay. It is several weeks now since the Greek proposals were rejected as inadequate, but so far no further communication has been forthcoming from the Greek authorities, though, according to the latest reports, one is on the verge of being sent. One can well understand that the arrangements for a free zone present very considerable difficulties; but it is not believed that the present delay is to be attributed to these grounds, but is due rather to the desire of the Greek authorities to carry through first negotiations with a financial group for the development of Salonika. Whatever be the reason, it is to be hoped that a satisfactory arrangement will shortly be reached, since it is obvious that

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

until Yugoslavia understands where she is in this matter her trade and commerce will labour under a serious handicap. Greece, it may be pointed out, has every inducement to push on with the scheme without delay, since it is obvious that she is bound substantially to benefit by the increased flow of trade to and from Yugoslavia.

The Indian Trade Commissionership.

Among the proposals of the Inchcape report is the abolition of the office of Indian Trade Commissioner. It would seem regrettable that just when Indian trade is beginning to revive this step should be contemplated, especially since in the short period of its existence the scope for this office has been abundantly proved. Still, with India in the financial plight it is the saving of the amount involved is a consideration not to be overlooked, and the argument that traders were able to do without such assistance before the war is in the circumstances not lightly to be overcome.

COMMENTATOR.

TENDERS INVITED.

Tenders are invited for the following contracts, and must be made by the dates mentioned.

Egypt.

In the case of tenders marked (I.E.) particulars can be obtained from the Inspecting Engineer, Egyptian and Sudan Governments, Queen Anne's Chambers, S.W.1.

Hackles.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for hackles. April 6. (I.E.)

Jerseys and Socks.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for jerseys and socks. April 6. (I.E.)

Palm Oil Soap.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for palm oil soap. April 6. (I.E.)

Winter Blankets.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for blankets, winter. April 9. (I.E.)

Oils, etc.—The Director of Stores, Frontier Districts Administration, Arsenal, Alexandria, invites tenders for the supply of oils, paints and varnishes. April 17.

Brushes.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for brushes. April 10. (I.E.)

Puggaree.—The Egyptian War Department invites tenders for puggaree. April 9. (I.E.)

It is proposed to establish a regular air service between Paris and Constantinople via Belgrade.

The Turkish authorities have imposed a five-fold tariff on wheat and flour coming into Constantinople.

Burma's rice crop yield is estimated at approximately 6,900,000 tons, of which it is stated that about 2,600,000 tons will be available for export.

The directors of the Cyprus Oil Trust, Ltd., announce that arrangements have been concluded with Petroleum Options, Ltd., for handling and selling its output from the Fyzabad (Trinidad) property.

The North Anantapur Gold Mines has declared a preferential dividend at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum, less tax, for the half-year ended December 31, payable March 29 next, to shareholders registered March 8.

ROUMANIA'S MINERAL RESOURCES.

The coal won from Roumanian mines comprises the following grades (says the Commercial Secretary to H.M. Legation at Bucharest in a recent report):—Superior lignite with a calorific value of 5,500 to 7,000 calories, lignite with a calorific value of 5,500 to 6,000 calories, ordinary lignite with a calorific value of 3,000 to 3,800 calories, bituminous coal with a calorific value of 6,000 to 7,000 calories, and anthracite in very small quantities with a calorific value of 6,000 to 7,000 calories. According to the latest available official statistics, the total coal production for the year 1921 was 1,804,000 tons, as compared with 1,587,000 and 1,559,000 tons in 1920 and 1919 respectively. The output of the mines is restricted, principally owing to the lack of railroad trucks to take the coal away from the loading platforms at the pit-heads, and it is considered useless to expect any increase in production until this difficulty is overcome.

The annual consumption of coal in Roumania is estimated to be as follows:—For shipping and domestic use (1,000,000 tons), for industries (750,000 tons), and for the railways (474,160 tons). It will thus be seen that the annual requirements exceed the annual production by approximately half a million tons. Before the war Old Roumania imported about 369,000 tons of coal for bunkering, industrial and domestic purposes, and for use in the manufacture of gas. In 1922 small imports of foreign coal were made, amongst them being Turkish coal for gasworks and British coal for household and industrial consumption.

The exploitation of the natural gas resources of the country necessitates not only the assistance of skilled geologists and mining experts, but also a large supply of pipes for the purpose of conveying the gas to the towns and industrial areas, where it would find a sale. For industrial and domestic purposes there is scope for development, although as an illuminant electricity, being both cleaner and cooler than gas, is preferred. Some years ago a British company secured a concession for the lighting of the town of Ploesti with gas from shafts bored at Aricesti. In Transylvania the production of natural gas was encouraged by the Hungarian Government before the war, and gas is in use for lighting and heating in certain cities. The consumption of gas in Roumania in 1921 is estimated at 180 million cubic metres, as against 170 million cubic metres in 1920. This is a very small proportion of the output, which was estimated at 3,594 and 3,644 cubic metres respectively.

The pre-war annual production of iron ore, which is found in Transylvania and the Banat, amounted to about 410,000 tons, which gave approximately 200,000 tons of pig iron. Since the war the output has diminished considerably, and reached only 112,000 tons in 1919, 73,800 tons in 1920, and 91,100 tons in 1921. The Government blast furnaces at Hunedoara have a capacity of about 150,000 tons of pig-iron per annum and the Reshitza works about 80,000 tons, so that the present production is insufficient to supply even these two works.

Salt mining is carried on directly by the Salt Monopoly, which is a Department of the Ministry of Finance. The production in 1921 amounted to 232,800 tons, as compared with 246,000 and 259,000 tons respectively in the two previous years.

COMPANY NOTES AND REPORTS.

Eastern Telegraph.

The directors announce that, owing to unavoidable delays in obtaining necessary returns from foreign stations and administrations, it will be impossible to issue audited accounts and balance-sheet for the year 1922 in time to allow of the annual general meeting being held in May, but the meeting will be convened as soon as the full accounts can be submitted. The directors have decided to pay on April 14 next a final dividend for 1922 of 2½ per cent., free of tax, on ordinary stock, making 10 per cent., free of tax, for year, the same as for previous year.

Eastern Extension Telegraph.

The directors state that, owing to unavoidable delays in obtaining necessary returns from foreign stations and administrations, it will be impossible to issue audited accounts and balance-sheet for the year 1922 in time to allow of the annual general meeting being held in May, but the meeting will be convened as soon as the full accounts can be submitted. The directors have, however, decided to pay on April 14 next a final dividend for 1922 of 2½ per cent. free of tax, making 10 per cent., free of tax, for year, the same as for previous year.

The production of crude oil by the British Burmah Company and the Rangoon Oil Company for the month of February amounted to 57,665 barrels.

BANQUE COMMERCIALE ROUMAINE

PAID-UP CAPITAL Lei 50,000,000
RESERVES 12,865,588.76
DEPOSITS AND CURRENT ACCOUNTS 273,629,395.47
(At the date of June 30, 1920).

Head Office: BUCHAREST, Str. Smardan, 3.
Branches: BRAILA, CHISINAU (Bessarabia).

Agencies: Galatz, Constantza, Bazargic (New Dobroudja), Craiova and Ploesti.

Correspondents in all towns.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF BANKING BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

Letters of Credit for all Countries. Special Departments for operations of goods and grain. Telegraphic Address: COMRO.

BANQUE DU SYNDICAT AGRICOLE JALOMITZA

CAPITAL 60,000,000 Lei.

Head Office: BUCHAREST. Branches: CALARASH and DOROHOI.
Telegraphic Address: BANCAIAL.

Every description of Banking Business transacted; participations; special section for grain trade. General Manager: Dr. C. B. MALTEZIANO.

Engineering Topics.

(By Our Engineering Representative.)

Communications Overseas.

The difficulty with regard to communications is one of the most serious handicaps encountered by those whose fortune takes them to the more lonely places of the world, of which so many are to be found in the region included in the Near and Middle East. It matters not whether it be from the business or the social point of view, the pioneer or official or whoever it may be is confronted by this problem at every turn. It is felt in getting produce of any kind away to market, in obtaining machinery or supplies, as well as when there is a desire for the society that can be found in the nearest settlement. The railway will never remedy this state of things. All that it can do is to link up the great centres, leaving individuals to find their way to the occasional stopping places as best they can. The motor can solve the problem, but not as things are at present, for the indifferent and often impossible terrain presents an insuperable barrier to the free use of the car. It can do much to make life endurable in the loneliest places, but it is much too arduous a pursuit to be enjoyable.

The "Motorailer."

As a result, however, of the introduction of a new appliance which is called the "Motorailer," it would seem evident that the difficulties of life abroad may be greatly modified in the future. The appliance briefly enables motor vehicles to be run on railways as well as on roads. There are two types of the appliance, one for cars whose gauge is approximately that of the road vehicle, the other for narrow gauge lines. In the former case the wheels are encased in easily fitted circular flanged rims; in the latter a low trolley car is used, its flanged wheels being driven by driving wheels of the car, which can be driven on to it, fastened, and released by a simple device. The latter type is, of course, most suitable for use overseas, where the railways are so often of the narrow gauge type; and it is interesting to note that the device can be utilised for motor-cycles with even greater facility than in the case of motor-cars. In Palestine and elsewhere during the war motor-cycles were used fairly extensively on railway lines, there being the double advantage of speed easily attained and a greatly increased carrying capacity.

Motor Rail Services.

Obviously, the benefit to the individual from the use of railways for motoring or motor-cycling should be very considerable, for a visit to the nearest centre would become a matter of comparative simplicity. All that would be necessary would be to drive to the railway, and then proceed along it to the destination. Of course, the utilisation of this method would depend on the willingness of the railway companies to grant facilities, but it is not likely that there would be any difficulties in this respect. It would provide an additional and important source of revenue, and as on many lines overseas the traffic is limited to a few trains a day, motor traffic would be possible for several hours after a train had passed. In addition to encouraging individual use of the lines, it is to be expected that the companies would be prepared favourably to consider running services of motor vehicles on the lines themselves. It may be mentioned that such a service is in operation in Yorkshire on a branch line, where ordinary traffic could not possibly pay its way. One could well imagine that motor railway services in suitable sections would go far to help to make railways in scantily populated areas more remunerative than they are.

An Empire Industry.

Among giant British commercial enterprises probably none is more truly an Empire concern than the Dunlop Rubber Company, Ltd. The story of this company is full of romance. The present huge organisation has been created and developed in a comparatively short space of time, for, as everyone knows, the genesis of the company is to be traced to the far-reaching invention of the late Mr. J. B. Dunlop. Like so many other inventions that have proved of incalculable benefit to mankind, Dunlop's first pneumatic tyre was received with scepticism and ridicule. The best vindication of those who saw its vast possibilities is the Dunlop organisation of to-day. Dunlop was the father of the pneumatic tyre industry, and one may say without hesitation that Dunlop Cord tyres are the premier motor tyres of to-day.

One of the most noteworthy features of the Dunlop organisation is the striking way in which the various raw materials necessary for the production of tyres are controlled from their source. The Dunlop Company produces a bigger proportion of its requirements in raw rubber than does any other tyre manufacturer in the world. The company's own rubber estates in Malaya occupy over 70,000 acres, and afford employment to many thousands of natives. The importance, from a manufacturing point of view, of being able to supervise every stage of the production of raw material cannot be overestimated. In addition, it is obvious that such direct control largely eliminates the profits of the middleman—to the ultimate advantage of the tyre user.

Equally as important as raw rubber in tyre manufacture is cotton. Here, again, the self-supporting nature of the Dunlop organisation is apparent, for the Dunlop Company owns probably the largest cotton mills in the world. Their ground area is nearly 16 acres, with floor space of 35 acres, and these Lancashire mills provide employment for some 3,000 operatives. Those interested in the Lancashire cotton industry will readily appreciate what an important factor in the prosperity of the County Palatine the tyre industry can be. Unfortunately, motorists generally have not given the British tyre industry their full measure of support. When it is remembered that last year practically £4,000,000 worth of foreign tyres were imported into England, the battle-cry of "British tyres for British motorists" takes on a new significance. At a time when the British tyre-making industry—like other industries—is suffering acutely from unemployment, it is of first importance that the question of the purchase of British tyres should receive the careful consideration of every motorist.

The experience of those motorists who use Dunlop and other British tyres, and the evidence of excellence afforded by reliability trials and speed events, make it quite certain that for quality and durability the British product is unsurpassed.

A Reuter message states that on the initiative of Bulgarian business circles a congress will be held shortly at Sofia, at which representatives of every business branch in all the Balkan States will take part, to discuss the creation of an economic union for the purpose of consolidating economic life in the Balkans.

Under the title "Entreprises Générales," a company has been established at Athens with a capital of 3,000,000 drachmæ, which will be concerned with commercial, industrial and other business. The board of directors consists of Messrs. G. V. Mavroleon (chairman), G. M. Papageorgiou, A. Adossides, X. Serdaris, J. Kantaritzis, D. Polat, and E. Mavroleon.

Stock and Share Markets.

TONE FAIRLY STEADY.

Indian Stocks Strong.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Once again we have had a week without any special features. With the exception of investment securities the tone generally has been inactive, and it is very obvious that people are waiting on events. In the immediate outlook there is nothing to cause any greater anxiety than has been the case for several weeks past, but, on the other hand, there is little to encourage any greater optimism. The French seem no nearer a settlement with Germany, while the only thing that seems certain with regard to Turkey is that we must make up our minds to endure further delay before the Nationalists finally decide to sign peace. Once the latter eventuality happens, things will begin to move in trade, and it is probable indeed that the results of a settlement will surprise a good many people who have not realised what a difference the existing conditions in the Near East have made to world commerce. But there can be no world-wide trade revival on a scale that will bring unemployment to an end until the European problem has been solved in one way or another. That is the root factor in the situation; and it is not surprising that there should be anxiety as to the outlook, seeing that a solution now looks so far distant. We see one effect of that view in the money available for investment, the result of which has been to raise gilt-edged securities to prices that can scarcely be justified.

Gilt-Edged Strong.

The strength in gilt-edged securities has been fully maintained, and once more it is possible to record an almost general improvement. Consols at 58½ x.d. show a gain of ¾; War Loan Fives at 101 7-16 are ¼ up; the Conversion Loan at 76 3-16 x.d. has risen 9-16; while Fundings at 89½ are ¾ up. Indian stocks have shown special strength. The Three per Cent. Loan at 57 x.d. shows a gain of 7-16, while the Seven per Cent. Loan at 113½ x.d. is a point up.

On the whole the market in Foreign Government securities might be described as having been moderately cheerful. French stocks have hardened slightly. War Loan Fives are ¾ up at 25, while the Four per Cents. are ½ up at 20. German Three per Cents. have again improved, and are 1-16 up at 1. Italian Rentes are unchanged at 20. In Near Eastern securities Turkish Unified are ¼ down at 24½, while Greek Monopolies are unchanged at 33½.

Industrials Firm.

A fairly firm tone has ruled in the industrial group, though, as is invariably the case at the present time, business has been on the most restricted scale. It is very evident that it would take little to bring about a revival in this group. Textiles have been a firm spot, with Courtaulds at 62s. x.d., Coats at 66s. x.d., and Listers at 30s. There has not been much doing in iron, steel, and engineering shares. Vickers are 6d. down at 15s., Armstrongs are 6d. up at 19s., while Guest Keens are unchanged at 40s. Tobacco shares have been steady with Bats at 85s. x.d. and Imperial Tobaccos at 76s. 9d.

Bank shares have been firm. Chartered of India at 19 11-16 are 1-16 up, while National of India are unchanged at 46½. Imperial of Persia are 1-16 up at 6½, while Bank of British West Africa are ½ up at 5. In shipping securities P. and O. Deferred are 7 up at 31½. Cunards have gained 1s. at 24s. 3d., Furness Withys are unchanged at 35s., while Khedivial Mails at 1½ are ¼ lower.

Oils Irregular.

This market has been very irregular during the week, at one time developing considerable strength, but subsequently displaying irregularity. Closing prices in many cases, however, show an advance on those of a week ago. Anglo-Persian Ord. at 4½ have gained ¼, while Burmahs at 5½ are 9-32 up. Mexican Eagles are unchanged at 2½, while Shell Transport at 4 7-16 are 7-32 up. Roumanians have been steady. Phoenix at 29s. 6d. are 2s. 9d. up, Roumanian Consolidated at 12s. 6d. are unaltered, Dacia Romanos are 27-32, at which they are 1-32 down. Steaua Romanas are 9d. up at 11s., while Hamilton's Concessions are 3d. up at 3s. In the Egyptian group Anglo-Egyptian B are 1-16 up at 1½.

During the last four days of February the output of the Baku wells amounted to 39,400 tons. The output during February exceeded 270,000 tons.

The net profit of the Eastern Bank for 1922, including £31,180 brought forward, was £151,501. The directors recommend a final dividend at the rate of 5s. a share, less tax, after allowing for relief in respect of Indian taxation, placing £20,000 to reserve, £10,000 to premises account, and carrying forward £31,501.

FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

There has been an increased tendency to fluctuations in the exchanges during the week. The German mark has improved somewhat, but French francs and Belgian francs are both lower. In Near Eastern exchanges Greek drachmæ are slightly better at 420, while the Turkish exchange has improved to 685.

Country.	Method of Quoting.	Parity of Exchange	Latest Quotations.
Alexandria ...	Piastres to £.....	97½	97½-97½
Athens	Drachmæ to £.....	25.22½	428-433
Belgrade	Dinars to £.....	25.22½	400-440*
Berlin	Marks to £.....	20.43	97-98,000
Berne	Francs to £.....	25.22½	25.22-25.24
Bombay	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Brussels	Francs to £.....	25.22½	90.40-90.50
Bucharest	Lei to £.....	25.22½	990-1,020*
Budapest	Kronen to £.....	24.02	13,000-15,000
Calcutta	Sterling to Rupee	24d.	1.4½-1.4½
Constantinople	Piastres to £.....	110	670-700*
New York	Dollars to £.....	4.86 2-3	4.70½-4.70½
Paris	Francs to £.....	25.22½	78-78.10
Prague	Kronen to £.....	24.02	158
Rome	Lire to £.....	25.22½	98½-98½
Sofia	Leva to £.....	25.22½	775-875*
Teheran	Krans to £.....	50	53½
Vienna	Kronen to £.....	24.02	330-345,000
Warsaw	Marks to £.....	20.43	195-215,000

* Nominal

JAMES H. BROWN, LTD.,

MERCHANT BANKERS.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

BOUGHT AND SOLD FOR EITHER SPOT OR FORWARD DELIVERIES.

FOREIGN BILLS NEGOTIATED. CREDITS
OPENED ON APPROVED REFERENCES.

AGENCIES ARRANGED ON BEHALF OF FIRMS ABROAD.

The Sale, Purchase, or Warehousing of Goods
Effected. Shipments Financed.

Head Office: TELEGRAPH STREET, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "Exchangbro, London."

Near East Markets.

LONDON PRODUCE REPORT.

Continued Demand for Bosnian Plums.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Tuesday Morning.

Sugar.—Home refined has continued in good request. Tate's cubes have been done at 66s. 3d., an advance of 3d.; Lyle's granulated has come to business at 60s. 9d., at which it shows a gain of 3d.; while London granulated is unchanged at 60s. 6d. Foreign descriptions have been firm. West Indian crystallised has gained 6d. at 54s. 6d., while white Mauritius at 55s. 6d. is also 6d. up. White Java is unchanged at 56s. 6d. Futures are: May, 30s. 6d.; August, 30s. 1½d.

Coffee.—The tone has been steady. East Indian is unchanged at 106s., Costa Rica remains at 100s., while Nairobi is unaltered at 90s. Futures are: May, 60s. 6d.; July, 59s. 6d.

Rice.—A much firmer tone has been in evidence during the week, and business generally has been quite brisk. Prices have shown an advancing tendency, and it would seem probable that this will continue.

Green Fruit.—There has been a marked change in the position with regard to oranges during the past week. The arrivals have been on a very considerable scale, and if it were not for the very steady demand lower prices would almost certainly have ruled. As it is, the market has been fairly firm, though whether this aspect will be maintained is doubtful. Quotations are: Jaffas, 22s. box (144's); Denias and Valencias, 13s. 6d. to 45s. box (240's to 504's). Only small supplies of lemons have come to hand, and the market has firmed up somewhat. Quotations are: 12s. to 17s. 6d. box (300's); 22s. to 37s. 6d. case (300's). Apples have continued in good demand, and the market is a shade harder. The increased demand for onions has diminished stocks, and prices are higher.

Dried Fruit.—Excellent business has been done during the week in most lines. Currants have been exceptionally quiet, but it is not expected that comparative inactivity will be long maintained in regard to this commodity. Sultanias have again moved off well at steady prices. Plums have continued to be the medium of good business, or, to be precise, Bosnian plums, for other varieties do not meet with many inquiries. Figs have been in increased demand, and prices have advanced.

Oilseeds.—Linseed has been rather dull. Indian, at 20s. 3d., is 4½d. down, while La Plata has shed 1½d. at 18s. 3d. Rapeseed has continued to make a firm showing, with Toria 6d. up at 19s. 3d. and real hold Ferozepore 4½d. up at 18s. 6d. Cottonseed has been variable. Indian at 9s. 1½d. is 3d. lower, Egyptian black is 3d. up at 12s., while Sakellaridis is unchanged at 11s. 3d.

Oils.—Linseed has been weak, closing 1s. 6d. down at 40s. 6d. Rape oil has been steady. Crude is unaltered at 44s., while technical refined remains at 47s. Cotton oil has been firm. Refined common edible is unchanged at 44s., Egyptian crude is unaltered at 38s., technical has gained 1s. at 41s., while deodorised remains at 46s.

Oil Cakes.—The market has again been weak. Linseed cake at 285s. is 5s. lower, coconut cake is 5s. down at 205s., cottonseed cake is unchanged at 160s., while cottonmeal cake is 5s. down at 265s.

The traffic receipts of the Egyptian Delta Light Railways for the ten days ended February 20 amounted to £E8,209, making the total for the year £E303,658.

AGRICULTURE IN IRAK.

The following particulars are taken from the Agricultural Bulletin of Irak for the period December 16 to January 15:

The amount of rain which fell throughout the month has not been sufficient to be of much assistance beyond softening the soil and making it more suitable for ploughing. This is bound to have an adverse effect on the areas which will be put down to wheat and barley, but as yet it is not known to what extent. The season so far compares unfavourably with that of last year when the abundant rainfall resulted in a bumper crop.

Although sowings have been later than usual this year most crops are looking well, as a result of the mild, open winter which has not been severe enough to retard growth as yet. There is a good supply of winter vegetables coming in, and preparations are already being made for early sowings of summer vegetables.

Experimental Farm, Rustam.

Sowings of wheat and barley have been completed. Altogether 220 varieties of wheat have been sown in lines, and 20 varieties in 1/20th acre plots. 127 single-line, and 32 plots sowings of barley have been completed. Also one variety of oats is being grown in plot and observation row. Maize, millet, and ground nuts have all been harvested. The "Dent" variety of maize has yielded at the rate of 1,070 lbs. per acre, which may be considered a good yield for Irak. The quality is strikingly superior to indigenous varieties. The final pickings of cotton were completed about the middle of December. The yields of the bulk crops grown on the estate portion of the farm, as distinct from the experimental portion, work out at a little over 700 lbs. per acre. San hemp has been harvested and stored prior to threshing and retting. Lack of suitable accommodation for personnel, and storage for implements have always been felt at the farm, but of late the position has become so acute as to endanger seriously efficiency.

Miscellaneous.

Cotton picking ceased about the middle of December, and the bulk of the crop removed to the ginnery at Shaikh Janaid, where most of it has already been ginned. The result is a crop of about 300 bales. This in itself is not much, but it is five times as much as was exported last year, so that distinct progress can be recorded. If this rate of progress can only be maintained, the future of the cotton industry in Irak is assured, and the time is within sight when the development of the country's agricultural resources becomes imperative in order to keep pace with the progress of cotton. It is too early to forecast the prospects for this year's cotton cultivation, but indications are already evident that the demand for seed will be large, and will come from much wider areas. A number of landlords have now assured themselves that the crop is a remunerative one, and, most important of all, the cultivators are gaining confidence in it. In addition to the areas where cotton was grown last year, seed will be canvassed in the Hillah and Diwanayah Divisions where there is a reasonable prospect of a sufficiency of water during the hottest months. Export of grain appears to have slackened off for the time being despite the reduced freight offered by railways. Prices in this country will have to be further reduced before exporters can afford to place Irak grain on the home market without risk of loss. There is, however, a certain amount of inefficiency in the way in which grain is handled; this it is hoped will be overcome as time goes on and the facilities offered by the railway become better understood.

THE ADRIATIC BANK

(Jadranska Banka).

Head Office - - - BELGRADE, JUGOSLAVIA.

Cable Address: "Jadranska."

Capital - - - Dinars 60,000,000

Surplus - - - " 30,000,000

BRANCHES:

Beograd, Bled, Cavtat, Celje, Dubrovnik, Ercegnovi, Jelsa, Jesenice, Korcula, Kotor, Kranj, Ljubljana, Maribor, Metkovic, Prevalje, Sarajevo, Split, Sibenik, Trzic and Zagreb.

Foreign Department.

Affiliated Banks:

BANCO YUGOSLAVO DE CHILE: Valparaiso, Antofagasta, Punta Arenas, Porvenir and Puerto Natales, Chile.
BANCA ADRIATICA: Abbazia, Trieste and Zara.
ADRIATISCHE BANK, Vienna.

FRANK SAKSEB STATE BANK, New York City.

Banking business of every description transacted at all Branches, Affiliated Banks and through Correspondents. Bills collected and negotiated. Letters of Credit and Drafts issued. Commercial Credits established at all Branches and Agencies of the Bank in Yugoslavia and abroad.

SPECIAL MARKET REPORTS

The following extracts are taken from recent reports received by the Imperial Ottoman Bank:—

Mosul—February 1.

It is generally agreed that the season is very favourable for agriculture. The rains have been very regular, and the sowings of cereals are in a good condition. The grazing is satisfactory for the raising of cattle.

Following the arrival of troops here the prices of all food products have risen by 30 to 40 per cent.

The export of sheep from Syria has taken place recently. The number is double that of the previous year.

Constantinople, March 2.

Speaking generally, the position remains the same, and the market, affected always by the uncertainty as to the outcome of the political crisis and the anxiety that is felt on the subject, maintains in all branches of business activity a waiting attitude, even to abstaining from business, there being thus a state of virtual stagnation.

Manufactured Goods.—The market still remains in a state of stagnation in spite of the rise which has occurred in the European markets. Some unimportant purchases have been made for Anatolia, and there has been slight activity in local consumption.

Flour.—The market has been weaker on account of the fall in prices. The arrivals from previous orders have been received and warehoused, awaiting modifications regarding laws of entry. Owing to this fact merchants have refrained from giving new orders.

On the other hand, the grain market has been more lively, and consignments of some importance from Thrace and Bulgaria have arrived to replenish the stocks of the mills here.

Colonial Produce.—An appreciable and unexpected rise has occurred in sugar. The holders of stocks are realising good profits, which are compensating them for the losses suffered previously.

ROUMANIA'S DESTROYED OIL WELLS.

In the House of Commons on March 12 Sir Philip Dawson asked, in regard to compensation for destroyed Roumanian oil wells, whether a promise in writing to indemnify the Roumanian Government was given by His Majesty's Minister in Roumania to the Roumanian Foreign Minister in December, 1916, and whether, in view of the fact that there was no prospect of the Roumanian Government providing the compensation, His Majesty's Government, being ultimately liable in pursuance of their indemnity, would now provide these funds, and would see that they went direct to the British companies to whom they were payable.

Mr. McNeill, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, replied:—

Negotiations are proceeding with the Roumanian Government which cover both the amount of compensation to be paid and the method of payment. Pending the conclusion of these negotiations, it is not possible for me to make a full statement on the matter, but I must not be taken as assenting to the accuracy of the statement contained in the honourable member's question. Briefly, the position is that the Roumanian Government is responsible for paying compensation for the damage in question, and His Majesty's Government is under no liability (direct or indirect) to make any payment to the British or other companies concerned. It was agreed in 1921 between the British and the Roumanian Governments that the indemnification promised to the Roumanian Government shall take the form of the cancellation of part of the Roumanian war debt to this country.

IMPERIAL OTTOMAN BANK

FOUNDED 1863.

Capital - £10,000,000
Paid-up - £5,000,000
Reserve - £1,250,000

CONSTANTINOPLE.

L. STEEG, Director-General.
 A. H. REID, Director-General-Adjoint.

Messrs. B. KERESTEDJIAN
 J. UNGAR
 E. HODLER

Sub-Directors.

DJEVIAD BEY.
 HAMID BEY.
 NOURY BEY.

General Committee.

LONDON.

VISCOUNT GOSCHEN, C.B.E.
 E. W. H. BARRY.
 THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH,
 C.M.G.
 THE EARL OF CHICHESTER,
 O.B.E.
 SIR W. GUY GRANET.
 SIR JOHN P. HEWETT, G.C.S.I.
 K.B.E., C.I.E., M.P.
 LORD HILLINGDON.
 GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERBERT
 A. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.
 LORD ORANMORE AND BROWNE,
 K.P., P.C.
 LIEUT.-COL. SIR ALBERT STERN,
 K.B.E., C.M.G.

PARIS.

LE BARON DE NEUFLIZE, C.V.O.
 JEAN BOISSONNAS.
 CHARLES DE CERJAT.
 HORACE FINALY.
 GEORGES HEINE.
 ARSENE HENRY, G.C.V.O.
 BARON HENRI HOTTINGUER.
 RAOUL MALLET.
 LE COMTE FREDERIC
 PILLET-WILL.
 FELIX VERNES.

London Office : 26, THROGMORTON STREET, E.C.2.

Manager: E. W. H. BARRY.

Assistant Manager and Secretary: C. E. L. CORTHORN.
 Assistant Manager and Deputy Secretary: R. S. C. PEARCE.
 Assistant Manager: W. P. SHEPPARD.

MANCHESTER:
 56-60, Cross Street.

PARIS:
 7, Rue Meyerbeer.

MARSEILLES:
 41-43, Rue Grignan

CONSTANTINOPLE.
 (Galata. Pera. Stamboul.)

Drafts and telegraphic transfers issued. Letters of Credit granted.
 Exchange and Merchandise operations effected.

Shipping Intelligence.

TRADE OF KOWEIT IN 1921-22.

The Political Agent at Koweit, Major J. C. More, D.S.O., in his report on the trade of Koweit for 1921-22, states that the period was not favourable to trade owing to the unsettled state of the interior. The pearling season, on which the prosperity of a large number of the inhabitants depends, was a poor one as regards the catch, and the prices realised for pearls also remained low.

The total value of the import trade was £1,112,909, as compared with £634,268 in the previous year. The principal imports included sugar (£274,434), rice (£373,191), piece-goods (£96,365), dates (£57,526), and wheat and flour (£59,739). Of the total trade 82.11 per cent. was with India, 7.24 per cent. with Irak, and 6.08 per cent. with Persia. The total value of the export trade during the year under review was £543,576, as compared with £446,398. The exports included rice (£101,392), tea (£35,885), wheat (£20,075), dates (£17,908), pearls (£11,956), piece-goods (£11,902), and clarified butter (£11,309).

The only truly local produce of Koweit is that yielded by the harbour fisheries, which are a valuable asset. In addition to float-and-weight nets and lines, traps or tidal weirs, constructed of reed hurdles, are also employed; the fish enter them with the flowing tide and are left behind at the ebb. Most of the fish caught is consumed locally, but a small proportion is dried and exported to Basrah and elsewhere.

During the year 36 boats, of an aggregate value of £6,420, were built. Of these, however, none had a carrying capacity of over 80 tons, and only 16 of over 20 tons. Koweit owns about 200 sailing boats engaged in the carrying trade, as distinct from pearling and fishing boats. Of these 60 have a carrying capacity of over 100 tons, including 8 of over 300 tons, and 20 of over 230 tons. During the year 81 British and 4 Japanese vessels, with a tonnage of 221,370 and 32,000 respectively, entered the port with cargo, and several thousand Arabian, Persian, and Mesopotamian, and 10 British sailing boats entered the port with cargo and were cleared during the year.

HARBOUR CONSTRUCTION IN PALESTINE

Mr. F. Palmer, C.I.E., M.I.C.E., a member of the English firm of consulting engineers, Rendel, Palmer, and Trenton, who has been engaged by the Colonial Office, after consultation with the Palestine Government, to examine and report upon the question of harbour construction in Palestine, has commenced his inquiry. A Government Board, consisting of the Director of Public Works, the Director of Commerce and Industry, the Director of Customs and Revenue, the general manager of Palestine Railways, and as required, the Governors of Haifa and of Jaffa will co-operate with Mr. Palmer.

HENRY BANNERMAN & SONS, LTD.

Since 1890 the businesses of Henry Bannerman and Sons, Ltd., and the Bannerman Mills Co., Ltd., although under the same management, have been carried on as separate concerns. Now, for family reasons, and with a view to concentration of control, these private companies are being amalgamated under the style of Henry Bannerman and Sons, Ltd., who will also take over the Bradford Road Manufacturing Co., Ltd. In conformity with the law's requirements the latter and the Bannerman Mills Co., Ltd., will be voluntarily wound up, the businesses being taken over in toto by Henry Bannerman and Sons, Ltd. No change in management will be involved, Sir Charles W. Macara, Bart., retaining his positions as chairman and managing director.

The Yugoslav Ministry of Communications has sent an invitation to the Italian, Austrian, Bavarian, and other neighbouring Governments to send delegates to a railway conference, in order to determine the summer time-table.

SULZER BROTHERS, ALEXANDRIA.

SPECIAL BRANCH.

CLEARING, FORWARDING and TRANSIT

4 Rue de la Gare du Caire, 4
P.O.B. 1492. Tel. 1025.

FORTHCOMING SAILINGS.

The following are the sailings for the Near East and India, the ports of departure and closing dates for cargo being given in parentheses:—

Anchor Line.—S.s. Scindia for Bombay (Liverpool, March 16).

Anchor Brocklebank Line.—S.s. Mahsud for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 17); s.s. Maidan for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 27); s.s. Imani for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 31); s.s. Malakuta for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 9); s.s. Maihar for Port Said, Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 14); s.s. Makalla for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 19).

Bibby Line.—S.s. Yorkshire for Port Said, Colombo, and Rangoon (Birkenhead, March 28); s.s. Herefordshire for Rangoon (Middlesbrough, April 21).

British India Line.—S.s. Morvada for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 16); s.s. Merkara for Bombay and Karachi (London, March 28); s.s. Hatarana for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 14); s.s. Dumana for Bombay and Karachi (London, April 6); s.s. Margha for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 27); s.s. Warfield for Bombay and Karachi (London, April 28).

Clan Line.—S.s. Clan Mackinnon for Bombay and Persian Gulf (Birkenhead, March 24).

Cunard Line.—S.s. Brescia for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Poti, and Batoum (Glasgow, April 7).

Ellerman Line.—S.s. Grodno for Gibraltar, Malta, Patras, Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (Liverpool, March 20).

Ellerman's "City" Line.—S.s. City of Calcutta for Calcutta (Birkenhead, March 23); s.s. City of Durban for Calcutta (Birkenhead, April 5).

Ellerman's "Hall" Line.—S.s. Trafford Hall for Bombay (Liverpool, March 29); s.s. Croxteth Hall for Karachi and the Punjab (Liverpool, March 29).

Ellerman's Westcott and Laurance Line.—S.s. Castilian for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, March 21); s.s. Destro for Gibraltar, Malta, Piræus, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, and Constantza (London, March 28); s.s. Tasso for Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria (London, April 14).

Johnston Line.—S.s. Dromore for Piræus, Syra, Volo, Salonika, Smyrna, Constantinople, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, March 29); s.s. Wigmore for Galatz and Braila (Liverpool, April 14); s.s. Aviemore for Piræus, Volo, Salonika, Bourgas, Varna, Constantza, Sulina, Galatz, and Braila (Liverpool, April 28).

P. and O. Line.—S.s. Plassy for Bombay (London, March 23); s.s. Mirzapore for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, March 24); s.s. Macedonia for Bombay (London, March 29); s.s. Caledonia for Bombay (London, April 6); s.s. Novara for Colombo, Madras, and Calcutta (London, April 20).

Cunard Line

MEDITERRANEAN & NEAR EAST
REGULAR FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM

LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER GLASGOW
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO
GIBRALTAR ALGIERS MALTA PATRAS
PIRÆUS SYRA VOLO SALONICA
:-: SMYRNA CONSTANTINOPLE :-:
BOURGAS VARNA CONSTANZA AND SULINA
also from—LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
AND SOUTH WALES PORTS TO GIBRALTAR
GENOA LEGHORN NAPLES PALERMO
MESSINA CATANIA BRINDISI BARI
ANCONA VENICE TRIESTE FIUME GRAVOVA

FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER SWANSEA ANTWERP
AND ROTTERDAM TO GREEK LEVANT AND
BLACK SEA PORTS.

ALSO FREIGHT SAILINGS FROM
LIVERPOOL MANCHESTER
GLASGOW AND SOUTH WALES
PORTS TO HAVRE ST. MALO AND
DIEPPE

LIVERPOOL: Cunard Building, Pier Head.
LONDON, E.C.2: 51, Bishopsgate.
OFFICES AND AGENCIES EVERYWHERE

Cotton and Cotton Goods.

THE EGYPTIAN MARKET.

Dull Tone Prevails.

The Commercial Company of Egypt, in their report for the week ended March 2, state:—Since our last report the futures market has been heavy for Sakellaridis but fairly firm for Ashmouni. The undertone of our market has remained as heavy as has been the case for some time now, and this in spite of the almost uninterrupted rise in the New York market, where quotations at the close yesterday showed 30.20 cents for March, a new record level of the season. The factors that again this week have depressed our market are those to which reference has repeatedly been made in these reports since last December: continued heavy arrivals from the interior, pointing to an unexpectedly large crop, the tendency of the world's consumers to buy the cheapest goods possible independently of quality, owing to financial difficulties and exchange depreciation, and the uncertain local political situation. The rise of Americans has further induced the narrowing of the difference between Sakellarides and Ashmouni, and at to-day's close this stands at $1.37, March Sakellaridis closing at $32.65 and April Ashmouni at $31.28. Such a small difference is absurd, and we look for a distinct widening between these two varieties in the near future. The cotton exports for February have amounted to about 100,000 bales, this figure being considerably higher than the corresponding one last year. The quantity of cotton shipped so far is 4,897,470 kantars—about 1,250,000 kantars in excess of last year's figure. Prospects for March exports are also good.

Spot.—Total sales this week amount to about 17,300 bales, of which we estimate 11,800 bales Sakellaridis, 5,100 bales Uppers, 200 bales White, and 200 bales Brown.

Sakellarides.—There has been a considerably increased demand for fully good fair and fully good fair to good during the week, and the premiums for these cottons have somewhat stiffened. There have been some buyers of good, but this grade has not been dealt in to the same extent as last week. Below fully good fair, cotton is getting scarce; this especially applies to good fair and good fair to fully good fair, which are still very much sought after, and good prices must be paid to induce holders to part with their stocks. Some business has also been done in low cotton.

Uppers.—There has been a much better turnover in this variety during the past week, the majority of the sales being in good fair and fully good fair to good. Owing to the very firm tone of the uppers contract, sellers have been difficult to deal with.

Various.—A small business continues to be done in white and brown, but owing to the scarcity of these cottons very dear prices have to be paid.

Crop 1923.—Preparation of land and sowing have proceeded normally during February under favourable climatic conditions. In the southern regions sowing is as advanced as it was last year; the tendency amongst the growers to effect early sowings is again very pronounced. The recent reports received from various agricultural centres point to a substantial increase in the proportion of varieties other than Sakellarides, which will be planted this year in Lower Egypt. It is as yet impossible to give even approximate figures of this increase. The state of the river is everywhere unchanged.

LIVERPOOL REPORT.

Good Inquiry.

Messrs. Reynolds and Gibson report as follows for the week ended March 7:—

A good inquiry has been witnessed in this department without there being any fresh feature worthy of attention, unless it be the steady hardening in the basis for Uppers. The tendency throughout the week has been towards higher prices, the appreciation in all varieties being of the slow and steady description. It is remarkable how the F.G.F. qualities of Sakel, brown, and Upper have all come together as regards price.

Sakellaridis has more than held its own this week, and looks like becoming still more popular. Many spinners of American cotton have been experimenting with it, and the results, such as we have cognisance of, have been highly satisfactory. With good to fine Uppers forced up into the neighbourhood of 18d., it will not be surprising if the attention of spinners is diverted into other channels. In Alexandria the basis for Uppers is even stiffer than on our side, whereas for Sakellaridis, especially for cotton above F.G.F., holders in Egypt are more inclined to meet the bidder with a reasonable counter offer. In the meantime, the basis for F.G.F. Sakellaridis stands to-day at about 50 on May futures, and it behoves those interested to be early in the field if they wish to secure their cotton at this price, for, with the present demand, and with the strength of the American markets in the background, it is bound to appreciate still further as the season progresses. A little more has been done in the finer qualities, but very few spinners are in a position to pay over 19.00d. for any cotton.

The inquiry for low cotton has been of quite a keen character, prices paid being in the neighbourhood of 11½d. to 12½d. per lb. There really seems to be some signs at last of a scarcity in this class of cotton. Only a meagre business has taken place in brown, pillion, and white cotton. The lower qualities of brown have registered a considerable advance. Forwardings to spinners for the week ended 2nd inst. were returned as 15,585 bales—a very large figure for Egyptians. C.i.f. business, owing to the high prices current in Egypt, has ruled very quiet. Quotations of Sakellaridis are raised 20 points, fair exceptionally being 35 points higher. In Upper, good and below are raised 65 points, fine 55 points. Brown cotton shows an advance of 65 points for fair and 40 points for good fair; other quotations unchanged. Total sales, 3,500 bales. F.G.F. Sakellaridis to-day 17.60d.

COTTON TRADE REVIEW

Conditions Practically Unchanged.

The Manchester Cotton Trade Review of the Imperial Ottoman Bank for the week ended March 10 states:—

The conditions of this market are virtually unchanged. From several quarters there is a fair volume of inquiry, but offers are all alike in being on too low a basis, and, generally speaking, the proportion of them which eventually results in business is small, and then only after a disproportionate amount of negotiation. This state of things is more prone to exist when, as during this week, the price of the raw material has stiffened.

Yarn.—The Federation of Master Cotton Spinners has decided to adopt the suggestion that the mills spinning American cotton which belong to its members shall close two weeks during the current month. The measure does not apply to mills using Egyptian cotton, which, as we have frequently mentioned, are in a much better position. There are a large number of mills not in the Federation, and these retain their liberty of action; but with the trade in its present state it is unlikely in any event that many of the mills, either in or out of the Federation, would have worked much more than half-time. Quotations are nominally a little higher owing to the increased cost of the raw material.

Cloth.—A fair business has been done for India, and China has also maintained the rather larger purchases of recent weeks. Small lots have been purchased for Egypt and other miscellaneous outlets. The Home trade remains quiet. Manufacturers have endeavoured to adjust their prices to the higher cost of yarn, but with only indifferent success.

Raw Cotton.—As already mentioned, prices have advanced during the week. The tone has been very firm in accord with New York. Closing prices are as follows:—American Fully Middling, 16.70; Egyptian Fully Good Fair, 17.75.

The Yugoslav Ministry of Commerce and Industry has granted a concession to a joint stock company at Sombor to erect there a new sugar refinery with a capital of 15,000,000 dinars, says a Reuter message.

GOAT, SHEEPSKINS, KIPS, HIDES & LEATHER

Correspondence is invited from Merchants and Collectors of all Countries desirous of marketing Hides and Skins in Great Britain: Consignment or Purchase. All Enquiries promptly replied to. Leather Goods of all kinds for Exportation.

FLEMING & CO. (Bermondsey) LTD., Leather Factors & Importers, White's Grounds, Bermondsey St., London, S.E.1.
Telegrams—Flemmat'co, Berm. London

'BALKAN' NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

FOUNDED 1895.

Capital paid up	5,000,000
Total reserves as per December 31st, 1920	53,200,000
Premium Income during 1920	28,300,000
Amounts insured of Life Branch exceed	150,000,000
Branches maintained: Fire, Life, Marine, Casualty and Re-insurance of all branches.

HEAD OFFICE: SOFIA, BULGARIA.

THE NEAR EAST.

No. 619—Vol. XXIII.

THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1923.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
NOTES OF THE WEEK	285	LEADING ARTICLE—		COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL—
SPECIAL LETTERS—		Spring Cleaning in the Balkans	296	Notes and News	301
Egypt	289	THE WEEK AT HOME	287	The Bulgarian Reparations Settlement	302
Yugoslavia	290	NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF	294	The Bondholders' Report	303
Irak	291	PERSONAL AND GENERAL	295	Shipping Intelligence	304
Turkey	292			Cotton and Cotton Goods	305
SPECIAL ARTICLE—				Near East Markets	307
The Sudan—IV.	297			Conditions in Asia Minor	308

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

The Turkish Settlement.

The formal consideration by the Allies of the counter-proposals submitted by the Angora Government is to take place this week. A meeting for this purpose is being held in London while this week's issue of THE NEAR EAST is in the printers' hands. It is not difficult to select half a dozen or more points in the Turkish answer that cannot be accepted by the Allies. The object of the Turks was to find as many of these points as possible to serve as "packing" for the safety of the demands to which they do attach importance. This week's preliminary discussion between the British, French, and Italian Governments is essential to maintain Allied unity in the subsequent negotiations, but it is to be hoped that no attempt will be made to reply to the Turks in detail in writing. The separation of the suggestions that matter from the "packing" can be carried out better round the Conference table than by an exchange of written communications. In fact, this should be the main business of the Constantinople gathering, and the formal signature of the Treaty, if desired, can be carried out in a more elaborate setting.

A New Cabinet in Egypt.

After an interval of five weeks an Egyptian politician has at last been found who is willing to form a Ministry. Yehia Pasha Ibrahim, the new Prime Minister, held office in the two preceding Governments as Minister of Education, but is not identified with any political party. Among his colleagues in the new Cabinet are four other members of Nessim Pasha's Ministry. With a view, apparently, to disarm criticism and to explain the non-inclusion of more prominent politicians, it is stated that the new Ministry is to be regarded as a "Cabinet of Affairs" only. In other words, it will devote its attention more to the transaction of the routine work of administration than to questions of high politics. As it will in any case be responsible for the maintenance of law and order, we may hope that success in this direction will bring with it self-confidence, and will encourage the Government to deal with the chief question of the day—the promulgation of a draft Constitution that keeps faith with the agreement that the future of the Sudan shall be left for subsequent negotiation between Egypt and Great Britain. If Yehia Pasha Ibrahim should prove the first Prime Minister endowed with the physical courage to stand up to street clamour when he knows that clamour to be wrong, he will have deserved well of Egypt, and will have established an invaluable precedent for Egyptian democracy.

Bulgarian Reparations.

The conclusion of an agreement between Bulgaria and the Inter-Allied Commission in Sofia on the subject of reparations is a welcome piece of constructive statesmanship for which all concerned are entitled to credit. Bulgaria has given practical evidence of her readiness to meet her obligations, and now knows the extent of her liability for her war-venture; the Allies have allowed common-sense to over-ride the vindictiveness or ignorance of the Paris Conference. It may be noted, in passing, that, after having achieved little in the course of two years, the Inter-Allied Commission, under the presidency, in its third year, of the British representative, Sir Elliot Colvin, has accomplished the main object of its appointment. As the need for economy is appreciated in every other part of the world, there would seem to be no reason to deny its practice to the Balkans. Bulgaria is called upon to pay a relatively large sum annually for the upkeep of the Commission and its formidable staff. Now that the amount of reparations to be paid has been agreed upon, it should be possible to maintain the necessary check on the monthly payments through the Allied Legations, thus relieving the Bulgarian Exchequer of the cost of the Inter-Allied Commission.

The Late Queen Milena.

The death of Queen Milena of Montenegro at Antibes last Friday removes a picturesque and pathetic, if minor, figure from the European stage. Queen Milena will be remembered for her domestic qualities rather than for any importance attaching to the part that she played in her association as the wife of the late King Nicolas with world events. After the death of the old King, two years ago,

Queen Milena became Regent for her young grandson, Prince Michael, and consequently in her person she offered a rallying-point for those Montenegrins who are still faithful to the idea of Montenegro as a voluntary unit in the Yugoslav Confederation rather than as a province of Serbia in a centralised Yugoslavia. That some significance was attached to the existence of a modest Montenegrin Court in exile was shown by the recent dissemination from Belgrade of a report that Queen Milena had accepted the political fait accompli, and intended to remove to Serbia. There was no foundation for the statement, nor would there be for the suggestion that the new order in Yugoslavia is in any danger from intrigues on the part of the Montenegrin Royal Family. If Montenegro still refuses to accept forcible absorption at the hands of Serbia, it is as a result of the fiery spirit of independence actuating the people in the country itself, which seems likely to continue to flame up without being fanned by any appeals for loyalty to the dynasty.

The Royal Air Force in Irak.

It is a matter for regret that the interesting and authoritative remarks made by the Secretary of State for Air in a debate in the House of Commons on the Air Estimates will not receive the publicity accorded to the attacks on the Royal Air Force in connection with the apocryphal tax-collecting by bomb. Sir Samuel Hoare was mainly concerned to emphasise the economy of air operations. Over and over again, he said, even during the short time in which the Irak Air Command had been in existence, it had been possible by well-directed air operations to avoid expense both in men and money which would have been entailed by ground military expeditions. As one instance, he mentioned that two companies of an Indian regiment, in all over three hundred men, with Lewis guns and thirty thousand rounds of reserve ammunition, had been taken by aeroplane to a disturbed district sixty-five miles distant within twenty-four hours, at a time when the roads were impassable, and it would have been otherwise impossible to move troops at all.

Imperial Communications.

The problem that the Royal Air Force is trying to solve in Irak, Sir Samuel Hoare declared, is that of "control without occupation." If it succeeded, he added, the effect this would have upon Imperial communications and upon the garrisoning of various parts of the Empire could not be exaggerated. In a lesser degree the same problem was being attempted in Palestine, Transjordan, Somaliland, and at Aden. He believed that in India development upon the same line would be seen. All evidence went to show that in India the value of air operations was being better and better realised. The deficiencies in equipment which caused such grave concern last summer were being made good. An attempt has been made to decry the Royal Air Force in Irak because over a million pounds have been spent on the Hinaidi Camp at Baghdad. The camp was originally chosen for the Army, and it has been adapted to meet the requirements of the Air Force. The accommodation needed for six squadrons is considerable, but no one free from prejudice who has seen the Hinaidi Camp, with its buildings of sun-dried bricks, will regard it as out of proportion to the task set the Force, in view of the fact that conditions in Irak provide one of the best training-grounds in the world for airmen.

An Arab Peace Movement.

Those who are sceptical of any change for the better in the Arab must at least recognise that the Arab world is showing an unusual tendency to be at peace with itself. In fact, as far as can be gathered, the conditions in the Arabian peninsula at the present moment compare favourably with those in Europe. The frontiers of Irak and Ibn Saoud's territory have been fixed and agreed to by both parties. Ibn Saoud has expressed the wish to have all his other frontiers similarly regulated, and is reported to have concluded a treaty with the Emir Idrissi determining their common boundary. The latter is now on good terms with the Hejaz, and, although there may still be a feud between the Emir Idrissi and the Imam Yehia of Yemen, both are stated to be anxious to be at peace and to promote unity among the Arabs. Some speculation is likely to be caused by the report that King Hussein of the Hejaz is shortly to visit his son, the Emir Abdullah, in Transjordan. The latter country, owing to its proximity to Palestine and Syria, may find itself called upon to play a political rôle out of proportion to its size. It is certainly most desirable that the Arab States should cultivate a sense of solidarity for the better adjustment of their relations with Turkey. To achieve the required measure of co-operation there must be a complete absence of any personal "feeling" between the Emir Abdullah and King Faisal. King Hussein will accordingly be rendering good service to the Arab cause if he makes sure that there is no likelihood of any wedge being driven into Arab solidarity in its most vulnerable spot.

The Indian Services Commission.

The terms of reference to the Commission which is to inquire into outstanding Service questions in India strike us as very wide, and perhaps a little vague. It would, in fact, be quite possible to keep within them and at the same time spend several years in digging over ground which is already fully tilled, but we have Viscount Peel's confident assurance that a few months will suffice, and doubtless he is picking the small number of members with particular reference to their gifts of speed. We are glad to see that the policy of provincialisation has secured a definite place in the programme alongside of the party cry of Indianisation, and we may repeat the hope we have already expressed that on these and cognate questions the Commission will formulate a few clear principles at the earliest possible date, leaving the preparation of schedules and other ancillary details to the permanent machinery, which is quite competent to handle them when once it has been told precisely what to do. The provinces, in particular, want to know how they will stand in the future, and any prolongation of uncertainty may have very inconvenient results in practice.

Provincial Finance.

We pointed out recently that the economic future of India really depends more on the state of provincial finance than on the spectacular central Budget, and it may be of interest to bring together some items of information on the actual position. The little province of Bihar has produced an unexpected surplus, and is proceeding to spend it royally. Bombay, too, has a surplus, but it is due largely to windfalls, and the outlook for the near future is not free from anxiety. Bengal has a deficit, but less than was feared, and hopes to meet it by further economies. The Punjab is badly off, and its deficit is relatively large, while its great canal projects—the surest road to solvency—are held up indefinitely, and, it is said, mainly on financial grounds. The United Provinces seem at last to have realised their danger, and have set to work both to axe and to tax, with the rather curious result that the opposition to a new motor duty is being led by a Judge of the local High Court. We have not yet seen the figures for Madras or the Central Provinces, but the facts we have summarised show that, while things are better than a year ago, the obstacles in the way of profitable development are still very serious.

The Wages of Indian Workers.

It is often said that the Indian working-classes have suffered greatly from the rise in prices which developed towards the end of the War, and there are so few precise data that it has been difficult to find out how far the assertion was true. We welcome, therefore, the appearance of the report on wages and hours of labour in the cotton mill industry, which has been issued by the Government of Bombay, and which marks a definite advance in Indian statistical work. The comparison drawn between 1914 and 1921 shows that in the cotton mills at least, or in the case of a quarter of a million workers, the assertion of deterioration is baseless. The cost of living has indeed risen, but wages have risen faster, and when the workers' remuneration is stated in terms of rice, salt, cloth, and the other things they buy, it is seen to have improved by percentages lying between 9 and 54 for different classes in different centres, and by about 17 per cent. on the average of the whole. We are glad to note that this report is the first of a series, and we shall watch with interest for its successors, which will deal on the same lines with the other industries of Bombay.

THE WEEK AT HOME.

London, Monday Evening.

The Agricultural Crisis.

The problem of agriculture in England, which is one of the most important problems, though for many years it has not been treated as such, came to a head last week, when several hundreds of labourers in Norfolk were locked out by the farmers. The dispute is again nominally over wages—the farmers' proposal being that, instead of receiving 25s. a week for a fifty hours' week, the men should have 24s. 9d. for a fifty-four hours' week. The proposal in itself does not sound practicable, and even the Morning Post, we imagine, will not attribute to Bolshevik intrigue the labourers' refusal to accept it. But passions should not be stirred in the matter. It is common knowledge, certainly possessed by the men themselves, that farmers for the most part have been suffering very serious losses, and that they simply cannot pay their way. In all probability the farmers have deliberately precipitated the matter by bringing forward these claims, so as to get a decision from the Government on the country's policy towards agriculture. The matter is not a small local one; it is national. That the outbreak should have occurred in Norfolk is more or less natural, indeed, because there farmers and men are possibly better, more honest and enterprising than anywhere else, but unless the question is soon settled the trouble will undoubtedly spread.

Mr. Bonar Law a few days ago met a deputation of the farming industry and painted the picture with frank, blank hopelessness. Only two policies, he said, were conceivable: subsidy or Protection, and both of these were impossible. Agriculture must live itself on an economic basis, but he admitted that he did not see how it could be done. However, the Premier is an industrialist pure and simple, and cannot help envisaging the future of this country except on the industrial plane. But it is certain that eventually, perhaps in fifty or a hundred years, when our industrial supremacy shall have passed, or when we have seen its hollowness, that a return must be made to agriculture. Meanwhile, those engaged in this finest but temporarily unhappiest of pursuits pour out their laments to an unheeding world.

Ourselves and France.

Now that the Calcutta Cup is decided, our relations with France are, next to the Boat Race and the Football Cup, the most engrossing topic of conversation. I cannot help repeating my conviction that, had our Government gone with France to the Ruhr, they would have had the country behind them. Of sympathy with Germany it is impossible, except among pacifists and déracinés, to hear any mention, and we are really not half so afraid of the "disastrous world-results," which horrid politicians are so fond of assuring us are the inevitable outcome of France's step, as no doubt we ought to be. These men, and the selfish brood who know how to pick their hirelings, were certain that the franc would soar impossibly—indeed, the regeneration of Europe was consequent upon it—but the French Government and the franc stand equally firm, to our amazement, we confess, but also to our infinite delight. Overmuch is made of wild French journalists' talk, and the air teems in some foolish quarters with bitter taunts at French hegemony, military domination, and the rest of it; but as little attention need be paid to this as to the remarks of some of our own Liberal and Labour members. To hurl the word "reactionary" at the face of France and to think that thereby you have destroyed her case is by no means the way in which to turn against her our generation, which knows a good deal more about France than our politicians and financiers are ever likely to know, unless they themselves indulge in the next war.

The I.L.P.

The Independent Labour Party has just issued a manifesto appealing for recruits. Time was when this organisation was looked upon as dead, but at the moment, owing to the lack of vitality in rival groups, it is spreading with some success its wearisome doctrines. Certain things in its programme, it must be admitted, have been changed for the better; it has, for instance, overthrown the old ideal of State Socialism, and now wishes to introduce a Syndicalistic element into the organisation of society. There is, indeed, not so much to fear from its domestic programme, though certainly it is unrealisable through political means; it is rather in its foreign policy that its obstinate ignorance

THRESHER & GLENNY

CIVIL & MILITARY TAILORS and OUTFITTERS

Have materially reduced all prices of best quality Tailoring, Shirts and Underclothing.

Measures and patterns are carefully registered so that customers can order when abroad.

19, CLIFFORD STREET, W.1
152 & 153, STRAND, W.C.2
LONDON

manifests itself and absolutely inhibits support. It believes that total disarmament is an immediately practical policy, and gushes out once more the old generalisation that "the interests of the workers throughout the world, of whatever race, colour, or creed, are one."

Now the I.L.P. has temporarily collared the Labour Party, so that if, as some shrewd judges assert, the days of our decisionless Government are numbered and the hour of Labour is at hand, we know what we are in for. We shall see to-morrow night, when Mr. Philip Snowden is to move in the House of Commons a resolution denouncing the "capitalist system" as a failure, how independent of the fulsome shibboleths of Socialism the Labour members really are.

St. Patrick's Day.

For those to whom life in these days seems a dull monochrome the celebration of St. Patrick's Day on Saturday came as a colourful relief. In England, it is true, the day was but thinly honoured; but in Ireland it would appear that the day was a national holiday in the fullest sense. We in this country do not brood on and borrow from the past as the Irish do, but even in the Free State they are learning on such historical days to look forward, and the optimistic sentiments which were given utterance by Irish leaders—General Mulcahy, for instance, said that order would be reached before many months had passed—were not merely the blowing off of occasional steam. There is without doubt a feeling that the worst corner has been turned in Ireland, and it is quite probable that a year hence the journalists' habit of exaggerating the disorders there will have grown out of fashion; though, of course, we shall have some other worry to take Ireland's place, so as not to belie the course of Mr. Bonar Law's "tranquillity."

Ecclesiastical Reformers.

An unmistakable storm is brewing over the endeavours now being made by certain "modern" minds to alter the Book of Common Prayer. What opponents of reform are chiefly fastening on to is the proposal to omit certain of the Psalms, particularly the imprecatory Psalms. It is contended by the "broad-minded" zealots that such sentiments as "Let his children be fatherless: and his wife a widow. Let them be vagabonds, and beg their bread . . ." shock our generation, and are sadly out of keeping with our tolerant age. It is an extremely interesting contest, this, in which the problems of the divine and the human are not, as in divorce, involved; and we ought to get some unfettered sentiments expressed.

One does not wish to take sides in so eminently a theological affair, but it is to be hoped that the examining divines will not, in listening to the expositors of contemporary sentiment, overlook the religious value of a good curse, nor ignore the considerable part which it plays in modern literature.

The Calcutta Cup.

England won the Calcutta Cup at Inverleith by a goal and a try to two tries, after what must have been a gloriously hard struggle. Scotland were a far younger side and extraordinarily game, and it may be said that luck was against them. But victory was none the less sweet to the older team, many of whom will be playing in no more internationals. It is something for them in this culmination to think, if not to say, "Après nous le déluge." For it is almost inconceivable that next year Scotland will not turn the tables, because no match but in experience was to be found to her speed and determination.

The Curse of Eve.

No, it is not about Mrs. Nash and her dress debts that I am about to write; my competence does not attain so far. But this persistent question of clothes has cropped up again even for us men, and it was possible to find a mirror of one's duty, though certainly not of one's intention, in the Men's Wear Exhibition recently held in London. There we learned that nobody could be seen in London in the coming summer but in nut-browns and greys; that double-breasted jackets, bowler hats, and fancy waistcoats were the thing. But this, of course, is all nonsense. The post-War man is more than ever the despair of the fanciful tailors: he goes on the principle of not buying new clothes until "draft meets draught."

In Paris, too, they seem concerned over the simplicity of dress that women there are cultivating. Parisian costumiers are apparently desperate about it, selfish reactionaries that they are; for if the woman makes a stand for personal taste against trade ordinances, where in the world are we? The explanation of it all lies, of course, in the fact that the globe is a gloomy place just now, and that we like to be sombre and mellow, feeling too deeply the illusion and hypocrisy of coloured gaiety. No doubt we shall grow out of it.

University and Other Sport.

By the time of my next letter the issues of the Boat Race and of the University Sports at Queen's Club will have been decided, and there is little sense in attempting to prophesy their result. When one's hopes are all one way and one's fears another, one's opinion cannot honestly be stated. At the moment Cambridge are slight favourites for both events, and it would be a great thing to pull them off, thus completing the circle which started with the Rugger, Soccer, and Hockey.

The Lincolnshire will be over when these lines are published, but the Grand National will yet have a day to go. If I suggest that Conjuror II. may win—but that, again, is rather a hope than an anticipation!

"Cavendish."

Mature card-fiends have been moved to many reminiscences by the death, at the age of ninety-five, of Mrs. H. R. Jones, whose husband, the famous "Cavendish," laid down the laws for whist and indeed arbitrated on all card disputes. I am not old enough ever to have enjoyed a game of whist, and when experts say that it is a far better or more skilful game than auction bridge I am not concerned to deny it. In any case, this "Cavendish" does seem to have been a rather wonderful figure in those incredible Victorian days. His social influence was so enormous, apparently, that he was officially asked hundreds of questions. The one that I like best, and to which, incidentally and unfortunately for our modern "dry" time, no answer is recorded, is a question put by an old lady on whether teetotalers could play at snapdragon. It illustrates delightfully the mentality or perhaps morality of our pre-bridge card players.

ALTER EGÓ.

A number of antiquities discovered at Beisan by the Expedition of the University Museum, Philadelphia, are now on exhibition at the Palestine Museum of Antiquities.

M. Balakoff, Bulgarian Minister of the Interior, and M. Rafoloff, Minister of War, have resigned, and will be succeeded by MM. Christo Stoyanoff and Kosta Moravieff, while M. Daskaloff, a former Minister, becomes Attorney-General.

It is stated that a Bulgarian Communist member of Parliament, Nikola Panev, has been arrested in Belgrade. He is charged with Communist agitation and with illegal trading.

The Near and Middle East.*

From Our Own Correspondents.

Cairo, March 7.

The Cairo Outrages.

The situation is still critical, and, without being an alarmist, one might call it exceedingly grave. During the past week we have had no less than three bombing attempts, one late in the evening of February 27, and the other two late in the evening of the 4th instant. The first was a bomb thrown in the main street leading from the station to Shepheard's Hotel as a party of soldiers returning from a football match were passing. The second was thrown into the Signals Office at the British Headquarters, the third into a restaurant where British soldiers were having their meal. On the first occasion five British soldiers were wounded and an Egyptian killed, on the second the bomb did not explode, and on the third occasion three soldiers were wounded, one Egyptian killed and several injured.

As can be seen, the gang which is responsible for these outrages is becoming more audacious, and in each instance the aggressors have made good their escape. Needless to say, the greatest indignation prevails everywhere, and the foreign communities, who have hitherto remained impassive, though strongly sympathetic with the British community, are now becoming restless, for bomb throwing is as dangerous for them as it is for the British community against whom it is directed. Few people now venture out after dusk.

What has aggravated the general indignation is the fact that a few days before the first bombing outrage the newly appointed Military Governor of Cairo summoned the existing Committee of the Wafd, and warned them that they would be held individually responsible for, and that action would be taken against them in the case of, any further outrage, and that it was only six days after the first bombing attempt and on the morrow of the other two that these members of the Wafd were arrested.

The unofficial explanation that has been given is that there were hopes of an Adlyist-Wafd entente, which would have been jeopardised if action had been taken against the Wafd. The obvious reflection one is constrained to make, however, is that, in the first place, there was just as much—or, as so many of us think, just as little—hope of such an entente after the later outrages as there was after the first, and, secondly, that in the present extremely delicate and critical situation the authorities were extremely ill-advised to make threats which politically they could not carry out, or to refrain from giving effect to those threats when the contingency against which the warning had been given arose.

I do not say that action on the morrow of the first would have prevented the subsequent outrages, but it would certainly have prevented the unfortunate impression that undoubtedly gained ground amongst the Egyptians that the new departure of the appointment of a British Military Governor to Cairo was mere camouflage, and connoted no intention to depart from the vacillating policy of the past year.

The British Community's Attitude.

On an occasion like this I am not concerned to put forward my own personal views. It is my duty to voice the sentiments and feelings of the British community, and I now state as my considered impression of the state of feeling of my compatriots in Egypt that, while they preserve the stiff upper-lip traditionally associated with the British character in the face of crises and dangers, they protest most vehemently at the manner in which Egyptian affairs have been conducted during the past year, which they consider has directly conduced to the present exceedingly grave state of affairs, and they demand a drastic revision of policy, and with it changes in the personnel called upon to carry out that policy.

And let me add this, as showing how serious is the situation. In their attitude and their views the British community is entirely supported by the foreign communities. The latter realise how generously and sincerely we have acted towards the Egyptians. They are disgusted at the manner in which the latter have received these advances and at the astounding lack of courage displayed even by the more enlightened Egyptians, who in their heart of hearts know how favourably their country has been treated. And they have been amazed at our subservience to, and toleration of, certain Egyptians in high places, whose activities are undoubtedly responsible for these outrages, at our blindness to the true requirements of the situation, and at our persistent neglect of the innumerable opportunities we have had in the recent past for bringing about a solution.

It is obvious that the situation calls for exceedingly firm handling. But it requires more than that; it needs on the part of the responsible authorities a display of imagination which has been sadly lacking in our actions for some considerable time now. Until we prove to everyone by our actions that we are determined to establish law and order at all costs, and until we can convince everyone that we have a continuous and consistent policy, we shall not master the situation and re-establish our prestige, which has fallen to the lowest ebb. Nor shall we otherwise regain the confidence of the Egyptians themselves. The latter is a most vital consideration, for 90 per cent. of our troubles in Egypt come from the fact that the large majority of the Egyptian population, including the more instructed Intelligenza, who are really well disposed towards us and want no further changes, have been taught by our recent vacillating tactics to hope for no support from the British side, and, much against their real desire, have been thrown into the arms of the vociferous extremist minority of exaltés, déclassés, and students, who have thus come to rule the country.

* Under this heading appear weekly or at regular intervals communications from correspondents in Egypt, the Sudan, Roumania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Turkey, Palestine, Irak and Persia.

YUGOSLAVIA.

Liubliana, March 14.

Austrian Minister in Belgrade.

The visit of Dr. Seipel, the Austrian Chancellor, to Belgrade has proved—both politically and economically—of the greatest importance. All outstanding questions between Yugoslavia and Austria were discussed on this occasion, and over almost every point an agreement was reached. It is gratifying to record that both sides brought genuine goodwill to bear on the settlement of the national minority questions, and the only thing to be regretted is that the Austrian Government did not at once set to work, giving not only fair promises in regard to the Slovenes of Carinthia, but deeds as well. Unfortunately, the nationality question is still the most dangerous obstacle towards really good and durable relations, and it would be merely wise statesmanship to eliminate it by friendly acts. In economic matters, however, perfect agreement was reached and the basis created for a satisfactory commercial treaty and good mutual relations. It should be noted that the Belgrade Government was most liberal in its treatment of Austria, with the result that in Slovenia—the part of Yugoslavia most deeply interested in economic questions—public opinion is decidedly ruffled. On the other hand, the Slovenes may take comfort in the thought that they will get the lion's share of the Austrian trade, and that this will recoup them for their losses of the moment.

Negotiations with Bulgaria.

Great importance attaches to the negotiations carried on at Nish between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. The main problem to be dealt with is the suppression of the raiding nuisance, it being the object of the "Makedonstvuyushchi," as the Macedonian Irredentists style themselves, to prevent a reconciliation between Serbs and Bulgars. Hence their raids into Yugoslav territory. But the negotiations at Nish followed a satisfactory course, and we may hope very shortly to see friendly relations grow up between Yugoslavia and Bulgaria. The one thing needful is that both parties should act upon the precept of the president of the Bulgarian delegation when he said: "We must only look forward into the future and forget the past." The Bulgarian Prime Minister, M. Stambolisky, acts in this spirit, and so a reconciliation between Serbs and Bulgars may fairly be counted upon.

The Conference at Abbazia.

The Italians have evacuated the third zone in Dalmatia, Shushak, and the part of the Croatian littoral assigned to Yugoslavia under the Treaty of Rapallo. In accordance with the agreement of S. Margherita, it now remains to draw the frontiers between Fiume and Yugoslavia; and this frontier delimitation is to be followed by a commercial treaty between Italy and Yugoslavia and the resumption of the railway traffic with Fiume (Rieka). According to the accompanying note of Count Sforza, the frontier between Yugoslavia and Fiume was to be the old bed of the Riecina, whereby the delta and the port of Barosh would fall to Yugoslavia. In opposition to this the present Italian Government maintains that the Delta and Barosh constitute a corpus separatum of Fiume, and ought to belong to that city. Now there is no doubt at all but that the alluvial strip of land called the Delta has always belonged to Shushak, because in pre-War times it was the Shushak police who had charge of the Delta, and after every demonstration in Fiume the demonstrators would take refuge in the Delta, which the Fiume police were debarred from entering. With regard to Barosh, the harbour of the Delta, the position is not so clear. This harbour was constructed by the Magyars—it was named after the Hungarian Minister Barosh—and on the strength of this and their power (possession being nine-tenths of the law), the Italians are now claiming both the Delta and Barosh for themselves. For Yugoslavia the port of Barosh is of the greatest importance, for, small as it is—and it can accommodate only six vessels—it is, nevertheless, the only seaport for the whole of North-Western Yugoslavia. It should be borne in mind that even the Pact of London, which was in other respects most disadvantageous to the Yugoslavs, assigned the whole of Fiume to Yugoslavia. It is therefore not surprising that violent protests are being raised, especially in Nationalist quarters, against any possible cession of the Delta or Barosh. These protests are seconded by the considerable body of Fiuman (Italian) Autonomists, who fear that Yugoslavia may be driven to construct a new port, and so ruin the whole trade of Fiume. The struggle for the Delta and Barosh is, in fact, also a struggle between Fiume and Trieste. If Fiume recovers economically the trade of Trieste must decrease still more, and vice versa.

As far as they are concerned, the Italians have chosen a most opportune moment for the negotiations. The country is governed by the Radicals, whose heart is in Serbia, and whose interest in Delta and Barosh is correspondingly less than that of the political parties consisting largely of Croats or Slovenes. Yugoslavia is, moreover, on the eve of a general election, and the Radicals have obtained the evacuation of Dalmatia, which is undoubtedly an electoral score, so to say.

The Radicals were perfectly well aware that the

Born 1820—Still going Strong!

HISTORICAL SPIRIT
SERIES NO. 7.

Yard of the "OSTRICH," Colnbrook:
A half-timbered Inn on the Old Bath Road. Has a gruesome history of wholesale murders, although the resting place in the 18th Century of many famous travellers.

Shade of Beau Nash: "Greetings! JOHNNIE
WALKER, I vow you are indeed elegant. You have style, you have character, you are universally admired."

JOHN WALKER & SONS, LTD., SCOTCH WHISKY DISTILLERS,
KILMARNOCK, SCOTLAND.

cession of the Delta and Barosh might be fraught with considerable danger to themselves, for the Nationalists are a growing power in the land. And, therefore, M. Pashitch, despite his age still the astute leader of the Radical Party, placed the Slovene Rybar at the head of the Yugoslav Delegation, and brigaded him with the Croats Leginja and Admiral Prica, thereby insuring himself effectively against the inevitable failure.

It is almost a foregone conclusion that both the Delta and Barosh will go to Fiume. Fiume itself will be constituted a condominium, administered by a commission of six—two Italians, two Yugoslavs, and two Fiumans. Put differently, this means that the Italians will always command a two-thirds majority in the governing body in Fiume. It is furthermore probable that Hungary will be given transit facilities in Fiume and on the railway, as she is being supported by Italy in her demands regarding these points.

The General Election.

While Yugoslavia is eagerly seeking to establish friendly relations with her neighbours, the country itself is in the throes of an exceedingly fierce electoral contest. A host of new parties has sprung up; 313 mandates are being contested by over three thousand candidates. Hence it is extremely risky to hazard a forecast as to the result. The Yugoslav masses, moreover, are politically very immature; the crudest and most absurd electoral slogans still find convinced followers. Besides this, there is a good deal of coercion, especially in South Serbia, which has scarcely emerged from Turkish conditions. The most violent in his tactics among the Croats is M. Raditch, and with his impossible Republic and considerable terrorism, he is the strongest man in Croatia. In Slovenia, Autonomy and Religion are being worked for all they are worth. Women, beside themselves with fanaticism, are becoming a daily spectacle at the electoral meetings. Those who are the best judges of the situation declare that the Radical Party will come out the strongest, but nevertheless unable to form a Government by itself. On the other hand, a Coalition Government is impossible. Therefore, we may shortly see a fresh general election, or even a military Government. The latter alternative is not at all improbable, especially if M. Raditch carries his tactics much further—whereby he would, incidentally, render the Radicals most signal service.

A strong wine ferments long, and, metaphorically, this applies most decidedly to Yugoslavia. Even electoral scandals are no ground for despondency. The country is rich, the people are sound, and as to what is yet lacking, it can only be a question of time.

Reuter's Belgrade correspondent, telegraphing on March 19, gives the final results of the Yugoslav Parliamentary elections as follow:—Pashitch Radical Party, 120 seats; Raditch Party, 70; Democrats, 50; Clerical Party, 22; Mussulman Party, 18; Serbian Agrarian Party, 9; German Minority Party, 6; Social Democrats, 3; Roumanian Minority Party, 1; Non-party candidates were returned for the remaining fourteen seats. The new Parliament will assemble on April 18.

IRAK.

Baghdad, February 25.

British Advisers and the Administration.

The long overdue regulations laying down the duties and responsibilities of the British advisory staff in this country vis-à-vis the Iraqi administrative officials have been published this week, and the following is a summary:—

The appointments of Divisional Adviser and Assistant Divisional Adviser are abolished, and a general Administrative Inspectorate, the headquarters of which will be Baghdad, has been formed in the Ministry of the Interior. Administrative inspectors have the right to inspect all Government departments and municipalities, with the exception of Criminal, Civil, and Ecclesiastical and Religious Courts, and those departments which have their own inspectorate staff; and all Ministries have the right to correspond directly with inspectors on all subjects concerning their Ministries. Subject to these exceptions, the duties of administrative inspectors are to inspect and report on:—All matters relating to public security and the maintenance of law and order; the cause of any increase in crime, with their suggestions for its suppression; the distribution of police, the state of their discipline, any abnormal employment of them and the manner in which they perform their duties; all matters relating to tribes; their settlement; the disposal of disputes in accordance with the Tribal, Criminal, and Civil Disputes Regulations; their customs and the conduct of their sheikhs; all prisons and district lock-ups, and their administration; the manner in which elections are held for all representative assemblies and administrative and municipal councils; the administration of municipalities including their budgets and accounts; the work of administrative councils and their resolutions; health, sanitation, agricultural and veterinary matters; census registers; all transactions relating to land acquisition; all Government buildings; the irrigation needs of the areas in which they are inspecting, and to study improvement schemes in consultation with the administrative official and the irrigation officer; all bunds for flood protection, where such inspection has not already been carried out by irrigation officers. In the latter case they will report the progress of the work considered necessary by the Irrigation Department; in general, all administrative matters entrusted to administrative officials by the laws, regulations, and orders issued by the respective Ministries, and to tender their opinion on matters concerning the improvement of the administration, the maintenance of law and order, the increase of public contentment, and the development of the country. Administrative Inspectors have the right to inspect all revenue offices, civil treasuries, and safes containing public funds. They will examine all methods of assessing land revenue and of collecting Government demands which are due in the areas which they are inspecting. They will in-

RANKEN

(W. O. LAMBERT Representative).

And at CALCUTTA, DELHI, SIMLA,
LAHORE, RAWAL PINDI, & MURREE.

CIVIL AND MILITARY TAILORS,

20, George Street, Hanover Square,

London, W.1.

& CO., LTD.

Telegrams: "MENTALLY."

'Phone: MAYFAIR 1558

COLONIAL OUTFITS A SPECIALITE.

spect the work of all revenue collecting officials in liwas and report on them to the Ministry of Finance. They will suggest, in special reports to the Ministry of Finance, any improvements they consider necessary and practicable in revenue assessment and collection and in the development of State Domains. In connection with any revenue matters in the areas inspected by them, they will obey all instructions of the Ministry of Finance.

It will be seen that the advisers are henceforward to be known as inspectors. This change is made very largely with a view to removing a designation which jarred on local susceptibilities; it is considered degrading that the local officials should have advisers, but when advisers are called inspectors this feeling of degradation is less keenly felt. The powers given to the inspectors are very wide. All files, account books, treasuries, revenue assessment reports, and returns of revenue collections are open to their inspection, and provision is made for the close scrutiny of the actions of even the lowest officials. This is important; hitherto, there is reason to believe, the senior administrative officials, such as kaimakams and mutasarifs, have, with a few conspicuous exceptions, carried out their duties honestly and with every endeavour to do justice in all the questions which have come before them. The same cannot be said, however, for the junior officials, who, after all, are the officials with whom the mass of the people come into closest contact, and by whose actions more than anything else the Government will be judged. It is hoped that as a result of the new regulations inspectors will be more constantly on tour than has been the case hitherto, and that the behaviour of the junior officials will come under closer observation. The local vernacular Press has not yet commented on these regulations, but it is expected that they will be favourably received.

The British Club Defunct.

At the end of this month another of the links with the British community of pre-War days in Baghdad will pass away, as the British Club has decided to go into liquidation in view of its unsatisfactory financial position. It might have been expected that the big increase in the numbers of the British residents in Baghdad would have placed the club on its feet, but the more central or attractive positions of the hotels and the other clubs made the British Club almost deserted, and its active members have been confined almost entirely to those who have joined it to play for the football and cricket teams. The Alwiyah Club now remains the only social club in Baghdad, and the demise of its rival will no doubt strengthen its position and enable it to make some of the improvements which it needs to make it fulfil fully the requirements of British residents here.

SCHOOL OF ORIENTAL STUDIES.

London Institution. Finsbury Circus, E.C.2.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES AND RELIGIONS.

Instruction is given in the principal languages of the East and of Africa, and on Oriental and African Religions and Customs.

For particulars, apply to Sir E. DENISON ROSS, Director.

THE PERSIA SOCIETY.

President: Lord Lamington, G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E.

Founded in 1911 to study all questions of common interest to Great Britain and Persia.

Subscription £1 per annum. Further particulars may be obtained of the Honorary Secretary, 74, Grosvenor St., W.1.

Constantinople, March 13.

Angora's Decision.

Turkey's counter-proposals to the Lausanne Treaty, arrived at after eight days of animated debate in the National Assembly, have aroused remarkably little comment in business and private circles in Constantinople, and the reason lies in the fact that, if the dozen or so main modifications demanded were not altogether anticipated, at any rate, the general tenour of the reply to the Allied proposition is somewhat milder than many had been led to expect. In other words, it is realised that the extremists in the Angora Parliament have not altogether had their own way, but that, after much rhetoric and little argument, they have eventually been overshadowed by the moderating influence of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, Raouf Bey, the Premier, and Ismet Pasha.

The Turkish Press has variously described, according to the extremist or moderate leanings of its writers, the general trend and final conclusions of the long-drawn-out debate. On this account it becomes extremely difficult to form any reliable or concrete ideas of the real happenings in the Parliament. All that one knows is that strong and stormy speeches were delivered, and that, finally, on the last day of the session, a motion over the signature of 150 Deputies (the entire Parliament comprising 343 Deputies) was presented and "passed by a large majority," according a vote of confidence in the Government, charging it to obtain the complete independence of Turkey, and authorising it to re-open pourparlers on the basis of the demanded modifications. Thus the Angora Parliament has heard all that there is to hear, has said all that it has to say, and has left the question of peace, or its miserable alternative, to Kemal and his Cabinet.

The modifications themselves are, in the main, matters for the experts to decide—naval, military, and financial. The question as to whether the islands of Merkab and Castellorizzo, outside the Dardanelles, should be ceded to the Turks—or the boundary line between Turkish and Greek Thrace be the eastern bank of the Maritza River, rather than an imaginary line drawn in mid-stream, or, again, the points raised as to the distribution of the Public Debt and the other financial clauses—is not such as to create heated altercation with the lay mind, even in the case of those whose long residence in the Balkans might make them prone to discover cause for emotional recrimination over the cession of a Turkish carpet, the boundary between two adjacent back gardens, or in the fluctuations in the street vendors' price of oranges. Moreover, it is felt here that so much has already been conceded that one cannot marvel at the Turks demanding more, but rather at their ingenuity in discovering anything more to ask for.

Recognition of Past Debts.

The request that all reference in the Treaty as to the arrangement to be reached between the Turkish Government and the Public Debt, relative to the payment of arrears of interest, should be eliminated on the grounds that it is a private and internal affair between Turkey and her creditors, is rather a naïve one, and might be justifiable only if Turkey did not happen to be in the position of having to treat for peace with the creditors concerned. This is a matter, after all, which is of greater interest and concern to France than to ourselves, and is doubtless one on which we shall be expected to back up our Allies-in-law in the final deliberations.

The Status of Foreigners.

But there is one issue in the counter-proposals upon which it is to be hoped that the Allies will make a firm stand, and that is the one relating to the status of foreigners in Turkey. It is no exaggeration to say that there are considerable misgivings in Constantinople in regard to the concessions already agreed to and the further demands put forward on this subject. On the proper and firm handling of this question will depend not only the continuance of the volume of trade and foreign capital employed throughout Turkey, providing markets for her farmers and revenue for her Customs, but the general welfare and well-being of tens of thousands of Allied and Christian subjects in Turkey, as well as the development of the country's resources and the material advancement of her own people. The already existing state of affairs in the country, owing to doubts and uncertainty as to the future, and the intentions of the new Government, should be sufficient warning to all moderate Nationalists not to press their demands in this respect too far, but rather to wait till events have justified them—such events as moderate legislation, stable social conditions, and settled Parliamentary Government. Already, and waiting on events, has much foreign capital been frightened away from Turkey, and a large volume of private depositors' money transferred to other countries as a precautionary measure.

In respect of this question of the status of foreigners, it may be said that foreigners in Turkey expect that each Allied country will do its duty.

A NEAR EAST FILM.

Under the auspices of the "All-British Appeal for the Near East" a private exhibition was given at the West End Cinema last week of a film designed to give people in this country some idea of the sufferings of the Greek and Armenian refugees from Eastern Thrace and Anatolia, and to explain the relief work which is being carried out in the Near East by various British Relief bodies. Before the film was shown, Mr. Harold Spender briefly described some of his recent experiences in the Near East, comparing the present disaster with that endured by the Jews when they were expelled from Jerusalem. He said that all the refugees were looking to Great Britain for help.

The film itself portrayed the flight of Greek and Armenian refugees, and, while not going deeply into the horrors that have been experienced, made plain the necessity for urgent relief. 35,000 refugees were being fed in Greece by the different societies working with the All-British Appeal, which has recently made itself responsible for 11,000 more. It was on behalf of these latter that the present appeal, which was fervently endorsed by the Bishop of London, was being made.

Among those who witnessed the film were the following:—Dr. Oskar Kallas, Baron E. K. Palmstierna, M. D. Stancioff, M. Kliskho, M. G. W. Bisseneek, Dr. Vojtech Mastny, M. N. Titulescu, Dr. Friedrich Sthamer, Mr. George Harvey, Sardar Abdul Hathi Khan, Count de Beaufort de St. Aulaire, M. D. Caclamanos, M. K. Skirmunt, M. T. Narowshevitch, Dr. M. Gavrilovitch, M. P. B. Vogt, M. D. Sophianos, Archimandrite H. Bagdecus, M. Rodocanachi, Lady Palmer, Lady Kitty Vincent, Lady Emily Lutyens, Sir Frederick Holiday, Major-General Sir Frederick and Lady Maurice, Lieut.-General Sir Hubert Gough, the Rev. J. B. Haldane, the Rev. A. C. Elgar, Major J. B. and Mrs. Paget, Miss Beatrice Harnden, Miss Ethel Sidgwick, the Mayor of Paddington, Col. J. Procter, Mr. Thos. Cape, M.P., Mr. Noel Buxton, M.P., Mr. Chas. G. Ammon M.P., Mr. J. M. Hogge, M.P., Miss J. Halford, Mrs. Theodore Ralli, and Dr. L. Haden Guest.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

The first and second places in the final stage of the Cairo Hospital Competition, in which there were twelve competitors, have been won by London architects—Messrs. Nicholas and Dixon-Spain, of Hanover Square, and Messrs. Lancaster, Rickards, Lucas, and Lodge, of Bedford Square. All are Fellows of the R.I.B.A. The competition was open to the architects of the world, and in the first stage five places out of six were won by British architects.

During the period of about two and a-half years since it was established, the Palestine Foundation Fund has collected £753,000 for work in Palestine. Fifty countries have contributed to this sum.

Dr. Eugen Rumelin, the new German Minister to Bulgaria, was received by King Boris on March 10.

Sultan Saleh bin Ghalib, the son of the late Sultan of Mckalla, arrived in Aden recently from India, and it is anticipated that he will be followed by his uncle, Sultan Omar bin Awadth, the present titular chief of Mokalla.

The Egyptian Government are offering a reward of ££10,000 for the apprehension of the authors of the recent bomb outrages, and ££1,000 to anyone capturing the criminal in any future outrages. A further reward of ££1,000 is offered anyone apprehending bomb-throwers near the spot of any future outrages.

According to a message from Calcutta, 18,000 German bayonets, attached by means of screws to iron scabbards, have been sold as "splitters" in India. The possession of these weapons has been declared illegal. The police have so far recovered 8,500.

According to the Aleph Be newspaper of Damascus, Mr. Henry Ford, the millionaire and famous motor-car manufacturer, contemplates a visit to Jerusalem shortly. From the same source it is reported that Mr. Ford's object is to establish a daily newspaper and a bank that shall connect American commerce with Mediterranean countries.

Professor W. M. Flinders Petrie, F.R.S., is to repeat his lecture on "Royal Burials in Egypt" at the Kingsway Hall on Saturday, March 24, at 3 p.m. The proceeds will be devoted to the British School of Archeology in Egypt.

Viscount Allenby, High Commissioner for Egypt, is making an appeal for £50,000 to create an Endowment Fund for the British Hospital at Port Said, which plays an important part in the welfare of seamen and passengers of every creed and country who pass through that port of call.

A Persian military mission is shortly expected at Moscow to work out with the Soviet military authorities a plan for the closer co-operation of the forces of the Soviet republics and those of Persia.

A Soviet "University" has been opened at Tiflis for students from Turkey, Persia, Khiva, Bokhara, Afghanistan, India, and other Eastern countries. About a hundred Moslem students, especially from Turkey and Persia, have already entered this university.

The exchange of Greek and Turk prisoners of war and civil prisoners began on March 17 under the supervision of a Commission sent to Greece by the International Red Cross Committee.

Miss Margaret Murray gave a University Extension lecture yesterday in the Kingsway Hall on "Domestic Life in Ancient Egypt." She dealt with the education of the children, sports, pastimes, games of chance and skill, and dances of the ancient Egyptians.

The King has sanctioned the Indianisation of the eight regiments selected by General Lord Rawlinson. They are:—The 7th and 16th Light Cavalry, the 21st Madras Pioneers, the 4th Battalion 19th Hyderabad Regiment, the 5th (Royal) Battalion 5th Mahratta Light Infantry, the 1st Battalion 7th Rajputs, the 1st Battalion 14th Punjab Regiment, and the 2nd Battalion 1st Punjab Regiment.

At a public meeting held at Delhi on March 14, at which Mr. Sastri was the chief speaker, a resolution was adopted assuring the Kenya Indians of India's sympathy and all possible help. It was decided to inform Mr. Bonar Law that "India treated the Kenya question as the touchstone of her position in the Commonwealth."

NEAR EAST BOOKSHELF.

THE FRENCH VIEW.

"THE MYSTIFICATION OF THE ALLIED PEOPLES. WHY? HOW? BY WHOM?" By André Chéradame. Translated by John A. Fitzgerald. (Published by the Author at the Ch. Herissey Press, Evreux 12s. 6d. net.)

At the time of the Armistice there were, broadly speaking, two views of Europe—one, the German view, which postulated an economic Mittel Europa, and the other, the French view, which postulated a political Slav-Latin bloc between Germany and Russia. The German view was, of course, defeated: no one of the victors could possibly realise the Germans' most cherished dream (a projection from which, incidentally, included the Hamburg-Baghdad route). The way was clear, therefore, for the triumph of the French view, for the emergence of hitherto impotent and latent peoples and for the permanent crippling of pan-German ideals.

But events have proved that the pan-German ideal is by no means dead, and people have become worried and disappointed that a smooth peace has not followed the struggle of the Great War. A state of such chaos as prevails in Central Europe to-day is not what the victors expected, and this book of M. Chéradame is written to explain that disappointment.

In the author's opinion, which, by the by, is shared by considerable minds in all parts of the world, the trouble has been caused by Germans and Jews. First, owing to the cosmopolitan influence surrounding Mr. Lloyd George and President Wilson, an artificial Armistice was concluded in November, 1918; and secondly, ever since that Armistice the German banking power has been used to manipulate the Continental rates of exchange. M. Chéradame is emphatic in his non-belief of the "Jewish Peril," but is satisfied that cosmopolitan finance is on Germany's side. This is no new theory; even in this country it is held, in more or less sensible degree, by such papers as the Morning Post and the National Review, and those who cannot accept all the stories of "The Hidden Hand" are far from believing that it was to the benefit of this country (and consequently of Europe) that the ex-Premier was in such constant and close contact with international finance. Moreover, this country will not be convinced that the exchanges have not been manipulated; much of its support of France in the Ruhr venture is due to this ineradicable conviction.

As a Frenchman, M. Chéradame goes some distance further than most of his English readers will follow him. He describes himself not as an anti-German, but as an anti pan-German, and of pan-Germanism he has a very wholesome and sufficiently embracing dread. For instance, he attributes the return of ex-King Constantine to Greece at the end of 1920 to German propaganda; and he believes that the whole system of "plebiscites" is a surreptitious German plan, largely to help Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey to recover their lost territory. He systematises the whole collection of pan-German tricks, and, taken in sum, in his admirable setting out of it, it is convincing enough.

ENGLISH SELF-TAUGHT for JEWS

ענגליש: זעלבסט-לערער

(In Yiddish Characters.)

By PHILIP BLACKMAN, F.C.S.

Containing:—
The Alphabet. Conversational Phrases. Shopping.
Classified Vocabularies. Travelling by Land and Sea. Commercial and Legal.
Elementary Grammar. Pronunciation. Money. [Terms.
Meals. Illustrations of Coinage.

Crown 8vo, 128 pp., wrapper, 2s. net; Cloth, 3s. net. Postage, 3d. extra.
Sold by all BOOKSELLERS. Write for Prospectus and Catalogue No. 25.
London: E. MARLBOROUGH & CO., 51, Old Bailey, E.C.

M. Chéradame's remedy for the pan-German manipulation of exchanges is the organisation of Allied public opinion to such a pitch that it will not tolerate a pan-German anywhere in authority in Germany. If the pan-Germans are submerged, he thinks, the real Russia will revive itself, throw off its German-Jewish Bolshevik leaders, and gradually the new Europe will settle down. If the attempt to destroy pan-Germanism is a failure, France will become bankrupt, and the whole Slav-Latin bloc in Central Europe will fall to the ground. The author has done this country a service in so forcibly painting the picture of the dreadful alternatives, and he will undoubtedly prevent the gulling of many honest minds which are moved by such phrases as "the rehabilitation of Europe," "the necessity of economic reconstruction," and so on.

This is unmistakably a book to be read, especially by a public which has been surfeited with such pro-enemy books as Keynes' "Economic Consequences of the Peace" or Nitti's "Decadence of Europe." It presents French policy in a reasonable and very intelligent light, and, despite a few minor inaccuracies and a careless translation, satisfies the mind, as it consoles the heart, of the average Englishman.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"Below the Snow Line." By Douglas W. Freshfield, D.C.L. (London: Constable and Co., Ltd. 18s. net. Postage abroad 6½d.)

"Tennyson: Aspects of His Life, Character, and Poetry." By Harold Nicolson. (London: Constable and Co., Ltd. 12s. 6d. net. Postage abroad 7½d.)

"Elias' Modern Dictionary: Arabic-English." By Elias A. Elias. (Cairo: E. A. Elias, P.O. Box No. 954.)

"Arabic-English Dictionary of Modern Arabic of Egypt." By S. Piro Bey. 2nd Edition. Revised and considerably enlarged. (Cairo: Elias' Modern Press.)

PERSONAL AND GENERAL.

TO-DAY.

March 22 (New Style).

March 9 (Old Style).

Shaaban 4, 1341 A.H. of the Moslem Calendar.

Nisan 5, 5683 of the Jewish Calendar.

Sir Philip Sassoon has arrived in London from Cairo.

Lady Juliet Trevor has returned to London from Egypt.

The American Minister to Bucharest arrived in London on March 14 from Roumania.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Judd and daughters have left Khartoum for Cairo on their way home.

Prince Nicolas of Roumania left London on March 14 for Sheerness to join H.M.S. Benbow.

The Marquis Curzon of Kedleston received the Bulgarian Minister at the Foreign Office on March 14.

Lady Ludlow, who has been spending the winter in Egypt, will remain abroad for some weeks longer.

Mrs. Henry Sturgis has returned to 2, Chester Street, from visiting her daughter, Mrs. Malcolm Aird, in Egypt.

Colonel Sir Edward Grigg, M.P., and the Hon. Lady Grigg arrived on March 18 at 86, Vincent Square, from Egypt.

Sir Donald and Lady Maclean returned to London last week from Egypt, where they have been for some weeks.

Prince and Princess Christopher and Prince and Princess Andrew of Greece sailed from New York on March 20 for France.

Mlle. Morfova, prima donna of the Prague Opera, gave a recital at the Æolian Hall last night. She is Bulgarian by birth.

M. Jevrem Taditch, Counsellor of the Yugoslav Legation, left London on March 18 for Vienna, where he will act as Chargé d'Affaires.

Lord Leigh and the Hon. Agnes Leigh, who arrived at Jerusalem last week from Cairo, have postponed their return to London until the second week in April.

M. Ivan Stancioff, son of the Bulgarian Minister in London, has just taken his degree (with distinction) in law at the University of Fribourg, Switzerland.

Madame Stancioff gave an afternoon reception at the Bulgarian Legation on March 14, at which many members of the Diplomatic Corps and Members of Parliament were present.

The Roumanian Minister has left London for Paris to join Mme. Titulesco, who has been staying there. They will proceed to St. Moritz, where they will remain until early in April.

Among passengers in the P. and O. s.s. Naldera, which left London on March 16, were Lord Farington, with Lady Violet Henderson and Mr. Gavin Henderson, for Gibraltar; and Lieutenant-General Sir Richard and Lady Haking and the Misses Haking for Port Said.

Mr. Dadiba Merwanjee Dalal, C.I.E., the new High Commissioner for India, left Bombay on March 17 in the R.M.S. China to take up his appointment in London. He will arrive at Marseilles on April 1, and will proceed direct to London, and will not, as has been previously stated, take a holiday on the Riviera before going into office.

OBITUARY.

The death is announced of Major E. B. Soane, whose name will be very familiar to our readers for his knowledge of Kurdistan. His book, "To Mesopotamia and Kurdistan in Disguise," is indeed a classic, and he had few rivals in his experience and intimate knowledge of the Kurds. On the Kurdish language he wrote a work that is authoritative and invaluable. He was able

NATIVE HANDWORK FROM CYPRUS.

A wide selection of ladies' suède leather and Oriental bead handbags, made in a variety of original designs and colour schemes, each handbag a veritable work of art—no two alike—may be seen at THE NEAR EAST offices, 1, Devonshire Square, E.C.2. Readers in the Near East are invited to apply direct to the Leather Industry, Kyrenia, Cyprus, for parcels to be sent on approval. Parcels can also be made up to include samples of hat trimmings (a speciality), card cases, blotters, etc., Cashmere embroideries, and inexpensive embroidered rugs.

thoroughly to penetrate the Moslem mind, and his almost unique possession of Islamic tendencies was of extreme use to Great Britain in the War.

The death occurred, at Antibes, on March 16, of Queen Milena of Montenegro. Born in 1847, the daughter of the Montenegrin Voivodo Vukotitch was brought up in the patriarchal tradition of the Black Mountain. She took little part in politics. At the age of 13 she was married to Nicholas I., who died in 1921. Of the Queen's eight surviving children, the eldest daughter, Princess Militza, is married to the Grand Duke Peter Nikolaievitch; the second, Princess Stana, to the Grand Duke Nicholas Nikolaievitch, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian Armies in 1914-15; the third, Princess Helena, is Queen of Italy; the fourth, Princess Anna, is the wife of Prince Francis Joseph of Battenberg. Her other children, Princesses Xenia and Vera and Prince Peter, are unmarried.

We regret to announce the death of Mary (Lady Pears), widow of the late Sir Edwin Pears, of Constantinople, which occurred on March 16 at Goathland, Tower Road, Bournemouth.

Where to stay in the East

CAIRO

THE CONTINENTAL - SAVOY

THE MOST UP-TO-DATE AND BEST SITUATED HOTEL IN CAIRO.

Entirely Renewed. Overlooking Ezbekieh Gardens. Opera Square. Famous Terraces. 400 Rooms. 200 Bathrooms. Cairo's Fashionable Grill-Room Restaurant. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dances. Open all the year round.

MENA HOUSE HOTEL,
At the Foot of the Pyramids. The Ideal Hotel out of Town.

HELOUAN. HEALTH RESORT near CAIRO.
Sulphur Baths & Thermal Establishment.

GRAND HOTEL, HELOUAN. Strictly First Class.

SUMMER PALACE HOTEL

RAMLEH (GLYMENOPOLUO) ALEXANDRIA.
First-class family hotel. Grill, American Bar, Restaurant, Billiards. Open all the year round, and to non-residents.

SUMMER SEASON.
A First-Class Orchestra plays at tea and during dinner. Weekly Dances with Jazz Band, Special Motor Service. Bathing Huts on Glymenopoulo Beach. Best French Cuisine. Special Terms for Families.

NAJEM HOURY'S CYPRUS HOTELS COMPANY

OPEN ALL THE YEAR ROUND—
NIKOSIA—Cyprus Palace Hotel.
LIMASSOL—Olympus Hotel.
FAMAGUSTA—Savoy Hotel.
LARNACA—Majestic Hotel.

FOR SUMMER SEASON.
TROODOS—Olympus Hotel.
6,000 feet above sea level. Open from May till October. Perfect situation. French and English Cuisine. Moderate Terms. Excursions to Mount Troodos.
For Tickets and further Particulars, apply
NAJEM HOURY & SONS, Limassol, Cyprus.
Proprietors of "The Army and Navy Stores."
Branches—Polymedia, Troodos, Nikosia, Famagusta & Larnaca.
Head Offices and General Stores: LIMASSOL.
All arrangements for Transport, &c., are made by the above Firm.

THE IRAQ PALACE HOTEL

BASRAH CITY.

The most up-to-date and best situated hotel in Iraq. Overlooking the Strand. With every modern comfort, Bar, Restaurant.
Best Orchestra. Daily Concerts. Weekly Dance.

THE NEAR EAST.

1, DEVONSHIRE SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.2.

Telegrams: "EASTAPROX, AVE, LONDON."
Telephone No.: 618 London Wall.

THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1923.

SPRING CLEANING IN THE BALKANS.

A tribute is due to the new spirit abroad in the Balkan Peninsula. At the present moment a conference is in progress at Nish between representatives of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria with the object of settling all outstanding differences between the two countries, including the thorny problem of komitaji bands. At Abbazia Italians and Yugoslavs are meeting to give effect to the details of the Treaty of Santa Margherita; the Greek and Yugoslav Governments are in negotiation over a working arrangement for a Yugoslav free port at Salonika; Albania, through the agency of a Commission of the League of Nations, is trying to obtain a final demarcation of her frontiers with Yugoslavia and Greece. The Abbazia Conference, it is true, may be prolonged; the question of an adjustment of the rival interests in Fiume is complicated by a divergence of views between the Fascisti on the spot and the Italian Government. A delay in the settlement, however, although regrettable, would not affect the relations of the Balkan States. As far as these are concerned, the meeting at Nish is of crucial importance, for with the burial of the hatchet by Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, the chief danger to the peace of the Peninsula will have been removed. Friendly discussion, moreover, will establish the fact that the komitaji problem is national, not international. There can be no rapprochement between Bulgarians and Greeks until the question of a Bulgarian outlet on the Aegean Sea has been settled; but, in spite of the present deadlock which this question appears to have reached, it is difficult to believe either that it is incapable of solution or that it will be allowed to drift unsolved for an indefinite period. Thus, in contradistinction to the experience of the Balkans before the War, the approach of spring has no external terrors for the countries themselves, and no misgivings for Europe as a whole.

While, however, the Balkan States are proving splendidly false to their reputation internationally, political conditions in the different countries show little or no improvement on the old, bad days. Political animosities, personal self-seeking, universal distrust flourish as rankly as ever, and tend to paralyse economic development. Even when every allowance has been made for the misrepresentations that political heat engenders, it is impossible to suppose that the present Government in Roumania is satisfied with its own record. In the richest country of South-eastern Europe the rate of exchange shows the greatest depreciation. More material damage was done during the War to Roumania than to any of the neighbouring States, but she has fallen lamentably short in the capacity for recuperation that was expected of a land of her potentialities. It is difficult to dissociate this state of affairs from her political record. The great accession of physical and moral strength that was to come from the incorporation of Transylvania has been stultified by the political antagonism between the Transylvanians and the parties of the old kingdom. In Yugoslavia only the firm hand of the veteran M. Pashitch has availed to keep the political machinery in motion. As that machinery was admittedly in need of being overhauled, it remains to be seen whether the strain to which it has thus been subjected has not done it serious, possibly irreparable damage. With the appointment as Minister of Finance of a trained business man who has had the advantage of being connected with a British banking establishment, there is some hope that Yugoslavia's finances will have entered upon a more prosperous phase. The voting of a credit of over three million sterling for armaments was calculated to leave a bad impression abroad, especially in Central and South-eastern Europe, where Yugoslavia enjoys a somewhat bellicose reputation; but it was an established fact that the Yugoslav army was inadequately equipped. The results of the elections held last Sunday still leave it an open question whether the Serbian policy of centralisation or the Croatian desire for a decentralised federation will ultimately win the day; but it is evident that the former relies almost entirely on the dominant personality of M. Pashitch. Most statesmen, it would be thought, would appreciate the value to the State of internal unity, and would be prepared to sacrifice something to secure it. The gentle art of compromise, however, has few votaries in the Balkans, as may be inferred from the recent history of Montenegro. Neither in Greece nor in Bulgaria is the political situation in any way better than in Yugoslavia or Roumania. In the former acquiescence in the existing régime seems to the foreign observer to be prompted more by fear of the consequences of opposition than by conviction in that régime's utility or permanency. Under such conditions the internal position, bad enough as a result of the influx of refugees and the financial difficulties, can only become worse; for the one country that is anxious to help Greece has declared its inability to take any step to this end until the revolutionary régime has made way for a Government properly elected by the free votes of the people. Bulgaria has been winning golden opinions by reason of her foreign policy, but appears in the realm of domestic politics to be seated uncomfortably near a volcano. If the Agrarian Party could have remained united and have made good its deficiencies in administrative experience by a judicious use of outside help, the Bulgarians would have been the envy politically of all their neighbours. As things are, they offer a further illustration of the political backwardness of the Balkan States.

With the marked improvement in their foreign relations this backwardness could be regarded with more equanimity if it were not one of the chief obstacles to economic rehabilitation, delay in regard to which is in itself a possible source of trouble. The real danger spot, however, is the komitaji question. In the past the komitajis played an international part; they have now become a national sore, and no amount of special pleading or propaganda will convince Europe that outside intrigue has anything to do with the resentment of Yugoslavia's Macedonian subjects against the incursion of Serbian settlers from Hungary. Macedonia is an internal problem for Yugoslavia, Greece, and Bulgaria, and so far, unfortunately, the better spirit that has led to the marked improvement in foreign relations has not been brought to bear upon it. There is nothing in the past history of the Balkans to justify the theory that the vexed Macedonian question will yield to force: and, being a domestic concern, it knows no close season, but may become acute at any moment.

THE SUDAN—IV.

THE KASSALA RAILWAY.

The Position of Kassala.

Now that it has been decided to construct a railway to connect Kassala with the sea, an essential step in the economic development of the Sudan will be achieved. Whether from the point of view of the consumer of raw produce abroad, of the material and political interests of the Government, or of the general well-being of the native population, the value of this railway cannot be exaggerated. A glance at a map (p. 299) shows that, while most of the Sudan is served by railways and river, the eastern districts are devoid of any such facilities, for the Atbara and Rahad rivers are of little use for transport of produce. The Eastern Sudan has in the past been obliged to depend almost entirely on a most inadequate supply of camels for the carriage of its imports and exports, and under these conditions has been able to make little progress. Until the proposed railway is completed the natural resources of Kassala cannot be brought into action, and its potentially important economic position is nullified. Not only will the proposed railway enable the Sudan forthwith to add substantially to the output of these resources, but it will also help to strengthen the economic fabric of the country and place it on a much broader basis.

If Kassala town is taken as the centre of a circle with a radius of 250 miles, the circumference will touch or contain a number of important points, viz., Suakin (on the Red Sea), Massawa (the port of Italian Eritrea), Khartoum, Atbara (the junction of the Nile and Red Sea Railway), Wad Medani (on the Blue Nile-Kordofan Railway), and Thamian (the junction of the proposed railway with the Port Sudan line). Kassala Province, as will be seen, adjoins Eritrea in the north and Abyssinia in the south, and is well situated for the development of a frontier trade.

Lack of Transport.

Unfortunately Kassala in the past has been unable to make use of the advantages which should accrue to it from its central position owing to lack of transport. At present it costs approximately £8 or £10 per ton, or some 1d. or 1½d. per lb., to carry produce by camel to a seaport or to a market on an existing railway in the interior, not to speak of the interminable difficulties usually associated with camel transport and the lengthy period of transit, which runs to weeks or even months. Furthermore, camel transport ceases for some months during the rainy season when tracks—so-called roads—become impassable. Lastly and most important of all, it would be impossible for camel transport to carry the volume of produce which must be dealt with if the cotton-growing area of the Gash Delta is to be developed on a commercial scale.

Present Production.

Kassala Province has an area of 46,000 square miles and a population roughly estimated at 84,000. It grows its own food supply—about 30,000 tons of grain and oil seeds—and exports a few hundred tons of gum arabic, sesame, dom nuts (vegetable ivory), hides and skins, and native butter. Latterly, cotton cultivation has made progress, and a fairly substantial trade in the export of cattle and sheep (about 3,000 or 4,000 cattle and 20,000 or 30,000 sheep per annum) has been established. Kassala also has a frontier trade of a value of about £50,000 per annum with Abyssinia (imports consisting mainly of coffee and animals, exports of cotton and silk goods), and also a small local trade with Eritrea.

These statistics of present output are no criterion, however, of the productive capacity of these districts when the railway is completed.

Economic Possibilities : Cotton.

In two products alone Kassala possesses assets
(Continued on page 299.)

GELLATLY, HANKEY & CO.

LLOYD'S AGENTS FOR THE RED SEA.

KHARTOUM, PORT SUDAN, SUAKIN, MASSOWAH AND JEDDAH (Arabia).

Branches at:—GLASGOW, LIVERPOOL, MANCHESTER, ANTWERP, MARSEILLES, HAMBURG, COLOGNE.

Head Office:—Dock House, Billiter Street, LONDON, E.C.3 West End Office:—62, Pall Mall, LONDON, S.W.1

Agents for:—

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.
THE MARINE INSURANCE CO., LTD.

THE UNION-CASTLE MAIL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.
THE PHOENIX ASSURANCE CO., LTD.

ELLERMAN AND BUCKNALL STEAMSHIP CO., LTD.
THE ARMY & NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD.

ELLERMAN'S WILSON LINE, LTD.
COX'S SHIPPING AGENCY, &c.

Regular Service of First-Class Passenger and Cargo Steamers between Port Sudan and the Continent, United Kingdom, New York and East African Ports.

COAL, PATENT FUEL, CEMENT, PETROLEUM, SHELL MOTOR SPIRIT, EXPLOSIVES AND GENERAL MERCHANTS

Telegrams

"GELLATLY"

TRADE WITH THE SUDAN

THE SUDAN TRADING COMPANY.

Head Office : Khartoum.

Branches :

Port Sudan, El Obeid, Nahud, and principal stations in the Sudan, Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said (Egypt).

General Wholesale Import Merchants and Exporters of Sudan Produce.

London Agency :

35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3.

ECONOMICAL EXCAVATIONS

We specialise in Dragline Excavators, suitable for drainage, irrigation, trenching and general work.

Full range of standard models available with bucket capacities from 3/4 to 9 cubic yards.

If you have any excavations to carry out, ask us for particulars of Ruston Draglines and Shovels.

RUSTON & HORNSBY LTD.

LINCOLN ENGLAND

LIQUOR LICENCES.

The Liquor Licence Ordinance published in the Sudan Gazette of December 31, 1922, lays down certain regulations in regard to the importation of alcoholic liquors.

No alcoholic liquor may be imported into the Sudan except under a permit. Permits for those holding licences may be obtained from the Chief Customs Officers at Halfa, Suakin, or Port Sudan, or from the Governor of the Province through which the liquors enter. The importation by persons who are not licence-holders for their personal consumption is allowed provided such persons obtain a permit for each consignment from the Governor of the Province to which the liquor is consigned; provisional permits for such consignments may also be issued by the Chief of Customs. Liquors may not be transported from one place to another in the Sudan except with the permission of the Governors concerned and unless they are accompanied by the owner and are not for sale. The consignment "in transit" through the Sudan is only permitted under a special permit from the Civil Secretary, Sudan Government.

CONTOMICHALOS, DARKE & CO., LTD.

Registered Office : 35, Billiter Buildings, E.C.3

Sudan Branches :

Port Sudan, Khartoum, Suakin, Tokar, Kassala. STEAMSHIP, INSURANCE, FORWARDING AND BUNKERING AGENTS, COTTON AND COTTONSEED EXPORTERS.

General Agents in the Sudan for :

The Clan Line of Steamers; Ellerman's City & Hall Lines; The Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.; The Harrison Line; The Sun Line; The Bank Line (Andrew Weir & Co.); The Hansa Line; The London Assurance; etc., etc.

Through freights quoted from Sudan to all U.K., Continental and U.S.A. ports, and from Port Sudan to the principal stations in the Sudan.

Bunker Coals always in stock at Port Sudan, and steamers supplied at short notice.

For full particulars apply to London and/or Khartoum Offices.

SUDAN MERCANTILE CO., LTD.

IMPORT & EXPORT.

Representing :—

DUNLOP RUBBER CO., LTD.,
BRITISH FIBROCEMENT WORKS, [Ltd.,

BURRELL'S PAINTS,
MAJOR & CO.'s SOLIGNUM, [&c., &c.

Telegrams: SUDANILE.

P.O. Box 97
KHARTOUM.

P.O. Box 22
PORT SUDAN.

DURA.

Since the extension of the railways into the grain-producing districts of the Gezira some twelve years ago dura has come to be regarded by the native very largely as a "money" as well as a food crop, as a result of the additional value which this grain has acquired owing to sales abroad. Dura has, of course, always possessed a considerable barter value, and, to a certain extent, a direct cash value, owing to large internal demands, but it is only within the last few years that the demand for this grain on foreign markets has made itself widely felt. This new phase began with the demand from Egypt in 1909, 1910, 1911, but became much more pronounced owing to the large exports to Egypt, Arabia, and Eritrea during the war. All these demands have, however, been fortuitous, and largely due to abnormal circumstances in one importing country or another.

FIXED GUM ROYALTY IN THE SUDAN

The system of fixing the royalty upon exports of gum arabic from the Sudan each month has been altered to a fixed rate for the year. This change has been made to meet the wishes of the Sudan Chamber of Commerce. The royalty has been fixed at the following rates per kantar (100 rottles):—Bleached, 480 m/ms.; hashab, 350 m/ms.; talk, 150 m/ms.; gum dust (other than dust of bleached gum), 150 m/ms. These rates came into force on February 1, and will continue in operation until December 31, 1923.

(Continued from page 297.)

which will more than justify the new railway. These are cotton and livestock (cattle and sheep). With regard to cotton, there is a large area of first-class cotton land awaiting development north of Kassala, in the delta of the River Gash, capable of producing a high-grade Egyptian cotton, irrespective of many thousands of acres of rainland in the southern district near Gedaref and Mefaza, with a rainfall of over 25 inches per annum, where it has been proved that good American cotton can be grown.

A concession for growing cotton has been granted by the Sudan Government to a new company, to be called the Kassala Cotton Company. This concession will be on similar lines to that granted under the old Gezira Agreement, establishing a three-cornered partnership between the Sudan Government, the native cultivator, and the new company.

Map of the Sudan (Northern portion).

It is understood that the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation (of which Sir James Currie is the director), the British Cotton Growing Association, and the Sudan Plantations Syndicate are taking substantial interests in the Kassala Cotton Company.

A large and wide valley extends from Kassala towards Port Sudan. This valley receives every year, through the River Gash, which rises in the Abyssinian mountains, an immense amount of flood water, containing a large percentage of the same sort of silt as the Blue Nile carries with it every year. This water arrives year by year in July, and its continuous flow lasts between two and three months, and so floods an extensive area in the above-mentioned valley for something like fifty miles northwards. Egyptian cotton of good quality and long, strong staple is grown there every year, but the quantity is limited through lack of means of transport. Up to the present the cotton so grown has had to be carried on camels for a distance of over 800 miles. Now that the construction of this railway connecting Kassala with the sea has been decided upon, there is nothing to hinder the exploitation of this fertile cotton-bearing soil, and it is this valley known as the Gash Delta that the new Kassala Cotton Company has selected for the development of cotton growing on an extensive scale.

Taking the labour factor into account and allowing for sufficient land for grain production, it is estimated by competent authority that within three or four years after the completion of the railway the area under cotton in the Gash Delta could be increased to 50,000 acres, and within ten years of that date to 100,000. On these areas, taking the provisional estimates of the average yield likely to be obtained at 200 lb. of lint per acre, production would gradually increase from 25,000 bales of 400 lb. to twice that amount. Thus even if all other direct or indirect benefits are left out of account, the Kassala railway, looked at purely as a cotton proposition, possesses extremely attractive features.

Livestock and Grain.

In regard to livestock, Kassala Province comprises vast grazing areas, the raising of cattle and sheep being the main industry of the larger part of the population, and it is estimated that Kassala contains some 100,000 cattle and 200,000 sheep. The export trade in these is capable of very large extension when direct export by railway is established in substitution for the tedious and unsatisfactory method of walking animals hundreds of miles down the Atbara River to the present market at El Damer, on the Khartoum-Halfa Railway, on a route where grazing is often very deficient. The development of the cattle trade will also be greatly facilitated by the extra mobility which the railway will give to the Veterinary Staff of the Government, as well as, of course, by the opportunity which it will give the traders of turning their money over quickly.

A grain and oil-seed production in the southern portion of Kassala Province will be given an impetus by the provision of rail transport from Kassala, but the extension of this railway at some later date into the productive regions of Gedaref and Mefaza will have to be awaited before any great increase in output of these products can be expected. Millet grown there will be sure of a large market either within the Sudan to supplement the periodical scarcity of which the northern and central part of the country often suffers or in the European markets with which a trade in millet has now been established. Sesame, which is already grown and exported to no small extent, will readily find a market in Egypt or elsewhere overseas.

GAME PRESERVATION IN THE SUDAN.

The Sudan Government has recently issued a new Ordinance with regard to the preservation of wild animals in the country. The regulations for the protection of game which have been in force since 1901 and the work of the Game Wardens, together with the natural protection given by the country itself (much of which offers little attraction even to the most ardent sportsman, if, indeed, it is accessible at all, owing to the lack of water), will probably result in the Sudan being one of the last countries in Africa where big game in its natural surroundings can be found.

Under the new Ordinance all animals are divided into four classes. Those in Class 1 may not be injured, captured, nor killed in any circumstances. Classes 2 and 3 contain those which may be killed or captured in limited numbers by holders of licences. Animals in Class 4 may be shot without licence. This class includes lions and leopards, which are now considered vermin. The animals granted absolute immunity are the wild ass, egret, flamingo, ground horn-bill, hoopoe, marabout, ostrich, pelican, rhinoceros (both black and white, though the white rhinoceros may be shot if found west of the 28th degree of longitude), secretary-bird, shoe-bill, and spoon-bill. Licences are of two kinds. An "A" licence, costing £50 per annum, gives the holder the right to shoot really anything except prohibited game. Not more than a definite number of each species may be shot, and in the case of a giant eland and white rhinoceros, only one may be shot in a lifetime by anyone. A "B" licence, costing £5 per annum, gives one the right to shoot a limited number only of a more restricted list of game, including really only the more common species of gazelle and antelope found in this country.

A royalty is exacted on each head of elephant, giraffe, rhinoceros, and several other animals, in addition to the cost of the licence. In other cases one or two heads are allowed free, while a small additional royalty is charged for any additional heads within the number allowed by the licence.

In addition to the above regulations, two areas comprising 3,000 square miles each have been defined as sanctuaries for all or certain kinds of animals. Here no man can hunt or kill. The district south of the Refaj-Aba (Belgian Congo) road and west of the Bahr El Jebel is a reserve for all kinds of game, as is also the triangle in the Upper Nile Province formed by the Bahr El Zeraf, the Bahr El Jebel, and the White Nile. Certain districts in the Red Sea Province have been set aside for ibex, but other animals can be hunted there. The period March 1 to August 31 is declared a close season for sand grouse, and Governors of Provinces have the right to declare close seasons or districts within their provinces.

A tally of all game killed has to be kept by the licensee and shown to the Game Warden or Governor.

The licence to shoot covers the permit to export any trophies so obtained, but the possession of any ivory weighing less than 1½ kilos the tusk (if shot in Fung, Kassala, or Blue Nile Provinces, the minimum weight is 5 kilos the tusk) and all female ivory is illegal and the ivory is liable to confiscation. The export of any heads, skins, or trophies obtained otherwise than by shooting with a licence requires a special permit, and an ad valorem duty of 10 or 20 per cent. is charged. The export of live animals is also controlled. Special facilities and permits can be granted to representatives of scientific bodies.

The Ordinance gives a very exhaustive account of what may and what may not be done, and is well worth the attention of anyone who thinks of visiting the Sudan.

SUDAN HORSE BREEDING.

Major-General Sir Lee Stack returned from Cairo last November and left a few days later to visit one of the annual horse shows in Kordofan Province. Kordofan—or the southern portion of it—is the breeding ground of the Sudan country-bred ponies. Encouraged by the Government, who organise a great deal of stud work, the Meseria and Homr tribes produce a good type of horse, which is invaluable for military work in the country, and which is now competing very favourably with the Arabs (more the so-called "Second-class Arab") imported from the north, which, up to date, have carried all before them in the polo or racing line. These countrybreds stand on an average about 14 hands, and are thick-set, hardy little animals, admirably fitted for the hard trekking which they are sometimes required to do, and, above all, indigenous to the country. A cross-bred between these and an English horse gives a higher standing pony, and this particular breed will probably soon be the most common in the country. The horse shows are organised by the chiefs of the tribes themselves—supervised to a certain extent by the local British official. The whole tribe journeys to the show-place; inter-tribal feuds and quarrels are forgotten, and the only rivalry is the keen desire to be the owners of the best horse, or camel, or the winner of a race. Everyone contrives to make a really good show of the event of the year. The result is generally a great success, not only as regards the ceremonial parades which precede the show, and are, perhaps, the most striking and certainly the most picturesque part of the whole two days, but also the organisation of the racing and competitions and the arrangements of the show itself. This year the Governor-General visited the show at Abu Zabad, a town in Southern Kordofan, about 90 miles from El Obeid, the capital of the province, and some 350 miles from Khartoum. Here he witnessed a great mounted parade of from two to three thousand horsemen of the tribe, led by their Nazirs, who presented him with loyal addresses. He then opened the show and watched the various forms of racing—horses, camels, and bulls all competed; but the races which aroused the greatest enthusiasm were the inter-tribal and inter-sectional races, which have now become an annual event. The real business of the horse show was done next day, when the buying and selling began. A number of good countrybreds were bought for Government work.

THE EUPHRATES & TIGRIS STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Regular Service of Passenger and Cargo Steamers running at frequent intervals between BUSREH (Persian Gulf) and BAGHDAD on the River Tigris and between MOHAMMERAH (Persian Gulf) and AHWAZ on the river Karun.

Cargo booked on a Through Bill of Lading to BAGHDAD and/or AHWAZ by the chief liners sailing from the U.K., Continent and India.

The engagement of land transport for Cargo to towns in the interior of Mesopotamia and Persia undertaken on behalf of Shippers of Through Cargo to BAGHDAD and AHWAZ.

For freight and particulars, apply to:—

LYNCH BROS., LTD.,
MANAGING AGENTS.
3, SALTERS HALL COURT,
LONDON, E.C.4.

OR TO
THE MESOPOTAMIA-PERSIA
CORPORATION, LTD.,
At chief towns in Mesopotamia and Persia.

Commercial & Financial Section.

NOTES AND NEWS.

London, Tuesday Morning.

Taxation Reduction Prospects.

The outlook for a reduction of taxation is not so bright as it was a week ago, and there have been very pointed suggestions—officially and otherwise—that no alleviation of the burden of income-tax is to be expected. The view now seems to be taken that the reduction of debt should have the preference on this occasion. If this be the policy adopted, all I can say is that it will be most ill-advised. Debt reduction can well be put off for a little time, but for many reasons it is emphatically desirable that ls. should again be taken off the income-tax, and, it may be added, a more important relief would have been possible if the Government had been more thorough in regard to economy in the administrative services.

The Outlook Abroad.

On the whole, there appears to be a decided improvement in the outlook abroad. If the French have been far from having matters all their own way in the Ruhr, they have undoubtedly succeeded in gravely embarrassing Germany, and it would seem clear that it is only a matter of time before Germany approaches our Ally with a view to bringing about a settlement. Then the Turkish question is taking a very favourable turn, and it is by no means unduly optimistic to anticipate the signing of peace at an early date. With both these problems solved (as would now seem probable), the path will be clear for something like a real trade revival.

Increased Interest on Greek Loans.

The Council of Foreign Bondholders have received information that the sums available for the service of the Greek Debt in 1922 will permit an increase this year as regards interest and sinking fund by the following percentages of the original interest: Loans of Group I., 42 and 18; Loans of Group II., 44 and 18; Loans of Group III., 42 and 18. With the addition of the above percentages the total interest payable will be 3.40 per cent. on the 4 per Cent. Monopoly Loan, 3.70 per cent. on the 5 per Cent. Funding Loan, 3.80 per cent., as compared with 3.60 per cent., on the 5 per cent. Loans of 1881, 1884, and 1890, and 2.96 per cent., as against 2.88 per cent., on the 4 per Cent. Rentes. The additional interest is payable on the next coupons.

Mercantile Bank of India.

Considering the economic conditions that have obtained, the report of the Mercantile Bank of India for the past year can only be regarded as extremely satisfactory. So far from suffering any reduction in profits, the bank actually shows slightly improved figures, the total being £267,434, as compared with £263,033 for the previous year, the figures being, incidentally, the best on record. It is proposed to pay a dividend of 16 per cent. as before, and to carry forward £152,105, as compared with £137,671.

Smyrna Fruit Position.

It was inevitable that the coming season's crop of sultanas and figs in the Smyrna district should be seriously affected by the events of last autumn, but, according to the latest report of Messrs. Giraud, it would appear probable that the yield of both these commodities will be worse than anticipated. The climatic conditions have been extremely unfavourable for the fruit, and at the date of the report the rainfall had exceeded 50 ins., as against the normal 25 ins., and rain was still falling. Messrs. Giraud point out that in 1919-20, when there was a rainfall of 60 ins., the estimated yield of 23-25,000 tons of sultanas eventualised at 15,900. As other conditions are extremely unfavourable, it is obvious that the yield of sultanas may be exceptionally poor. Provided the atmospheric and labour conditions henceforward are favourable, Messrs. Giraud estimate it at 15-18,000 tons, "but, in the event of a wet spring, the consequences are calculated to be disastrous, and the yield might be easily reduced to even under 10,000 tons." In a somewhat lesser degree the outlook is also unsatisfactory in regard to figs, and it would appear that for one year, at least, Smyrna district is likely to derive the minimum of benefit from the mainstay of its economic life.

Eastern Bank.

The past year, generally speaking, was unfavourable for the Eastern trade, and the results of the Eastern Bank for that period have been somewhat affected, the net profits being £120,300, as compared with £144,200. Last year the reserve was increased by £34,000, but this time the allocation is only £20,000, which brings the fund to £320,000. Last year the dividend was 9s. per share, and a similar distribution is proposed this time.

COMMENTATOR.

BANK OF ROUMANIA LIMITED

(FOUNDED 1866).

Head Office: 64, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.3.

Branch: 11, CALEA VICTORIEI, BUCAREST.

Directors:

E. W. H. Barry, Esq.
C. De Cerjat, Esq.
The Viscount Goschen.
General The Hon. Sir H. A. Lawrence, K.C.B.
Lieut.-Col. Sir Albert Stern, K.B.E., C.M.G.

Bankers:

Bank of England. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co.
A general Banking business with Roumania is conducted, and correspondence from those having interests in that country is invited.

THE BULGARIAN REPARATIONS SETTLEMENT.

The agreement arrived at last week in regard to Bulgarian Reparations between M. Stambolisky's Government and the Inter-Allied Reparations Commission in Bulgaria, is the outcome of negotiations that have lasted intermittently for many months. From the first Bulgaria has taken up the attitude that the financial penalties imposed in the Treaty of Neuilly were not commensurate with the capacities of the country. The reduction of Bulgaria's total obligations from 2,250,000,000 gold francs to 550,000,000 gold francs is a recognition of the correctness of this claim. Obviously there was nothing to be gained from an insistence on payments that were never likely to be effected, the only result of which would have been to prolong the state of uncertainty in the Balkans, and possibly to give rise to the very evils which we are most anxious to avoid. There was, further, every reason why Bulgaria should receive the utmost consideration consistent with justice. Since the Armistice the country has set a praiseworthy example in regard to reconstruction, and has accomplished more than could reasonably have been expected in the direction of the re-establishment of pre-war conditions. It has been due to the menace of a crushing burden for Reparations that the energy displayed has not had more evident results, and that the lev has been standing at a more or less nominal rate. The last thing the Allies had in mind in drawing up the Treaty was the imposition of obligations that would have a permanently prejudicial effect, and the readjustment of the Reparations payment will, therefore, be welcomed as a further and most important step towards the normal in the Near East.

Immediately after the war the question of Reparations payments was naturally viewed in a very different light from what would have been the case had it been considered in an atmosphere unaffected by the special influences of the hour. It was too soon also for it to be clear how far the unprecedented strain of the Great War had affected the financial stability of the nations who took part in it and, in particular, of those on the losing side. Even now the full effects of the struggle cannot be reckoned with any certainty, but events since 1918 have served to convince all but the most tenacious of pre-war theorists that, whatever may have been possible after earlier wars, the doctrine of ex victis is out of the question to-day, since the intricate economic system that the world has evolved has made the welfare of the individual nation the welfare of all, and it is in the interests of all that recovery from the war should be as speedy and universal as possible. If the facts regarding Bulgaria's position had been fully appreciated, it is unthinkable that there would ever have been any question of endeavouring to compel her to make Reparations payments on the scale laid down. Their disproportion to the country's present resources is very plainly shown by the facts given in an official memorandum of the Bulgarian Government. The State Budget now stands at 2,152,720,000 leva, or under £3,000,000 at the present rate as compared with the obligations imposed by the Treaty of Neuilly of £96,277,272. In indirect fulfilment of the Treaty it is estimated that a sum amounting to much more than one-third of the Budget total has been expended in meeting the expenses of the maintenance of the Inter-Allied troops in Bulgaria, the delivery of cattle to the neighbouring States, the delivery of coal to Yugoslavia, and the expenses of the Inter-Allied Commission, and, of course, expenditure under these heads does not reduce the fundamental debt of Reparations. In 1912 Bulgaria's national resources were valued at 10 milliards of leva, of which 6 milliards (£237,000,000) represented the value of the land, while the national revenue amounted to 1 milliard 650 million leva (£65,000,000) for a population of 4,500,000. The Treaty of Neuilly left Bulgaria with diminished resources and increased obligations, and with the best will in the world (the Bulgarian Government has always protested its willingness to meet its obligations) it would have been impossible for Bulgaria to make the payments required under the Treaty.

SMYRNA-AIDIN RAILWAY.

The report of the Ottoman Railway from Smyrna to Aidin for the half-year ended December 31, 1922, states that no returns have been received from Smyrna for any portion of the period. The accounts, therefore, are subject to adjustment as and when such returns are received. The Council reports that, following upon the retreat of the Greek Army in September last, a very serious strain was cast upon the management of the railway, and this led for a time to a state of chaos. The English and French staff at Smyrna were obliged to leave, and the manager for a time was left alone with a small and loyal remnant to carry on as best he could. General de Candolle found his health so affected that he was obliged to resign his position in October last, when the Council appointed Major R. E. Tomlin Money Shewan as deputy manager, who was able to reach Smyrna and take over management. Doubts having arisen regarding the strict legal termination of the period deferring debenture interest payments under the resolution passed in June, 1918, and as it was the evident intention of debenture holders to defer such payments until 18 months after the definite conclusion of peace with Turkey, it will be necessary very shortly to call meetings of share and debenture holders to fix the period of deferment of debenture interest at twelve months after peace on the same terms as agreed in previous resolutions of 1915 and 1918. The company's claims for war damages are partly dealt with under article 80 of the draft treaty with Turkey submitted at Lausanne. The gross receipts amounted to £182,200, compared with £241,829 in corresponding half of 1921. The working expenses totalled £109,950, against £134,722. This figure, however, includes £6,000 placed to reserve for way and works, as against £12,000 in the latter half of 1921. The net revenue account shows a debit balance of £843,146. Meeting, Winchester House, March 27, noon.

